In some areas there are still virgin forests and unclaimed bushes and where the Government has not taken them over, such lands once they are cleared by an individual, automatically belong to him and his patrilinial descendants. A person may also have personal plots ? KP? KP? IKOT/ASAHA IKOT by right of inheritance or purchase. Outsiders or strangers adopted within the lineage can secure land rights as do the free-born members. They can also obtain subordinate rights to reserve communal tracts of land, (15) provided they remain well behaved in the place, but they must make periodical gifts as compensations to those who hold them on lineage trust. Such land is granted only on the condition that no fruit trees or permanent crops will be planted, and even on the death of the original protégée(s)/grantee(s) the land always passes to the heirs on the same conditions. The gifts they must make are of course never regarded as rent payments UTIP IS? ? , but simply as tokens of the permanent rights of these owners who have granted them the use of the land as IK? T NN? NKAMA. This is only a mark of tenancy on the part of the strangers and gives them a quasi–permanent right to occupy the land, but subject to certain restrictions regarding alienation. They have therefore no right to pawn, pledge or sell rights in the land as their heirs may be sacked from the land at short notice without compensations, the principle under customary law being applied thereto: "once a loan or pledge, always a loan or a pledge" (Elias, K.B.167). In urban areas especially some kind of limiting period has become necessary, even inevitable as British law and other Western norms have come to be applied. With regard to patrimonial property, those held by virtue of an office or of position in the family, pass to the successor especially with regard to immovable, viz. houses, compounds, or whole premises, furniture, etc. but for the major share of personal property obtained by inheritance, gift, or purchase, the principal beneficiaries of a deceased heir apparent are generally his full brothers and sisters. His children who are minors have only residuary rights to their father's personal property. The reason is that certain members of the lineage are expected to contribute toward the funeral expenses and having done so, are entitled to a share of the deceased property. Then those who have contributed and inherited invariably have the responsibility of providing for the widows and children of the deceased. Nevertheless, in many cases a man's goods may go to his children and be distributed among all the sons and daughters as well as the wives; in which case the major share is inherited by the eldest sons and or daughters, who at the same time become responsible for the welfare of their younger brothers and sisters; otherwise, the paternal brother takes charge of the property and must provide for the care, training and marriage of his deceased brother's children if these are minors, as we have indicated. But a man may sometimes make a verbal Will, nevertheless, only property obtained through his own industry, not those inherited, may be disposed of in this way, his Will not withstanding. Therefore, we can sum up that in URUAN-EFIK land, social, political, religious and economic organizations are all linked up and coordinated as a result of this essentially autonomous local communities being organized on kinship basis (which also may be linked by ties of friendship with other groups – "IMAN") as we have seen. Every organization is thus patterned from this simple kinship structure to a hierarchical complex social structure which in practice exhibits the qualities of statehood and organized government, but which often reflects more or less advanced agricultural systems or specialized crafts in the political organs and processes. (Forde Daryll,206).

[1.] We have already examined the evidence indicating that the Malaysian complex established a predominance over the Sudanic plants once they were adopted in the East African Coast

[2.] Yams are traditionally the main crop of the men, while cocoyams and cassava which are now replacing both as the main staple, are the women's main crops. Men do most of the clearing of bush and women the weeding and tending of the yams and the other crops which they plant among the yams. Men harvest the yams and the women carry them home in baskets and basins .These containers; AKPAN, OBUFIM, AQUA etc as they were called could be found in every home. They are made in different sizes and shapes to serve as troughs, basins, trays etc. but have almost disappeared nowadays and replaced by new fanciful patterns.

3.The native N UFOFOP/KAI – KAI or simply MIN, compares favourably with the imported BRANDY, SCHNAPPS and other brands and has been actually converted with the use of certain chemicals and ingredients into Brandy. Up till 1972, I was one of the most prohibited contraband products (simply because it was brewed in Nigeria and therefore shouldn't compete with British colonial imports). Anyone caught in possession of even half a litre bottle (EKPEME IKANG not to talk of a 20 litre bottle – EKPEME IKAT) could be prosecuted and fined up £500 or even £1000 o given prison sentence ranging from six months to one year with hard labour and or with / without the option of fine. But thanks to the Nigerian civil war of 1967-1970 because in BIAFRA it was publicly bought and sold without much ado. Since then the Federal Government has even promulgated a Decree towards the promotion of Research and improvements in the brewing and distillation of what hitherto was tagged ILLICI WINE/ GIN, to the relief and jubilation of all Nigerian citizens especially the chief producers of the South South and South East regions of Nigeria.

4.Co-operative trading Associations, e.g. The South Eastern Cooperative Wholesale Association (SECWA), the South Eastern Agricultural Marketing Cooperative Association Limited (SEAMCA) have also been set up; the former for the sale of local food stuff like rice, beans and imported items like milks, flour, building materials, etc. and the latter for the buying of produce in order to make money available to farmers. There is also Government owned Supermarkets e.g. (SESTRADE) in all the Divisions with headquarters in Lagos, in order to make Marketing Cooperative Association Limited (SEAMCA) have also been set up; the former for the sale of local food stuff like rice, beans and imported items like milks, flour, building materials, etc. and the latter for the buying of produce in order to make money available to farmers. There is also Government owned Supermarkets e.g. (CROSSTRADE) in all the Divisions with headquarters in Lagos, in order to make goods available in large-scale quantities for the consuming population and at reasonable prices.

5.In some cases especially in IBIBIO land UF? K could also apply to EKPUK/ or Lineage eg. Esop/Mbono UF? K/EKPUK . This is because all the members of the household looked upon the PATER FAMILIAS as the boss and genitor and as the /KNOT= EKPUK which binds them together in their social, political, economic, social and religious spheres hence the designation EKPUK.

6.The first designation UF? K/IDIBI ETE denotes the term as generally expressed in the URUAN/EFIK language and the second as expressed in ANNANG/IBIBIO. This also coincided with the family unit of the Western world except that it was polygamous implying that the father/husband was the political boss. He together with his senior or first wife – WAN-IMA or ATAI ANWAN, his eldest son, his senior half-brother and a few other intelligent members of his EKURE/EBIET/OTU ie. Compound /hamlet formed this sort of irregular council of the household. among the family members, Such an arrangement/family/institutiomn was responsible for the welfare of the household by trying cases apportioning blame and fines to the guilty and/or acquittal and praise to the guiltless. Suck fines and impositions included cash, drinks, goats, chickens, etc. We shall employ this pattern throughout this Chapter.

8.The first designation UF? K/IDIBI denotes the term generally expressed in the URUAN/EFIK language and the second as expressed throughout this book.

9.The STRANGER, OWO ESSIEN or OWO=ANWA, literally means a 'person from outside'ie. the lineage or compound or even the village and is regarded as the 'GUEST or VISITOR'. It does not denote a person from the extended family but rather one outside it. They are always treated with hospitality as visitors/guests. For some areas, this kind of extended family unit or ward s simply designated 'EFAK' which corresponds to a 'street, RUE(French) or section in the village.

10. In traditional societies, the expression OWO EDI INYENE, literally means 'men are riches implying that a family or household with many people as members automatically constitutes a rich family through the collective labour and earnings of the members. That was the main reason the ancient URUAN/EGFIK owned slaves and practised polygamy since a large following was the determining factor of wealth acquisition. Similarly, "EYEN EDI UBONG" = children make a man, ie the father to become the LORD and MASTER of the lineage and Ruler of the manor or kingdom. Only a man from a large lineage could be considered fit and able to rule a village or clan or kingdom because he has been found worthy and fit to rule his own house/lineage.

11.Some of the titles in a hierarchical order inc include OBONG (chief) OKUKU(Ritual leader, Ambassador or Chamberlain) ESUQUA/ESUKWA denotes Speaker eg Lord, Duke as also ETE (Sir eg Sir Frederick Lugard) the highest being titled AMASI.

12.The condition of the Patrilineal Family is derived from the "PATRIA POTESTAS" which gives the head of the lineage absolute authority and control over those under him. The welfare of each member is determined by and dependent on his good will. He alone has authority to distribute all privileges, rights and duties. In modern and recent times formal Organization/Administration of the Kindred or Clan is almost absent. The Group/Clan Head is merely a nominal figure head, an agent of the Governor or Council Chairman or even of political leaders. He exercises his office only in times of emergency or crisis when the political leaders remember that he can be of use to restore order and rule of law in the villages/towns or to organize the people for elections, Census, etc.

14. Selfish but shrewd individuals who achieve prosperity and greatness are often contemptuously referred to as agents in witchcraft and freemasonry such as "UNAM-OKUK" (Money power or god of money), "EKPIN? I," etc. There is a proverb-EKWADO, which describes this attitude of jealousy: "? kp? nte uf?k-eny??, ubuene ik? ke: ?k?? ama akpa ?kp??, sia oto ke ukwa usu " (Even a thing like a storeyed house the poor cannot build, he dies prematurely, for his work is foul).

13.This totemic aspect of Clanship is provided from the notion that the clan or lineage either owed its evolution/origin to or was protected from certain disasters through the agency of these totem animals or food crops, the eating of which is tabooed in their honour.

14.The Reverend Hope Masterson Waddell of the Presbyterian Scottish Mission has noted that the rank of KING is not native to URUAN/EFIK but was adopted to regulate the relations of EFIK Chieftains with the supercargoes and thus the Leader of Ekpe – the Eyamba, was afterwards designated as KING EYAMBA. Since he was the one who aided the British companies CF. Ford op. cit. But this does not seem to square up with URUAN/EFIK understanding of EDIDEM which means KING properly so called.

15.These are "EDEP" or "IKOT UFIN or NDUA, IBIBIO) which are free forests and farmlands for the poor or slaves. Other free tracts of land not used by the public as farmlands include "ISO NDEM" (Spirits land holdings) and "IKOT EKPO" (devil bush) these are sacred plots and groves surrounding shrines. Formerly they were reserved as burying grounds for evil men, suspected of witchcraft, murder, suicide, and for slaves and twins – IK? T MBUBIAT, and those who died ignominiously or by accident.

CHAPTER III

SOCIAL PROCEDURES, STRUCTURES AND ORGANIZATIONS URUAN EFIK MYSTERY CULTS AND CONFRATERNITIES

We have all along been considering the lineage system as the basic pattern in the evolution of African communities. Family settlements in recent times have all grown into towns and villages, and the local lineage units tend to grow into compact communities and clans over most of the arable land. The ordinary people spend their time in the town engaging in their special crafts, river trading, fishing, etc. and some in their farms and plantations. URUAN/ EFIK have a rich way of life – one that has continually made her one of the most hospitable communities and groups in Africa. According to experts and historians most of her cultural elements are unique though her constant romance with other societies especially the Ibibio and Annang, the richness of the traits makes them more alluring. Some of the traditional cultural displays and socio cultural groups especially her various masquerades in Ekpe, ? b?n, Ek? ? kemba and even the acquired Ekpo Ny?h? masquerades of the Ibibio in some clans, help to promote the deepest meanings of URUAN/EFIK way of life and Weltanschauung. They do this especially in their elaborate displays and mastery of the cultural dances, folk lores and chants which have earned them global acclaim and acceptance. Like other Niger Delta groups, URUAN/EFIK way of dressing viz. the Usobo, ? kp? kp? for men as also the ? y?ny? in their various shapes, colours and styles of head gear viz. gel, etc. for the women

I have decided to devote the greater part of this Chapter to one of the most outstanding, enigmatic and colourful cultural legacies of URUAN/EFIK traditions and life, hence let us start our discourse with an analysis and structural set up of Ekpe Fraternity in URUAN/ EFIK. To begin with, many people especially our westernized elites as also some "modern" Christians still think that culture and religion are poles apart and there can be nothing to bring them together. But for some of us who are familiar with history, especially Church History the two are even inseparable. The early European and American missionaries made matters worse when they erroneously associated our African culture with sorcery, witchcraft, heathenism and paganism and even regarded everything African as evil. But now we know better and our eyes are opened. We have come to realize the harm this belief and way of looking at things have done to our culture, traditions, and values; they have almost obliterated most of those great cultural artifacts and displays from African life and affairs. Thanks to the Second Vatican Council of the Catholic Church which restored and encouraged African use of music, symbols and instruments to embellish and adorn the Liturgy and Church Rituals.

Most URUAN and indeed our African cultural displays are nothing but good melodious music accompanied with artistic manipulation of instruments and it is they that constitute the Warf and woof of culture, our traditional dances and pastimes including Ekpe. Together with religion these form part and parcel of God's endowment to mankind and are therefore the most important constituents of culture. Ekpe which in URUAN/EFIK is a socio-cultural, socio-political institution is one if not the greatest of these cultural institutions. As they say, "Oyom Ekpe, ka ke URUAN "implying that here in URUAN one can enjoy Ekpe in all its ramifications and glory, because Ekpe wisdom helped URUAN society to make sense among all her immediate neighbours and to find her proper place in the scheme of things viz. governance, education, social life and even religious affairs. Besides, Ekpe helped to direct all well-meaning people especially the rich and educated to rise to the values of living righteously and to grow spiritually along the path of Christ. Christ is the acknowledged Way of God, and most of the world's great religions and centres for teaching the Truth acknowledge this to be true, even the ancients had unwittingly known about it because Christ is the eternal invisible likeness of the invisible God", (Col 1:15) and that is why He had to have a central place in a chosen (Hebrew) culture. Even though tribes and languages differ, this fact and secret remains the same in every culture because it is not man-made. Man-made things do not last hence man's inventions and creations pass away, even nations rise and fall or even disappear but God's creations remain because they are part and parcel of the Truth which is in Christ. That is why some of these godlike cultures being part of God's gift to mankind are a perpetual reminder to us of the secrets of life and even the way to God. Ekpe URUAN is not an exception that is why some of these concepts cannot die as they pass from one generation to another either by word of mouth or from hearing about them.

Howbeit, a creation of God indeed remains a thing of beauty forever and Ekpe is such as we shall discover in these pages because it gingers in the mind the thirst to know and understand, but its depth like God's cannot be easily fathomed, and so it can only generate the feeling of awe nod reverence if not admiration, such that what man fails to understand, he worships and treasures in his bosom. Life will always remain a drama of interludes consisting of acts and scenes whereby the participants play their part as actors and spectators, but to remind us of the main stations of life and the universal Truth, because God is not a parochial being despite the teachings of some religious faiths even if He has more names than languages, He remains true to all. Therefore, with the misconceptions people especially like what the early missionaries and writers had about other people's beliefs and forms of worship which tended to give the impression that some cultures were God-like and noble while others were heathen, atheistic or polytheistic when in truth most of them were monotheistic, we know that tongues and creeds may differ, but the intrinsic values remain the same. Most cultures do admit and conform to the fact that the purpose of life is for mankind to offer themselves as a living sacrifice pleasing and dedicated to the glory and service of God and therefore all authentic and true religious cultures are centres and instruments for subscribing to the knowledge of Truth. As a Catholic Christian, I do know to what extent some of our native African cultures and traditions can be admissible; therefore, I am not advocating hereby the wholesale endorsement of Ekpe practices and traditions but only those that are both Christian, moral, educational and uplifting of the human spirit and character.

1. URUAN & EKPE EFIK ORIGINS & TRADITIONS URUAN AKPE USAHAEDET FOUNDATIONS

From our account on the origin of URUAN in chapter one, we had traced and indicated her place of eventual origin as a people to the Equatorial Rain Belt of Central Africa, precisely the Cameroun North Eastern borders where URUAN AKPE/EKPE is to be located and still extant even today. That is why the opening and introductory words of this article were quoted as "oyom Ekpe ka ke URUAN" simply on account of the fact that URUAN means Ekpe and URUAN is Ekpe itself. The popular saying in Ekpe used to be: "NKA URUAN" meaning "I am going to URUAN" or "nduk Uruan" ie. "I am in URUAN" really refers to NYAMKPE one of the greatest Grades in Ekpe URUAN and is in regard to the fact that many of our neighbours including the present EFIK, EFUT, KWA/QUA are a confirmation of the relevance of Ekpe with regard to URUAN without which it would have been impossible to do business with these coastal tribes of Central Africa and other communities up the Cross River because it was the practice to move with their Ekpe. In fact, the whole of the Equatorial region extending from the Cross River to the Congo basin is the Ekpe zone where the esoteric paraphernalia of Ekpe masquerades and Orders are to be found. Though some forms and Orders of Ekpe masquerades are more exotic than the others, they are all similar except in their different presentations and outfits depending on their richness, style and cultural traits. There is also the voiced language difference and this is obvious owing to the tonal nature of these various Nigritic languages and locales which in our case may change from EFIK to EFUT or even ABAKPA/QUA, ie. EKOI or EJAGHAM owing to their contiguity with URUAN. There is nothing unusual about this and it is part of human nature and practice everywhere to show off knowledge and feel better off than others. We often see the so-called "been-tos" parading their knowledge by punctuating their writings and speeches with Latin or French phrases to show off their status, but this doesn't show that Latin or French is supreme eg. Paul Amaury Talbot has shown that the EKOI NSIBIDI writings exhibit traces of the early Egyptian hieroglyphs and even some of the buildings with their circular super-structures are similar to the savannah types of the forest peoples unlike the rectangular structures of recent buildings in URUAN (Talbot, Paul Amaury 10).

According to D.M McFarland URUAN probably had circular buildings in distant past and so being of the Bantoid stock they are a mixture of Hamitic and Negroid blood and that may well explain why some earlier anthropologists described them as emigrants from the Nile valley in Egypt and by implication that URUAN/EFIK might have been descendants of the people of Palestine who left Egypt. (Cf Exodus chapters). The lion which is the totem of Ekpe abounds in these Equatorial highlands and savanna/forests which goes to explain why Ekpe Fraternities flourished in these parts. The ODODOP viz, Aquagune and environs, the Ekoi as also the Efut also claim that coming as they did from the same environs of the Cameroun Highlands, Ekpe is native to them and that may well be as we have indicated above. But URUAN ditto the EFIK seem to have an edge over these because the power of Ekpe rests on the efficacy of the inner teachings which URUAN/EFIK have developed and perfected to a very high degree. It should also be instructive to note that many anthropologists and ethnographers of note have explained that URUAN and the EFUTS are of the same stock who migrated from their ancestral home in the Cameroun border USAHAEDET near Idombi/Barumbi (Rio del Rey) and that the Efuts with other Efut clans like Ekondo, Idundu, Abua, Ibonda and others during the great world dispersals caused by wars and the search for better farm lands, but were separated from their kith and kin at the Cross River and hence had to move down the highlands into their present abode, while URUAN who are traditionally great seafaring peoples, sailed up the Cross River until they arrived at IBOM, ie. present day Arochukwu. This explains why most of the clans found in Efut are also reflected in URUAN viz. Ibonda, Ekondo, Mosongko, etc.

(ii) HAMITIC AND EGYTIAN ORIGINS: The EKPE animal in contradistinction to Ekpe Fraternity is not an URUAN totem but the Institution of Ekpe fraternity is. In his "ISIS Unveiled", H. P Blavatsky opined that Hebrew culture permeated the Nigritic peoples of Africa and suggested that these might have been traces of those races and coloured peoples who were expelled by the children of Israel under Prophet Joshua, son of Nun about 5000 BC (H.P. Blavastky,545). This also could well explain why some URUAN and EFIK indigenous ethnographic writers like Dr. E. O. Akak, Effiong. Mkpanam, etc peddled the Oriental origins of URUAN/EFIK and by extension the Igbos, Ibibios, Cameroonians, Ghanaians etc. of the Nigritic stock with the claim that they are of the Hebrew stock. Small wonder then that the Bantu race generally must have evolved from the Hamitic Nigritic blood, hence their link with the lower Nile valley in Egypt and the use of Egyptian hieroglyphs in NSIBIDI writings in Ekpe. Nsibidi is actually a methodology of action which consists in the use of signs and symbols to express and interprete "Ekpe language". It is merely a system of being able to make sense by transforming the normal lingua franca of URUAN-EFIK using the Ekpe system of communication expressed through recitations, playing of instruments, gestures and even drawn images designed to keep outsiders away. Through this sort of ritual of ritual action Ekpe is able to recreate the mythic history of the society and to re-enact the original sequence of societal events. But I have not bothered to extend the legend in our first Chapter concerning the ethnographic origins of URUAN/EFIK simply because this doesn't seem to be true and proper: "Whatever is true and just/proper, whatever is noble and gracious, whatever is holy and modest, whatever is kind and gentle, whatever is good and pure (not adulterated or mythical or legendary) whatever is lovely and honourable, whatever is thought virtuous/ennobling and whatever is worthy of praise and discipline; think of these things.(Reflections from Phil.4:8) In fact some modern authors have also tried to show that Hebrew culture permeated Negro Africa either through normal commercial ties or by the diffusion brought about by the universal dispersion of peoples (J. J. Williams,320-22).

Up till today, many of the URUAN/EFIK stock still pride themselves as descendants of Canaan, hence the mantra, Canaan, Canaan Calabar-o, Calabar-o, nyedu do mfin. But in connection with Egypt where the Hebrew Canaanites settled for over 400 years, Ekpe the KABALA, the ancient Egyptian theosophy is quite compatible when considering the monotheistic aspect of the Hebrew cult. It is further suggested that Pharaoh Akhenaton, the son of Pharaoh Amenophis III, grandson of Thutmose III, the great builder of ancient Egypt introduced monotheistic practices into Egypt during his reign. He had through his open-mindedness ordered the worship of Isis, the Sun god there ushering in monotheistic practices in Egypt. He is the husband of Nefertiti, the acclaimed Rosicrucian from whom the AMORC has taken root. But after his death; it is believed that Pharaoh Tutankhamen restored polytheism and the worship of Amenism, through whose cult the practice of worshiping the ancient Egyptian gods flourished. He ruthlessly executed most of the followers of the monotheistic practice of Akhenaton and restored polytheism in the land. It is also believed that they are those of Akhenaton's followers who had escaped from the persecutions who spread the monotheistic cultic practices across the African continent, which further explains most of the NSIBIDI acquired in Ekpe URUAN today as part of the exoteric practices in the worship of the Son god adopted by Pharaoh Akhenaton (Werner Keller,134-144). We also know that Moses was an initiate of the Egyptian Temple and he it was who must have exported the Egyptian theosophy into Israel because according to the biblical texts, Moses "was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, becoming powerful in words and deeds" (Acts 7:32) Wisdom teachings were imparted to initiates in the temples and for the Jews, it became the spring from where the Jewish KABALA drew their waters of knowledge and wisdom. Analogically, we can therefore understand why the exotic teachings of Ekpe and the NSIBIDI are given in Ufok/Afe Ekpe.

(iii) PRELIMINARY NOTIONS & EKPE STRUCTURE:

In Zodiac literature, the Latin Leo means LION, which is also the symbolism of the Zodiac sign, the co-ordination between the human brain and his mind, which implies consciousness. This goes to explain the origin of Ekpe in URUAN religious practices and theosophy, for it is simply the path to consciousness and knowledge. Ekpe in modern times may be understood as an aspect of the way of life of ancient URUAN peoples who practiced the ancient religion akin to the Egyptian Mithraic mystery Religions and mystical cults which they later amplified to correspond with the evolving culture of the emerging European explorers who rounded the shores of West Africa up to the Cape Coast in the 15th century AD of our Christian era. It was both a religion and a government and permeated the lifestyles of the enlightened devotees and Adepts. But this seems a farfetched understanding of the reality because the Mithraic mystery cults were more often than not associated with Astrology, Astronomy, Alchemy and the Zodiac cults of which the sign of Scorpio is a significant norm. The face of the OX for example is the Biblical symbol for the Zodiac sign Taurus ie. the Bull which signifies the religion immediately antedating the Jewish Revelations which by implication is the common feature of the UKARA, the Ekpe Sacred Cloth. Another symbolism in Ekpe worthy of consideration is the sign SCORPIO, also derived from Astrology. The Serpent worship, an illusion from which the Christ nature finally frees man, was considered to liberate human kind (Alice A. Bailey, 181-83). Rather for URUAN, Ekpe is concerned with all aspects of life just as in the Christian religious culture; from the birth of man in Baptism to his death with Christ on Calvary as we are going to see.

Since Ekpe is concerned with all aspects of life, the elements of fire, air, earth and water play a very important part in Ekpe URUAN. The context of Ekpe here as an animal is the ANAWURI EKPE which is the lion and bears the Ekpe logo in every aspect of Ekpe. Ekpe has 12 divisions or Orders in URUAN. That is why the MANE figure is the prominent feature of Ekpe masquerade which is not found in the leopard family, a common animal of some Ekpe devotees in the Equatorial Rain Forest habitat. There are 12 GRADES/GLOBES of Ekpe in URUAN, and these correspond to the different Ekpe "divinities" to which they are attached viz. Ekpe NYAMKPE which is the most notorious and revered of the Cadres and represents the Royalty and Kingship in URUAN. NKANDA, which visible sign is the NTA? NKANDA - peacock feather, representing the invisible strength of the wind, air and breeze. The NKANDA form /masquerade is dressed in UKARA which bears witness to the fire power ion the Order/Grade, signifying that it is the seat of Wisdom. It also signifies that there was a time it was ethereal and the body and soul were meant for all intent and purposes to be one and united. This is the embodiment of African spirituality since Ekpe can penetrate any vacuum and was associated with the Greek philosopher, Anaximander who maintained that the primary element of life is AIR; another of its sixth element is the loop ie. EKP? which is the most important. IBOKU, MBAKARA, IBONDA, MKPE, MB? K? is the real EKPE/LION noted for its roaring like the animal lion and is the, most open to accepting initiates. Even as formerly, this is the only grade into which children as also honorary members could be initiated into and has many secret aspects. It is the Grade that officiates during the entire funeral obsequies of the EYAMBA and the Adepts) OKPOHO, or Ekpe BRASS is the Grade connected with OKPOHO, money the symbol of the economy and business transactions) EBONGKO (is the most frequently displayed Grade in Ekpe probably on account of it beautiful adornments with beads and tiny bells, coins and other beautiful cloth materials. Its dance steps are graceful like the NTIMI DANCE. The aesthetics of Ekpe is exhibited here and the masquerade form is mostly admired especially by the women folk. Sometimes people regard it as Ekpe IBAN since it is not as aggressive as the others and women can be given special cosmetic and "honorary" initiation into it, nevertheless, revelation of its secrets always results in SUDDEN AND instant death. OKU AKAMA represents the priestly the Order of URUAN society and controls the religious activities of Ekpe. That is why the ? B? ? OKU AKAMA always has a say in the organization and his advice is always sought before Ekpe laws are implemented), EYAMBA and finally Ekpe ? B? N. (Cf Fig 3) The ? B? ? EBONGKO ie. the Head of the Order is regarded as the Eka Ekpe and mother. That is why he is accorded the highest respect in the Afe/Lodge. But in the absence of the EYAMBA Ekpe fraternity may not be properly constituted and raised without the EBONGKO power, the presence or absence of MB? ? of the other higher Orders notwithstanding. These names as presented here are used allegorically because some authorities in Ekpe URUAN have indicated that they perhaps might well represent the Terraktis of the Greek philosopher Pythagoras (580-545 BC) who employed various mystic and mathematical signs in his philosophical thought which were deep, incisive and full of human wisdom and meaning. Pythagoras is generally acknowledged as the father of both science and philosophy.

Everyone remembers the famous Pythagoras Theorem in Mathematics (Geometry Arithmetic and Algebra). The terms philosophy and Mathematics were invented by him. Plato (427-347 BC) the great ancient Greek teacher in Philosophy and Politics took over from him. The first four Orders express absolute reality of existence of what in Kabalist language means intelligible world. The next four expresses God's goodness and Wisdom and sees God as the Supreme Good, the origin and magnificence of Creation. The last four however express the universal Providence, God who is the Supreme Artist, the all-powerful cause and the generative element of all that can be within the rationalized standard format, which is the Tree of Life. The EFIK today have only ten Grades of Ekpe viz. MKPE, MBOKO, MBOKO MBOKO, MBAKARA, EBONGKO, NYAMKPE, OKU AKAMA, OKPOHO, NKANDA, and EYAMBA which in URUAN represents the king/Prime Minister and master Adept in Ekpe such as my father was. It can be understood that since the EFIK of later days did not want to be associated with the EFUTS who are of the same kindred with URUAN, they carefully excluded Ekpe IBOKU and IBONDA from their list, whereas the EFIK of today are in fact the bona fide group who form the two main Diaspora clans of IBOKU and IBONDA which moved from AKWA AKPA URUAN and settled in what became Creek Town, ie. IBOKU ESIT EDIK, and later those of IBOKU clan moved to settle in what is now Atakpa or Calabar; but this seems a contradiction so to speak. Many writers on EFIK progenitors claim that a good portion of those who later became the EFIK were from these original tribes/clans. For example, according to Etubom Ekpenyong Effiok of the Adak Uko Group, one of the places to which the Efik migrated from Ghana was Oku Iboku., and after settling there they were called EFIK Iboku after the town (Cf. Hart's Commission Report. Enugu, 1964, 65). Also when there was confusion at the 1964 Enugu Commission, a period in EFIK history was tinted with sectional politics which sought among other things, clarifications in the dispute over the Obongship of Calabar as also these two names of the EFIK, but neither Eburutu nor Iboku could be explained except that it is clear Amaku and others of his school invented these names from "Ibo-Ukwu" to justify their claims that the EFIK originated from Igbo land. The sacred Ekpe NKANDA cloth UKARA, is considered the biblical symbol for the Zodiac sign the TAURUS, ie. the bull and designates the face of the ox, signifying self-consciousness, which is also an indication that Ekpe URUAN was an ancient religion akin to the Mithraic Egyptian mystery cult. But this may well be for the fact that Ekpe URUAN is eminently wrapped in the principles of self awareness and human wisdom such that the UKARA of Ekpe NKANDA designates the seat and reservoir of wisdom for all URUAN peoples and bears evidence to the fire power inherent in the Order. It also signifies that there was a time mankind was close to God as can be gathered from the Genesis account of the human creation of Adam and Eve, the first man and woman and our First Parents:" And they heard the sound of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the evening". (Gen.3:8) Ancient URUAN regarded Ekpe URUAN as God himself, the author of all knowledge and enlightenment. In the Garden of Eden, man could see and speak to God face to face and was granted unlimited knowledge except perhaps the knowledge of good and evil represented by the tree in the middle of the garden which they were forbidden to eat. (Cf. Gen 3:3-6) Knowledge and enlightenment are first and foremost spiritual endowments and gains from God and cannot be confined to a particular race or group of people nor within geographical boundaries. That is why the good Lord who is all-wise. Omnipotent and omnipresent could not have denied these arcane spiritual gifts to the Equatorial peoples, including even URUAN, for He is God to all tribes and tongues. Similarly, the EKP? NKANDA (loop), one of the six equipments of NKANDA as it is called, restricts the movements of Ekpe NKANDA and the processes of men going into and out of the manifestation because the EKP? functions as the norm of URUAN society, her moral code and above all as the spirit of God in the conscience of the people since man cannot be on his own, being made in the image and likeness of the All-holy and Omniscient God (Gen.1:29; Cf Fig 24). Ekpe URUAN therefore represents this manifold knowledge and understanding of the All-wise God and initiating into the cult implies accession to these teachings and knowledge which evidently embodies training through taming the EKPE LION in us to make us apt and disposed to receive the knowledge and awareness of the All-holy and All-wise God. It involves according to Etinnyin Bassey Effiong Bassey, "the procedure for controlling the lion animal, EKPE LION in man and for attains self-mastery so that man can be freed from the bondage of his physical nature." (Bassey Effiong Bassey,27-28) In these teaching are regarded areas of secret knowledge to be imparted to the initiates for whose gains are more often than not social instead of spiritual. Perhaps this is to keep in line with the policy of the ancient Greco-Roman mystery religions whose teachings were guarded in secrets often wrapped up in deceptions to hoodwink the women and non-initiates, whereas these mysteries were instituted pure, un-adulterated and sublime and were proposed for the most holy and noblest ends by the most worthy means for mankind. In fact, these Greco Roman philosophers of the Eleusinian, Egyptian, Chaldean and Hindu and later the Masonic and Rosicrucian Lodges so jealously guarded the secrets so much so that the penalty for divulging any of these secrets was instant death. This might well be because the flouting of Ekpe URUAN laws always resulted in "NSIBIBI EYESIO ENYE MBA? ", a popular slogan meaning "penalty of death by NSIBIDI". When we come to analyze these facts, one comes to the conclusion that as a fact of history, the use of deception was always rife and was aimed at profanity and desacralization, a common practice not only of Ekpe URUAN but of any other kind of human endeavours where no written records are kept except their reliance upon oral traditions, whereas Ekpe URUAN should be a way to gain spiritual knowledge and upliftment in order to bring mankind into oneness with the True and living God, the all-wise omnipotent Maker of all through Christ the Messiah and Mediator of mankind; it should be a way to eliminate conflicts in the world among men.

EKPE NKANDA - MBRE ISIM

IDEM IKWO - EKPE EBONGKO

Ekpe in practice means the life and ways of the great URUAN peoples ancient and modern. As observed elsewhere, URUAN is Ekpe and EKPE designates URUAN through the generations. But Ekpe in general is a socio-cultural and political organization of the Equatorial Rain forest peoples especially both in Nigeria and the Cameroun Republics. It is a Socio-cultural organization and in concept, one "fused with religion and seasoned with the balm of the love of Christ and in time becomes a christed in tradition" Etinnyin Bassey Effiong Bassey in his masterpiece on Ekpe Efik opines that Ekpe was well suited for the of our traditions, heritage and usage (Bassey Effiong Bassey, 3). That is why we see it as a gifted culture and tradition which even when Christ the Redeemer He appeared on the world scene He insisted that He had not come to destroy or abolish the laws and traditions, but to perfect and fulfill them, ie. ratify and super naturalize (sanctify) them, and this is part of the universal truth for all mankind. Till date, it is still keeping to the ancient cultural instructions of God to Abraham, to wit, the circumcision of the male even female gender, though this really meant for Christ's faithful, the circumcision of the heart and mind in order to make them pleasing to and acceptable before God. Therefore, those who claim to be above culture and tradition need to re-examine their position seriously and honestly before God. It simply means that contrary to popular beliefs, tradition is continuity, but for URUAN in particular, it should be a journey of life from the old ways to the new, from darkness to light and from the human traditions to the traditions of God as revealed in Christ Who came not to abolish but to transform and sanctify. There should therefore be a continuity of purpose. Since there is so much an upsurge in culture awareness worldwide these days, even as the United Nations has acknowledged culture as an important world treasure, the renewal and revival of culture awareness in Nigeria nowadays in the rotator Annual Festival of Arts and Culture throughout the States of the Federation as a guide, this revival and up-date should therefore not be lost to URUAN again. Religion has always been part and parcel of culture that is why the early missionaries could not imagine how they could implant the Christian Religion without imparting their culture which goes with it. Then they were ruthless under the guise of purging the so-called pagan and heathen fetish practices in the Africa religion and to uproot whatever to them seemed incompatible with their European culture so that their new Christian counterpart might take root and be firmly implanted in the African newly reclaimed soil. In so doing African cultural organizations like Ekpe, Ekpo Ny?h?, Ek? ? kemba were seen as pagan and heathen practices and the newly converted to Christianity were asked to renounce their age-old cultural and religious practices if they were to gain heaven through their conversions to Christianity. The momentum now was one Christian religion, one Christian culture and one Christen God in order to attain salvation and justification. Whereas Culture and religion in the absolute sense belong to the realm of the consciousness in the mind of God, together religion and culture form part of the endowment of God to every nation or race which He created, there is therefore no different or particular endowment inherent in any culture which is so unique irrespective of race, colour, language or environment.

Nations and tribes may differ and even manifest different aspects of culture but before God all are the same. That is why St Paul had often insisted, that all are now children of God through Faith in Jesus and have been clothed in Christ, "There can be neither Jew nor Greek…neither slave nor free born,…neither male nor female- for you are one in Christ Jesus"; there is no room for distinction between Greek and Jew, between the (Gentile) uncircumcised and circumcised (Jew) or between barbarian and Scythian, slave or free" (Gal 3:28; Col1:11). With Christ even the Christian culture and religion should be available to all and that is why He commanded the Apostles to preach the Gospel everywhere and to all the nations of the earth thus implying that every tribe and tongue was capable of receiving the Good news; no pre-conditions were to be attached. In fact, the first confrontations and disagreements in the Church were over such matters as demanding the so-called Heathen cultures to forego their cultures and laws in order to embrace the new Christian Religion, and Paul had even told Peter to the face, that it was unconstitutional for him being a Jew to demand that the Gentiles should conform to his Jewish traditions before Baptism. There was therefore no justification why the early European/American missionaries had to demand the abolishing of the African religious and cultural traditions whereas they were not even bringing the Jewish Christian Religion which Christ had established but their own Euro-Christian type, and therefore the abandoning of Ekpe and other socio-cultural and religious practices before joining the Christian Church and receiving Baptism was uncalled for. This study is therefore meant to correct this anomaly and confusion and to restore culture and traditions before they completely die out from the face of the earth. It is through our early Christian converts accepted the condemnation of their religious and cultural practices and therefore sought distance themselves from their African culture pat in order to win back their souls en route Heaven, but we know those early Missionaries really and prejudicially tried hard to undermine any genuine effort some Chiefs and traditional Rulers like my grandfather did not to allow them and refused to grant the missionaries land and permission to settle in Idu which was the centre of trade and commerce for thousands of the then Southern Provinces of the Niger at the time and they had to settle for a small piece of land at Anua Offot near Uyo which was the colonial administrative Headquarters. But thanks to God, they at least settled to build the first ever Catholic Church in the whole of Nigeria in 1910 at Eman Uruan which still stands strong today in reminiscence of these events. However, as the twentieth century draws to a close the passion which attended such condemnations are gradually dying down with the new spirit and euphoria of revival of African arts and couture coupled with the zeal of enlightened and educated Christians these institutions are currently breathing a new spirit of compromise between the foreign and the native, the modern and the old and re-awakening with renewed vigour in the spirit of the times. The time now is apparently ripe to revisit Ekpe URUAN and our other cultural practices and as Etinnyin BEBs quoted above has so succinctly put it that the objective this time should be to rend the veil of a little which had been so wrapped up in mystery in secrecy and mythology in order to show to the world how Ekpe and its wisdom helped the great URUAN peoples of old to make sense of her immediate environment and to find her proper place in the scheme of God's creation and even above the others. Ekpe everyone knows has aspects and teachings which hitherto had been buried in the sands of time and history with the result that most of its wisdom teachings have been lost to humanity. We should now join forces with well-meaning people particularly those with claims to the truth to direct their hearts and minds to assist in the revival of a culture which God in His infinite wisdom had elected URUAN/EFIK in particular as also the EFUTS, the QUAS and those of the Cameroun Republic to be its proud and time honoured custodians. What remains to be done now is an attempt to purge however plausible these esoteric teachings and bring to the fore only certain arcane wisdom that had already been released to humanity through other sources, but which had been buried in mystery such that their revelations will banish ignorance and its consequences and so demonstrate to both initiates and the society at large the Christ-thought embedded in these inner teachings. Even now, most of the literature consulted has stopped short of addressing the inner issues of Ekpe except perhaps those that have highlighted their values and relative to similar known teachings in other parts of the world and from others of the great world religions. As foundations of a God-centered culture which initially has characterized Ekpe URUAN, these brief accounts happen to be the firsthand knowledge and experience of the author and some people of URUAN and are meant to tackle the socio-moral, philosophical and political underpinnings of Ekpe URUAN leaving out of course the mechanics of Ekpe which are reserved to only the initiates and adepts which fit into the universal mold of the teachings of Christ so as to help readers, men and women of goodwill grow in spirituality along the path of Christ.

EKPE URUAN IN SOCIO-CULTURAL AND POLITICAL SETTING

EKPE AND THE CONTRADICTIONS OF NDEM IN URUAN CULTURE & TRADITIONS

Much has been written on Ekpe especially in their early days of contact with URUAN and the Equatorial Coast of West Africa by the missionaries, colonial officials, ethnologists, traders, travelers and history scholars on whether Ekpe is a cult ie. a Religion or simply a cultural and socio-political organization, and much more on emphasis as to what they considered as objectionable practices in the Ekpe institution. But the answer to all this is neither here nor there. For URUAN, there is the belief that Ekpe which is the esoteric translation for God Almighty, to Him belongs all power, knowledge, glory and life. He is the Lord. He alone is All-holy and there is no other. He alone is to be worshipped; whatever sacrifices that are made in the name of Ekpe or to NDEM have nothing to do with the All-holy and Omnipotent God. Even if this sounds like a Christian version of Ekpe, but that is what the reality is as we are going to see. First and foremost, Ekpe is a system and institution and therefore part and parcel of the universal Truth which God in His infinite goodness and Wisdom granted to our forebears from the beginning and springs from the same arcane roots with others that have ever existed. These roots are founded on pure mystery of Truth for the upliftment of man. "Worship" is of course at the very centre of Ekpe activities but this must be clearly understood and distinguished from profane and cultic worship of NDEM, ancestors and other divinities. Worship here portents different things to different people whether Christian, Pentecostal or pagan, but as far as Ekpe URUAN is concerned, worship pertains to the unity, and application of the teachings and techniques embedded in Ekpe with reference to the various NDEM (divinities) located in Ekpe Houses/Globes. But whatever these divinities are, they should be for the control of the individual Houses. Neither are sacrifices offered to them as a rule, except that some over-zealous and fanatical devotees incensed by gluttonous appetite do sometimes influence Ekpe temples to default by gratifying their sensuous indulgence in feasting especially in "NDIA", in wining and in the eating of UKA? , and to do this, they begin to indulge themselves in all sorts of esoteric and cultic semblances including the pouring of libations which to the Christian eye tantamount to idol worship. But this is not the reality at all; otherwise the early Missionaries would have outlawed Ekpe outright on their arrival under pain of excommunication for those who would have flouted the ban. Therefore, the admission of NDEM into Ekpe by whatever authority or circumstance as presently envisioned pollutes and encourages certain conflicts in Ekpe tradition, thus giving the impression of worship which must be strongly repudiated by all authentic Ekpe devotees in URUAN.

Secondly, NDEM ie. Divinities in Ekpe or whatever name called are not looked upon as gods to whom worship and sacrifices may be accorded because worship has to do with religion, beliefs, prayers and Faith. Ekpe is monotheistic and cannot be associated with the polytheistic status of the Greco-Roman cults and Oriental religions. These Oriental Religions were the in thing in their philosophy, literature and religion and were seeped in Occultism. From the Latin "occulere = to hide", occultism means the belief in the efficacy of various practices-including astrology, alchemy, divination, and magic being based on hidden knowledge about the universe and its mysterious forces. Occult knowledge characteristically depends upon the notion of correspondences, or postulated relationships that unite all things viz. stars, planets, gemstones, colours, or even parts of the human body and life events one another and to invisible realities as well. Those who subscribe to this view believe that they can use occult knowledge to effect eg. healing or to predict the future. Occultism may also include a belief in beings, such as angels, deities, or spirits, who can be contacted by those who possess the appropriate knowledge. Occult knowledge is believed to be obtained through initiation by those who already have it, or through the study of the texts in which it is expounded. In Ekpe it is through NSIBIDI. There are occult practices within nearly all traditional civilizations. Western occultism has its roots in ancient Babylonian and Egyptian lores especially those recorded and transmitted through Neo-Platonism and the Hermetic books. Powerfully augmented by Jewish mysticism the Kabala, occultism became an obscure but important presence in the European Middle Ages (5th century to 15th century). Medieval occult practices included astrology, alchemy, and ceremonial magic rites for evoking spiritual beings. Eminent scholars such as 13th-century Italian Theologian Saint Thomas Aquinas and his contemporary, English philosopher Roger Bacon assumed the efficacy of alchemy and other occult arts in their theological teachings. Along with the rediscovery of classical learning, the Renaissance of the 15th century to 17th century witnessed a burgeoning of occultism. In Florence, Italy, the court of the Medici sponsored a revival of Neo-Platonism by establishing a Platonic Academy. Later, figures such as 16th-century German physician Philippus Aureolus Paracelsus, who blended Neo-Platonism philosophy with a rigorous empiricism, personified the transition from ancient occultism to modern science. Fraternal orders such as the Rosicrucians also pursued this esoteric wisdom. In the late medieval and early modern period however, occultism came to be increasingly regarded by the Catholic Church as connected with the worship of Satan. This development resulted in the persecution of those who practised witchcraft during the Renaissance, when thousands of women were tortured and killed under the accusation—usually false—that they engaged in occult practices. Despite both religious persecution and the rise of modern science, occultism continued as an intellectual presence in Europe in the 18th and 19th centuries. During this period, occultism came to be valued more for its spiritual meaning than for its pre-scientific world view. For the father of hypnotism, late-18th-century Austrian physician Franz Anton Mesmer, these occult practices offered a means of affirming both the fundamental nature of the universe as consciousness and the power of the human mind to interact with the universe directly. From this spiritual perspective, occultism easily moved into alignment with 19th-century romanticism and its emphasis on the past, on symbolism, and on the creative power of imagination.

These themes were important in the19th-century "reinventions" of occultism as the Spiritualism movement, the Theosophical Society and the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. The last two groups in particular included many members of the symbolist movement, in addition to other artists, poets, and thinkers. That is why I have used some of these symbolisms to explain the mysteries in Ekpe as it were. But in the 20th century, another rebirth of occultism developed in the counter culture movement of the 1960s, with its interest in astrology, divination, and magic. The New Age movement of the 1980s and 1990s may be considered as another manifestation of occultism. Though severely criticized by some orthodox religious groups, the Catholic Church in particular and mainstream scientists, occultism has remained vital. But this is not exactly the reality in Ekpe. What seems occult stems from the fact of initiation which upholds that only men of integrity, of good morals and substance can be initiated as members. They should be ready to put down their money and resources to show that they are truly men in URUAN. (Microsoft ® Encarta ® 2009. © 1993-2008 Microsoft Corporation). In fact, pantheism was the order of the day and the bed rock of most occultist practices where magic holds sway, but not Ekpe as I know it through my father who was himself and Adept and more so the EYAMBA ie. Prime Minister of Ekpe in URUAN Central. According to H.P. Blavatsky, occultism accepts revelation as a common form of the divine but never finite beings which come from the un-manifestable one life, the same God as the God of the Christians. It is an accepted fact that occultism does not admit of the concept of GOD as the ONLY ONE which Christians do, ditto Ekpe URUAN, a concept that can never be regarded as an occult organization in Ekpe even though it has both exoteric and esoteric aspects. Ekpe techniques are employed specifically to bring the initiates into conscious contact with the psyche; they are only parallels. Second, when sacrifices are offered to NDEM, they are offered separately and at different locations depending on which particular kind of NDEM they are offering to, whereas Ekpe is so unique an entity and institution that it does not admit of distinctions and locales. URUAN recognizes very many kindreds of NDEM and they are male and female, whether of the land or water viz; Eka Abasi, Anansa, Iboku Anwan, Ekpenyong, Ukana Offot, Awa Itam, Etefia, Afia Anwan ie. Mammy Water as also many other water Gods and goddesses which are not the same as "NDEM" ie. the spiritual power of God in Ekpe which God in his infinite goodness and liberality has bestowed to URUAN and such other nations in Ekpe. Third, the fact that there are many such NDEM as opposed to NDEM (singular) IDEM (plural, ie. spirits/gods represented in masquerades) to which sacrifices are offered discriminatingly, especially as each NDEM has his/her High Priests/priestesses and devotees, goes to prove that they are of polytheistic structure, whereas Ekpe URUAN is always regarded as monotheistic. This also is confirmed by the practice by which these sacrifices are made at different times and at the specific habitats and locations of the individual NDEM. Fourth, there is also the fact that each city state or clan in tends to extol the hierarchy of her NDEM better than the others (which is very common and rampant especially in Ibibio, Yoruba and even Igbo countries) when talking about their masquerades. One can only imagine what each city state extols in comparison to these hierarchies concerning the valour and power of their, Ogun, Sangun, Amadioha, Ibritam, Anya? Nsit, Awa Iman etc. whenever they praise or argue about the ways and exploits of their gods and goddesses. They are always unwilling to accept an inferior position for their own particular NDEM and this also applies to the consideration given to the sanctity of each habitat as a preferred and reserved domain and location for their NDEM.

Fifth, in practice some NDEM are known to possess the power of choice and to be capable of operating beyond their 'area of jurisdiction, so to speak and quite outside the city limits with the result that at certain times people are known to be under the influence of an NDEM implying he/she as victim, is operating beyond the normal domain of the NDEM. That is why the devotees tend to regard NDEM as worthy of worship such that sacrifices and libations are made to ward off the evil that has occurred on the victims of NDEM possession which is a different thing altogether. NDEM in this case simply denotes the water spirits or Mammy Water which is known to various nations and peoples the world over. This cannot therefore be an aspect of Ekpe, and certainly not of God Almighty. The veneration given to NDEM therefore is unacceptable because the practice stems from ignorance of the fact that NDEM as observed already are elemental spirits requiring neither veneration nor worship which in Christian terminology is referred to as LATRIA ie. worship and homage given to God Almighty and DULIA ie. the veneration given to Saints as God's friends and holy people like the Angels and Saints eg. the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. Michael the Archangel, SS Peter and Paul the Apostles. Here the lesson of Saul in the Book of Samuel is relevant when he went to the witch of Endor to enquire about his fate since God had disowned him. Samuel said to Saul when evoked by the witch: "Why have you disturbed me by bringing me up?" thus implying the disembodied spirit of the departed Samuel. When for example libation is poured in Ekpe custom, it is not to be bedeviled by the arguments on ancestor worship for the simple reason that the real meaning of Ekpe activities are buried in allegories, symbolic forms, NSIBIDI and other rituals among others. Libation also makes use of names of dead ancestors whereas there is no such thing in Ekpe. According to Patriarch E. B. Idowu as also Professor E. Okpoku from the University of Legon in Ghana, who was a one time H.O.D. in the Department of Religious Studies and Philosophy, University of Calabar (1986 -89), and others Ancestors are only honoured, venerated and respected and not worshipped in African religious tradition and culture. Ancestors do not constitute any power block possessing authority and power over any matter but are only concerned as the spirit citizens of the tribe or clan to bring the people's pleadings for the ultimate attention of God. (Idowu E. Bolaji, African Traditional Religion, S.M.C. Press, London, 1977, 76-82; Okpoku F.A. West African Traditional Religion, F.E.P. Intl. Accra 1977, 23-24). Sixth, there are certain worthless teachings which seem to assign a god status to NDEM whereas as the agents of God and servants of men, these NDEM are divinities endowed with elements of life in order to maintain the balance of life.

I have referred elsewhere to this in this article from the Scriptures and from the Encyclical "Spe Salvi – Saved in Hope "of Pope Benedict XVI. Seventh, women are often regarded as the high priestesses of NDEM, and as everybody knows it is unthinkable that Ekpe has now allowed women to direct her affairs not only in URUAN but also throughout the entire Cross River basin where Ekpe holds sway as also other regions of the Nigritic peoples which are Ekpe strongholds. Ndem in popular esoteric literature unlike the mysteries (ancient rituals), secret rites and ceremonies connected with various religious worships of ancient Greece and Rome, involves the worship of Monotheistic Deity and not its subsidiary which actually is NDEM in Ekpe. The ancient rites and ceremonies were known to, and practiced by, congregations of men and women who had been duly initiated; no other persons were allowed to participate. The origin and purpose of these mysteries are unknown. But there is the theory that the mysteries concealed deep truths and remnants of a primitive revelation too profound for the popular mind and so were revealed only to initiates. Undoubtedly the sacred rituals brought to the initiates secret religious doctrines, which in many instances were concerned with the continuance of life beyond the grave. The mysteries consisted of purifications, sacrificial offerings, processions, songs, dances, and dramatic performances. Often the birth, suffering, death, and resurrection of a god were enacted in dramatic form. The aim of the mysteries seems to have been twofold, namely, to give comfort and moral instruction for life on earth, and to inspire hope for life after death. The earliest and most important Greek mysteries were the Orphic, the Eleusinian, and the Dionysian. The Orphic mysteries were those of a mystic cult founded, according to tradition, by the legendary poet and musician Orpheus, to whom was attributed a great mass of religious literature of Orphism. Far more celebrated were the Eleusinian mysteries, connected with the worship of the goddesses Demeter and Persephone at Eleusis in Attica; with these divinities ie. NDEM were associated Pluto, the god of the underworld; Bacchus, a name of the youthful Dionysus, the god of vegetation and of wine; and other gods. The worship of Dionysus, or Bacchus, at Athens was accompanied by feasts, processions, and musical and dramatic performances. In later times the mysteries associated with Dionysus became occasions for intoxication and gross licentiousness immorality and debauchery. As the Bacchanalia these rites were introduced into Rome early in the 2nd century BC. At first the mysteries were celebrated only by women; when they were opened to men, the gatherings were suspected of gross immoralities, and in 186 BC the Roman Senate attempted to suppress the rites by decree. Secret rites were a part of the worship of several Greek deities, such as Hera, queen of the gods, Aphrodite, goddess of love, and Hecate, goddess of the underworld. Many foreign religions adopted by the Greeks and Romans had mysteries connected with the worship of the divinity; these religions included the worship of the Phrygian goddess Cybele, the "great mother" of the gods; the Egyptian Isis, goddess of the moon, nature, and fertility; and the Persian Mithras, god of the sun. The worship of these deities spread throughout the Greco-Roman world and was extremely popular in the early centuries of the Roman Empire. Isis, who at an early date had been identified with Demeter, was worshiped in Italy as late as the 5th century AD (Microsoft ® Encarta ® 2009. © 1993-2008 Microsoft Corporation).

Sometimes people mistakenly regard IDEM Ekpe which designation implies the Ekpe masquerade for NDEM, eg. IDEM IKWO, IDEM NKANDA, / IDEM NYAMKPE, etc. are simply Ekpe in their specific masquerade and physical appearances. They are sacrosanct. The various NDEM (spirits and divinities) whether of water or land elements as some people would wish them to be addressed may be regarded as land/water gnomes. Some forms of NDEM have finny lives, others commonly have python and white bird forms and in that URUAN has allowed women to direct her affairs they can take any form of choice. Blavatsky has further opined that they have neither immortal spirits nor tangible bodies but take their forms relative to the elements they belong - water, fire, air etc or whatever they but in some distinguishable degree. NDEM are a combination of sublimated matter and rudimental mind and therefore are considered to belong to a lower cosmic ladder than man. It is the belief in many circles especially in URUAN that some NDEM are changeless though they have individuality. URUAN also reasons that this is not a matter of faith, or Christianity or whatever, but that under certain circumstances NDEM do have the ability to assume tangible bodies. I have noted this phenomenon in connection with the Mysteries of Religion treated in Chapter three, and this has been the personal experience of the author concerning these mysterious occurrences. Sometimes these tangible bodies can assume the likeness and portraits of known personages. They are recognized by inner vision and astonishingly a common phenomenon in URUAN. But what is the general attitude of the rank and file in URUAN with regard to NDEM? Here opinions and attitudes are divided. In modern times owing to the submission of the generality of citizens to the reign of Christ in their minds and hearts people are indifferent to the phenomenon of NDEM and merely tacitly believe NDEM is a reality. They believe that some of the disasters and personal problems that inveigh upon people are the responses of NDEM to the people's nonchalant attitude towards them. But the vociferous minority including actual devotees who believe they are devils incarnate these even go to the extent of regularly offering sacrifices to them, especially NDEM MM? ? .

But to appreciate the correct situation we can also garner some opinions and ideas about NDEM from non-URUAN writers on the matter. The Greek philosopher, mathematician and scientist Pythagoras wrote centuries before the Christian era that NDEM (elemental spirits) are of two types, those which are friendly and those which are wicked and harmful to man. Similarly, the great Christian theologian Tertullian classified NDEM as princes and powers of the air. St. Clement of Alexandria one of the Church Fathers opined that it was absurd to call NDEM devils for they are only inferior angels arguing that "the powers which inhabit elements, move the winds, and distribute showers and as such are but agents and subject to God (J. J. Williams, 134-142). According to Blavatsky these elementals (NDEM) bring to light those long forgotten events of the past "now preserved in the inscrutable depths of our memory" (Blavatsky, H.P.326). But Elizabeth Prophet in her typical and more forthright opinion admits that NDEM "are useful agents of God toiling for the good of man and therefore deserving the appreciation and gratitude of men".(Prophet C. Elizabeth C. 3-5) A more veritable statement on NDEM can be seen from the Book of Life, the Word of God Himself and that is from the Epistle of St Paul to the Colossians, the second chapter where St Paul among others illustrate the essential problem of Religion of his time quite accurately by contrasting life "according to Christ" with life under the dominion of the "elemental spirits of the universe"(NDEM):* "See to it that none captivates you with the empty lure of a philosophy of deceit and of the kind that is based on human tradition, according to the elemental spirits (NDEM) of the universe and not according to the principles of Christ".(Col 2:8) What then should be the attitude of and indeed all men and women of goodwill on these matters? According to Baroness Adelman von Vary of Austria, many people have found the elementals friendly, but many others do not fare well at the hands of these spirits, it all depends on the mind quality of the persons attempting to relate with them. But Blavatsky reasoned that it all depends because naturally the bad must attract the bad, and the good, the good; therefore, the Baroness was successful in cultivating friendly response because she was a good woman (H. P. Blavatsky, 325). Pp. Benedict XVI has also referred to NDEM when describing a people/generation that has lost Faith and Hope: "Myth had lost its credibility; the Roman State Religion had become fossilized into…merely political Religion.

Philosophical Rationalism had confined the gods (NDEM) within the realm of unreality, and the Divine was seen in the various ways of cosmic forces, but a God to whom one could pray did not exit"(Cf. Encyclical: 'SPEI SALVI – SAVED IN HOPE', AAS, Libreria Editrice Vatican, Citta del Vaticano, 2007,6-7) That is the natural law, but many women in URUANEFIK especially the fare-skinned and young ones have suffered untold problems and endured terrible experiences in connection with NDEM and are therefore living in fear and deprivations even though they have spent their fortunes in sacrifices to NDEM in terms of time and resources. In some cases, marriages have been put asunder by NDEM on account of presumed putative marriage and adultery with NDEM. But Rev. Fr. Michael U. Offiong has confirmed that NDEM in our context are beautiful and useful he has agreed in line with Elizabeth Prophet that NDEM has nothing to do with human sacrifices on the contrary the deities (NDEM) save life and help to bring more children into the world. (M. U. Offiong; 33). We should now conclude that since Ekpe is concerned with all aspects of life it can be rightfully argued that these elemental spirits (NDEM) are also important to Ekpe. By applying the reflection of Israel Regardie in his book the Golden Dawn, we can therefore understand the relationship of Ekpe Houses and the elements as given below. (Israel Regardie; the Golden Dawn, Vol. 1 St Paul, Minnesota, Llewellynpub.1978, 169). The elements in the higher planes of consciousness are of a much greater texture which operate in the fluid realm of life. But in the context of EKPE animal the ANAWURI Ekpe is the logo and the mane is paramount in all Ekpe forms that is why the Kabalistic tree can fit into the principles of Ekpe forms to show that the hierarchy commonly accepted has been jumbled to misdirect the profane and some of the names are used allegorically. (B. F. Thompson, Flash of the Spirit, Random House, NY, 1983, 241).

4. EKPE URUAN, THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION & MAGIC

The Greco-Roman mystery as also Vedic Religions of India named after Mithras the mythical god of the Aryans was first introduced to India when the Aryans invaded the Upper Indus about 1500BC before coming up West with the conquest of the entire East by the Roman armed forces under Pompey and Julius Caesar about 100-80 BC. This religion found favor with the Roman army and those involved in business, and during the monotheistic reforms of Zoroaster it shredded its polytheistic structure for monotheism and was made subordinate only to the supreme god of Ortiz as the god of heavenly light, the all-seeing and protector of the righteous both in this world and the next. This god was the archenemy of the powers of evil and darkness and was regarded as mediator between men and the gods such that those who were not strictly members of the cult and not being well-informed were not in a position to truly assess it. They saw it as a mystery religion heavily dependent on rites and rituals as well as symbolisms of the Zodiac. Sacrifices constituted the solemn rite of worship with a sacramental meal. Small wonder then why the early Christian writers likened it to the Eucharist and Baptism with the seven degrees of initiation available to Mithraic adepts. Mithraic religion was a cult, a private association supported by private contributions of the elites and wealthy and was administered by non-clerical officials. The sacrificing of a bull was probably an indication that the practice was taking place when the sun was in the Zodiac sign of the Taurus and this constituted a solemn rite in worship of the god with a sacramental meal in tow. Mithraism was open to all irrespective of status except women who were barred from the cult whereas in contrast to Christianity which admits all, Ekpe holds that creed, social status and womanhood constitute legitimate barriers to admission and initiation into ant of its globes except in certain cases where woman of rank and the nobility are given cosmetic initiation and decorated with NTA? NKANDA peacock feather. What all this portents is that up till AD 394 when Emperor Theodosius outlawed Mithraism because it appeared as an emerging rival and opponent of Christianity, both had much in common and this led many to conclude that if Christianity had been stopped early in her history as the Caesar and those of the great persecutions tried to do, the world would have gone Mithraic even till today. That also is the reason which to some extent Ekpe and Mithraism may be said to have some areas of similarities, but there are major differences between them as was the case between Christianity and Mithraism. Now a question arises; did the ancient URUAN/EFIK sages and great men, mostly illiterates as they were, ever came in contact with the Greco-Roman elites talk less of the great Aryan philosophers of yore? Whence Ekpe then, their contact with the Portuguese and Spaniards in the 14th century of the Christian era notwithstanding? Could it also be that there were Mithraism borrowings but not positively and directly either in Ekpe or Christianity? Or is it not rather that God Almighty in His infinite Goodness and Wisdom wished to grant African nations especially those of the Nigritic stock including URUAN/EFIK also this hidden profound knowledge which St Paul with his very lips had prayed the Lord to grant his coverts of Ephesus as he knelt in supplication before the Father from whom every fatherhood in heaven and on earth takes His name, so that in the abundance of His Glory may He grant (and also to URUAN EFIK: and "Through the Spirit, enable them to grow firm in power with regard to their inner self, so that Christ may live in their hearts through Faith, and then, planted in love and built on love with all the Saints (God's holy people) they will (and URUAN/EFIK also) have the strength to grasp the breadth and the length, the height and the depth….they may be filled with the utter fullness of God"(Eph 3:15-18). But who knows if this prayer was not also anticipated on behalf of URUAN/EFIK thousands of years BC through the intercession of St Paul? "O the depths of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and how inscrutable His ways" (Rom 11:33) to grant

URUAN/EFIK also among His Saints these unfathomable wisdom and Knowledge in Ekpe! "Thanks are to God for this His Inexpressible Gift". (2Cor 9:15) But a cursory look at the differences would suffice and put straight our records on Ekpe and Christianity:

First, regarding similarities for all of them; there is the Belief in a divine Lord, by whose actions performed once (unlike the annual passions of is iris) man was assured of salvation also a sacramental meal and ritual Baptism. There is also the concept of a religious enlistment and service under a divine commander which admitted no social prejudices, nor dissimilar ideas about heaven and judgment. All of them have a higher moral code than those found in contemporary society of the time. Second, on the differences, Mithraism was not strictly monotheistic whereas Ekpe, ditto Christianity are eminently monotheistic. The Redeemer in Mithraism and Ekpe before now were mythical figures whereas in Christianity it is Jesus who lived on earth as God incarnate. Ekpe and Mithraism discriminate and have preferential prejudices against the poor, the weak and women. Sacrifices of bulls were a common feature in Mithraism and Ekpe but were later abolished in Ekpe but with the Christians there are no sacrifices because they believe in only the once and for all sacrifice of Jesus on Calvary. The family is a source of strength in Christianity so was Ekpe, but now bastardized through abuses which have made it a source of weakness; for Mithraism it was the military. These areas might be responsible for the relative ease with which Christianity has continued to permeate the social fabric of Ekpe zones in Africa as they have become areas of contest for the hearts and minds of the people. In fact, till the Consecration of Dominic Cardinal Ekandem as the first Anglo-francophone Catholic Bishop of West and Central Africa, the early Missionaries had no problems with Ekpe as the adherents were only demanded to steer clear of the sacrificial aspects of Ekpe including aspiring to the higher ranks and "sitting on ITIAT Ekpe which were practices regarded as heathen. My father was the Eyamba and the "High Priest" in the entire territory of URUAN until the then Bishop Ekandem banned it among Catholic Christians. When my father died in 1957 that also signaled the dead toll of Ekpe particularly in URUAN Central which was predominantly Catholic, the other zones of North and Southern URUAN were simply limping as most members belonged to the Presbyterian and Methodist Faiths. Signs now abound that Christianity is winning the war against Ekpe as it did against Mithraism of the Greco-Roman Empire. Christianity which is cultured in Charity, tolerance and understanding is succeeding in eliminating the dehumanizing and discriminatory practices which coloured the lives of many modern Ekpe devotees and elites, perhaps due to modernism, weakness of human nature, pride, graft, politics and greed. Then Ekpe is destined to die as others before it unless people return to the basics of pure pristine Christed culture of the URUAN past because civilization and Christianity are bound to bring changes whether we like it or not. Culture is not static; it is time and age related.

The fact that many may not accept these distinctions does not in any way detract from what we have said about Ekpe as a monotheistic institution in its origins. In fact, the divinities have no self-existing status and therefore cannot be worshipped as such since they are not independent gods. People who practice the tree and authentic Religion are not ready to subscribe to a religion of interest group/organizations where there is conflict and competition because they know they must love their neighbour as themselves. It is always the illusion of quick rewards and material benefits invested in the desire for orgies of drinking, feasting, dancing and even in raids of plundering, immorality and sharing of the booty which now characterize Ekpe that lure the unwary and Lilly livered to initiate in Ekpe, then they begin to abandon the pious activities and the path to the higher places of consciousness in Ekpe and to align with cosmic elements of polytheism and NDEM. The primary aim of a true Religion (the Christian Church) is to bring the well-intentioned and those with mature minds and conscience to the lobe God, the only One to be worshipped, adored and prayed to with Christ as the way. This is Ekpe in practice and not those who elect to flirt with subsidiary powers of the universe and electing to worship Ekpe Houses/ Lodges and their overlords as their demy-gods in the persons of the higher adepts for quick benefits. In this regard an analysis of a commentary by St Gregory Nazianzen, one of the early Church Fathers on the text on the Magi who, guided by a star from the Orient, came to adore Christ the new-born Infant King at Bethlehem is enlightening. People just indulge in the worship of the elemental spirits of the universe and elements that govern mankind instead of a personal God Who governs the stars ie. the universe. According to him, these stars were moving in the orbit determined by Christ and so are now pointing to the fact that the worldview has been overturned and no more fashionable once again today. It is God Who governs the stars and not the laws of matter and of evolution that that have the final say, but reason and love – a Person, and if we know this Person and He knows us, then truly the inexorable power of material elements and spirits no longer has the last word, astrology has now come to an end with Him (G. Nazianzen, PG. 37, 428-429).

INITIATIONS INTO EKPE URUAN, EKPE HOUSES & LAWS

QUALIFICATIONS FOR ADMISSION AND FALSIFICATIONS

Ekpe in URUAN is a reserve of the nobility, the men of stature and means as well as those who are mature in mind, body and spirit because it is an institution that confers honour, power, worth and dignity with an aura of authority. It is not for the lily livered of society, nor for the effeminate, the philanderer, the glutton and the drunkard. Ekpe is neither for weak souls nor the faint-hearted, it is for the man of valour, the principled, trustworthy and strong-willed who can look anybody even the King, Prime Minister or President in the face. In Nigeria he should be able to sit comfortably among the Emirs, even the Sultan, the Obas, the Obis and the Ezes. He should be comfortable with Professors, money magnets and business barons, makers and shakers of commerce and chieftains of the political and civil class as also CEOs, MDs etc. Above all, he should be a greatly respectful and humble man and at home with the high and lowly, because he is humane, a man of the people and the society. Yes, he should be a man, a man who can stand before the MAN Jesus, the only MAN, the one of whom Pontius Pilate the great potentate of the Greco-Roman world who could say "what I have written, I have written" and damned all consequences, and testified to by saying:" Ecce HOMO:* behold the MAN"! But it doesn't necessarily mean that every URUAN citizen wishing to be initiated will have all these qualities, no, but these are what are required such that before and after his initiation, everybody can be proud of him and say, this is a man from URUAN. In fact, before the Nigeria/Biafran or civil war, nobody could ascend to the throne of URUAN as the Nsomm who was not an Ekpe Adept, not just and initiate into Ekpe. The late Nyong Essien was even an Eyamba in Ekpe, with what was called "EKPE NYONG ESSIEN" and he performed at my grandfather's funeral to boot in 1945. Since the 19th century with the arrival of the colonialists and Missionaries, Ekpe initiations were reserved for the nobility and respected men in URUAN society simply because wisdom and knowledge of the ancients that were not commonly available were imparted in the temples away from common view; and knowledge, as they say, is power. With Ekpe much was accomplished, including putting the masses in tow and on their toes. In time, the initiates began to enjoy the spoils of power and this in turn led to blatant abuses against society, particularly women and slaves. In time, selfish interests took a better part of the initiates and brought them to agree on symbolic initiations of slaves, non-indigenes and women who were members of the blue-blooded class and who could put down their money and resources for the initiations. Ekpe initiation was and should be a very costly venture and only people of substance could enroll, but not that Ekpe URUAN is on sale for the highest bidder and all comers. Then the nobility having engaged much of their time on feasting, dining and dancing, particularly after materially-rewarding mercantile links which they sort of established with England via the different Commercial Companies like the UAC, PZ, M&K, G.B. Ollivant, Chellerams, etc. which were established at Idu on the second road to the beach i.e. ? WA? A-IBA anglicized to NWANIBA (just as ATA–AKPA became ATAKPA).

It should be noted here that just before Independence in 1960, Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe who was the Premier of the Eastern Region closed down most of these Trading Companies and transferred them to Port Harcourt where the NCNC held sway because most of the people of URUAN were pro Action Group – AG though the great politicians like Chief the Hon. Nyong Essien were NCNC card carrying members and officials. Idu was always the traditional nerve centre of Beach trade in URUAN even before the 16th century including the entire region of what is now Akwa Ibom, Rivers and Abia States. Later it became the chief slave port. But it was soon found out that male slaves were increasingly being harassed while trading for their masters and they began to initiate them into Ekpe in order to be qualified to join in the booming trade with the Europeans. Also, there arose the need to motivate an industrious and trusted slave who through hard work had become a pillar in the family household within which he was serving and so he was initiated into Ekpe. Again having also been rewarded with the marriage of blue-blooded daughters of the family, room had to be made for them and their male descendants to be free in all respects, including the right to Ekpe initiation. To this end a new policy was designed for that purpose to wit that: "Irrespective of the social status of the husband, a blue-blooded woman cannot give birth to a slave". Can you beat that, URUAN/EFIK wisdom, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing!

ORIGINS OF IDU, NWANIBA, MBIAKONG & ESUK ODU

NWANIBA: THE COLONIAL SEA PORT OF THE OIL RIVERS PROTECTORATE

Old Colonial Nwaniba Post Office IDU – 1908
First Post Office now in Modern Akwa Ibom State – Created in1987

Mkpisong Pius J. & Prof.
Margaret M. Okon (nee Essien)
Authors of the piece on Old Colonial
NWANIBA & Beach Town –Esuk Mbehe IDU

According to Mkpisong Pius and wife, Prof (Mrs.) Margaret J. Okon, the present NWANIBA in IDU town, Headquarters of URUAN Local LGAs was the centre of international trade and commerce bustling with economic activities. (Okon P.J, Mkpisong. Modern Press Ltd. Uyo, 2009,7) There at Nwaniba were established numerous companies like the Paterson Zochonis (PZ) United Africa Company (UAC), the Lever Brothers, May & Baker (M&K) Chellerams, etc. of the Niger Oil Rivers Protectorate which dealt on palm kernels, palm oil, stock fish, piassava, and other items of merchandize. The General Police Office and the Central Police Station for the entire area were also established here. These companies used to ship the palm oil and kernel, raffia etc. by railings-cum escalators into their big ships from the Nwaniba seaport to various countries in Europe especially to Liverpool, England and in return the people purchased stock fish, zinc, tinned salt fish – ekpum? ny?, canned foods, tinapa, books, clothes, kerosene, enamel, lanterns, etc. which were distributed throughout the entire Eastern Region of Nigeria with headquarters at Enugu. There were also transporting Companies, traders and transporters including Messrs E.O. Ndubia & Sons, Olatunji Alabi & Sons, many of which were from Yoruba and Igbo countries. The only tarred and well paved road in the whole of the East was this one that led half-way between Uyo metropolis and Nwaniba on account of the high and slippery hills leading to the seaport.

However, later in the late 1950s and early 1960s, for political reasons, this epi-centre of commerce was moved and relocated ostensibly to Port Harcourt since this strategic Niger Delta town had by now been practically colonized by the Igbos with thousands becoming land owners and great merchants, money magnets, industry barons and quasi - slave masters of the economy. Some of these colonial firms were also re-located to Onitsha, Aba and other towns in the Eastern Region especially those in Igbo country at the time DR. Nnamdi Azikiwe held sway as the head of the Ruling Government party, the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroun - NCNC. Consequently, those foreign companies also left leaving only skeleton personnel and services to protect these establishments. Then the Nigeria-Biafra civil war dealt the last death-knell on the functioning of these Companies altogether. This occurrence similarly led to the decline and eventual collapse of economic activities, which turned the whole area into a ghost country as a result of the exodus of people, especially the business men and women till this day. In fact, the whole seaport became filled up with silt and water plants as a result of the lack of its utilization, thus rendering the whole seaport impassible to-date. One would have thought that with the new impetus and re-organization of Nigeria with a brand new democratic governance and processes, after this sad episode and resultant return to wit, the democratic governance, the new helmsmen and ruling party at the centre as also the Head of Government at Uyo, ie. the Governors of Akwa Ibom State beginning with erstwhile Gov. Victor Attah, Godswill Akpabio and the amiable current Gov. (Elder) Udom G. Emmanuel and helmsmen, would think it profitable to resuscitate the seaport and markets with the establishment of a railway terminal and head station at the Idu seaport which is the nearest town to Uyo, the Headquarters of Akwa Ibom State. Nwaniba is just within 5 minutes-drive and less than ten kilometres to Uyo. IDU is perhaps the only town with a large undeveloped and unused available vast land in the State for a venture requiring a large land mass such as the railway. In fact, 75% of the land mass used in the building up of Akwa Ibom State airport is also on URUAN/EFIK land ie. URUAN South; the remaining piece of land in Okobo and Nsit Atai Local Governments is where the actual airport buildings are sited, while the extensive international run way and accessories are located on URUAN land. This is nothing but the Nigerian brand of African politics of exclusivism and political gerrymandering - a grand sidelining and marginalization of a people at that! Apart from this colonial road built in 1910, there is no other tarred or paved road in the whole of URUAN territory except the other colonial one of the late 1950s linking Uyo and Oron which was the nearest port leading to Calabar main seaport, the first and former colonial headquarters of now the Federal Republic of Nigeria. IDU is the strategic epicenter of Akwa Ibom State and the nation south of the Niger and could have been apart from Lagos and Port Harcourt perhaps the most important sea-port of the nation linking Nigeria to the outside world since Calabar is too far away, in fact the last important town in Nigeria. It would have linked Nigeria easily to the Cameroun Republic, Equatorial Guinea and Gabon just a few minutes away from Akwa Ibom International Airport. But politics and the so called "minority area" factor which perhaps makes for the reasoning that the area could be inhabited not by the same human beings as the rest of Nigerians of the "political majorities" in the Federal Republic of Nigeria, but by animals and trees! It is a sad commentary on the situation and the inhuman treatment of Nigerian citizens who are abandoned to wallow in misery, untold hardship and deprivation of sorts.

Since the 1940s, the colonial Government of King George VI of England, through the Wilkins Commission of Enquiry Report of precisely 1947, had in very clear terms and unmitigated pronouncements directed that these areas be taken for reckoning. It warned the Nigerian Colonial Government then of the dire consequences of neglecting these minority areas to the detriment and peril of the Nigerian nation state and advised that the "issue of minorities" be promptly and equitably addressed. True to the fears of His Imperial Majesty's Government of Great Britain, the situation has remained and is even worse today as I am writing this book. The Niger Delta militancy is my witness and sure case in point which almost grounded this Nation and brought Nigeria to her knees, but for the timely orchestrated and fire brigade-cum cosmetic and hypocritical efforts of addressing the issue inaugurated by His Excellency, President Umaru Yar d'Adua (2007-2010) through the granting of the often mouthed mantra sloganeering quasi-military action of "AMNESTY" to the so-called militants of the Niger Delta region in October 2009. For which is easier or of greater economic importance and calculation to Nigeria, the development of the Nwaniba seaport which is less than five minutes' drive thereto from the Head Quarters of a State, to wit, Akwa Ibom State Capital Uyo, of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, or the spending of billions of Dollars to develop a seaport at Ibaka in Colonial Eket Division, now of former Oron Local Government Authority which is more than two hours' drive from Uyo, even though the road thereto is well tarred and may even be dualized sooner than expected? That is the poser and the dilemma of Nigerian politics and political economy, administration and governance of an African nation, the so acclaimed giant and pride of Africa for that matter? The International Community must hear this and come to the rescue of URUAN/EFIK. But this is not politics or a grand gerrymandering; it is injustice and man's inhumanity to man crying to the highest Heavens! The Ibaka seaport is in order, yes and obviously to be recommended because I doff my hat to the indefatigable action Governor, Chief Godswill Akpabio for his great heart and granting this largess to a minority Area like Ibaka LGA; a name derived from "(Mbufo owo) Iba ka!" This last remark is one of great significance, because centuries back in the history of modern AKPAKIP ARO nation, there was a great feud over land matters between the sub-tribe Okobo and main town of Akani Obio ORON. To cut the story short, the people of Enwang who played as arbitrators between them chose two delegates to arbitrate with the words in their dialect: "anwi iba ka" = "two of you should go", hence the place of that meeting to consider the arbitration was afterwards simply coined by joining the two words together as IBAKA, which has remained till today just as Atakpa – "ATA AKPA" in Calabar, or Nwaniba – " wa a Iba" in IDU. But the fact of the matter is that the priority of this moot point must be put right and should be pursued with vigour.

ESUK MBEHE IDU-PORT OF ARRIVAL OF EARLY EUROPEANS & MISSIONARIES

Charles Walker (RSC) at Idu Iffiayong Beach) 1920.

Yes, NWANIBA in question became a prominent colonial sea port in those days, grace á la the transfer of URUAN Headquarters from Ikpa to IDU where Nwaniba is situated and the construction of a new IDU-UYO laterite road in 1902. Before this time, the colonial "main road" ie. the Government road was that from Ikpa which passed through St. Joseph's Primary School along what is now IDU – MBAK ETOI road. That was why the early Missionaries established the St. Joseph's Catholic Church as also the school along that road. Ikpa had been one of the trading sea posts established by the EFIK including Ikot Offiong, Ikon Eto, Uwet, Aquagune, etc. as mentioned above in chapter one. Most of the palm produce transactions ditto trade in agricultural products carried out on the Cross River basin by the EFIK as also around Northern Uruan and other areas including Itam, Ibiono, Ikono in colonial Itu Division passed through Ikpa trading sea port. Ikpa has same border with Mbiakong which was also part of the booming trade centre. The names IKPA and MBIAKONG have a significant place in ancient URUAN history, ditto IDU and ESUK ODU. At the time AKWAAKPA URUAN land mass became too congested owing to increase in their populations, that was after ATAKPA - Calabar had been discovered with the new URUAN now EFIK settling there and also increasing in numbers. Then URUAN sages "looked into their meteorite wand IKA" – as their custom was in order to ascertain the extent of the land mass before them. They discovered that there was indeed a vast land but a greater portion had already been occupied by those who later became known as the IBIBIO. With the fear of war which could ensue should they move thither, some had in trepidation exclaimed:"Eyak nnyin ikpa – Let us go and die", hence the word IKPA for those who moved up North. Then others had summoned courage to say:" Eyak nnyin idu – Let us go and live" hence IDU for all those who had moved to the central part and to the south. Meanwhile they selected their men of valour as spies – mbia ek? , hence the word MBIAKONG for those appointed to spy the land. That is why ancient MBIAKONG ostensibly found themselves settling in the central part between the North and the South. It is also an aspect of URUAN history that all these happened as they had moved nearer to the mainland IBIBIO on the coast where they "were discussing their fate" ie. ESUK ODU.

But it should be recalled that ESUK MBEHE IDU – as an important slave sea port after Calabar was by this time "a no-go area" both to the European merchants, Companies and Colonial Administrators, ditto the early Holy Ghost Missionaries except the slave dealers and supercargoes who were bringing in many other profitable items like stock fish, cloths, tobacco etc. to the people from Europe. Whereas the EFIK were the first to sign the Treaty for the abolition of slave trade in Africa with Great Britain in 1841 and eventually banned it totally in 1902, but IDU and by implication ESUK MBEHE IDU had stubbornly refused to ban the ignoble trade after Calabar her counterpart, had done so.

No wander then, that after the colonial Authorities had taken full control of and transferred the HQ to IDU also with the European Companies firmly entrenched thereat, Mbiakong which is border town with IDU having lost their share of tribute accruing to them from Ikpa would struggle without success, to establish their ownership of NWANIBA sea port hence the slogan: "MBIAKONG koyom IDU" (ik?)! It is worthy of note also, that in the 1930s Ifiayong Obot now Ifiayong Usuk had followed suit to claim ownership of the entire ESUK MBEHE IDU and the adjoining NWANIBA by renaming it Esuk Ifiayong a.k.a "IFIAYONG BEACH" in their honour. This episode then had resulted in an intractable law suit between IDU and Ifiayong. The verdict of this case had been given in favour of Idu right in the 1940s by the presiding Judge, then Magistrate E.E. Anwan of Creek Town. But IDU in the 1800s in the first place had allowed a piece of land close to ESUK MBEHE to be used by some citizens of in Northern Uruan including Ifiayong Obot. They had come with the others including people from Itam, Ikono, Ibiono etc. to join in the booming trade but some of them and those from Ifiayong in particular elected to settle there permanently which was no problem to IDU as was discussed elsewhere in this book. Then Idu actually had donated them a different and larger portion of land up-hill nearer to the city centre and quite close to the border with Mbiakong. But this favour took a different twist and even resulted in bad blood and loss of face with Mbiakong, a situation which culminated in frayed nerves and a near internecine war and bloodshed between Ifiayong and Mbiakong. This in the meantime has been calmed down a bit through the prompt intervention of the current peace-loving Action Governor, Chief (Dr) Godswill Akpabio. It had also resulted in the transfer to Ifiayong itself of the ancient central Parish centre from AFIA OKONO – Boundary between Idu and Mbiakong, by the erstwhile Bishop of Uyo, His Lordship, now His Grace Archbishop Joseph Ekuwem - an issue that has angered Mbiakong to the core. AFIA OKONO, lying midway between IDU and MBIAKONG which are the two founding towns of yore was chosen in the first place, by the early Holy Ghost Missionaries as the most central location for the parish centre in the early 1900s. Later on it became the epicentre of Central Uruan. This is a very strategic location for all the new towns and villages which have now developed from the ancient two. No wonder the Holy Ghost Missionaries named the location and Catholic Mission centre as Holy Trinity because it stands right at the three-road junction between Mbiakong town, Idu and Eman Ikot Ebo. AFIA OKONO itself is the perennial tree usually planted by the ancients to demarcate the boundaries between villages, family compounds, markets etc. AFIA OKONO in Central is actually the land demarcating Idu land and Mbiakong territory. To make sure there would never be any land disputes for generations unto generations in the area, the Founding Fathers of IDU and MBIAKONG used the "AFIA OKONO" tree which can grow into a gigantic tree in contra-distinction to the stunted "GREEN OKONO" tree to make this boundary demarcation. When IDU donated land to ancient IFIAYONG OBOT in perpetuity as homeland and settlement since they so requested, this territory now gazzetted IFIAYONG USUK, they warned them never to go beyond the AFIA OKONO tree in order not to trespass into MBIAKONG territory. This has been the source of their perennial clashes and bad blood with MBIAKONG, ditto IDU because they have in recent years trespassed the two boundaries both into MBIAKONG as also well beyond IDU territory. This land was given to them about two hundred years ago. Ifiayong should be well advised to maintain the peace and understand what "AFIA OKONO" tree stands for in URUAN/EFIK tradition.

In another vein and on a more serious and larger scale in the socio-political dimension of this our beloved country, this very politics of exclusion has also played out very dramatically in the total neglect of URUAN area since Independence resulting in what could be termed as the complete black-out of IDU the headquarters of URUAN and the entire URUAN nation from Nigeria's developmental efforts to bring the good things of life to these people who also are bona fide Nigerian citizens. Whereas IDU, should be the de facto town where the strategic location of the Nigerian Navy headquarters and stronghold in Akwa Ibom State, the current charismatic action Governor of the State, His Excellency, Chief Dr. Godswill Obot Akpabio in his massive developmental and progressive transformation effort to place Akwa Ibom State on the progressive map of Nigeria and Africa, instead of siting the nearest seaport and naval base to the state Capital at IDU, precisely in Nwaniba town, a distance of just less than 10 kilometers away from UYO, has deemed it politically profitable to site the navy HQ and sea-port at Ibaka which is more than 100 kilometres from Uyo, the State Capital city as remarked elsewhere in this book. Ibaka Navy base yes, and justified, yes, but nothing at all at "IDU? This is very evil and unproductive as far as the economic potentialities of both the State in particular, and Nigeria in general, is concerned! And this is nothing but again the politics of standing justice and good reason on the head just for political reasons. Or again, when viewed against the entire spectrum of the progressive positioning of Nigeria towards the "20/20/20" mantra of Nigeria becoming the 20th of the greatest of the most developed economies on earth, one wonders why a railway terminal in conjunction with the colonial establishment of the railway terminals in Southern Nigeria at Port Harcourt and Lagos should not be sited at IDU with all the conditionalities for bringing such a progressive venture easily available.

At its apogee, while just a kid, I was able to understand and count numbers at least up to 5000. There were not less than this figure of adult human beings eking out their living at IDU and by implication NWANIBA through various economic ventures and mercantile activities both at the ancient pre-colonial IDU Beach market now gazzetted Ifiayong [Beach] a settler village whose pioneer settler citizens came from a neighbouring Northern URUAN town known as Ifiayong Obot over a century ago as discussed above. Precisely, they had come to participate in the booming merchandise at the aforementioned ESUK MBEHE IDU Beach market of the slave trade and British Companies enterprises PZ. UAC, etc. era as also remarked above. Thus with these economic facilities in place and with IDU as the epicenter of modern economic base, I vouch with my life that not less than 1,000,000 human beings of all nationalities and colorations would be eking out their living EVERY BLESSED DAY at IDU. IDU then was a gold mine of sorts for all the nationalities around and beyond; the possibilities were limitless with the right leaders in control. It was a sort of financial capital of the MAINLAND of what is now Akwa Ibom State, Abia State especially Ngwa, Abriba, Ohafia, Arochukwu, Ndoki and parts of Rivers State including Andoni, Ogoni, Opobo peoples before Port Harcourt became the destination through Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe's political intrigues and mastermind. But all that has gone leaving IDU as a failed grand market town and sea port. The leaders, the youths and AKS Government need to come together and understand that a better and developed IDU will become a better AKWA IBOM STATE for everyone providing more jobs by the day. IDU will also become the destination to provide a safer environment for Investors, entrepreneurs, and markets in tow. With more jobs, funds will flow and circulate and that will translate into more taxes for the State. Then education and security will become the key towards a better AKS. DV. The new vocabulary of "JOB CREATION" or whatever name tagged, is novel to me if not repulsive. I have never heard of these terms before and they sound annoying to me. Yet now that these words or vocabularies have been in vogue for far too long without anything to show for their practical realization anywhere in Nigeria, evidently something should be done to make sure the mouthing of these words translates into "actuality in seeing and getting the jobs so created." Mere sloganeering will not take us to the El Dorado of our dream. Creating jobs from where and for whom? Surely not for my beloved fellow Nigerian citizens.

What I have graphically presented above does not import the idea of "creating jobs" to my mind and any discerning bloke can understand that. From 1960 at the latest counting backwards in this country, anybody with Government Standard Six and up the ladder of educational qualifications through G4, Cambridge, Higher School, Lower and Higher Elementary, Grade I, Inter BA/B Sc. as First Academic Degrees up to PhD Certificates had appointments both in the public and private sectors, whichever way we look at just for the presentation of one's genuine Certificate. So what are we mouthing about creating jobs, when the Railway alone absorbed almost half of the labour force in this country? People could be domiciled at Uyo or Ikot Ekpe for example, and they would say: I am employed in the Railway. Then we don't even mention the maritime, the groundnut pyramids in the North, the cocoa empire in the West, the palm oil/palm kernels in the East. My biological mother was a palm produce magnet with her British made "Weighing Balances". Then add to these (I am just sampling the situations that made Nigeria tick) the textile Industries at Kano and Kaduna, etc. and in all these no black gold of the petroleum post war fame in sight! But all these have been abandoned, and we talk glibly about "creating jobs" with no qualms of conscience and a sense of shame as the International community beginning with our close neighbours and the Cameroons are making us a laughing stock for creating a new vocabulary that is an affront and lacking in any meaning at all. Similarly, a modern sea-port at IDU would open the gates to easy commerce and other progressive economic ventures between Nigeria and the Cameroun Republic, Gabon, Equatorial Guinea, the Guineas, Senegal etc., countries along the coast of West Africa reached through this proposed sea-port within less than an hour. Similarly, there should be something of greater economic advantage than the EPZ on the Calabar port of URUAN/EFIK kingdom on the other side of the great Cross River estuary and most importantly Creek Town sea port. But will Nigeria, the so often mouthed "Giant of Africa" do this so as to achieve this greatness? No, because of the politics of exclusion and marginalization in situations like this, something which could bring massive transformation within the shortest period of time has been abandoned, and to Nigeria's peril and detriment. There is too much politics to catch the nearest way eg. the non-completion till date of the East-West Road from Lagos to Warri and to Port Harcourt and Calabar. This was started since 1999. The same thing can be said of the Creek Town - Adiabo road also started since the General Abacha regime which in fact is our case in point! What a miscalculation and misplacement of priorities under the politics of exclusion and marginalization!

Yes, concerning the misuse of Ekpe, the masses under the weight of ignorance remained docile and impoverished. Such inhumanities saw the birth of a whirlwind in Ekpe which soon brought such an avalanche of inequities. These put into motion currents of decadence that swallowed up the spirituality of Ekpe Confraternity in URUAN ditto EFIK today. One by one the real Adepts in Ekpe were being called up to higher octaves of existence and those who were left out on discovering they were deprived of the divine spirit, admitted sorcerers, black magicians, cosmic elementals in NDEM and other arcane powers into the Confraternity. These upstart powers also helped in boosting the image of Ekpe amongst the ignorant thus giving the initiates a false sense of power while the Houses soon turned into Houses of horror. In time, the purveyors of these powers took control of the Confraternity and the purity that is Ekpe and her fame were lost. I have put down this to alert the ndit? emana in URUAN/EFIK as well as aliens who might not fathom anything about what Ekpe URUAN had stood for and what it should be, that "THINGS JUST FELL APART", because they were never so before.

The abuse of Ekpe power together with its excesses highlighted above have led to the loss of the intrinsic values in Ekpe thus encouraging the growth of alternative values viz, the conversion of Ekpe into a commercial enterprise. It was no longer necessary for a candidate to subscribe to acceptable moral values. All that was necessary was the ability to pay what was demanded by both the candidates' sponsors and the fraternity. This did put a severe strain on the purse of candidates who had to pay a never previously disclosed amount up-front to every initiate of the temple into which admission was sought. The total number of initiates was never disclosed before their presentation to Ekpe HOUSES and the authorities. But despite the high-handedness and anomalies, the prestige that attended initiation was high and the business gains accruing, guaranteed a continuous flow of candidates. Thereafter, it was only mandatory for initiation to take place before a minimum of two MB? ? Ekpe (full Adepts) of the relevant temples without any more recourse to the metropolis and the official residences of the ETUBOMS, Heads of Royal families and Village/Clan Heads, etc. Then for some time only the nobility was able to reserve the Adept status for themselves. The blue-blooded families who had managed, often through intrigues and trickery, to conquer one or more of such positions guarded them jealously and tenaciously lest they slipped into the custody of unsuspecting and willing hands of other families since even a Royal House that had no access to an ? B? ? Ekpe position was not entitled to the Paramount Ruler's, ie. the NSOMM'S/OBONG'S seat. But what should be the case is that candidates for ? B? ? Ekpe status as also neophytes for initiation should be house-owners and married. They must have recognizable and acceptable sources of livelihood, and not be charlatans. These conditions have to do with the need to maintain the honour and dignity of the fraternity, and as prerequisites for teachings on self-renunciation and integrity. But unfortunately as observed already, the demands have long been abused resulting in lapses in moral values and standards in the character of initiates and even Adepts and all these have inevitably resulted in a near total collapse of Ekpe in URUAN/EFIK today. However, neophytes are still expected to meet the basic moral standards set viz. be of amiable disposition, be trust-worthy and be 'born again' in good behaviour and accepted standards. This means that they have given up bad habits and can be vouched for. Their character should be impeccable before being allowed to present themselves at the Portals of Initiation. To this end, they are usually placed under observation for about six months and they must have a ? B? ? Ekpe as sponsor who will teach them the mechanics and science and artifacts of Ekpe. For initiates aspiring to higher ranks they must learn and successfully be able to recite the Ekpe salutations, read, write and interprete the esoteric signs and mysteries (secrets) embedded in NSIBIDI writings. Although most of these secrets have not been committed to writing, they can learn to reproduce them through miming. Some of the requirements also vary from rank to rank because the secrets also vary and the aspirants are not opportuned to know the secrets of the ranks into which they have not yet been initiated since the NSIBIDI of any Grade/Globe can only be interpreted by an initiate who has risen to that rank. That is why the man of authority and worth in URUAN/EFIK has to spend a fortune in order to initiate in as many ranks depending on his resources as it demands extra and additional costs for an IDAHA- rank, in Ekpe. It is this that determines the worth and status of real men in URUAN society. Within the period not less than a day is required for them to finally purge themselves of unwanted habits and refrain from sex before presenting themselves for initiation, they have to learn to regulate their sex life thenceforth.

Ekpe teachings offer the initiates a more direct route to soul awareness which ordinarily would take a much longer time to acquire except perhaps for those in Christian monasteries and religious houses. The pilgrimage of the soul through life is embodied in the Caduceus (Cf.Fig.7) and indicates the path of initiation open to man since the beginning of time. It represents in exoteric analogy the path that humanity must follow through the Mercury half of the Earth Period and the Jupiter, Venus and Vulcan Periods during which pilgrimage man's consciousness expands into that of knowledge and creative intelligence. Ekpe also subscribes to this concept of septemnary cosmos with the seven planes corresponding to the state of consciousness in man. This is another way of saying that man has to tame the Ekpe lion in himself. Normally, the raising of consciousness is expected to be actualized as the initiation proceeds from past planetary rounds to future rounds. It should be noted here that for obvious reasons some persons who have done outstandingly well whether in their personal achievements or contributions to URUAN/EFIK society are normally given honourary initiation without having to pay so much for the initiation. These are some brave persons who can successfully trap, shoot down or kill any in the categories of Ekpe lion family viz. leopard, tiger, lion, etc. because such brave men are regarded as Ekpe lion themselves. Similarly, those citizens and in the case of the kingdom, those who have achieved a position of distinction or have made substantial contributions or rendered great services for the growth and upliftment of the society can be given honorary initiation without of course initiation into the secrets of Ekpe. In earlier days those who successfully brought home the proverbial Golden Fleece from their further studies abroad were so decorated or those who could build and donate a town hall or school to the community. Persons who were promoted to the rank of District Officer (DO) or Resident (Consul) were also decorated with NTA? NKANDA insignia. Great nationals like Sir Abu-Bakr Tafewa Balewa, Nigeria's erstwhile Prime Minister, Chief Obafemi Awolowo, Prof. Eyo-Ita, Sir Adetekumbo Ademola, Dr M.I. Okpara, President Alhaji Shehu Shagari, and Chief M.K.O. Abiola were honoured with the highest title of Ada-Idaha ke Eburutu in EFIK land. All these helped to contaminate Ekpe Confraternity. To this end a number of Ekpe laws had to be put in place lest this category of initiates begin to contaminate the Confraternity and bring Ekpe into disrepute to wit, that: (i) Any disclosure of the inner secrets of Ekpe to unauthorized persons which included some categories of initiates like the above was a reasonable offense for which punishment was death, attended to with dispatch, irrespective of whose ox was gored and this also included these other offenses of treason. (ii) Proven cases of adultery. (iii) Proven cases of unauthorized indecent assault on females. (iv) Promiscuous sexual behaviour. (v) Ekpe initiation carried out outside URUAN/EFIK land. (vi) Falsely claiming to be an initiate in Ekpe whereas one is not. (vii) Unauthorized sale of any Grade of Ekpe. (viii)Unauthorized entry into the inner chambers of EFE Ekpe. (ix) Any type of robbery, piracy on URUAN/EFIK waters, etc.(x) Initiation carried out by non-Adepts.

(ii) PROCEDURES IN INITIATION OF NEOPHYTES

The normal procedures before the confusions observed above included first of all the candidate's announcement to his "parents/sponsors" (ie. an initiated father, uncle, etc.) of his intention to become a member of Ekpe in a particular Ekpe Globe/House of his community/clan and also the particular Ekpe Order eg. Ekpe NKANDA, NYAMKPE, IBOKU, etc. They in turn would present him before the adept of the patrilineal or matrilineal lineage. Following on this, the kindred Globe would meet to ascertain the suitability of his candidacy. The URUAN/EFIK Founding fathers had always prescribed a probationary period for those who aspire to initiation. During this period, the aspirant was expected to work on his morals and desires. He had to spend a specified period of time cultivating those good qualities – virtues of good living so aptly presented by the Lord Jesus: You shall love the Lord You God with all your heart, with all you soul, and with all your mind…You shall love your neighbour as yourself". (Mt 22:37-39) When all are satisfied, a list or prospectus containing the fees and other requirements would be sent through the "parents". The applicant would then be handed over to the Adept whose Globe/House he would be initiated into. All these of course require some presentations. For the next six months or so, the candidate/neophyte would be subjected to a series of inductions and training in the various aspects and mechanics of Ekpe in general and of the Order into which he seeks admission in particular. Meanwhile he begins to acquire all the items listed which often include a "room-full" of assorted iyak (fish) and wines, many bundles of iso abia, four-footed animals and the fees. As observed already it is always "?s? ka enek ?fi? ". Then after full compliance with all the requirements and completion of his tutelage a date would be fixed for the initiation and investiture, a sort of baptism and feasting and all the Ekpe houses both in the lineage and clan would be duly informed. During the initiation, the candidate(s) are bare and are first incised with akarang on their foreheads over which ekim potash is inserted after which different NSIBIDI signs are marked on their bodies with appropriate colours of nsei representing the esoteric colours and signs of their particular Ekpe Order. These secret signs and symbols represent the order of the Caduceus as marked on the designated spots on the bare-bodied neophyte(s) during which the meaning of these writings and signs are revealed to them with the warning not to reveal them to anybody else. (Cf Fig. 10 & 11). While this is being done, singing and drumming relevant to the Ekpe grade or House into which they are being admitted, ring out. The exercise is attended by seven rounds of group drumming and singing relevant to the grade or House in Staccato. This is indicative of the septemnary globe cycles and rounds undertaken by the monads. The ceremony is punctuated from time to time by the MB? K? /LION roar appropriate to the principles and divinities being invoked/evoked. After the initiation, the new initiate(s) is taken on a tour along the streets to the relevant Ekpe House(s) where the secrets including the NSIBIDI are revealed and teachings imparted on a person to person basis. The initiates are then considered ready to proceed systematically, but not rushed, up the ladder of initiation into the higher grades of Ekpe. Using these techniques, ascent is safely made from earth to heaven while the man is still in the flesh. In modern times, the septemnary group drumming is reserved for the OKPOHO initiation because time has become a valuable commodity. Meanwhile other aspects of Ekpe initiation and training go on.

(III) PRAYER FOR ENLIGHTENMENT & PROTECTION FOR INITIATES

O Jesus living in Mary come and live in your servants, in the spirit of your Holiness, in the fullness of your power, in the perfection of your ways, in the reality of your virtues, in the communion of your Mysteries. Protect and direct me in my everyday endeavours along the path of truth and along your ways. You are the seat of infinite power and knowledge, have dominion over every adverse power, in your own spirit, to the Glory of the Father. Amen.

OKPOHO is an important station with a host of NSIBIDI and symbolism. It is where the initiates are expected to stand before the Mighty King, ? B? ? OKPOHO and his Council of Ministers, to be examined on whether he is worthy of the secrets behind the inner veil. The initiate has to prove he is familiar with the tenets and workings of the lower Orders. Aside being knowledgeable in some aspects of NSIBIDI, he should be familiar with some of the fundamental issues. The initiate must, among other things, know that, (i) except for the music and MB? K? trumpeting, initiation must proceed in silence; (ii) naked fire is prohibited; (iii) gunshot is prohibited except when occasion demands, precisely because EKPE LION frowns at gun shots and (iv) it is beneficial to pretend to be ignorant but alert when visiting another temple. The principle of man for which the keys are located in OKPOHO House is spirit. It is at the OKPOHO House that the adepts and full initiates are examined on the desirability or otherwise of their proceeding with the initiation into the higher Orders. Unless one has someone who knows the way, there is the possibility that the whole exercise may be a nullity. It happens when the correct procedure is not followed and this may be deliberately organized to make the unwary repeat and pay again.

Each ? B? ? Ekpe (Adept) has a corresponding divinity in the outer realm of existence that he should be in conscious rapport with if he knows his onions. An initiate is encouraged to understand the workings of the House (Globe) into which he is initiated. One may enter a House to which he is not an initiate at the pain of grave bodily harm. In the olden days, the price for such an indiscretion could result in his instant death. It could also be death caused by improper arousing of a divinity. Whilst conducted tours of an appropriate House were encouraged, one could not exceed his limits. The focus is personalized and the initiate should not advance unless he has matured in the preceding House(s). Each time a temple meets in conclave procedural and NSIBIDI tests are set and the initiates are encouraged to respond in the presence of all. Success leads to fame and respect for the individual and his temple. Failure is a disgrace for all. This may be the reason why some temples outside URUAN/EFIK land invest in unorthodox methods though the use of secret processes to enhance memory, perception and manifestations. These are suspected to be black magic practices that are not encouraged in Ekpe. Ekpe also go even further to reveal the qualities of incoming human generations. Such Ekpe Houses (Globes) forming the earth planetary chain are OKU AKAMA, MBAKARA, MB? K? , MKPE, NYAMKPE, IBOKU and OKPOHO.

(IV) INITIATION OF ADEPTS

An Adept is the Commander in-Chief and the ? B? ? EKPE who must have passed through the ranks and has become the leader, ie. ADA-IDAHA in Ekpe confraternity. Admission into the various Orders depends on a number of factors which require that such an applicant is of the nobility by birth as attested to by the EFE of admission, be of good behavior and law abiding, a man of affluence not a debtor and one who is able to keep secrets because at the end of it all he will be officially expected to sit on ITIAT Ekpe stone, a ritual that is reserved only to high ranking members of the Cult who have acquired all the secrets of Ekpe. Because the path to Adept status is tortuous, an initiate candidate with interest must first be an acknowledged and accomplished individual ie. He must do well to undertake a self-examination to determine if he is prima facie qualified before moving forward. Other fundamental pre-requisites in addition to the above are that he must be an initiate of long standing experience, a house owner, married and have a visible and respectable means of livelihood, be well behaved and literate in NSIBIDI Ekpe and conversant with Ekpe MB? K? language. But nowadays these conditions are no longer mandatory. His position in society and birth must be acknowledged by the EFE (lodge) into which entry is sought. Should the self-examination lead to positive results, the interested initiate will then seek the assistance of an OBONG Ekpe of the lodge of his choice who, acting as the sponsor, approaches the EYAMBA with customary drinks to intimate him of the desire of the initiate. Then the EYAMBA after consulting the EBONGKO summons a meeting of adepts to confirm if a vacancy exists and at what level. The meeting is sponsored by the one seeking to be a candidate. On the declaration of a vacancy, the sponsor is directed to present specified MIN NT? T ie. complimentary drinks) to every Adept on the roll. The quality and quantity of the drinks are in accordance with the rank of each Adept. That done, the initiate now termed a candidate, is invited to a meeting of Adepts where his credentials are critically examined. The financial cost of all meetings of Adepts connected with his candidature are to his account. Should he be successful, he is invited to yet another meeting where the entrance fee and other costs are disclosed. As an old and experienced initiate, he should be aware that Ekpe could not be kept waiting. It is in the candidate's interest to promptly pay the fees demanded. A delay may result in the fee being raised or confiscated thus causing the initiate to recommence the process all over again, if allowed at all. At times an unqualified initiate is allowed to go through the process only to be subsequently declared unqualified after payment of the fee demanded. This is why it is important to have an honest assessment of one's eligibility before moving forward. Unless one is gunning for a hereditary position, a candidate is rarely informed of the grade to be assigned to him. He has to throw his fishing line into the river and be grateful for whatever fish is caught. If all work well, the EFE acting in consultation with the candidate fixes a date and time for the elevation. The attendant entertainments of initiates take place firstly at the EFE and thereafter at the new Adept's home.

Often the candidate is required to present himself at the EFE the night proceeding the day appointed to publicly elevate him. The purpose of the meeting is threefold, namely: to put final touches to next day's arrangements; to seek the cooperation of Ekpe and to perform secret rituals relating to the initiation. When all is concluded the EFE acting in consultation with the candidate fixes a date and time for the celebration and elevation. The attendant entertainments of initiates take place first at the EFE and thereafter at the new Adept's home. Both are important otherwise the whole exercise is inconclusive and the man will have to start afresh. Often the candidate is required to present himself at the EFE the night before his public elevation. The purposes of the meeting are threefold, namely to put final touches to next day's arrangements; to seek the cooperation of and to perform the secret rituals relating to the initiation. It is customary and advisable for the candidate to provide special refreshments at such meetings in order to identify the musicians and their supporters, the MB? K? trumpeters, the NYAMKPE and the relevant IDEM Ekpe if the impending ceremony is to have a guaranteed accolade. Some Adepts may advise him to avoid investing in two groups of musicians, ie. those to accompany him to and from the EFE, and the other whose business should rightly be confined to the EFE and their duty is to begin charging the EFE as the procession is arriving the EFE. This initiation is an expensive business and under normal circumstance, the advice to have only one group of musicians is a good one, but this is not necessarily so in Ekpe. As a rule, the temple musicians for the EFE are arranged by the EFE under their control but it is not unusual for them to refuse to serve the candidate unless a firm arrangement could be struck beforehand. Even then, the Adepts may slip away to the EFE with the musicians from the home of the newly installed Adept but should this happen the newly installed adept is deemed to have been dispossessed of his newly earned status and must start afresh.

An impressive fellowship (sacramental) meal and drink offering are mandatory aspects of the entertainment at the EFE. A follow-up-entertainment of a limited nature awaits those who may choose to accompany the newly installed Adept home where initiates and Adepts may publicly demonstrate their prowess to the accompaniment of music. At each venue all in attendance are expected to partake of the meal and have a share of the drinks that will have to be taken on the spot. The fellowship meal of UKA? Ekpe is the meal of the day. An affluent candidate may provide a variety of meals but these do not count and unless the UKA? is served at the EFE, the initiation ceremony is not complete. The man remains a candidate until he can provide the UKA? Ekpe. There are different types of UKA? , but that of EKPE is a special meal of large chunks of yam or plantain (unripe), dried scale fish and OKOYO (deer) meat seasoned with spices and fresh green leaves, and cooked in fresh palm oil. The meal make-ups are in such generous sizes that a portion of the meal served to an initiate is usually more than he could conveniently handle, but he must make his way through if he is not to "dishonor" Ekpe. To avoid contamination, the meal is served to all from a container placed before all to see. On the day appointed for the initiation, the musicians and some initiates arrive early at the home of the candidate to warm up and to inform all and sundry that something great is about to happen. Their services are rewarded with entertainment. For Ekpe, music is an open invitation to initiates to attend a party while the Adepts are busy dressing the candidates for the occasion as in traditional wedding. Their ceremonial dress includes preferably a matching UKARA, with a knot to the right, beaded cloth vests, knitted necklace in matching colours tucked into the loin cloth with beaded biceps, wrist amulets adorning the hands, waist bands of silk scarves to the left and right over the loin cloths and matching cloth necklace, OKPOMPOM, of generous length and shoes beaded in colours to match the amulets and the beaded fez if that is the preferred head covering. Alternative head wears are available and they vary from knitted skull cap - BIDAK to top hats. When all is ready, the candidates are handed staffs bearing generous bows tied close to the head. They are instructed to remain silent until ordered by the EYAMBA, and also not to allow the staffs to touch the ground before handing them over at the EFE. Libation is poured before the procession moves out led by an initiate of adequate stature bearing an IDEK EDEM. An EKPE masquerade may also be in attendance. Preferably, two Adepts flank the candidates each while the musicians and initiates bring up the rear. The necessary protection of the candidates is provided by the initiate with IDEK EDEM and the two Adepts whose specific responsibilities include accepting on behalf of the candidates the challenges of Ekpe initiates and Adepts who may wish to rest the candidates' eligibility as they move to and from the EFE. Cross road rituals are performed and mandatory Ekpe stations recognized on the way to and from the EFE. Ceremonial umbrellas may attend the candidates.

On arrival at the EFE, the candidate is received at the entrance and everything brought to silence in a ritualistic manner after which the candidate is led to his seat. The temple musicians recommence the process of charging the EFE and at the sound of the MB? K? the music stops for all to listen. The

MB? K? calls three times and after each call the EYAMBA responds first on behalf of the divinity to the south: then on behalf of the divinity to the East; and finally on behalf of God. After this, the process of raising the lodge continues and as the musicians move from one Ekpe grade to another, the MB? K? intervenes from time to time with appropriate calls to which the corresponding Adept responds. Finally, the initiation proper begins. The candidate is invited to stand between two adepts one of whom is the sponsor. The staff having been powered by EYAMBA becomes the ROD OF INITIATION and is handed over to the candidate who holds it in both hands with the head towards himself. He signals to activate the MB? K? who then calls the candidate by his Ekpe rank to which the candidate responds. This is repeated. After the candidate has responded the third time, the MB? K? confirms the elevation and the initiate is immediately transformed to an Adept. In URUAN/EFIK tradition he is now a ? B? ? EKPE. The EFE then moves into a period of sustained merriment with the musicians hard at work and the initiates demonstrating their knowledge. A time comes when a break is allowed for refreshment to be served. Drumming and dancing resume after refreshment until silence is again ordered by the EYAMBA to enable the MB? K? to formally round up the performance with an appropriate ritual. The newly installed Adept then withdraws home with the musical accompaniments that had brought him. At home he receives his guests and entertains them for hours. NSIBIDI SIGNS AND THEIR CODICES

NSIBIDI are secret writings that employ symbolism, hieroglyphs, secret signs, sounds, colours and dance forms for secret communications and rituals. In general, they are sign language. They are not limited to Ekpe. In the past, they were extensively used in communication by all and sundry, men and women alike. Some made a game of it. Irrespective of the application it was essential to put oneself forward to be taught the NSIBISI relevant to individual needs. In the olden days each NSIBIDI school had its area of specification. The curriculum and the characters were different. Individual needs and preferences had to be met. For example, the colonial postal system used a form of NSIBISI ie. the Morse code in sending telegrams. The boy scouts also use the Morse Code in communication and for writing letters during camping. Some Institutions like the Police, the Navy, Air Force and the Army also use NSIBISI but in their case it is through coded signals and these help in a very big way especially during war time such that they can communicate without the enemy knowing what they are planning. The enemy army of course would also use their kind of signals known only to them. Very many societies still use these sign languages, but in URUAN/EFIK it is the specificity and monopoly of Ekpe Confraternity. In the Greco-Roman empire most of their mystical cults indulged in NSIBISI and by communicating such secret knowledge to their initiates and devotees, they were head and shoulders above other nations of the world in their expertise and organization of education, commerce, politics and governance. Gnosticism was one of the ancient Greco-Roman systems of imparting knowledge. Sign language was only communicated to initiates and this really constituted them into great men and women in society because they used their NSIBIDI to acquire positive and practical knowledge about many things in the world which were above the layman's intelligence. Freemasonry, Ekankar, AMORC are all steeped in sign languages and the use of Communication Codes known only to members. That is why Ekpe made initiates great men of valour, knowledge and experts in whatever they chose to do and in the professions. The witchcraft is nothing but NSIBISI, but they employ their artifacts in negative and harmful ways. Ekpe being a so-called secret society, its NSIBIDI are not open to non-initiates for obvious reasons. Ekpe is an association open only to men and in some cases to blue blooded women citizens of URUAN/EFIK have been found worthy and qualified to initiate in such an exalted and noble cult of the mighty and men of integrity, worth worthy of trust. For the reason of these peculiarities it may not be strictly correct in this instance to talk of NSIBIDI cult as this implies that once one has gained admission he or she is free to know as much of the NSIBIDI as he/she wishes. NSIBISI was effectively used to determine the quality, character, integrity and general bearing of initiates as well as helping to detect non-initiates. In practice, NSIBIDI cult was a publicly recognized group of rascals and hirelings, usually second sons of blue blooded URUAN/EFIK families brought together by some influential members in the society, to operate as executioners, extortionists ostensibly working as the conscience of the people and for the good of society. Yet these great men of society though themselves Ekpe members, and who had taken oaths of secrecy of membership, purpose and action, were those who released these area boys on society usually in the silence of the night to terrorize the citizens as the occasion arose. This same thing is happening in Nigeria today as Presidents, Governors, Senators, MHRAs/MHAs, Chairmen of Councils and other great ruling political party politicians engage thugs to cause mayhem and disorder all over the place and during an election year especially upon their perceived political enemies and opponents. Sign language enhanced their stealthy and invidious operations. NSIBIDI Ekpe is a natural ingredient of Ekpe culture. Its use prevents unwanted intrusion of non-initiates and the profane into Ekpe secrets. To protect the secrets, voiced discussions about Ekpe were not encouraged, except for songs and exoteric matters. The position is now different and profanity has taken root particularly in cosmopolitan areas, even non-initiates talk flippantly and glibly on these matters. Literacy in NSIBIDI is therefore no longer an attraction. Non-initiates and the generality of those who know nothing about Ekpe URUAN/EFIK think that the sign language and characters in NSIBIDI bear some resemblance to the Egyptian hieroglyphs and these have caused many to conclude that Ekpe has links with Egypt. Some even as earlier observed have forcefully argued and have come to the conclusion that URUAN/EFIK takes her origins from the Orient, even Palestine. The original language is disappearing and those versed in it are not no more readily available. For this reason, work bearing on NSIBIDI Ekpe had secrets for further in-depth research, hence this book. I hereby exhort all lovers of Ekpe to come forth and help rescue and resuscitate this God-given endowment and heritage of our fore-fathers. There was a time when Ekpe had secrets for the control and use of the elements, and people created their hearts' desires out of nothing as it was in the beginning. This is the reality not black magic at all. Man, even though he may not realize it, is continuously creating his heart's desires either through divine support or powers in rebellion ie. Satanic influences. In Ekpe, as amongst the esoterists, the circles in Figs 1-7 represent: (i) unlimited un-manifest or space and the dot (5) the first manifest. Ekpe rod in (2) signifies God's mind, thought and power. The figure (No.6) indicates God's mind hovering above the unlimited un-manifest conjecturing whether to create and what not to create. No.5 shows what he has created. No.6 is an indication that creation has progressed and there is variety. The series of actions may be taken as the descent of light into matter. At the mundane level No.7, the Ekpe drum, symbolizes the universal womb and the rod by its side, the dormant spirit waiting to be empowered or actualized. The word or power behind creation and creatures are symbolized by Ekpe sounds in variety. Each time the word issues forth, a wish manifests itself just like a child born with the desired and wished characteristics appears. But this not like the Ogbanje of the Igbos because it is possible for such a baby to be born to great, just, noble and holy parents who have prayed for such a baby to be born into the family.

Colours play an important role in Ekpe and there is correspondence between tone and colour. Initiations and other rituals may not proceed without them. The colours are white, yellow, green, blue, orange, red indigo and violet representing the seven colours of the prism. An Ekpe neophyte at the portals of initiation is routinely but carefully adorned with signs and symbols in colours of white-red and yellow-orange. White represents purity, red – suffering, and yellow-orange -spiritual endowment. The import of all this is to imprint the teachings Ekpe to the effect that "spiritual endowment will manifest on the psyche of initiates only through a life of purity, renunciation and sacrifice." During initiation, signs and symbols of appropriate colours are painted on designated areas of the bare-bodied neophyte as the drums accompanied by songs bring forth music relevant to the grade into which the neophyte advances up the ladder of initiation. Music is NSIBIDI. It aids evocation particularly when attended by dance forms, and helps to leave a near permanent imprint on the psyche of the initiate such that aside of the pass words leant, his status can easily be observed as he enters a really active Ekpe Temple. Full initiation rites take a long time to complete since one has to pass through the ranks one by one. One has to exercise patience and allow oneself to be blind-folded with cloth tied over the eyes till the end of the exercise, when the initiate becomes aware, his eyes cleared and he is no more ignorant of the path and destiny of life. This special ritual has been adopted by the Knights of the Catholic Church, notably Knights of St. Mulumba, KSM at their initiation ceremonies, since after initiation the neophytes are expected to be mature, empowered and enlightened to understand the teachings and laws of the Church and to be ready to teach and to defend their Catholic Faith in the face of dangers and difficulties. There should be a follow-up bath of purification, UYERE MM? ? Ekpe. It is water baptism in Ekpe. This is no longer mandatory nowadays but is carried out discriminatingly. All the Ekpe forms are found in the NSIBIDI.

NDEM AFFILIATION WITH IDEME EKPE

The URUAN/EFIK believe that Ekpe originates from NDEM, and the ancients believed in the existence of lives that control the elements of fire, air, water and earth known in Jewish Kabala as salamanders, sylphs, undines and gnomes. These elements or nature-spirits known as NDEM are acknowledged in Ekpe to correlate with human principles (Fig 6). Although the existence of salamanders and sylphs may not be commonly acknowledged in the land, they nevertheless do receive some attention in Ekpe at the EBONGKO and NKANDA grades in their music and dance, Ekpe forms, artifacts, EFAMBA and IK? T Ekpe. These lives are confined to their own elements and preferred habitats, never transgressing into or infringing upon the sanctity of the territory of others. To some extent, this is also the belief of URUAN/EFIK. But unlike the Hebrew Kabala, they do not openly confirm the existence of races and hierarchies within each habitat. Accordingly, these elemental spirits are male and female. The earth spirits are believed to be mostly males whereas water spirits as a rule are females. Each city state of EFIK has its NDEM ditto, Clans in URUAN, particularly the elemental spirit of water, popularly known as MMAMI-WATER, a finny life which many people claim to have seen and which seems to be more popular perhaps, because URUAN/EFIK are seafaring people. The Greek philosopher, Pythagoras also believed that finny tribes swarm natural bodies of water, some friendly and some not so friendly. The various NDEM of the water elements or goddesses as some would wish them to be addressed, have their habitats or domains as detailed in the Table below. The land gods or gnomes are called EKPEYONG and are reputed to be demanding and stubborn. The EFIK call it EKPENYONG NNUK, but URUAN simply, EKPENYONG.

Each city state and clan of URUAN/EFIK has its NDEM or goddess but no commonly acknowledge hierarchical relationship exists between one goddess and another of a different habitat. The view is that there are many such NDEM to which sacrifices are administered discriminatingly, especially as each NDEM has its High Priestess and devotees, and this may again be proof that they possess polytheistic structure. This is confirmed by the practice of offering sacrifices at different times and at the habitat of the individual NDEM. To compound matters, each city state/clan extols its god (dess) and is unwilling to accept an inferior position for what it owns. Chief Ekpe Ekpenyong Oku who was regularly involved in the offering of sacrifice to NDEM during the reign of late Edidem Edem Esien Ekpe Oku, the OBONG OF CALABAR (1973-81), when questioned about the hierarchies of NDEM replied:" All the NDEM were taken as equals and so we sacrificed to all individually. It is not true that ANANSA is superior to the others. The others will not accept that ranking." (Interview with Chief Ekpe Ekpenyong Oku, Calabar, 2008)

Exoterically, the opinion of Chief Oku is more commonly accepted especially among the EFIK and it seems tenable when consideration is given to the sanctity of each habitat as a preferred and reserved accommodation for each NDEM not known to have a hierarchical structure within the preferred domain. In practice, some NDEM are known to possess power of choice known to have a hierarchical structure, and seem to be capable of extending their area of jurisdiction beyond the relevant city/clan limits recognized by the devotees to be the area of authority of their god (dess). Cases abound where people are proclaimed to be under the influence of an NDEM that should naturally not operate within the city/clan unit of the victim, thus giving the impression that some NDEM have leave to operate outside their normal domain but within the confines of their elemental nature. Should it be true that in reality such incursion into the territory of another does occur, it may be concluded that a hierarchical structure exists amongst NDEM of the same elemental nature. Although the concept of hierarchies of NDEM is not presented directly in Ekpe, it could be inferred from the way Ekpe is structures and organized. Aside of the finny lives, the other most commonly assigned forms of NDEM are Python and White Birth. In general, the belief is that NDEM can take any form. In Blavatsky's opinion, they have neither immortal spirits nor tangible bodies but take forms that relate to the elements they belong in some distinguishing degree and are a combination of sublimated matter and rudimental mind. They therefore are lower on the cosmic ladder than man. Some are changeless and have no individuality but others of certain elements and species change their form. Also Blavatsky[10] and Prophet[11] all agree that under certain circumstances NDEM have the ability to make tangible bodies for themselves. Blavatsky went forward to state that these tangible bodies may assume a likeness of its choice by taking face portraits they find stamped in the memory of persons present. According to her, the most solid of their bodies is immaterial enough to escape common perception but may be recognized by inner vision. Stories abound in URUAN/EFIK land abound about goddesses of the sea presenting themselves as woman-fish before man.

An assessment of the value of NDEM in Efik society is a contentious affair. The Majority of Efik tend to look at NDEM as worthy of worship and worship them regularly for benefits. They believe that natural disasters and most societal and personal problems are the responses of the NDEM to the people's nonchalant attitude toward them. The vociferous minority take them to be devils. To appreciate the correct situation, it is necessary to examine some non-Efik opinions on the subject. It was stated earlier that Pythagoras considered the elemental spirits (NDEM) to be of two types, some friendly and some not. Tertullian called the elemental spirits of the air, princes of the powers of the air. Clement the Alexandrian, one of the greatest Catholic authorities, opined that it was absurd to call them devils, for they are only inferior angels, "the powers which inhabit elements, move the winds, and distribute showers and as such are agents and subject to God." The ancient Christian writer, Origen is known to have subscribed to the same opinion. It is Blavatsky's view that the elementals bring to light long forgotten events of the past, "preserved in the inscrutable depths of our memory. Elizabeth C. Prophet is more forthright. She sees them as useful agents of God toiling for the good of man and therefore deserving the appreciation and gratitude of man.[15] Should one think well of the elementals? Blavatsky disclosed that even though Baronet Adelman von Vay of Austria saw and recognized the elementals and found them very friendly, many others did not fare so well at the hands of this spirits.[16] it all depend on the mind quality of the person attempting to relate to them. Naturally the bad must attract the bad; and the good, the good. This is a natural law. Therefore, according to Blavatsky, the Baroness was successfully in cultivating friendly response because she was a good woman.[17] Many in Efik land have had terrible experience with NDEM and are living in fear and deprivation even though they offer sacrifices and invest much in terms of time and money. According to Prophet the elementals are un-ascended beings and are subject to the influences of the spectrum of related good and evil. Therefore, interaction would depend on the spirituality of the establishing contact.[18] The writer is aware of one who nearly lost his life at the hand of NDEM were if not for the intervention of God. It did not arise from the man coveting, but by it suddenly making his presence felt in a belligerent manner. Having the benefits of the hind-sight to this episode, it may be concluded that the probably deserved what came upon him. He was not pure.

In another instance, the writer in the company of an aunt paid a visit to a senior family member he had never met before. The man, now deceased, was a headmaster of a renowned school in Calabar. The writer was surprised to find him living in a state much below what his status should have endowed him with. The threads that made up what he wore barely held themselves together and his living confirmed that he was living in want. After a brief discussion, it had to be so because the sight was disturbing, the visit was about to be terminated when the man announced – "never name your child EKPENYONG." It was a shot out of the blues and the writer was shocked into retorting – "why not?" He then took us behind his residence to a small hut to which a door of convenient size was fixed. As all stood, he bent forward and administered three knocks to the door with his right hand. Each knock was followed by him seeking permission to present the guests. Not knowing what to expect, the writer was well positioned to move back on the double should it become necessary. After the third knock, he opened the door that gave access to the hut. Suddenly were before a roughly sculptured wooden burst bearing a hawk feather secured firmly to the head with a red ribbon. There was grave yard silence. The writer was overwhelmed with amazement having not had such an experience before. After allowing the shock to firmly register on the guests, he spoke with abandonment – "That is him. I spent all I ever had sacrificing to him but he will not let me go. Since it was affecting my job, the priest got EKPENYONG's permission for me to take him home so that I may be able to attend to him regularly and properly." Here again the indication is that the man was probably not a good person. Reverend Father Michael Offiong is of the opinion that NDEM are beautiful and useful. In this he seems to share, to some extent, the opinion of Elizabeth Prophet. Offiong states that NDEM has nothing whatsoever to do with human sacrifices or destruction of human life in any shape or form. On the contrary it aims at saving life and bringing more children from the deities into the world. But in contrast, Elizabeth Prophet states "that some category of these elementals wield the fire of atom and molecule and hold the balance for the continents through cataclysm, flood and fire. Even though the usefulness of these elements is acknowledged by the majority Efik is it right to worship them? Does show of gratitude recommended by the Prophet imply worship? Is there any substantial difference between an offering and sacrifice? If there is, which is the offensive aspect? Is it the intention and purpose back of action or the action per se? On its own, an offering does not imply worship but recognition, appreciation, gratitude and, perhaps, respect not occasioned by acknowledgement of the superior status of the recipient. Few, if any, will consider the action offensive because the purpose and intention at the back of action are with a clear mind and pure intention in this case. This is not so when sacrifice is involved. Sacrifice implies worship even though no blood may be spilled. Some may not accept that difference exists between offering and worship. To them it is an exercise of splitting hairs. Be it as it may, the purpose and intention behind the actions determine classification of the activity as either good or bad. There could be no other simple or rightful criteria. In Efik land, the intention of NDEM devotees is worship. To them, he is a god or goddess. It is doubtful if Elizabeth Prophet intended that the Elementals (NDEM) should be worshiped. Ekpe initiates sacrifice only to Ekpe, the God of the earth, but recognizing the roles played by these Elementals, they also show recognition and appreciation through the medium of music, dance, EKPE form, EFAMBA, IKOT EKPE and appropriate acclamations.

Admission of NDEM Efik, as presently envisioned. Ekpe pollutes it and encourages conflict. Firstly, Ekpe tradition does not encourage worshipping any other power except God known esoterically as EKPE. Secondly, Sacrifices are offered separately and at different places to Ekpe and NDEM. Thirdly, women are always the high priestesses of NDEM. It is unthinkable for a woman, no matter how elated, to be allowed to direct Ekpe affairs. For these reasons, the relationship between NDEM and Ekpe should be examined more closely. The injection of NDEM into Ekpe the way it is now done probably arises from a misunderstood role of NDEM in life. Worthless teaching assigns god status to NDEM whereas as agents of God and servants of man they endow the elements with life and maintain the balance of life. When salamanders fail to perform the process of decay and disintegration is immediately set in motion. Gnomes are the transmitters of the love of the comforter through the beauty and caring of nature of God's children.

Sylphs serve as giant transformers conductors of the currents of the Mind of God unto the mind of man and are the students of the mysteries of the concentration and containment of the life-forces. Water represents the subconscious mind and the undines bring out the memory bank materials and records for the soul to perfect the divine plan of life. Salamanders, sylphs and gnomes are believed to carry the burden of darkness in order that Light may be revealed.[21] The conclusion is that the Elementals (NDEM) are as useful as: Agent of Ekpe our God; Servants of Ekpe, the man in his quest to become a son of God; Ekpe in microcosm. These are Elemental lives charged with responsibilities for the good of man provided man subscribes to a life of purity and service. Initiates of Ekpe are encouraged to deliberately apply their genii to understand the working of the elementals (NDEM) for the good of society. Understanding the workings may lead to the control and use of the elements from which all things were made. It may then be said that the Elementals (NDEM), the power behind the elements, the agents of God and servants of man, originate from Ekpe, the swarm of created beings. The initiates learn early to look with shuddering fear at physical fire, the manifestation of the spirited fire worked upon by the Holy Spirit. This is out of respect for the consuming fire of God. According Prophet, "the elementals of the sacred fire are capable of wielding the most intense fires of the physical atom as well as the spiritual all-consuming fire of God and are the connecting link for the service of sylphs of the air, the undines of the water, and the gnomes of the earth. When these are considered along with the fact that uncontrolled and destructive fires correlate with the existence of uncontrolled and destructive energies of mankind, it would not be surprising if a call is made for the law of compensation to exact the price for mankind's misuse of energy. The livelihood of that occurrence causes EKPE the man, to be afraid of the outcome. The need to be careful is the more relevant and necessary when it is realized that the elements are fires of one form or the other, namely: - Fire; fluidic fire (air); liquid fire (water) and solid fire (earth). REINCARNATION IN EKPE

FUNERALS AND RITUALS IN EKPE

The funeral obsequies of an EYAMBA or a high ranking ruler provide a rare opportunity for some of the reserved teachings to be imparted to initiates who are inquisitive. More often than not the drama leaves no special imprint on the minds of witnessing initiates. After the Adepts have certified that death had occurred and the public is to be formerly informed, selected Adepts and initiates are summoned to the EFE Ekpe for the Rituals to begin. The assembled conclave is raised by MB? K? . When convenient, MB? K? is seduced out by ISIM, an Ekpe form adorned as a peacock but handling a bow and arrow. On realizing that the seducer is an agent of death, he flees. He is aware that death will mean judgment, taking up embodiment and returning to the earth. Not finding these attractive, he elects to flee from the EFE bent on arresting him. Following his flight, a hunt is organized and as the MB? K? roars (wails) per chance a friendly power could offer him sanctuary. The hunt closes in but each time he manages to elude the dragnet. After a long hunt MB? K? is finally tracked to the Ekpe bush, a mystery school in the etheric region of the world, where he is caught, caged in a special UKARA, judged and sentenced to take another embodiment as an EYAMBA or Ruler as the case may be. For this to take place, an appropriate body is prepared. This is represented by a dummied EYAMBA or Ruler-elect ritually dressed in UKARA. When all is ready, a procession of initiates in the etheric region leaves the ? W? K Ekpe/ BUSH led by the dummied EYAMBA holding in both hands an MM? NY? which is an adorned special scepter symbolizing supreme spiritual authority. As the procession is on its way toward the temple of embodiment, the MB? K? continues to roar. Without warning the EBA (a symbol of death), an IDEM NYAMKPE that had lost much of its freedom suddenly regains it and strikes. The MB? K? (soul) is presumed dead as the procession breaks up in confusion. Instantaneously, the MB? K? roars in the EFE and is deemed to have taken embodiment as the new EYAMBA. To prevent the IDEM Ekpe running amuck, he is enticed into the EFE through the irresistible urge to pounce on a wailing old woman and the IDEM transforms back into an IDEM NYAMKPE with full honours and control. This ritual display is meant to present important lessons about life, namely: (i) That Judgment after death is imperative. (ii)That the soul is indestructible. (iii) That the decision on embodiment is beyond the authority of any soul. (iv) That the body to be taken by a soul is prepared for it by a higher Spiritual Authority, God. The burial ritual of Ekpe itself involves drum toning of the words "AKPA AKPA ODU, AKPA AKPA ODU, AKPA AKPA ODU"! meaning "life comes after death".

EKPE OATHS, POLITICS AND LAWS

In URUAN/EFIK, libation and oath taking were part and parcel of Ekpe. In recent times Western Education, populist Government in Nigeria as also the Christian Church have all conjoined as it were to subscribe to the weakening of the powers of Ekpe to the extent that certain traditional practices and norms of Ekpe mean very little. Though the civil society seems to have endorsed and baptized certain of these practices and norms like oath taking with the Bible/Quran, the breaking of the kola etc. at civil, church and political functions and other social events, the potency, aura and powers that accompanied the Rituals have been adversely and seriously eroded and undermined. People now have bastardized Ekpe and so regard these Rituals in the profane domain; there is nothing sacrosanct or mysterious about them. This should not be. Taking an oath or pouring libation are sacred ceremonials and rituals in URUAN/EFIK and are solemn symbolic actions, hence they should so remain but instead of actually pouring, the official should drink it and pass on the glass to the other dignitaries on the high table because anything connected with Ekpe has always been acknowledged as symbols of manhood and statehood. Formerly their rights and status had to be defended even with blood, if need be. That was why membership in Ekpe was the de facto symbol of the neaveau riché, the bourgeoisie and of the aristocracy. Ekpe carried weight and authority in the Uruan land both with the civil society and in governance and people were ready and willing to put down their money and resources to initiate, such that excepting what can now be regarded as draconian laws and practices, the Confraternity is still a force to be reckoned with in the outlying URUAN villages outside the metropolitan towns. When one considers the journey and expenses incurred in the purchasing and delivery of an Ekpe ORDER/GLOBE by a purchasing community in URUAN, one should also understand the fact that not every clan had the authority to possess the various Ekpe Globes since they belonged by tradition to designated clans, (eg. ADADIA and other villages in MUTAKA CLANS). These are so to speak the "TRUSTEES SOLE" of Ekpe NKANDA in URUAN and ? B? N in ORON. Then one can also appreciate why it was a tug of war to acquire Ekpe, not to talk of the costs of initiation especially in some Grades like NKANDA, IBOKU, NYAMKPE which were the costliest of the Globes. "All the NDEM were taken as equals and so we sacrificed to all individually. It is not true that ANANSA is superior to the others. The others will not accept that ranking" (Interview with Chief Ekpe Ekpenyong Oku, Calabar, 2008).

Exoterically, the opinion of Chief Oku is more commonly accepted especially among the EFIK and it seems tenable when consideration is given to the sanctity of each habitat as a preferred and reserved accommodation for each NDEM not known to have a hierarchical structure within the preferred domain. In practice, some NDEM are known to possess power of choice known to have a hierarchical structure within the preferred domain. In practice, some NDEM are known to possess power of choice and seem to be capable of extending their area of jurisdiction beyond the relevant city/clan limits recognized by the devotees to be the area of authority of their god (dess). Cases abound where people are proclaimed to be under the influence of an NDEM that should naturally not operate within the city/clan unit of the victim, thus giving the impression that some NDEM have leave to operate outside their normal domain but within the confines of their elemental nature. Should it be true that in reality such incursion into the territory of another does occur, it may be concluded that a hierarchical structure exists amongst NDEM of the same elemental nature. Although the concept of hierarchies of NDEM is not presented directly in Ekpe, it could be inferred from the way Ekpe is structured and organized.

THE CAUDECIUS, NSIBIDI & OTHER EKPE FORMS AND IMAGERIES

I think it would be most unimaginable if not insane that the great URUAN/EFIK peoples of ancient past and in those pre-historic times as stark illiterates as most of them were, had ever come in contact with those great educated astrologers of the Orient, the great Egyptian magicians and even those great wise men of the Zodiac mysteries of the East to get involved with the mysteries of Ekpe as outlined here except for the mythical conception going round that URUAN/ EFIK progenitors could well be the direct descendants of the coloured/black people mentioned in the Bible and in the ancient history of Egypt, and by implication of Palestine. The Egyptians were the first human race to reach such heights of civilization and literacy-via their hieroglyphic writings of yore and organized governance. (Cf. The story of Joseph, son of Jacob in the palace of the Pharaoh of Egypt: Gen.30-50; Moses Exd.2-13). What we have been presenting all along has been made possible through comparison and analogy with these great exoteric mysteries of yore. It is also impossible to contemplate that URUAN sages were able to read and write even in their ancient and original URUAN/EFIK language which today is the written and Authorized Version of URUAN/EFIK ORTHOGRAPHY popularly tagged EFIK language, before the rounding of the Equatorial Coast of West Africa by the celebrated Portuguese navigator and explorer, Vasco da Gama in the 15th century AD. URUAN/EFIK wisdom as outlined here already flowed from the same wisdom that God Almighty bestowed on those earliest recorded peoples of the East, namely the Egyptians, the Sumerians and by implication the peoples of Mesopotamia, the Aryans, the fore-runners of the white race, the Greeks, and the Pythagoreans mentioned at several points in this book. Even URUAN/EFIK, ditto the great St. Paul had acknowledged and appreciated their wisdom when addressing them at the AREOPAGUS, the ancient Greek Academy and great centre of culture and learning. He had remarked:" For you also are His offspring" (Acts 17:17).

CHIEF (ENGR.) B. E. BASSEY AUTHOR OF EKPE-EFIK

Life, according to the satirists, is cyclically organized. When taken at the individual soul or world soul levels, Ekpe may well be conceived in the cyclic order after the cosmogony concept of the East and West. Applying these Rosicrucian tenets and those of the Freemasonry is from an earlier work of a great, great grandson of URUAN from Creek Town and no other than the celebrated Etinnyin Engineer B. E. Bassey, formerly Commissioner for Education and for Commerce and Industries in defunct South Eastern afterwards renamed Cross River State of Nigeria. It was the first ever world acclaimed treatise on Ekpe. It is also unthinkable that URUAN/EFIK of yore and even up till the 1950s had ever anticipated not talking of organizing Ekpe in these categories. These are presented here for the present and elitist generation of URUAN/EFIK and readers who might even come to wonder what is being talked about here simply because very few both of the middle and bourgeoisie class including even the neaveau riche at present would want to put down their money to initiate in Ekpe URUAN/EFIK. It takes guts, a bit of national pride and a lot of resources and as a matter of fact, very many would not afford it. Come to think of it, in URUAN/EFIK before the 1960s, none of this class could build a storeyed house excepting the Ekpe Lords and mme awat Inyang fishermen and farmers. They were heads and shoulders above any salaried gentry in any part of Nigeria as far as economic pursuits were concerned. Till date, how many billionaires can equal people like King Eyo Honesty II and those of his class! These people had hundreds of ships and other water crafts with thousands of servants to man their business enterprises. Some even used to spread money, even if it were today, wads of (one thousand) N1, 000 notes on the ground as carpets and rugs for their feet. They were fabulously rich and could engage in initiating in many Grades of Ekpe whereas only few can boast of getting initiated in at least two especially of the higher Grades of Ekpe today. What is presented here is therefore as it were; a comparative analysis with the arcane and exoteric practices of ancient Egypt and Greece and Mesopotamia, but not that URUAN/EFIK practiced such.

EKPE FORMS AND IMAGERIES

The organized focus on Ekpe houses/Globes is the concept of the Planetary chain or cycles and there are seven globes in the earth's Planetary chain and only our EARTH is visible to man, but Ekpe enables us to visualize and appreciate the principles to which each of the seven globes as seen as key bearers to the chain. Whereas this is a re-capitulation of Rosicrucian teachings, Ekpe goes further to reveal the qualities of incoming human generations. Therefore, the new positions of Ekpe Houses/Globes in the cycle may be taken as the stages of man's development in relation to God. These positions are embodied in the paraphernalia of the individual forms, imageries and the masquerades. They also show that the fall of man will in time lead to the rise of man. For example, the inner man is discernible if some of the forms are closely examined particularly amongst the Ekpe at the lower positions. The mesh covering of some forms reveals the inner man within the mesh. The MBAKARA position indicates the time before separation into the sexes, a change or an impending change of status. Its imagery is a hermaphrodite and its mundane form is a crocodile or another reptile at home on land and in water. MBAKARA display is rarely staged because it is supposed to signal the death of an important personality. Its appearance is a public announcement of an impending transition, the separation of the soul from the body. In India, the sign called the "Maker "is connected with the birth of the spiritual microcosm, and death or dissolution of the physical universe signals its passage into the realm of the spiritual. Its symbol is also the crocodile.

After the separation, that is during the third or Moon Round of the Earth Period, a naked man IBOKU known in the Kabala as Adam, an ethereal figure, appears on the scene. The Ekpe form carries a fish trap i.e. ESIK, which is an indication that he has to bear his burden. A record player said "You will have to work hard and through sweat and thin." The treasured companion MKPE (Eve) subsequently takes a very low position in relation to God. Her constitution has to be consistent with that of our Earth at the time. She has now acquired a full mesh (net) covering over her real form, a coat of flesh as the Bible puts it. Having aged, the status of the soul of the woman improves until the fifth or Jupiter Round is reached when she will take the naked posture again, the body constitution having changed to become less materialistic and physical. This is the NYAMKPE position. In this position she earns elevation in spirit from time to time. By the time MB? K? is reached and that is the sixth or Venus Round, there is no longer any difference between man and woman. All earthly desires are gone. Man and woman become one through a life of discipline, sacrifice and purity. This is like the Throne of Solomon otherwise known as the Christ centre. It is one of the most guarded secrets of Ekpe lest the knowledge be abused. History also has is that the Throne of Solomon was attended by twelve lions, signifying that death awaited an impostor. At this position Ekpe MB? K? begins to open up to the wonderful possibilities that exist for man. At OKPOHO, the seventh or Vulcan Round, the man becomes a Mighty King, correct and right in his words, actions and thought. He is wise; he is exalted to inherit the earth. He is at a higher rung of the spiritual ladder than its correspondence, OKU AKAMA. He has as it were "transfigured." NKANDA as part of the triune delegation of EYAMBA, NKANDA and EBO? KO seated in the Region of the three higher planes of septenary Cosmos, is represented by a bearded old man, wise in every respect, submitting only to the will of God with whom he is in near perfect communication. At the EYAMBA level, man is at-one-ment with God. "You are gods" is a well-known saying even in the Bible (Gen3:5). EBO? KO is represented by an old chaperon caring over the weak ones mothered by her. She EKA Ekpe, Mother of Ekpe) has lost a measure of spirituality when compared with EYAMBA representing The One, but is still highly spirited and her representative form of its formless status confirms this. The body covering is silky cloth, indicating she is highly ethereal. But some people hold the view that the Ekpe system fits more closely to the Kabalistic concept when Ekpe is considered as a unity. It is the position of MB? K? (Tiferet) in relation to the other Ekpe Houses or globes described in Western Doctrine that makes the difference. In the case of Kabala, the MBOKO (Tiferet) is shown as having easy direct links with the other Houses or Globes of the system, and in a controlling position. These Globes are houses of differentiated divinities that are not self-existing. The three upper globes are located within the three higher planes of consciousness, revealed and explained normally only to initiates of the higher orders. The lower ones represent the four lower planes, the lowest being our plane or Globe or MKPE House or the visible universe. The Globes or Houses located within the three higher planes of consciousness are in the realm of pure spirit and are known in Ekpe as within the objective universe as the relevant Ekpe forms (masquerades). The symbolisms may be of universal in application. The Eastern and Rosicrucian cosmogonies are useful when the consideration is the evolution. Applying this to EKPE and employing the relevant Ekpe forms, the effects of involution and evolution are identifiable, and the contribution of each EKPE House/Globe, as it is called in the East, could be recorded. Applying the Rosicrucian concept of Recapitulation of Round activities which states that before the activity of any period can start there is a recapitulation of all that have gone through before, it may be concluded that during the Earth Period, OKU AKAMA relates to the first or Saturn Round activities; MBAKARA relates to the second or Sun Round activities; IBOKU-the third or Moon Round; MKPE – the fourth or Earth Round;- the fifth or Jupiter Round NYAMKPE; MB? K? the sixth or Venus Round and OKPOHO the seventh or the Vulcan Round. It should be remembered that the names given to the Rounds have no relationship whatsoever with the physical planets bearing these names. If B. E. Bassey's father as also of other Adepts and that of the author's experience could be relied upon, the concept of recapitulation of Round experience is valid and operational, but one is unable to attribute the experience to Ekpe Initiation physically. Man in the First Round and those of First race on our Earth are acknowledged in arcane studies to be spiritual beings within and ethereal without. He is more or less like a phantom and not a tangible being. He was non-intelligent, super-spiritual and sexless. The ethereal body was monstrous but compatible with his coarser surroundings. The First Round First Race man is symbolized in Ekpe by OKU AKAMA, the Ekpe form or masquerade well equipped for demolition. Its body covering is a cloth of dark bluish hue. This signifies the ethereal nature of this man's body. The deformed conical head covering is an indication that although the First Race man was highly spiritual during the First Round, he had nevertheless departed from the realm of pure spirit, part of his spiritual constitution having given way to the growth of ethereal body. The degree of disinformation and distortion of the head covering is a measure of man's spirituality. The wing or hat as it is commonly called and located at the back of the head, is fixed and bears small mirrors judiciously placed to harness the energy of the Central Spiritual sun. It serves as a sort of disc to absorb the supreme solar energy and is a symbol of power. This proves that the divinity back of form is not independent and that man is non-self existing. It also proves the reality of God. The wing is fixed on a non-rotator because the Race is not yet far removed from the source of energy. Even though OKU AKAMA is taken to be positioned on the Tree of Life on the column of femininity, he is sexless and without identifiable eyes as we now know them. OKU AKAMA is animalistic in form. The Elephant and her baby represent it. This is aptly demonstrated in its dance form. He is the "Horus" of Egyptian Theosophy.

The Round Two First Race man was still gigantic and ethereal but growing firmer and more condensed in body, more physical and of the Sun Round. He was still less intelligent than spiritual for the mind is less susceptible to change than the physical frame. He may be best described as being of a psycho-spiritual mentality with ethero-physical body. The MBAKARA form (masquerade) fits that description. He is a hermaphrodite and has no visible eye but can perceive. It is the EKPE most associated with the physical element, water and is not too far removed from the form we know. The body dress is reddish, mainly raffia netting with a limited covering of cloth of similar hue as skirt. It may bear two shorts but permanently fixed and a reddish ABASONKO on the forehead and at times there may be a similar one at the back of the head. The indication here is that the physical body is taking over fast from the ethereal. In short the MBAKARA may be said to have an ethero-physical body. The androgynous status brought him into the realm of psychology and inner characteristics may be described as psycho-spiritual. The Round Three First Race man had acquired a perfectly compacted body and was becoming rather more cunning than spiritual. He was three eyed. In EKPE the one at the back of the head is often indicated by a special ABASONKO known as ESIK (fish trap), flexibly attached. This is considered to be adequate identification. The body is raffia netting with a limited cloth skirt. The ESIK represents a trap for man's burden that will result in the loss of the third eye or spirituality. The Round Three First Race man is aptly presented in Ekpe as IBOKU. Being on the downward arc of the planetary Round he had reached a point where his primeval spirituality was eclipsed by a developing mentality. Oriental arcane doctrines state that his gigantic structure decreases as his body improves in texture with him becoming a more rational being during the last of the Third terrestrial cycle. In the Fourth Planetary Round the First Race man had his intellect through enormous development, and dumbness gave way to the development of human speech which is perfected during this Fourth Round experience on our planet. In the course of time the third eye was gradually petrified and lost because of his inability to properly bear his burdens Strictly keeping to arcane teachings, it is only from the time of the Atlanta of the Fourth Race of the Fourth Planetary Round that one ought to speak of man even though his physical frame was larger than what is now. He is represented by MKPE symbolized by a young woman with two eyes, she having lost much of her spirituality signified by the third eye. These Ekpe forms or masquerades may be conceived as arch types or models of men appearing from time to time on our earth. But does it mean that prehistoric and preliterate URUAN of the 15th century knew all the categories in their imageries and symbols as analyzed above? What is presented here is my interpretation from the sophisticated Oriental categories which God Almighty in His benevolence and Wisdom had bestowed on URUAN AND PEOPLES OF the Nigritic stock whom He blessed as also gave to the peoples of the East. But URUAN people were able through innate wisdom to transfer these into their forms and masquerades. All these images are therefore the physical models which we observe when the different masquerades of Ekpe Grades appear on display. These seven types of men are therefore for the Christian Ekpe Member the extended expressions of the cosmic Christ, the second person of the Blessed Trinity as it were. (Blavatsky H.P. 545) From this the analysis it may be adduced that the NYAMKPE, MB? K? , and OKPOHO types will be appearing. Man's spirituality will be on the rise on our present earth now that more than half the Races have climbed out of the depths of the Fourth Planetary Round. The characteristics, principles and consciousness represented by EKPE House or Globes will become more prominent as the Races transit the relevant Ekpe House. Man's spiritual nature, consciousness and form as seen on our earth will in time approach those embodied spirit within the NYAMKPE House. For the moment the NYAMKPE influence is limited if at all manifesting. Ultimately when monads move into the NYAMKPE House or Globe, man will ordinarily be able to conquer time and space but that is still in the esoteric realm.

In Ekpe practice, a man who puts on a masquerade of an EKPE House is expected to exhibit the principles and consciousness relevant to the House when called into activity though appropriate drumming, singing, and toning or trumpeting of the MB? K? . This is a process of aligning the higher states of an initiate to the three higher planes in the cosmos. Similarly, a monad transiting a Globe is cultured by that Globe and the journeyed planetary rounds it has been exposed to. In the case of NYAMKPE, the position of ABASANKO, the atrophied conical helmet of salvation when examined in relation to the vertical gives the degree of spirituality at that time. It serves as an adjustable antenna possessing almost all degrees of freedom. The angle of ABASANKO it makes with the vertical is a measure of the spirituality of the IDEM NYAMKPE. When it flops over the face, its consciousness is at the mundane level. He has temporarily lost if not all the spirituality, but has the potential for regaining it. To regain, he has to desire it, work for it and pay the price up-front, a huge sum of money at that. As the Ekpe (God) responds, the ABASONKO regains its verticality and spirituality. To further strengthen its ability to adjust to spiritual focus, bird-type wings studded with mirrors are provided at the back of the head so that they flap, close and open when the IDEM NYAMKPE is in motion. The variable wings function as adjustable solar disc allowing for ease of focusing at the centre of life, the Central spiritual sun that is the centre from where the spirit of God radiates. The wings are additional symbols of spirituality that enables IDEM NYAMKPE to enjoy flights of consciousness from one state to another. In real life situation, a hand at the back of the head is a symbolism for power initiation. With all these facilities, the IDEM NYAMKPE is well equipped to operate on almost if not all the seven planes of consciousness, and to understand what life is all about. He therefore represents a man who is enlightened. At the IDEM IKW? -EK? ? ? KEMBA level, the conical helmet is completely atrophied leaving the roots. His spirituality is much reduced and limited. He is no longer in possession of the 'antenna', but a feather on the forehead which is indicative of the possibility of a redeemed perception if coveted. Additional feather is proof that the particular IDEM IKWO-EK? ? ? KEMBA having had her inner nature cultured by MB? K? , perhaps has transfigured. At the MB? K? stage, the atrophied cone or helmet as it may be called, is shriveled up, dried and hardened. It detaches itself from the head position to become a powerful tool in the hands of an Adept whose will to call with love for his mind's good desires may be firmly toned or trumpeted and amplified using the MB? K? MB? K? vehicle.

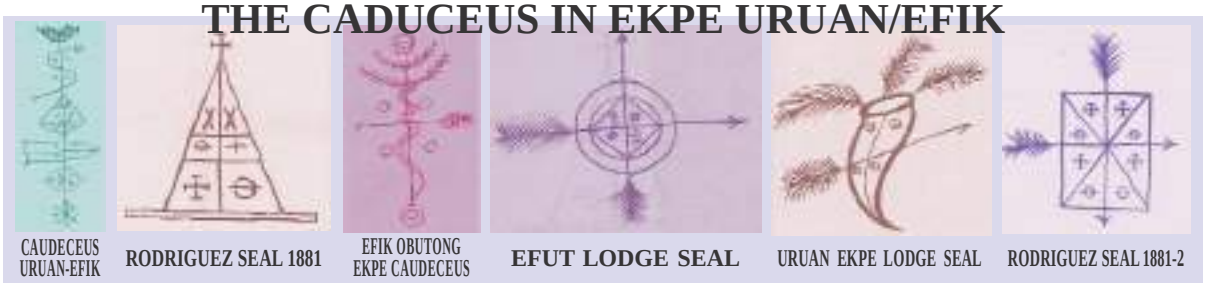
The MB? K? trumpet or vehicle is a powerful communicator with a customized built transmitter and 'amplifier'. It is also a generator of power. The Ekpe (God) responds by bringing the communicator's heart desires into manifestation. The adept's prayer is answered because he has sought well through Christ. He knows the way. Being in contact with his soul, and operating from the plane of soul he is also able to create in love. Variants of the conical helmet exist at levels below NKANDA and EBONGKO (Cf. Fig 15). Each House (Globe) has a ruling self-existing divinity or spiritual intermediary or mediator in the service of God and an appropriate call signal of the MB? K? vehicle. An Adept's initiation has to do with the candidate acknowledging the call each time a signal relevant to the divinity he is representing is released. He is for all intent and purposes being 'married' to the divinity which the candidate represents on our earth. Despite the elaborate Ekpe initiation rites, a lift in consciousness does not now come easily if at all. Experience has shown that it should not be expected unless serious effort is made by the initiate to cover Ekpe, and if time at the temple or during exoteric displays is not wasted on drinking and eating orgies but on learning. With some luck, a lift may come to the one who perseveres, but the experience is likely to be left-handed. This is because the focus had for generations gone sour. The temple had become a place where evil has continuously been perpetuated and ancient powers concentrated and contaminated. Even now, the existence of purity of thought cannot be vouched for. This is perhaps why some temples outside Uruan land have recourse to the use of unorthodox methods to obtain elevation, howbeit of the left-handed path. Under normal circumstances, pure divine spirits are unlikely to easily find accommodation in such run down temples. To further complicate matters there are spirits that are worse and inferior to the lowest savage. Such spirits are readily available for work on our earth. The close proximity of our respective abodes and planes of perception are in favour of such inter-communication unfortunately, as they are ever ready to interfere with our affairs for weal or woe.



Some initiates, because of their orientation and ancestral links may find it easier than others to experience elevation. In any case, it is doubtful if full recapitulation of experiences envisaged under the Rosicrucian tenets could now be experienced by Ekpe initiates in Uruan land unless induced. Alice Bailey defines initiation as: “A gradual and realized series of expansion of consciousness, a steadily increasing awareness of divinity and of all its implications” (Bailey Alice, 181-183). She refers to it as a living experience, implying that all should endeavour to have that experience. However, to gain the experience, she warned that reliance should not be placed on modern esoteric groups. This is because they are not the custodians of the teaching of initiation nor is it their prerogative to prepare man for this enfoldment. In the light of the false claims made by some occult teachers and psychic seers, she recommends the Christ path involving five initiations capable of being administered by pure divine spirit during full waking consciousness as man becomes ready, holy and recollected. There is a spate of organizations claiming to be custodians of Truth. While it is true that from time to time teachings on Truth are released through some organizations eg. The monastic Orders, such releases are time related, well-purposed and well-intentioned. (Cf. Ekarika J.P. 34) It is not for all the time and for everything as are being claimed. The five initiations all form part of Ekpe teachings but are not presented as such. Initiation is one of those words URUAN Christians would rather not use unless they are as initiates of Ekpe or other secret organizations of the land. The objection stems from the common belief that initiations are attended by rites which the Christian masses associate with black magic and heathenism. For many, ritual has to do with the Church and rites with magic. In reality, ritual means a system of rites, and some rites of magic have found respectable accommodation in churches as rituals. These are those who having accepted Christianity are consciously rejecting their own culture. Such people are unlikely to accept or submit to the painting of their bodies and the attendant music and sounds for whatever purpose. These people have rightly dug in and are unlikely to be uprooted from their new beliefs if they have found the Christ.

In some customs appropriate write-ups are handed out to the candidate for initiation to learn and recite. But, in Ekpe these are replaced with signs and symbols painted on pre-determined spots of the body to serve various purposes including being a reminder to the initiate for life. Together the signs and symbols tell stories that would have called for extensive literature. A mature person who has passed through full initiation rites together with teachings on purity, sacrifice and endowment is unlikely to easily forget it. The care and pains invested by the officiant was to make sure that all is right and is not without risk. He will be expected to pay a substantial fine levied by the Adepts were he to falter on the job he freely opted to perform on behalf of the EYAMBA, the traditional initiator. Those who are in love with Ekpe may continue with the initiation procedure even though the initiation performed after the Order of Christ is a spiritual affair and takes place during full waking consciousness. If men were Christ-centred, Ekpe initiation and the initiation of Jesus should occur at the same time. As it is, there are gaps between them as there are in man's relationship with Christ, especially now that Ekpe practice is probably no longer age and time-related. It may be asked, is it mandatory to have the body painted with symbols before a lift in consciousness could be experienced? Obviously not. There are many different faiths and paths who being non-subscribers to Ekpe have earned elevation in the spirit, and there are also some Ekpe initiates who are strangers to awareness. These are adequate proofs. The root of the matter lies in believing and having faith in what one professes, and being able to pay the price up-front for what is required. Having been involved ancestrally and, perhaps personally in Ekpe and the environment has contributed its quota; many may be mentally, psychologically and emotionally committed to the point of loving, believing and having faith in the system or religion they subscribe to. Those who have been privileged to occupy or inherit positions of power within the system hardly find anything wrong with it; whereas those with grouse see nothing good in it. This later group quickly embraced the early Christian Church for the much-needed protection against the then prevalent human right abuses. This is, perhaps, the reason why some Adepts make poor Christians and are rarely attracted to the priesthood. Outwardly, they profess to be Church Christians and may even be occupying positions of honour within the church but hold on to what their forefathers and the society had handed down. The reason for this is not far-fetched. They are not yet convinced of the new faith's claim to superior merit over what the ancestors had bequeathed and, therefore, are in support of the stand of King Eyo II who believed that church Christianity did not bring anything new (Ekei Oku, Princess; 1989, 65-66). A church Christian is he who believes that the path to Christ is through the Christian Church alone. He belongs to the emotional and many whose approach and benefit is through faith. Contrary to church teachings, there are other Christians, although not members of the Catholic Church, who are also approaching Christ as part of the emotional and many of them through faith. Finally, there are the few who approach Christ successfully from the plane of meditation. In the context of needed change, Ekpe initiates may be grouped into about five classes. The first are those who have been deeply rooted and are unwilling to accept any change from what they know to be Ekpe. They see nothing wrong in it even though they may outwardly profess commonly accepted religious faiths. The second class accommodates those who are prepared to accept only minor changes of what was handed down. Such changes may include the use of additional colours to improve the efficacy of initiation, and correlate the exoteric colours of the divinities. They will not go far from the old trodden path or practices. The third class may move a step further to accept a re-arrangement of body symbols. The fourth may be willing to contribute towards the improvement of the quality of temple music. Amongst the final class are those who having understood the meaning of these actions and accepted that in this age when Christ's role is active, the important temple activities should merely include (i) Appropriate temple music and songs. (ii) Trumpeting praying to God through Christ-Centre meditation. (iii) This fifth class will no longer invest in body symbols and signs. To them the way to truth had been opened by Christ at Golgotha. Human nature being what it is, the desired changes need to be worked out in stages if success is to be achieved. The matter should not be rushed. The initiates have to be educated to understand the religion they are clinging to, the meaning and back of its workings and the need to change. The Christian experience should convince the fair-minded that it may be wasted effort attempting to uproot the initiates without educating them to fully understand the weakness of their current practices before bringing them to grasp the import of the superior alternative teachings they are expected to cultivate.

THE CADUCEUS IN EKPE URUAN/EFIK

CAUDECEUS URUAN-EFIK | RODRIGUEZ SEAL 1881 | EFIK OBUTONG EKPE CAUDECEUS | EFUT LODGE SEAL | URUAN EKPE LODGE SEAL | RODRIGUEZ SEAL 1881-2

The Caduceus with its double serpents is one of the symbologies the ancients employed to conceal secret lessons on the Truth from the uninitiated. A soul encircled by the double serpent must learn to conquer them if he is to break the chains that anchor him to the earth; otherwise he will be forever condemned to the eternal fire. The serpent is symbology that of the devil or tempter as seen in the Bible. The way of release from its chains is the main focus of religion and organizations of Truth even of the Gospel. This is organized through the auspices of the Christ Spirit without which the soul finds no peace. The Caduceus is probably the root of Ekpe symbolism of handing over a headed staff as a final initiation rite of an Adept. Usually, a piece of cloth of appropriate colour, not black, tied close to the head of the staff may represent the wings of the Caduceus. The colour correlates the representative colour of the House into which the initiate is being installed an Adept. Initiation commences with painting of rings in white, red and yellow-orange on the hands and legs of the neophyte. By this procedure the soul of the initiate is expected to be activated to recapitulate its experiences during the first three and a half rounds of its pilgrimage of the Earth period described above, although this is hardly the case nowadays in URUAN/EFIK. At USAHAEDET the machinery for recapitulation is planted on the soul after the initiate has been served with a secret root meal or received a second water initiation. The MBOKO roar together with the attendant music and songs should normally cause the soul to play back its experiences and enhance the evocation and invocation of the divinities, but now this seldom occurs. For all intents and purposes the initiation rites for initiates and adepts are now a cosmetic affair for most. The reason is clear. It looks a bit weird and pagan. The benefits are accepted by many as social. The method used at USAHAEDET for enhancing perception is unorthodox in that the process should occur naturally and not forced. The method is suspected to be in the realm of black magic. It depicts an Ekpe adept dressed as was the case amongst the affluent and well connected initiates during the period up to the fourth decade of the twentieth century A.D. The man is shown as bearing an extended sash that runs from the right shoulder round the left hip to a position halfway between the right hip and the knee, before tailing into a Caduceus - OKPOMKPOM that sweeps the ground. The tailing Caduceus gives meaning to the sash. The man is no ordinary commander but an Ekpe adept. The extended sash signifies the evolutionary path of the Caduceus which the man is treading during his ascent from matter to spirit. The staff is a symbol of authority, an indication that truly the man is an adept, an OBONG Ekpe according to URUAN/EFK tradition. It portrays a man on the evolutionary path from earth to spirit who has almost succeeded in freeing himself from the serpent of illusion if he is to successfully accomplish his mission on earth. The Caduceus and staff give meaning to the sash. They are not ordinary symbols or common adornment. They confirm the status of the man. He is a high ranking authority, an Ekpe Adept.

OKPOMKPOM EKPE – EKPE SIGNIFICANT ATTIRE

The OKPOMKPOM is a cloth necklace worn by males during traditional ceremonies. It is adornment. There are different types, and the design of the more common ones depends on the resourcefulness of the wearer. The design and use of OKPOMKPOM Ekpe is restricted and controlled. It is NSIBIDI of man, a reminder to him to know himself. The OKPOMKPOM Ekpe bears either three or four knots and each knot represent an acknowledged Ekpe House, principle, power or energy. The knots represent some key stations on the path of awareness. A piece of suitable sized cloth of one colour tied above a knot indicates the House over which the adept has authority. Man is conceived as being subdivided into three parts, namely: The Head, analogous to the Spirit aspect; the Upper Torso or part above the diaphragm analogous to the soul aspect; the Lower Torso or part below the diaphragm analogous to the sex organs, the creative aspect; the stomachs, and lastly, the spleen or the receiver of energy. The initiation rites are after the order of the Chaldean Kabala. The lowest knot is MKPE, the starting point on the way to awareness. It signifies a man resolved to push forward to matter the difficulties. He has belted himself adequately with a winged girdle which may also be taken to represent the creative female organ. The tails that hang between the wings of the bow may be taken to represent the creative male organ. This is NOT Phallicism. Both creative organs must cooperate for the regenerative energy to commence refining the man. More meaningfully, they together represent the straight path from matter to spirit available only to initiates. The next station or second-knot upwards is IBOKU Ekpe. Here the man acquires endurance which enables him to accommodate burdens. As the Bible puts it: "We know that trouble produces endurance, endurance brings God's approval, and his approval creates hope" (Rom 5:3-4). For this reason, the relevant Ekpe form or masquerade bears the ESIK fish trap which denotes a burden collector. The third and final knot, the MB? K? , represents a man perfected through suffering and glorified though trial. The 4-knot OKPOMPOM Ekpe therefore relates to them, and the knots are named MKPE, NYAMKPE, MB? K? , and OKPOHO in an ascending order. NYAMKPE signifies victory. Here the initiate begins to have the feeling of freedom and the attendant joy and delight. He commences to experience the beautiful things of this life which he never knew existed. The principle housed in OKPOHO is spirit, and every Ekpe man who has attained that state has acquired the disposition of a king with considerable authority. Beyond this the man is in the realm of pure divine spirit away from the planes of manifestation. An extended sash tailing into Ekpe on the evolutionary path depicts OKU AKAMA, EBONKO or EYAMBA respectively. The two columns of the OKPOMKPOM Ekpe bring into focus the not so obvious download involuntary path prom spirit into matter and the evolutionary path outward from matter into spiri (Cf. Fig. 16). I have come to notice with dismay and utter confusion how URUAN/EFIK has allowed the once adored and reserved symbol of an Adept the OKPOMKPOM Ekpe to be abused and dragged on the mud through indiscriminate use of the insignia by all and sundry even by children. It is now worn everywhere especially in the Cross River and Akwa Ibom States of Nigeria. I have never seen the symbol OKPOMKPOM being so disgraced and abused. As a child always noticed that very few Ekpe initiates wore the OKPOMKPOM except titled and very high ranking members of Ekpe. It was always a symbol of authority, integrity and nobility especially when worn with the UKARA. With the publishing of this book I sincerely hope the Chiefs and Traditional Rulers in URUAN/EFIK will enact laws throughout the land that it is a very serious offence punishable by the laws of the land, viz. Ekpe laws with dire consequences to offenders who adorn themselves with - laws by which our forebears used in the governance of the great URUAN nation, whose symbol is Ekpe itself. When we look at it objectively, it will be seen how I is great insult and a slap on the face of nation like URUAN. Everybody in Nigeria knows the type of caps and shirts Yoruba Chiefs wear. People know the special red caps and shirts of titled chiefs in Igbo land for example. Down here in Cross River and Akwa Ibom States people know the type of head gear and shirts that the Nkuku in Ibibio land and Annang country wear; ditto the Ndabos, the Muri, the Ntois, the Ntufams, the Ukandis to mention but a few sub-tribes and communities in Cross River. But why is it that the distinctive traditional wear of URUA/EFIK Chiefs who must be high ranking members of Ekpe should so abused and trivialized, debased and desacralized by all comers even by those outside URUAN/EFIK nation? Charity starts at home, that is why the author has suggested that this Ekpe law in particular must be enforced by the Royal Authorities here in URUAN/EFIK land first before we know what to do and how to deal with outsiders who abuse a people and a very significant ethnic group in Nigeria at that with such impunity and sacrilege. Then People will learn to respect nationalities and what they stand for, and in the case of URUAN/EFIK what we can do and have been doing throughout in world history even if citizens themselves have eroded their culture and traditions. This is a sacrilege of unfathomable proportions committed against fellow human beings by people who understand what a nation and her culture, tradition and heritage stand for. The same profanation and bastardization of the women ? NY? NY? has reduced women especially those of the nobility and initiates to the same common denominator as even little girls as young as three or four year olds. Everybody is wearing ? NY? NY? not only in Cross River State and Akwa Ibom but all over Nigeria and Africa nowadays. This was the special wear for women of rank in URUAN/EFIK but for the past few decades it has become the corporate wear for all grades of females even beyond Africa. This was the special Victorian design worn only by Ekpe initiates and women from royal families but is now one of the numbers for fashion pageants like the Most Beautiful Girl in Nigeria or Miss World/Universe. Some have even tried to make I sweep the ground with additions as if it were a marriage gown. What a profound demeaning and desacralization of a people's culture! I know this will be a very difficult law to enforce for the ban but with renewed effort and tenacity of purpose as also the co-operation of the women themselves we shall succeed.

NTA? NKANDA – EKPE SIGNIFICAL SYMBOL OF AUTHORITY

Nta Nkanda or peacock feather is a symbol of Ekpe initiation. Its use is not accidental. Ordinarily, a feather in EKPE connotes purity, power and spiritual knowledge. The peacock is a rare bird of great beauty treasured by the ancients in possession of esoteric knowledge. The Pharaohs of Egypt treasured it. The hind-feathers in particular bear the colours of the rainbow, and since each EKPE house has a colour of the rainbow by which it may be identified, the feather was acknowledged by the ancients as having special meaning and place in Ekpe. It was adopted as a symbol by which an Ekpe initiate could easily be identified. Considering that the NKANDA grade is the highest but one grade available to initiates who have traversed the seven colours of the rainbow at the portals of initiation, the NKANDA feather should have been reserved for those who have scaled the OKPOHO grade and attained the NKANDA grade. In the Egyptian system MAAT, the goddess is attributed to the sphere CHASSED, corresponding to our OKPOHO. She always had her headdress adorned with a peacock feather. This is not the case in Ekpe practice. Its use is now confined to women initiates and others who are young and inexperienced in the workings of the fraternity. Mature initiates have no need for exoteric identification, but should be equipped and ready to prove their mettle restricted to Ekpe initiates. There was a time penalty for infringement meant death to the offender. But it is necessary to put it on where they may not be known to be initiates members of Ekpe.

(6) SOME RESERVED TEACHINGS OF EKPE SOCIETY

(a) THE HOUSE OF ADEPTS: The four kingdoms of nature of the terrestrial earth controls certain aspects of Ekpe as well as the celestial and cosmic populations. But these together do not adequately define Ekpe for the simple reason that the thoughts of men cannot encompass God. If these were possible Ekpe would not have been, the only ONE. In this context of oneness and unity, the esoteric word Ekpe is a pseudonym of Him whose name is the HOLY and the SACRED and the TRANSCENDENT. In this context URUAN/EFIK considers as what is commonly or exoterically referred to as God, but whom the ancients rarely mentioned. The name God was so very much revered that they were overawed in using that name and therefore 6should not be of common usage; May His name be blessed forever. For this reason, each Ekpe house (Temple/Globe) has responsibility for the invisible life principle(s) which were associated with the lives assigned to it by IDEM, the ruling divinity. In the physical sense and when the need arises, the invisible principle(s) and associated lives are displayed in the houses in symbology as physical display by initiates. NSIBIDI is employed and the initiate has to be tutored to understand and appreciate. The death of an Adept affords the opportunity for the display to be organized. Such a display should normally relate to the House over which the Adept was ruler. In practice, there is hardly any distinction particularly in Efik land, but there is in URUAN. A reddish ABASANKO, an indication that EKPE is always present is carried on a wheel of life threaded on a beam representing the life track. In reality the life track is not straight but cyclic. A second wheel to which a bell and buntings are attached is suspended from the wheel of life. These represent influences that work against the proper run of the wheel of life. The bell is the built-in alarm within man. The position of the wheel is an indication that the man has reached the end of his time. He is shown sitting in the shed in complete control of the lion within and without. He had attained the rank of an adept before answering the call to depart this life. He is victorious. An initiate is not rushed into burial. A ritual is performed to return the deceased initiate to mother earth the way he came. Initiation was performed to open the neophyte to the path of truth and bring home to him God's (EKPE) endowment and to people worldwide, also to remind him of the need and way to work and gain awareness and freedom from the confinement of ignorance and wrong living. Initiation is for the living and not for the dead. Before burial, he is relieved of the initiation, the soul having acquired its lesson and floated off.

EVOLUTION THEORY IN EKPE vis-à-vis DARWIN'S THEORY

The word evolution is repugnant to most Christians for the simple reason it is taken to mean Darwin Theory of Evolution which postulates that the evolving life saw man through progressive changes in status from minerals, vegetable to man lives in that order. The objective stems from the Bible account which states clearly that man was created from the dust of the earth, meaning minerals of the earth, and that God breathed the breath of life into him. On its part, EKPE does not subscribe to Darwin Theory. Although it concerns itself with the happenings on the earth of the Earth Period, it believes in the existence of separate evolutionary paths for minerals, vegetable, animal and man. It teaches that as man moved on earth from a more spiritual and less ethereal than physical constitution, changes occurred in man such that a reduction in the spiritual was attended by growth of the physical and vice versa. This concept is brought home to man through the EKPE forms or masquerades. EKPE in accepting the Bible account of the creation of man is aware that a transition period was essential for man to be a man even if the Bible account of a day is accepted. A day in this context is used figuratively. It is not the time duration man defines as a day. EKPE goes further to teach that man in the form known appeared on our earth during the third or fourth rounds of the Earth Planetary chain and subsequently separation into sexes occurred and woman came into being. This is the Bible story detailed. It is in this context that the word evolution is used hereafter. To avoid misunderstanding and to facilitate appreciation of the import, it is essential to first appreciate what is meant by evolution in Ekpe. In this regard, it could be said that Man takes a lot for granted. For example, he watches his grandchildren grow but often fails to view this against the growth of his children. If he did he might realize that even though his grandchildren are acknowledged humans since they seem to look every inch chips off the old block as far as the outer form is concerned, they are different. They are more inquisitive and independent than their parents at the same age. It is not uncommon to hear a parent boast about the level of intelligence of his grandchildren yet he is incapable of correcting some of what he considers their most disturbing pastime. This is because the unfolding time has its effects particularly on children of the time. The earth is ageing and in the process releases energies that grow and die. This dance of energies as it may be called, affect lives on earth. It affects much more than the outward form. Consequently, even though the word "growth" may adequately express the totality of happenings in a man during his sojourn on earth, it does not relate very well with the changes that occur when men of one age are compared with those of another. In such cases the word evolution is preferred. A common belief of URUAN/EFIK is that the soul of man has an animal as his double. This does not imply support for Darwin Theory. The belief arises from a misconception of occult doctrine which acknowledges the existence of soul and animal soul parts of human principles. Also the belief is a natural consequence of the misunderstood teaching and practice in magic and EKPE bearing on man's ability to change form provided he is a master of the elements and is in rapport with powers correlating with his inner focus. That is why concerning the Ekpe ACCOUNT OF CREATION; Ekpe recognizes the involvement of the realm of pure spirit in the creation process of man. Since Ekpe does not encourage voiced language, reliance is on dance forms, NSIBIDI, colours and sounds for the dissemination of information and training. At the demise of either a hierophant (EYAMBA) or a High Ruler who was a title holder (only title holders were allowed to be Rulers), the final rites are rounded up with a "dance of life or dance of creation". This dance is a mundane show of the activities involving the EYAMBA, NKANDA, and EBONKO sprits in the realm of pure spirits of the three higher planes of consciousness of the cosmos. This dance of life is perhaps better described as a demonstration of the cooperation that exists between these pure spirits. NKANDA represents the male principle and EBONKO, the female principle. Creation is effected in EBONKO. Following the death of an EYAMBA or high grade Ruler, someone has to step into the position vacated. In practice there is never a vacancy. It is the EYAMBA or Ruler-designate that oversees the prosecution of the funeral rites. At that level, Ekpe demands continuity. Symbolically, it is taken that there is a vacancy and it is mandatory for a new hierophant (Chief Priest) or Ruler to be born.

The symbolism involves dummied beautifully-adorned 'damsels' (male) from the EBONKO stable dressed in white skirts and sleeveless blouse over which may be laid designed beaded necklaces and symbolic beaded vest. The arms and legs are dressed with or without beaded amulets. Each 'damsel' holding with both hands a short locally made drum (womb) with the open end facing her, starts a rolling dance involving her body and hands, the legs moving right foot first in a rather slow movement as if she has all the time in the world for it. As she dances, the face of the drum is directed at a male partner (fiery spirit) in an inviting manner signifying she is ready to create, or is in heat. Similarly dressed dummied male bearing a peacock-like tail and holding a bow and arrow responds with a similar dance form but aims his arrow (fiery spirit) at the face of the drum (womb). Both are dummied because they are spirit and do not speak the language of men. The arrow is never released. It is a sort of mating dance that some birds involve themselves in during season. The arrow signifies the creative fiery spirit of NKANDA whilst that of EBONKO is the drum (womb). The dance team usually involves three arrow bearers and four drum bearers. The EYOMBA spirit intervenes later to impart spirituality to the new born enabling him to become aware. EYAMBA the man is the one who directs the training of neophytes and supervises their growth along the path of adept. At the mundane level the dance maybe likened to the movement of human male spermatozoa and the female counterpart, the ovum, towards fusion. A spermatozoon bears a tail but the ovum does not. It is perhaps relevant in this context, to briefly consider the Indian philosophical concept of creation. The first Root-Race is the first man on earth. These were the progenies of the "Celestial men" or the "Lunar PITRIS or Ancestors" of which there are seven classes or hierarchies. These are made up of some who agreed to create and others that refused. Those that created gave form to man, but, the solar Devas or Pitris were responsible for imparting intelligence and consciousness to man. The Lunar Pitris created the physical man and solar PITRIS fashioning the inner man, but spirituality is imparted by other intelligence. Similarity with the Ekpe account should be noted.

VI UF? K NKANDA - NKANDA HOUSE: is the residence of all that has to do with death. It is also involved in birth. As part of the funeral obsequies of an OBONG Ekpe, a display of the House of adepts may be arranged in his honour. Rather than being involved in an elaborate and expensive display, the deceased family may request the ruling fraternity to organize a frugal display which will have to run for four days or longer depending on their ability to bear the attendant expenses. An empty room is set aside for this purpose. The artifacts consist of a bird symbolizing a spirited dove which from time to time let loose the divine creative spirits of God, symbolized by strips of white cloth, to pregnant matter and cause it to differentiate into a multitude of lives. This paraphernalia is also replicated in the house or Afe where the funeral as also the coronation of the Nsomm of URUAN takes place. The descent is signaled each time by the sound of the bell which remains silent until the moment of release of the creative fire or expressions of the cosmic Christ. The differentiated lives below correspond when alive. Where the compartments are twelve in number, the focus is the Zodiac with the signs and symbols in place. The signs and symbols of Zodiac relating to the birth and death of the adept may be highlighted. Should OKPO Ekpe, model of a deceased Adept ritually dressed for burial replace the circle; the focus is the power of resurrection. A suitable restricting entry test is set and on scaling it, an oath of secrecy is administered. When all is set, libation is offered and the trumpet sounds signaling the commencement. The inverse ritual takes place at the end of the exhibition.

THE EFAMBA – EKPE SIGNIFICANT DISPLAY

EFAMBA is an Ekpe display of manifested cosmos staged in a confined space. It employs artifacts and symbolism such that as much as possible of whatever existed is given recognition and a place. The aim is to present a near life situation as could possibly be managed and to plant the usual obstacles to spiritual growth of man perchance he realizes the need to enquire and not go through life as if he were blind, deaf and mute. The setting of the display is an artificial tropical mystery forest carefully crafted by adepts and initiates. It is a painstaking assignment. The crafted forest houses elements, minerals, plants animals, human and spirits of all types, and the ten divinities of our earth's planetary system known in EKPE as EYAMBA, NKANDA, EBONKO, OKPOHO, OKU AKAMA, MB? K? , NYAMKPE, MBAKARA, MB? K? MB? K? /IBOKU and MKPE, amongst other conceived creations of God in their representative capacities. Employing symbolism, these creations are discretely positioned at secret locations and carefully camouflaged within the forest. MB? K? , the jewel in the forest, is hidden deep and jealously guarded by a giant python expertly crafted or NDEM as some would wish to call it. A secret bird, USARI (crow) perched on a tall tree provides additional security against intruders to the prohibited zone. The USARI serves as an early warning system. Any one in possession of the MB? K? has direct access to the divinities and God, and could create his heart's desires. This may be the reason why the urge to possess MB? K? , is inherent in man. The journey to possess the MB? K? is dangerous and tortuous. Both the living and the dead are represented in the forest, so also are spirits and powers of every description whose main tasks, depending on their characters, are to either obstruct or assist the hunt for the jewel. The quantum of work to be done, the degree of alertness in demand together with the sacrifice to be made, make it mandatory to seek the assistance of one who knows the way thoroughly. For the hunt to be successful, the spiritual powers of darkness known in Ekpe as EKPO NKANDA will first have to be firmly attended to as the hunt progresses. Challenges come up almost at every turn, and greater challenges emerge as the hunt comes close to target. The hunt must be repeated until the man is able to hunt on his own and register success. This implies "reincarnation". It is only then that the full value of success is earned. A fleeting visit is unlikely to lead to success. The import is that several Incarnations/Transformations through genuine repentance are necessary if Christ is to be adequately formed in man (Cf. Ekarika J.P. 32). There is this EKPE mythology which credits MBANG as the first human being to have the knowledge of MB? K? , who because of love of her husband, NKUK AFUTA, refused to reveal the secret to her brother MUTAKA who accosted her on her way from the mystery forest of 'IKOT EKPE' as it is known. NKUK AFUTA thought it wise to involve the elders of the race EYO EMA, ESIEN EKPE, MBANG and MUTAKA who make up the four seated at the podium behind the veil to watch and judge the hunt. Since principles form the bed rock of in Ekpe, it does not disturb much if in exoteric (open) displays MUTAKA takes the place of MBANG. Displaying the foursome behind the veil in the EFAMBA is an indication that they are used in allegory to represent principles whose names are much revered or unknown. Most probably they represent the 'Sacred Four,' the second logos otherwise known as Terraktis of Pythagoras. The mystery forest may be taken to represent the world with all the influences, some positive others negatives; some good, others bad. Bad in the sense that they work against man realizing his full endowment and also because they obstruct the soul from gaining release from the confinement of the flesh. Ekpe teachers that assistance of Elders of the Race, those who are spiritually enlightened, is absolutely necessary if any meaningful progress is to be made. While possession of the MB? K? is essential, it is necessary to understand the language of communication with the divinities and God. From the lessons of EFAMBA, success will hardly come but not impossible at the end of the first tour. Several re-births/repetitions and practices are necessary. The human body does represent the mystery forests in which much of value is hidden. The divinities have latent correspondences in man/ woman which Ekpe initiations are meant to activate.

IK? T EKPE – EKPE SIGNIFICANT FOREST ABODE

The literary meaning of IKOT Ekpe is Ekpe forest or bush, but in reality it is the world of action and reaction, of joy and pain, of mountains and valleys, of war and peace, of night and day amongst others, through which pilgrim man must make on his way to beatitude and honour both in this life and the life to come. Some refer to it as a mystery school where the lessons of life are learnt. IKOT EKPE is a grand EFAMBA organized in a natural setting and free from the confinement suffered by EFAMBA. Also, as much as possible, living things are used instead of artifacts and more secret lessons taught. Here the thrust is different. It has to do with how it was at the beginning. Arising from the much larger space in use is the real danger of one losing his way and being harmed by EKPO NKANDA and evil powers. For this reason, it is advisable to secure the services of a respected able guide who should be an initiate. Only initiates may attempt to pass through IK? T Ekpe and EFAMBA. There are usually several obstacles on the way, which have to be overcome.

Man in his wisdom and desire to be like God felt that ingredients and secrets of creation are buried under a stone (ITIAT EKPE) in the deep of the forest, the world of ideas and creation. She is invested in a search for the origin of life and God. After many tedious and dangerous challenges, he came across a stone which looked every inch respectable and relevant. His desire was further inflamed as he settled to dig out the stone. As he toiled at the work on hand he looked around to make sure no one was watching. He was determined to share the secret with no one. At the end of the digging he struggled to roll off the stone only to discover that what is under the stone is no different from what had been with him from the out-set, nothing other than manifestations of the uncreated God. A popular saying in Ekpe is: 'ESIO EKPE KE ITIAT', meaning EKPE is born from a rock. This is perhaps the strongest indication that Ekpe may be linked to Mithraism. Mithras was believed to have been born from a rock. In fact, it is this interpretation that makes the whole import and system of Ekpe suspect and regarded as eminently heathen, pagan and perhaps diabolical, but it needn't be so as we have seen.

ITIAT - EKPE STONE: EKPE SIGNIFICANT INDWELLING

ITIAT EKPE and Ekpe are inseparable. It is the store house of Ekpe and its secret abode. Without it Ekpe is barren and sedentary. Ekpe which is barren is unable to reproduce itself. Consequently, a community is unable to share its teachings with another community; neither could initiation of individuals, be successfully performed. To being a community to knowledge of Ekpe wisdom the divinities have to be evoked from the ITIAT Ekpe of the giver to that of the receiver, using the MBOKO vehicle without loss of potency either way. It is the responsibility of the giver in consultation with the guardians at the inner realm to obtain the relevant specifications, and locate, move and plant the ITIAT EKPE within the environs of the EFE of the receiver. The exercises call for substantial investment in time, finance and manpower which is distant past invariably often resulted in loss of life. It was designed that way to discourage frivolous request, adventure and the cheapening of Ekpe. In the sight of the untutored, ITIAT EKPE is a weather beaten oval shaped naturally occurring igneous rock, the source of which is a well-guarded secret. Sacrifice, UWA is offered to Ekpe after the planting procedures have been completed and thereafter, as and when necessary. Howbeit, the mandatory UWA of expiation for sins of the community is performed once a year under the supervision or delegated authority of the EYAMBA. In ancient times, it involved the slaughtering of a Zodiac relevant bovine animal. eg. bull, on the ITIAT EKPE over which blood was allowed to flow Current practice encourages the use of goat. This generous outpouring of fresh blood on the ITIAT is symbolism for the cleansing process offered by renunciation. The exercise performed at the end of each year places the community on a redeemed path towards Christhood. Sin must be given up for God's spiritual endowment to blossom. Thus it is written that the soul of man must place himself upon the rocks of Christ willingly ere the rock descends upon him and grind him to powder (Regardie Israel, 225). Sacrificing to Ekpe begins with symbolic return of the spirits, some good some bad that had taken residence within the EFE during the period in review, including the thought forms of all those who had been to the EFE, to the ITIAT for rejuvenation. At the end of the sacrifice, Ekpe divinities are evoked from the ITIAT to the EFE in full glory and without loss of potency. These transfers are accomplished either by individual calls or composite call using the MB? K? . The man wears a knitted black and white check skull cap adorned with red floss, the symbolism for blood and service. He is obliged to shed his blood from the head down if the sins are to be off. The black and white check part of the OKPOMKPOM confirms his bondage to the world of duality – of good and evil. The red that entwines the black and white check shows that his release and that of the community are obtained through service and sacrifice. The yellow tailing of the OKPOMKPOM signifies endowment (spiritual gifts of God) revealed only though renunciation, service/sacrifice. The man has to give up undeserving pursuits to gain what is spiritually rewarding. Ordinarily, yellow colour indicates the beginning of evolutionary journey known in Ekpe as MKPE but the difficulty the ancients had in maintaining white made them at times to employ yellow in place of white when the focus is OKPOHO, the seat of spirit principle.

IDEM IKW? :EK? ? ? KEMBA – EKPE SIGNIFICANT MASQUERADE

To fully understand the role of IDEM IKWO in Ekpe, it may be useful to reproduce with the well-known legend from the British Museum Brochure on the Egyptian Book of the Dead as recorded by Israel Regardie. Isis [EBONKO] was, besides all things, the highest type of faithful and loving wife and mother. It was in this capacity that the Egyptians honoured and worshipped her most. According to the now familiar legend, Osiris [MBOKO] her husband was slain through the cunning of his brother Typhon or Set [emblematic of the destructive aspects of Nature, e.g. Satan, EKPO NKANDA] and his body thrust into a box which, after being thrown into the Nile, was carried out to sea. After a long wearisome search [by messengers of EBONKO – IDEM IKW?] Isis found it, and set it as she thought in a safe place [the central column within Ekpe House] where it was found however by Typhon [Satan, EKPO NKANDA] who maliciously cut the corpse into a number of pieces. The incidents of her search for the mutilated body, and of the conception and birth of the child Horus [OKU AKAMA] powerfully impressed the imaginations of the Egyptians. Particularly so, when the legend narrates her seeking the help from Thoth [NKANDA] the God of Wisdom and Magic, and he by consummate skill in Theurgic Arts was able to tell her of the process and words of power which temporarily restored Osiris [MBOKO] to life, and enabled him begat her god-child Horus [OKU AKAMA].

The arcane wisdom passed on to Isis (EBONKO) by Thoth (NKANDA) is the L.V.X. sign. It is the sign employed by IDEM IKWO when he meets an Ekpe initiate so that what befell Osiris (MB? K?) remains ever-green in the memory of initiates and reassures them that resurrection power is real. The IDEM looks the initiate straight, eye ball to eye ball, to make sure the fellow is an initiate. He then throws the right foot behind and resting it while the weight is borne by the slightly bent left leg and the staff on the right hand held close to its head. He brings the fresh leaves (purifying spirit) on his left hand stretched to the left (L-sign) to slowly and gently sweep the left hand stretched to the shoulder to the foot and to the left of the foot. This procedure is repeated on the initiate's right column. The ritual continues with IDEM IKWO facing the initiate frontally and quickly raising the leaves up towards the temple of the initiate (V-sign) and bringing it down quickly. As both face one another and with elbows bent so that the palms are towards the owner's chest, the shoulders and hands are suddenly raised (X-sign) and lowered, signifying that Osiris (MB? K?) has risen from death. IDEM IKW? are emissaries of EBONKO. The key to the L.V.X. in Ekpe, the L.V.X. ritual is a way to activate the latent powers of the active, passive and neutral columns of man. An initiate blessed with the spirit of discernment may experience the flow of electrons out of the -ve hand to the +ve hand, and indication that the powers have been activated. Ekpe grades above NYAMKPE hardly involve themselves in this ritual.

Many now interpret the letters, L.V.X. to mean 'Light of the Cross'. They came to that conclusion because the letters I N R I were initially found on the crucifix, and L.V.X. means light in Latin. Considering that Ekpe Cult probably came to be active during the period of Egyptian and Mithraic Mystery Religions, the origin of L.V.X. sign could not have had its origin at Golgotha. Going backwards in time, it is found that the initials of the names Isis, Apophis, and Osiris represent IAO, the supreme God of the Gnostics, a cult group of pre-Christian centuries. Since the sun is the giver of life and light, IAO was taken to represent light as the redeemer. The letters L.V.X. are portions of one type or another of the Cross.

L.V.X.- EKPE SIGNIFICANT SIGN CODE

The L sign means: The sign of the Mourning of Isis. It expresses the sorrow of Isis (EBONKO) on learning that Osiris (MB? K?) had been slain by Typhon (EKPO NKANDA). The V sign is: the sign of Apophis and Typhon (EKPO NKANDA). Typhon murdered and mutilated Osiris, and this prompted Isis (EBONKO) to search over creation for him. It is: The sign of Osiris slain. The X sign is: the sign of Osiris risen'. These signs are evocative gestures which have similar effect and purpose as the Third Degree Masonic drama of the slaying and raising of the Master, Hiram Abiff; and the Catholic Mass bearing on the Life, Crucifixion, and Resurrection in Glory and the Ascension into heaven of Jesus the Christ. Hiran Abiff is probably the same person or principle known to Christians as Huran-abi, and EBRAMBI in EKPE. The claim that IDEM IKW? , a lowly placed EKPE which many fraternities outside Efik land do not recognize as Ekpe, is the visible sign of Ekpe cult in NDEM world is questionable. If by this is meant that Ekpe in NDEM kingdom is clothed in the paraphernalia of IDEM IKW? , the concept is faulted by the fact that Ekpe forms resemble nothing in creation. They are all teaching aids. In any case, if the Prophet's claim that occasionally on the invitation of God of the Earth the hierarchies of the four elemental kingdoms of fire, air, water and earth move from the four quadrants of the earth to meet in conclave is anything to go by, attendance at such an elevated conclave would require the initiate to arrange for the quickening of the physical elements through the auspices of the hierarchies and the Holy Spirit, to bring himself and the form into rapport with the conclave environment. Such an elevation is certainly beyond the capability of an ordinary initiate, and it is unlikely that even an Adept worth his salt will allow himself to be adorned as an IDEM IKW? . Also IDEM IKW? being of too low a status precludes it from appearing when a conclave holds within one elemental kingdom, an activity that is not strange to Ekpe. Even at the mundane level, IDEM IKW? may not present himself when the fraternity meets in conclave. IDEM IKWO is a lowly placed EKPE that has lost almost all its spirituality and has become earth bound. That is why later URUAN hierarchies transmute it into EK? ? ? KEMBA to rank it midway between Ekpe and EKPO NY? H? . Aside of the inner man being confined within the mesh body covering; the conical helmet, the antenna that should bring him into conscious rapport with God had become atrophied leaving only the roots. The situation is further compounded because he had lost the status that allowed him to wear a fixed hat meant to indicate closeness to God but had instead acquired a winged hat which calls for greater effort to be invested to facilitate acquisition of power from God. This further confirms the low status of the IDEM. This Ekpe form is usually girdled into colours, yellow and green representing mercury and Mars halves of the Earth period respectively. The other Ekpe forms have single colour girdles as a rule.

THE MB? K? SOUND AND TRUMPETS

The MB? K? vehicle in Ekpe is for all intents and purposes [a trumpet, a wind instrument]. It works like a mouth-piece transmitting the message of the heart for "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaks" (Mtt 12:34). Its child is sound and sound is power in Ekpe. It is common knowledge that the prayer of the righteous has great power in its effects. A righteous man is one with clear conscience and is dedicated to the service of God in a way pleasing to Him. He is therefore able to call and pray to God with success. In addition to using the mouth, God had at the beginning shown to man how to magnify and transmit his heart's desire and his prayers so that the family of God may bear witness a respond. Here sound means the roar of the MB? K? , the sounding of the MB? K? trumpet or sound produced by the MB? K? vehicle. The MB? K? House occupies an important position on the Tree of Life in relation to the other Houses /Globes. It is at the central position, a commanding position. From there activities of other Houses can be regulated or monitored. The MB? K? position is known as the seat of Solomon or the Christ Centre (Helvi Z. S. Helvi: 279). The heart of anything is the life of that thing. From its vantage position, evocative/invocation and banishing commands are directed at other Houses. These will be favourable provided appropriate language and call signals recognizable by the intelligence of divinities residing in the Houses addressed are employed. Each House is under a ruling divinity recognized in some systems as god/Ndem. Successful evocation, invocation and dismissals depend on the application of unadulterated pointed will within the MB? K? House. Such a Will is Christ-centred. It is essential to engage a capable trumpeter, an expert on vehicle, ie. one with pure heart, if he is to communicate successfully. Seekers of the way to the soul freedom know that the pure in heart are the ones who can make conscious contact with God, provided each is able to work with his mind and hand well positioned. According to Bailey, correct timing will enable man to create his various needs including the nourishing of his body with requisite spiritual food (Baillie Alice A; 124). The MB? K? trumpet expresses a portable native drum and a variety of tongues. There is a variety of trumpets in use in URUAN/EFIK. NKANDA has a trumpet that correlates with the elements. Some Ekpe grades have their own trumpets, but the trumpet of the sanctuary is resident in the MB? K? House, the Christ Centre. These trumpets are routinely and methodically lubricated with gin or even water while in use to vary the tone and pitch of the sound and facilitate coding of messages in a discriminating manner. The whole exercise involves working in the mental plane and synchronizing the energies of love, mind, hand and the drum. Love unifies and attracts, but the mind is the main creative power and employer of the energies of the cosmos. Love attracts but the mind not only attracts but repels and coordinates. The hand codifies while the drum magnifies and transmits. It is the mind that creates but love intelligently applied is the mould. It is necessary for the mind to hold a position beyond and detached from the creative process if it is not to be sucked by evil desires into destruction. For good and safe results, the purpose of this exercise must be God. This is where the difference between good and evil lies. Any programme that is not God-centred or purposed is evil. Thus the main functions of the MB? K? trumpet include (i) the alignment of the principles in Man with higher divine spirits and (ii) Participation in God's plan by involving in God's centred creative work.

The exercise of trumpeting involves synchronous sounding of the personality and soul notes of the trumpeter with his mind stilled but properly focused. Should the trumpeter cultivate silence, he may sense an inner response or sound, the fused echoes of notes trumpeted. This resultant echo helps in the development of the sensitivity of the inner ear noticed only in stillness and quiet. When sounded forth with intent thought behind it, it acts a disturber, a loosener of the core matter of the body of thought, of emotion and of the physical body. When sounded with intense spiritual aspiration behind it, it acts as an attractive medium and gathers I particles of pure matter to fill the places of those earlier thrown out (Alice Bailey,140). When compared with the biblical account of the Book of Numbers which states: So short blasts are to be sounded to break camp, but in order to call the community together long blasts are to be sounded" (Num 10:5-7). The MB? K? sound is of very important value and results in the building up of the body for the use of the soul and also serves to indicate to others with similar spiritual interest, that someone or group is available for God's divine work. During the process of raising the Fraternity, each OBONG Ekpe responds as he is called through the auspices of the MB? K? . By this the personality and soul notes of each are gathered and registered ready for release to the divine spirits in the cosmos. To be effective, the trumpeter has to train himself to do at least five things: (i) to communicate with the divinity in the language it understands. (ii) To be receptive to the mind of the divinity being addressed. (iii) To cultivate a right intuitive understanding of communications released by the divinity. (iv) To develop the communications received into suitable forms for use and (v) through sound, vibrations and other relevant equipment, make his thought form and those of others active so that other minds may be reached.

MB? K? SOUND OF POWER AND COMMUNICATION

MB? K? sound is potent when the trumpeter has learnt to subordinate the lesser sounds. For efficacy, the sound should be sparingly used and investment in noise, a common feature of the temple, withdrawn. An initiate on his part must learn to be frugal with his hands, cultivate silence, spend less time on spiritually unrewarding pastimes and also cultivate a life of purity. Failure to adequately address oneself on these matters invariably results in him encountering untold difficulties that may subsequently lead to his untimely demise. These conditionalities and the cost of failure have caused many to shun the position. A wrong language from the MB? K? may (i) Cause the chosen divinity to be out of step with what was intended. (ii) Bring no response because the language is unrecognizable by the divinities and (iii) generate unexpected response from an undesired divinity. Love in the heart of the trumpeter guarantees good results. Usually two trumpets are in use viz. the MB? K? vehicle and pure, clear well-purposed and directed thought and aspiration. These are used for long and short blasts but the pitch could be altered to some degree. The quality of thought of the trumpeter cannot be guaranteed. Consequently, favourable result from trumpeting cannot always be guaranteed. But in the context of sound produced by the MB? K? trumpet a deep or heavy sharp and abrupt "WOOB" sound is a call for order. It means 'be attentive, expectant and be alert." It is an alarm. Then a second "WOOB" is a confirmation of the first. A third "WOOB" of similar constitution means 'move out quickly but expect further instructions'. When this is followed by a flowing "WOOING" sound, initiates are invited to assemble, and non-initiates are warned to keep off. Subsequent instructions may take the form of either mediantly pitched sharp and abrupt or flowing sounds depending on the nature of tasks or actions to be undertaken. There was a time when the use of musical instruments except the pipe organ during church worship was not allowed. But time has changed to the extent that local drums –TOMTOM are now used extensively. Objection to MB? K? arises from the fact that not many know it to be a local trumpeter. Also the sound is frightening especially as the initiates have the habit of bringing it on at a god-forsaken hour of the night to cause maximum disturbance and fear. The MB? K? trumpet has to be redesigned to raise the pitch of the sound. It is a thought magnifier with effects similar to that of group prayer and what is popularly referred to as "chain prayer" particularly when the people are of one mind. These are techniques for the powering of prayer and sustaining its momentum.

EKPE AS A MARK OF UNITY OF LIFE

Ekpe believes in the unity of life. Ekpe also conceives the intense experience of the mysterious, something which for want of words may be called the substance that links all lives together. The word substance implies some degree of condensation, materiality and to some extent tangibility. This mysterious substance is really not substance at all ie. material being. It is certainly not what we know as substance on this side of our existence. With this mysterious substance other lives may be contacted. It is a mesh covering of all lives. The Esik mesh of some of the Ekpe forms and masquerades is a good example of what the mysterious substance is like. As the Esik covers the man and every movement of man activates the Esik, so also it is with this mysterious substance that surrounds every life linking them one with the other except that on the latter, integrated electronic circuit chip like units are installed at the nodal points to produce a super communication highway. This facilitates discrimination. Experience over the ages has shown that matter, intelligence, consciousness and spirit respond to vibrations. Adopting a deliberate policy of discrimination, these lives could be put into communication with man. Thought causes vibrations and the power behind thought depends to a large extent on the quality of love within the heart and the mind stuff of the man. In the case of MB? K? and provided the mind is firmly focused on the work at hand, the trumpet amplifies a thousand-fold the thought of the trumpeter or communicator as he may be called, so that lives in distant cosmos may be touched through the agitation of the mysterious mesh. It is matter of causing the strands of the mysterious substance to vibrate in a controlled manner and in response to a coded language recognized by the divinities. Over the ages nations had fashioned out their own peculiar way of contacting these divinities that some elect to worship. The origin of these ways is undoubtedly God himself through the inspired revelations to those he had chosen and prepared for the purpose. Every group of people has for long chosen their way to God who is not parochial. But in the context of Ekpe it seems God went further to teach and he did so by addressing all peoples throughout the world. The instructions on the use of the trumpet handed over to Moses were perceived by initiates who acted upon them howbeit in a different way but satisfying the directives given to Moses and the Israelites (Num 10:5-7). The practice is handed down from generation to generation. In Israel it is the Kabala but Among URUAN/EFIK it is Ekpe. The difference is that in Israel it is recorded but in URUAN/EFIK it is located in the heads and hearts of men most of who have passed on. The result is that those now in charge of Ekpe temples see dimly hence the temple teachings are no longer worth the candle. Modern man hardly has the time, discipline, patience, and devotion, clarity of mind and purity of purpose that success demands. Our ancestors saw the need to pay the price of success up-front by studying and observing gifted trumpeters sound the MB? K? trumpet. Though the MB? K? vehicle is known, the art of trumpeting is not that simple and involves some risk. Most of those who have taken over the job of trumpeting are known to have had it rough in life. They invariably die as paupers. Inexperience does create problems some of which may be difficult to contain. Also since tone is known to build forms in the physical world, tone can also destroy. This power could be employed for good or bad depending on the competence and disposition of the trumpeter. The destruction of the walls of Jericho by the Israelite army under Joshua, son of Nun, is an example of what is possible. To avoid unwanted results, care was taken by the ancients in choosing the trumpeter and his aides. Despite the seriousness of God's instructions which earned an implied warning against abuse, man proceeded to abuse the equipment with corrupt intentions and as a result pay the price for disobedience.

THE RAISING OF EKPE CONFRATERNITY

After the pouring of libation, the process of bringing the assembly into session begins. Applying the CUPTA VIDYA cosmogony the trumpet sounds the first time the EYAMBA calls the divinity on the south by name. At the second of the trumpet, the EYAMBA calls the divinity on the East name. Finally, there is a third sounding of the trumpet, then the EYAMBA responds as the representative of God. Raising of the lodge is preceded by the charging of the environment with songs and drumming. The singing and drumming are interrupted intermittently as the trumpet calls the divinities and receives the responds of the MBONG EKPE (Adepts) representing them. The raising of the fraternity follows an established order identifiable by singing and drumming, and the related trumpeting of the MBOKO vehicle. After the fraternity had been fully raised, a divinity may be encouraged to become active, often within some initiates and EKPE's representatives form (masquerade). This is the invocative activity that enables those visited to perform beyond their natural capabilities, including going through concrete walls and moving in and out of a large naturally occurring body of water without being wet. An initiate may take a form of his choice. This is perhaps why Efik military commanders were expected to be EKPE ADEPTS, and Mithraism was popular amongst the military of the Roman Empire up to the third century A.D.

EKPE MUSIC- THE ESOTERIC RHYTHM AND GRACE

Music is a very useful esoteric tool. Rhythm and grace are characteristics of nature. EKPE is one of the beneficiaries of these treasures that are brought into activity as sound, music, song and dance. Tone is the originator of colour so that when a certain note is struck, a corresponding colour appears. Each Ekpe House has its own music, song, dance, form, tone, and, consequently, colour. These colours are employed on designated spots of the body that are aligned with corresponding divinities. At the same time the songs and music create tones which in turn create colours that are beneficial to the psyche of the initiate. The main musical instruments presently in use in EKPE on the terrestrial region of life are a family of tom-tome, a local percussion instrument called NSAK (rattle), and the single metal gong, (NOT TWIN). These instruments are commonly readily available. Music employed by the fraternity is overburdened by heavy sounds of a variety of tom-toms. It is not balanced. This considerably reduces the efficacy of the music and may be responsible for the delay and often inappropriate responses of the divinities and the initiates themselves. It takes a good part of a day for the temple to be adequately raised. The quality of music available in Ekpe temple falls short of what is evident in most other esoteric temples. In ancient Egypt, before Islam took root, the secret music of the temple utilized strings, percussion and wind instruments in their variety to create effects for raising consciousness and managing nervous disorders. King Saul who had a nervous disorder was comforted each time David was at his harp. Ancient Egyptians were great musicians and they are known to have used a great variety of instruments. Considering their excellence in other areas of endeavour, it will be surprising if they were not familiar with music therapy applicable to a variety of disorders. Modern men have made a profession of Music Therapy. Ekpe as part of arcane wisdom is closely related to the wisdom teachings and activities of ancient Egypt and Israel. It is not surprising that music is one of the areas of interest to Ekpe particularly as much of the fruits of invocation and evocation depend on it. In Israel and Egypt, instrumental music involving harps, drums, flutes and lyres were used as invocative aids during religious dancing to the extent that on an occasion even King Saul was personally involved in ecstatic dancing and shouting. On another occasion, King David stripped to the waist, unashamedly danced and jumped in public in a sacred dance to honour the Lord, an exercise which some modern Christian zealots will term satanic. Music and dancing have been with man for a long time and both have been used in the temple to advance awareness. They were both taken seriously in the. The situation of Ekpe Temple in Efik land is now different. The temple has become a place of enjoyment and no longer meant for the worship of God.

EKPE DANCES AND CULT DISPLAYS

In Ekpe, dance is a serious affair. The dance forms relate to the dances and characteristics of divinities. They are the unvoiced language or coded communication which the divinity recognizes and understands. Dance is a medium of communication between man and man, man and the divinities and vice versa. To be meaningful those involved should speak the same language especially as each Ekpe House or Globe has its music and dance forms. These dances may be categorized, but three groups will now be exemplified; (a, Hunting Dance: this kind of dance step re-enact the experiences of a hunter in the forest in search of game. It may more appropriately be display by two initiates one acting the part of a hunter and the other a game, a sort of pantomime devoid of jesting. It is a dance drama in which great effort is made by the initiates to present a near-natural situation as possible. At times an initiate goes solo playing the part of hunter and animal. The dance embodies the hunters patience; alertness; fleeting feet; the electrifying presence of a game; the pincer-like movement in the search of a vantage is too dangerous once he realizes that the game is not worth his effort; he continue to lay in wait; the resumption of the hunt; the discovery of a suitable game well positioned for him to strike; the instinctive reaction of the game (symbolically); the attendant silence; the cautious manner in which the fallen game is approached with the gun reloaded and on the ready; the game is certified dead; the joy that attends it; the movement back to the village and the joyous reception that follows. The dance tells the story of a man going through the forest that is, this world, to kill the animal in him. It is usually staged as part of NYAMKPE display.

EKPE CONTINUITY WITH ANCIENT POWERS MANDATORY REGULATIONS FOR THE WAY FORWARD

Having explored the teachings and how Ekpe URUAN/EFIK was organized by reflecting on some of the discomforting practices of the past which were brought in by some of the overzealous and materialistic sons, we should now search for a new order in the scheme of things and it should be obvious which to us what should suggest the new way forward to serve out the way the institution should now follow in order to lay a good foundation to ensure a sustainable future defined by a compromise between what was good in Ekpe in the past and what modern teachings can be borrowed from the religious ideals that can fit into Ekpe. God has always revealed the secrets of life as he thought necessary to those who are worthy and since there is continuity in revelation, he will always make manifest what he intends for his people in the future. He has proved to us that not every species of his creation needs to avail of volumes of written literature or going through ascetic programmes and discipline of spiritual upliftment before attaining the status of the educated and cultured nations, but that notwithstanding the so-called uneducated can also proceed on the normal march of events provided they play their roles in life honestly, intelligently and with integrity and honour. Our Ekpe initiations must therefore now take place with full awakening and consciousness as it was with Christ at the Jordan. We have observed that in Ekpe there seems to be the marrying of aspects of the old teachings with the new that Jesus taught and lived viz. In Christ it is through the spirit of well-purposed and constant prayer in season and out of season, in Ekpe also it has always been by regular trumpeting of the MB? K? vehicle. During the Lord's ministry on earth, he often paid homage to the portals of the synagogues as he always did even when he once visited his people of Nazareth and read the Scriptures to them. Similarly, in Ekpe, there is the procedure of initiations and programmed experience of "spiritually arranged visits" to the portals of the EFE Ekpe typifying the sequential stations of truth. God has never been unknown to URUAN/EFIK, he has always been acknowledged as the Creator of all thing: ? b? Eny? ye Is? , Even Alexander Gammier had remarked that "the people of Calabar ditto URUAN acknowledged a Creator and a Supreme Governor of all things" (Gammier Alexander, 37). King Eyo II Honesty had made similar remark when he declared to Rev. Hope Masterson: "every man knows that God lives and that He made all things" (C. Noah Monday E. 40).

While it may be difficult for some in URUAN/EFIK to worship in abstract terms with recourse to some representative forms, the spiritually enlightened, like the initiates of Ekpe have always been able to worship without having to perceive the Transcendent. The reason is not far to seek since the spirit is very much part and parcel of Ekpe teachings. The idea had existed long before humanity learn of the Holy Spirit through the Scriptures, even the Ancient Egyptians and Babylonians including the Greeks and Indians also knew this. For us it is a proof that God also had revealed and accommodated himself to URUAN/EFIK as observed already. There could therefore be any discontinuity in the teachings of the prophets and the manifestation/revelation of God to the nations including Africa, for "we are also his offspring." (Acts 17: 28) Continuity implies succession if conflict is to be limited and consequently has to be eliminated. It could therefore argue to the fact that Mithraic religion spread from Persia to the known world of the Greco-Roman Empire consequently which is akin to it should also correspond effectively to the initiations as manifested in Jesus viz. 1. Jesus receives Baptism and fasted for forty days and forty nights in the desert; neophytes adopt ascetic type of discipline to turn over a new leaf after initiation into Ekpe. 2. Jesus at the transfiguration enters a new Baptism of glorification as it were; the Adept - ? b? Ekpe enters a new initiation ritually by responding to the call of MB? K? . The Crucifixion of Jesus sign allying his 3rd initiation of sacrifice on Calvary; the red colour of Ekpe cloth designates the sacrifice and renunciation on the psyche of the initiate in the dramatic displays that colour and exemplify the integrity of members. 4. Christ had taught about the Baptism fire and water in the Holy Spirit as the Baptism every Christian must be ready to accept as part of carrying his cross as His disciple; these symbols of white and red colouring of certain spots in the body eminently typifies water/fire purification of initiates to the lowest EBONGKO and particularly the highest, which signifies the NKANDA Grade. 5.

Finally the Resurrection of Jesus at Easter as also His Glorious Ascension into Heaven as the culmination of His saving work among men; though this has no equivalent in but humanity is far removed from the dramatic points of life uplifting graces which God in His infinite goodness has always summoned mankind to the things of the Spirit. The idea in all this is that far from the age-old animosity and condemnation of what onlookers perceived as satanic and cultic practices, Ekpe contains aspects which can direct the devout Christian to a better appreciation of the mysteries of life and wellbeing. Certainly all societies cannot rise from the platform of evil nor possess the inner desire to be in rebellion to God. Every culture or organization operating in secrecy therefore cannot possibly on its own be a pointer to unwholesomeness or wallowing in irregularities and unholy practices. Christ himself had told his disciples:" To you has been given the secret of the kingdom of God, but for those outside everything is in parables" (Mk 4:11) For real, the existence of secret groups is a human problem and mankind is invariably suspicious, it is a complex problem for mankind precisely because of the lack of trust among peoples. God is never known to be in error, hence his teachings and revelations are for continuity to move us to the inspired Religion he has vouchsafed through his Son Jesus. URUAN/EFIK of old must have been led along as it were through these time-tested secret traditions and artifacts as also among his chosen group of people and nations to experience his power and sovereignty over all mankind. God is the originator of every lasting culture. Forms, signs, symbols drama, dance etc. are the teaching aids available to man and these can be a veritable way to God as through prayer, drumming, hymns and canticles. The experience down the centuries has shown that God sponsored the religion of the Israelites of old invariably to incorporate within this veiled religion and practice a reference to the intrinsic teachings of the succeeding religion revealed in Christ but now to all nations and to the ends of the earth.

Up to the first quarter of the 19th century, EKPE initiations were reserved for nobility simply because knowledge that was not commonly available was imparted in the temples away from common view. And knowledge, as they say, is power. With it much was accomplished, including keeping the masses on tow. In time, the initiates began to enjoy the spoils of power and this in turn les to blatant abuses against society, particularly women and salves. As time moved on, selfish interest took a better part of the initiates and brought them to agree on symbolic initiation of slaves, non-indigenes and some women who were members of the blue-blooded class. The nobility having engaged much of their time on feasting, winning and dancing, particularly after materially-rewarding mercantile links were established with England, soon found that male slaves were increasingly being harassed while trading for their masters. Also, there arose the need to motivate an industrious and trusted slave who through hard work had become a pillar of the family within which he was serving. Having rewarded them with the marriage of blue-blooded daughters of the family, room had to be made for them and their male descendants to be free in all respect, including right to initiation. A new policy was designed for that purpose and it states: Irrespective of the social status of the husband, a blue-blooded woman cannot give birth to a slave.

Under the weight of ignorance much of the masses remained docile. Throwing its divine teachings and tenets to the wind, the initiates continued the practice of using their positions to debase the less privileged in society. Such inhumanities saw the birth of a whirlwind that brought no good, and soon, an avalanche put into motion currents of decadence that swallowed up the spirituality of the fraternity. One by one the real adepts were called up to higher octaves of existence and those who were left, on discovering they were deprived of the divine spirit, admitted sorcerers, black magicians and others of their yoke into the fraternity. These upstart powers helped in boosting the image of the fraternity amongst the ignorant and gave the initiates a false sense of power, while the Houses soon became acknowledged Houses of horror. In time, the purveyors of these powers took control of the fraternity and the purity that is EKPE was no more.

These upstart powers helped in boosting the image of the fraternity amongst the ignorant and gave the initiates a false sense of power, while the Houses soon became acknowledged Houses of horror. In time, the purveyors of these powers took control of the fraternity and the purity that is EKPE was no more.

The abuse of EKPE power together with excesses highlighted above under the heading “Law and Politics” caused the loss of the intrinsic value of EKPE and encouraged the growth of alternative value, the conversion of EKPE into a commercial enterprise. It was no longer necessary for a candidate to subscribe to acceptable moral values. All that was necessary was ability to pay what was demanded by both the candidate's sponsor and the fraternity. The procedure did put severe strain on the purse of candidates who had to pay a not previously disclosed amount up front to every initiate of the temple into which admission was sought. The total number of initiates was never disclosed before handed to the candidate. If it happened that the money made available to the sponsor was inadequate to cover the fee fixed as the entitlement of each initiate on the roll on the day appointed to consider the eligibility of the candidate, the examination was brought to an abrupt end and the candidate was deemed to have lost all that had been paid out. He was entitled other attempts if he so desired. Despite the high-handedness, the prestige that attended initiation and the business gains accruing, guaranteed a continuous flow of candidates and caused a ban to be placed on initiation outside the Efik metropolis where the ETUBOMS, the Heads of Efik Royal families, have their official residences. Even then, it was mandatory for initiation to take place before a minimum of two MBONG EKPE (full adepts) of the relevant temple. Non-compliance was treason and the penalty was death.

For some time, nobility was able to reserve the adept position for themselves. The blue-blooded families who had managed, often through intrigue and trickery, to conquer one or more such positions guarded them tenaciously least they slipped into the custody of expecting and willing hands of another family. A Royal House that has no access to an OBONG EKPE position is not entitled to the Paramount Ruler's seat, for example, that of the OBONG of Calabar. The practice allows a family to hang on to the position for eternity, unless it slips off through carelessness. For this reason, the demise of an OBONG EKPE is a well-guarded secret of the family until a blue-blooded member is available to lay claim to the seat in a prescribed manner before death is announced. The claim is filed before the OBONG EYAMBA or an available most senior OBONG EKPE by EKPE ranking. Candidates for OBONG EKPE status were required to be house-owners and married. They were expected to have recognizable and acceptable sources of livelihood, and not be charlatans. These conditions have to do with the need to maintain the honour and dignity of the fraternity, and as prerequisites for teachings on renunciation. Unfortunately, the demands have long been waived resulting in lapses in moral values of initiates and adepts. Neophytes were expected to have been 'born again'. Their character should be impeccable and they should not be flippant. They were placed under observation for some time and must have an OBONG EKPE as sponsor. Not less than a day was required for the neophyte to finally purge himself of unwanted habits and refrain from sex before presenting himself for initiation. He had to learn to regulate his sex life.

According to Rosicrucian Teachings, initiation offers a more direct route to soul awareness which ordinarily would take a much longer time to acquire. The pilgrimage of the soul through life is embodied in the Caduceus or staff of Mercury (Fig. 7) and indicates the path of initiation open to man since the beginning of the LEMURIAN and Atlasean times of the Earth period. It was only after the three and a half rounds of that period that humanity was introduced to the Four Great Initiations. The black serpent of the Caduceus indicates the winding cyclic path of involution comprising Saturn, Sun and Moon Periods, and Mars half of the Earth Period during which the evolving life built its vehicles. The white serpent represents the path that humanity follow through the Mercury half of the Earth Period and the Jupiter, Venus and Vulcan Periods during which pilgrimage man's consciousness expands into that of omniscient, creative and intelligence.

Ekpe subscribes to the concept of septenary cosmos with the seven planes corresponding to the state of consciousness in man. This is another way of saying that man has to tame the lion in himself. In Ekpe the neophyte is expected to meet the basic moral standards set, be of amiable disposition, be trust-worthy and not flippant. Before he is allowed to present himself at the Portal of Initiation, he should have been 'born again,' that is, given up bad habits and be vouched for. The divinities are expected to play their part during initiation by releasing appropriate energies as the relevant colours and symbols are painted on the spots having correspondence with the divinities. Normally, the raising of consciousness is expected to be actualized as the initiation proceeds from past planetary rounds to future rounds. The secret signs and symbols are painted with appropriate colours (after the order of the Caduceus) on designated spots on the bare-bodied neophyte who, because of obscenity, is allowed to barely cover his nakedness. (See Fig. 10 & 11). While this is being done, singing and drumming relevant to the EKPE grade or House into which the neophyte is being admitted, ring out. The exercise is attended by the seven rounds of group drumming and singing relevant to the grade or House in Staccato. This is indicative of the septenary globe cycles and rounds undertaken by the monad. The ceremony is punctuated from time to time by the MBOKO roar appropriate to the principles and divinities being invoked / evoked. After the initiation, the new initiate is taken on a tour of the relevant EKPE House where the secrets are revealed and teachings imparted on a person basis. The initiate is then considered ready to proceed systematically, but not rushed, up the ladder of initiation. Using this technique ascent is safely made from earth to heaven while the man is still in the flesh. In modern times, the septenary group drumming is reserved for the OKPOHO initiation. Time had become a valuable commodity. OKPOHO is an important station with a host of NSIBIDI and symbolism. It is where the initiate is expected to stand before the Mighty King, OBONG OKPOHO and his Council of Ministers, to be examined on whether he is worthy of the secrets behind the inner veil. The initiate has to prove he is familiar with the tenets and workings of the lower orders. Aside from being knowledgeable in some aspects of NSIBIDI, he should be familiar with some of the fundamental issues. The initiate must, amongst other things, know that, (i) except for music and MBOKO trumpeting, initiation must proceed in silence; (ii) naked fire is prohibited; (iii) gunshot is prohibited except when occasion demands, and (iv) it is beneficial to pretend to be ignorant but alert when visiting another temple. The principle of man for which the keys are located in OKPOHO House is spirit. At OKPOHO the adepts and full initiates examine the desirability or otherwise of proceeding with the initiation to the higher grades of pure spirit. Unless one has someone who knows the way, there is the possibility that the whole exercise may be a nullity. It happens when the correct procedure is not followed and this may be deliberately organized. Each OBONG EKPE (Adept) has a corresponding divinity in the outer realm of existence that he should be in conscious rapport with is he knows his onions. An initiate is encouraged to understand the workings of the House (Globe) into which he is initiated. One may enter a House to which he is not an initiate at the pain of grave bodily harm. In the olden days, the price for such an indiscretion was death inflicted by man. It could also be death caused by improper arousing of a divinity. Whilst conducted tours of an appropriate House were encouraged, one could not exceed his limits. The focus is personalized and the initiate should not exceed his limits. The focus is personalized and the initiate should not advance unless he has matured in the preceding house(s). Each time a temple meets in conclave procedural and NSIBIDI tests are set and the initiates are encouraged to respond in the presence of all. Success leads to fame and respect for the individual and his temple. Failure is a disgrace for all. This may be the reason why some temples outside Efik land invest in unorthodox methods though the use of secret processes to enhance memory, perception and manifestations. These are suspected to be black magic practices that are not encouraged in Ekpe Efik. The organized focus of the Ekpe House or Globe as they called in arcane doctrine is the concept of planetary chain and Rounds, and Globe cycles. According to these teaching, of the seven globes in the earth planetary chain of the Earth Period only our earth is visible and man bearing at this time. Ekpe enables man to visualize and appreciate the principles for which each of the seven globes are the key bearers as if all the globes of the chain were visible. This visualization is an aspect of the re-capitulation exercise which is part of Rosicrucian teaching. Ekpe goes even further to reveal the qualities of incoming human generations. The EKPE House (Globes) taken a forming the earth planetary chain are OKU AKAMA (1) (M) BAKARA (2) MBOKO MBOKO (3) MKPE (4) NYAMKPE (5) MBOKO (6) OKPOHO

EKPE FORMS AND CULT IMAGERIES IN EKPE URUAN/EFIK

Life, according to esoterists, is cyclically organized. When taken at the individual soul or world soul levels. EKPE may be conceived in the cyclic order after the cosmogony concept of the East and West. Applying the Rosicrucian tenets, the positions of the EKPE Houses in the cycle may be taken as the stages of man's development in relation to God. These positions are embodied in the paraphernalia of the individual forms, imagery or masquerade. They also show that the fall of man will in time lead to the rise of man. For example, the inner man is discernible if some of the forms are closely examined particularly amongst the EKPE at the lower positions. The mesh covering of some forms reveals the inner man within the mesh. The (M) BAKARA position indicates the time before separation into sexes, a change or an impending change of status. Its imagery is Hermaphrodite and its mundane form is crocodile or another reptile at home on land and in water. MBAKARA display is rarely staged because it is supposed to signal the death of an important personality. Its appearance is a public announcement of an impending transition, the separation of the soul from the body. In India, the sign called Makara is connected with the birth of the spiritual microcosm, and death or dissolution of the physical universe (its passage into the realm of the spiritual). Its symbol is the crocodile. After the separation, that is during the third or Moon Round of the Earth Period, a naked man MBOKO MBOKO known in the Kabala as Adam (ethereal), appears in the scene. The EKPE form carries a fish trap, ESAK in Efik, an indication that he has to bear his burden. A record says "You will have to work hard and sweat." The treasured companion MKPE (Eve) subsequently took a very low position in relation to God. Her constitution had to be consistent with that of our Earth at the time. She had acquired a full mesh (net) covering over her real form, a coat of flesh as the Bible puts it. Having aged, the status of the soul of the woman improved until the fifth or Jupiter Round is reached when she will take the naked posture again, the body constitution having changed to become less materialistic and physical. This is the NYAMKPE position. In this position she from time to time earns elevation in spirit. By the time MBOKO is reached and that is the sixth or Venus Round, there is no longer any difference between man and woman. All earthly desires are gone. Man and woman become one through life of discipline, sacrifice and purity. This is the Throne of Solomon otherwise known as the Christ centre. It is one of the most guarded secrets of Ekpe lest the knowledge be abused. History also has is that the Throne of Solomon was attended by twelve lions, signifying that death awaits an impostor. At this position he begins to open up to the wonderful possibilities that exist for man. At OKPOHO, the seventh or Vulcan Round, the man becomes a Mighty King, correct and right in his words, actions and thought. He is wise; he is exalted to inherit the earth. He is at a higher rung of the spiritual ladder than its correspondence, OKU AKAMA. He has "transfigured." NKANDA as part of the triune delegation of EYAMBA, NYANDA and EBONKO seated in the Region of the three higher planes of septenary Cosmos, is represented by a bearded old man, wise in every respect, submitting only to the will of God with whom he is in near perfect communication. At the EYAMBA level, man is atonement with God.

"You are gods" is a well-known saying. EBONKO is represented by an old chaperon caring over the weak ones mothered by her. She (EKA EKPE, Mother of EKPE) has lost a measure of spirituality when compared with EYAMBA representing The One, but is still highly spirited and her representative form of its formless status confirms this. The body covering is silky cloth, indicating she is highly ethereal.

Some may hold the view that the EKPE system fits more closely to the Kabalistic concept when EKPE is considered as unity. It is the position of MBOKO (Tiferet) in relation to the other Ekpe Houses or globes described in Western Doctrine that makes the difference. In the case of Kabala, the MBOKO (Tiferet) is shown as having easy direct links with the other Houses or Globes of the system, and in a controlling position. These Globes are houses of differentiated divinities that are not self-existing. The three upper globes are located within the three higher planes of consciousness, revealed and explained normally only to initiates of the higher orders. The lower ones represent the four lower planes – the lowest being our plane or Globe or MKPE House or the visible universe. The Globes or Houses located within the three higher planes of consciousness are in the realm of pure spirit and are known in EKPE as within, the objective universe as the relevant Ekpe forms (masquerades). The symbolisms may be of universal application. The Eastern and Rosicrucian cosmogonies are useful when consideration is evolution. Applying this to Ekpe and employing the relevant EKPE forms, the effects of involution and evolution are identifiable, and the contribution of each Ekpe House or Globe, as it is called in the East, could be recorded.

Applying the Rosicrucian concept of Recapitulation of Round activities, which states that before the activity of any period can start there is a recapitulation of all that have gone through before, it may be concluded that during the Earth Period, OKU AKAMA relate to the first or Saturn Round activities; (M) BAKARA relates to the second or Sun Round activities; MBOKO MBOKO – the third or Moon Round; MKPE – the fourth or Earth Round; NYAMKPE – the fifth or Jupiter Round; Vulcan Round. It should be remembered that the named given to the Rounds have no relationship whatsoever with the physical planets bearing these names. If the writer's experience could be relied upon, the concept of recapitulation of Round experience is valid and operational, but one is unable to attribute the experience to EKPE Initiation. Man in the First Round and First race on our Earth is acknowledged in arcane studies to be spiritual within and ethereal without. He is more or less, like a phantom and not a tangible being. He was non-intelligent, super-spiritual and sexless. The ethereal body was monstrous but compatible with his coarser surroundings. The First Round First Race man is symbolized in Ekpe by OKU AKAMA, the Ekpe form or masquerade well equipped for demolition. Its body covering is cloth of dark bluish hue.

This signifies the ethereal nature of this man's body. The deformed conical head covering is an indication that although the First Race man was highly spiritual during the First Round, he had nevertheless departed from the realm of pure spirit, part of his spiritual constitution having given way to the growth of ethereal body. The degree of deformation or distortion of the head covering is a measure of man's spirituality. The wing or hat as it is commonly called, located at the back of the head, is fixed and bears small mirrors judiciously place to harness the energy of the Central Spiritual sun. It serves as a sort of disc to absorb the supreme solar energy and is a symbol of power. This proves that the divinity back of form is not independent and the man is non-self-existing. It also proves the reality of God. The wing is fixed and non-rotator because the Race is not yet far removed from the energy source. Even though OKU AKAMA is taken to be positioned on the Tree of Life on the column of feminists, he is sexless and without identifiable eyes as we now know them. OKU AKAMA is animalistic in form. The Elephant and her baby represent it. This is aptly demonstrated in its dance form. He is Horus of Egyptian Theosophy.
The Round Two First Race man was still gigantic and ethereal but growing firmer and more condensed in body, more physical and of the Sun Round. He was still less intelligent than spiritual for the mind is less susceptible to change than the physical frame. He may be best described as being of psycho-spiritual mentality with ethero-physical body. The MBAKARA EKPE form (masquerade) fits that description. He is a hermaphrodite and has no visible eye but can perceive. It is the EKPE most associated with the physical element, water and is not too far removed from the form we know. The body dress of reddish is mainly raffia netting with limited covering of cloth of similar hue as skirt. It may bear two short but permanently fixed reddish ABASONKO on the forehead and at times there may be a similar one at the back of the head. The indication here is that the physical body is taking over fast from the ethereal. In short the MBAKARA may be said to have an ethero-physical body. The androgynous status brought him into the realm of psychology and inner characteristics may be described as psycho-spiritual. The Round Three First Race man had acquired a perfectly compacted body and was becoming rather cunning than spiritual. He was three eyed. In Ekpe the one at the back of the head is often indicated by a special ABASONKO known as ESIK (fish trap), flexibly attached. This is considered to be adequate identification. The body is raffia netting with a limited cloth skirt. The ESIK represents a trap for man's burden that will result in the loss of the third eye or spirituality. The Round Three First Race man is aptly presented in Ekpe as MB? K? . Being on the downward arc of the planetary Round he had reached a point where his primeval spirituality was eclipsed by developing mentality. Eastern doctrine states that his gigantic structure decrease and his body improved in texture with him becoming a more rational being during the last of the Third terrestrial cycle.

In the Fourth Planetary Round the First Race man had his intellect through enormous development, and dumbness gave way to the development of human speech which is perfected during this Fourth Round experience on our planet. In the course of time the third eye was gradually petrified and lost because of his inability to properly bear his burden strictly keeping to arcane teachings; it is only from the time of the Atlasean of the Fourth Race of the Fourth Planetary Round that one ought to speak of man even though his physical frame was larger than now. He is represented by MKPE symbolized by a young woman with two eyes, she having lost much of her spirituality signified by the third eyes. Ekpe forms or masquerades may be conceived as arch types or models of men appearing from time to time on our earth. These seven types of men are the extended expressions of the cosmic Christ, the second person of the trinity. From this it may be adduced that the NYAMKPE, MBOKO, and OKPOHO types will be appearing. Man's spirituality will be on the rise on our present earth now that more than half the Races have climbed out of the deep of the Fourth Planetary Round. The characteristics, principles and consciousness represented by the Ekpe House or Globes will become more prominent as the Races transit the relevant EKPE House or Globe. Man's spiritual nature, consciousness and form as seen on our earth will in time approach those embodied within the NYAMKPE House. For the moment the NYAMKPE influence is limited if at all manifesting. Ultimately when monad moves into the NYAMKPE House or Globe, man will ordinarily be able to conquer time and space.

In Ekpe practice, a man who puts on a masquerade of an EKPE House is expected to exhibit the principles and consciousness relevant to the House when called into activity though appropriate drumming, singing, and toning or trumpeting of the MBOKO. This is a process of aligning the higher states of an initiate to the three higher planes in the cosmos. Similarly, a monad transiting a Globe is cultured by that Globe and the journeyed planetary rounds it has been exposed to. In the case of NYAMKPE, the position of ABASANKO, the atrophied conical helmet of salvation, when examined in relation to the vertical gives the degree of spirituality at that time. It serves as an adjustable antenna possessing a vertical is a measure of the spirituality of the IDEM NYAMKPE. When it flops over the face, its consciousness is at the mundane level. He has temporarily lost if not all the spirituality, but has the potential for regaining it. To regain, he has to desire it, work for it and pay the price up-front. The Ekpe (God) responds, the ABASONKO regains its verticality and spirituality. To further strengthen its ability to adjust spiritual focus, bird-type wings studded with mirrors are provided at the back of the head so that they flap, close and open when the IDEM NYAMKPE is in motion. The variable wings function as adjustable solar disc allowing for ease of focusing at the centre of life, the Central spiritual sun that is the centre from where the spirit of God radiates. The wings are additional symbols of spirituality that enables IDEM NYAMKPE to enjoy flights of consciousness from one state to another. In real life situation, a hand at the back of the head is symbolism for power initiation. With all these facilities, the IDEM NYAMKPE is well equipped to operate on almost if not all the seven planes of consciousness, and so understand what life is all about. He represents a man who is enlightened.

At the IDEM IKWO level, the conical helmet is completely atrophied leaving on the roots. His spirituality is much reduced and limited. He is no longer in possession of the 'antenna', but a feather on the forehead is indicative of the possibility of redeemed perception if coveted. Additional feather is proof that the particular IDEM IKWO having had her inner nature cultured by MB? K? , perhaps has transfigured. At the MB? K? stage, the atrophied cone or helmet as it may be called, is shriveled up, dried and hardened. It detaches itself from the head position to become a powerful tool in the hands of an adept whose will to call with love for his mind good desires may be firmly toned or trumpeted and amplified using the MBOKO vehicle. The MB? K? trumpet or vehicle is a powerful communicator with a custom built transmitter and 'amplifier'. It is also a generator of power. The Ekpe (God) responds by bringing the communicator's heart desires into manifestation. The adept's prayer is answered because he has sought well through Christ. He knows the way. Being in contact with his soul, and operating from the plane of soul he is also able to create in love.

Variants of the conical helmet exist at levels below NKANDA and EBONKO. Each House (Globe) has a ruling self-existing divinity or spiritual intermediary or mediator in the service of God, and an appropriate call signal of the MBOKO vehicle. An Adept's initiation has to do with the candidate acknowledging the call each time a signal relevant to the divinity he is representing is released. He is for all intent and purposes being 'married' to the divinity which the candidate represents on our earth. Despite elaborate EKPE initiation rites, a life n consciousness does not now come easily if at all. Experience has shown that it should not be expected unless serious effect is made by the initiate to covet Ekpe, and if time at the temple or during exoteric displays is not wasted on drinking and eating orgies but on learning. With some luck, lift may come to the one who perseveres, but the experience is likely to be left-handed. This is because the focus hand for generations gone sour. The temple had become a place where evil has continuously been perpetuated and ancient powers concentrated. Even now, the existence of purity of thought cannot be vouched for. This is perhaps why some temples outside Efik land recourse to the use of unorthodox methods to obtain elevation, howbeit of the left-handed path. Under normal circumstances, pure divine spirits are unlikely to easily find accommodation in such run down and inferior to the lowest savage. Such spirits are readily available for work on our earth. The close proximity of our respective abodes and planes of perception are in favour of such inter-communication unfortunately, as they are ever ready to interfere with our affairs for weal or woe.

Some initiates, because of orientation and ancestral links, may find it easier than others to experience elevation. In any case, it is doubtful if full recapitulation of experiences envisaged under the Rosicrucian tenets could now be experienced by EKPE initiates in Efik land unless induced. Alice Bailey defines initiation as: “A gradual and realized series of expansion of consciousness, a steadily increasing awareness of divinity and of all its implications”. She refers to it as a living experience, implying that all should endeavour to have that Ekpe experience. However, to gain the experience, she warned that reliance should not be placed on modern esoteric groups. This is because they are not the custodians of the teaching of initiation nor is it their prerogative to prepare man for this enfoldment. In the light of the false claims made by some occult teachers and psychic seers, she recommends the Christ path involving five initiations capable of being administered by pure divine spirit during full waking consciousness as man becomes ready. There is a spate of organizations claiming to be custodians of Truth. While it is true that from time to time teachings on truth are released through some organizations, such releases are time related, well-purposed and well-intentioned. It is not for all time and for everything as are being claimed. The five initiations of Jesus all form part of Ekpe teachings but are not presented as such. Initiation is one of those words Efik Christians would rather not use unless they are as initiates of Ekpe or other secret organizations of the land. The objection stems from the common belief that initiations are attended by rites which the Christian masses associate with black magic. For many, ritual has to do with church and rite with magic. In reality, ritual means a system of rites, and some rites of magic have found respectable accommodation in churches as rituals. These are those who having accepted Christianity are consciously rejecting their own culture. Such people are unlikely to accept or submit to the painting of their bodies and the attendant music and sounds for whatever purpose. These people have rightly dug in and are unlikely to be uprooted from their new beliefs if they have found the Christ. In some customs appropriate write-ups are handed out to the candidate for initiation to recite. But, in EKPE these are replaced with signs and symbols painted on predetermined spots of the body to serve various purposes including being a reminder to the initiate for life. Together the signs and symbols tell stories that would have called for extensive writings. A mature person who has passed through full initiation rites together with teachings of purity, sacrifice and endowment is unlikely to easily forget it. The care and pains invested by the officiant to make sure that all is right is not without risk. He will be expected to pay a substantial fine levied by the adepts were he to falter on the job he freely opted to perform on behalf of the EYAMBA, the traditional initiator.

The many who are in love with EKPE may continue with the initiation procedure even though the initiation performed after the order of Christ is a spiritual affair and takes place during full waking consciousness. If men were Christ-centred, EKPE initiation and the initiation of Jesus should occur at the same time. As it is, there are gaps between them as there are in man's relationship with Christ, especially now that Ekpe practice is, probably, no longer age and time-related. It may be asked, is mandatory to have the body painted with symbols before a lift in consciousness could be experienced? Obviously not! There are many different faiths and paths who being non-subscribers to Ekpe have earned elevation in spirit, and there are also some EKPE initiates who are stingers to awareness. These are adequate proofs. The root of the matter lies in believing and having faith in what one professes, and being able to pay the price up-front for what is required. Having been involved ancestrally and, perhaps personally in EKPE, and the environment had contributed its quota, many may be mentally, psychologically and emotionally committed to the point of loving, believing and having faith in the system or religion they subscribe to. Those who have been privileged to occupy or inherit positions of power within the system hardly find anything wrong with it; whereas those with grouse see nothing good in it. This latter group comprises the ones who quickly embraced the early Christian Church for the much-needed protection against the then prevalent human right abuses. This is, perhaps, the reason why the adepts make poor Christian and are rarely attracted to priesthood. Outwardly, they profess to be Church Christian and may even be occupying positions of honour within the church but hold on to what the forefathers and society had handed down. The reason for this is not far-fetched. They are not yet convinced of the new faith's claim to superior merit over what the ancestors hand bequeathed and, therefore, are in support of the stand of King Eyo II who believed that church Christianity did not bring anything new. A church Christian is he who believes that the path to Christ is through the Christian Church alone. He belongs to the emotional many who approach and benefit through faith. Contrary to church teachings, there are other Christians, although not members of the church, who are also approaching Christ as part of the emotional many through faith. Finally, there are the few who approach Christ successfully from the plane of meditation.

In the context of needed change, Ekpe initiates may be grouped into about five classes. The first are those who have been deeply rooted and are unwilling to accept any change from what they know to be Ekpe. They see nothing wrong in it even though they may outwardly profess commonly accepted religious faiths. The second class accommodates those who are prepared to accept only minor changes of what was handed down. Such changes may include the use of additional colours to improve the efficacy of initiation, and correlate the exoteric colours of the divinities. They will not go far from the old trodden path or practices. The third class may move a step further to accept a re-arrangement of body symbols. The fourth may be willing to contribute towards the improvement of the quality of temple music. Amongst the final class are those who having understood the meaning of these actions and accepted that in this age when Christ's role is active, the important temple activities should include:((i)Appropriate temple music and songs (ii)Trumpeting ie. praying to God through Christ Centred meditation. This fifth class will no longer invest in body symbols and signs. To them the way to Truth had been opened by Christ

2 IDEM EK? ? NKEMBA- IDEM IKW? FRATERNITY THE ESOTERIC UNSEEN SPIRIT OF BOUNTIFUL HARVEST/FERTILITY

The claim that IDEM IKWO, a lowly placed EKPE in EFIK kingdom which many fraternities outside Efik land do not recognize as Ekpe, is the visible sign of Ekpe cult in NDEM world is questionable. If by this is meant that Ekpe in NDEM kingdom is clothed in the paraphernalia of IDEM IKW? , the concept is faulted by the fact that Ekpe forms resemble nothing in creation. They are all teaching aids. In any case, if Prophet's claim that occasionally on the invitation of the god of the Earth, the hierarchs of the four elemental kingdoms of fire, air, water and earth move from the four quadrants of the earth to meet in conclave is anything to go by, attendance at such an elevated conclave would require the initiate to arrange for the quickening of the physical elements through the auspices of the hierarchs and the holy Spirit, to bring himself and the form into rapport with the conclave environment. Such an elevation is certainly beyond the capability of an ordinary initiate, and it is unlikely that an Adept worth his salt would allow himself to be adorned as an IDEM IKW? masquerade. Also IDEM IKW? being of too low a status precludes it from appearing when a conclave holds within one elemental kingdom, an activity that is not strange to Ekpe. Even at the mundane level, IDEM IKW? may not present himself when the fraternity meets in conclave. IDEM IKW? is a lowly placed Ekpe that has lost almost all its spirituality and has become earth bound. But in URUAN kingdom, the fraternity under the new title of EK? ? NKEMBA is probably the most exalted of all the Ekpe fraternities with perhaps a more profound Spiritism than the others.

The reason why the EFIK regarded this IDEM as of low Grade genre is not far to seek. Among the EFIK there is a legend which has it that once upon a time, one of the well-connected women in the land named MBANG had discovered the Ekpe, ie. MB? K? floating in a river where she had gone a-fishing. But rather than bring it to the notice of her brother MUTAKA whom she met on her way home, she promptly on her arrival elected to reveal the secret of her discovery to her husband NTUK AFUTA who subsequently brought this to the notice of two of the elders of the race viz. EYO EMA and ESSIEN EKPE. These three having deliberated on the matter among themselves arrived at the conclusion that this event no matter what, must remain a secret but that this would be unlikely to happen unless the woman was put away. So they contrived to drown her when she would be bringing them to go pick up the floating Ekpe MB? K? , the mysterious creature. This could well be the origin of the common belief that men wrested from the Ekpe wisdom and artifacts and by implication the EK? ? NKEMBA from the women folk. Hence from then on women and children were barred from all the esoteric cults in the kingdom since it was evident they scarcely could keep secrets; if anything, children would always divulge whatever secrets came to their domain to their mothers while women on the other hand would always gossip and in their tale-tale divulge whatever they saw or heard to their fellow women – therefore no secret would ever remain so in the land. That is why URUAN had chosen to make EK? ? NKEMBA the most exalted and top secret of the cults throughout the territory and to debar women, children and un-initiated youths as also others including aliens from knowing anything about the cult fraternity. This special fraternity is also the most awesome because from its very designation is okut akpa ie. "see and die". No human after the IDEM has adorned himself and ready to "appear" is ever seen with the naked eye. It is presumed to have become an ethereal spirit with the potency of invisibility and ubiquity. It is often said that at Idu-URUAN Head-quarters, only two families from time immemorial have been endowed with the charisma and potency of mystically being able to accost the IDEM and are therefore deputed to duari ie. "shout at" the EK? ? NKEMBA "to fall ending up with broken limbs". This in simply so and implies that in order to get the EK? ? to move fast enough to be able to cover other locations in the territory and "sanitize" the nation, and to offer opportunity for the entire citizenry to also enjoy the benefits and blessings of the IDEM EK? ? 'S visit to their village/town, these specialist gentry have been endowed with the charisma and mystical power to shout at the IDEM EK? ? in such a way that he automatically and instantaneously falls with broken limbs at the mystical command which must be given Willy Nilly. This of course is exactly what I got from my informants under …. It is one of those URUAN mysteries I first learnt from my father long before I was initiated in the late1940s because everyone thought that any bold initiated member who would be crafty and dexterous enough, could hide somewhere (and no one could ever hide anywhere considering what I have already recounted) from the prying eyes of the ubiquitous EKPO EK? ? spirits. Here it should be noted that EKPO EK? ? spirits are altogether different and worlds apart from EKPO masqueraders which though reputed as coming from the spirit world are nevertheless "human spirits" so to speak. The command usually takes the form of a drawling shouting of S-O-O-O-I! And low and behold, instantly the "spirit visitor" ie. the IDEM EK? ? suddenly goes into some sort of inexplicable "convulsive permutations" which promptly "disjoints him in all his members like a broken cripple" with some mysterious noises sounding and striking terror, awe and trepidation all over the place, and sending cold shivers to the spines of the adoring people in-doors. But within seconds, the "spirit visitor" together with his agents in tow are heard singing with their mysterious instruments to continue "ministering" as it were, to other parts of the village/town seemingly some miles away. The EK? ? NKEMBA as the name implies is a very mysterious NDEM to say the least. How far this IDEM EK? ? in most of his mysterious ways recounted here and elsewhere can be the true position of affairs, nobody dares to question or dispute about, for no one living can enter into discussions with matters of the spirit world -NDEM. That is why in URUAN kingdom the IDEM EK? ? NKEMBA is "aban abak", just as the python dreads its tail. That may well explain why URUAN has chosen to categorize the cult as a distinct type from any other Grade of Ekpe URUAN throughout including EFIK kingdom, instead of allowing it remain within the Ekpe Globes. But be that as it may, at the close of the events and EK? ? season the "spirit visitor "together with his spirit agents on the second/final appearance, makes his final tour of the town/village to bid good bye to the adoring citizens as it were, and finally goes round the cultivated EKPENE farms of that year, uprooting and carrying away a mystical and mysterious luxurious bundle of Isara herbs – the symbol of bountiful vegetation and abundant yields and harvest before disappearing just as it came till another EK? ? season. Meanwhile shouts and drumming of jubilation are heard all over the town/village and later in the evening the Adept initiates assemble within their kindreds to deliberate on the year's events and to decide on the appropriate sanctions and penalties against those who might have violated the laws before and during EK? ? season. They also deliberate on the sharing of the proceedings/fines including the initiation fees among the older initiated members as also other matters concerning the good governance and wellbeing of the citizens.

INAUGURATION OF EK? ? ? KEMBA ANNUAL SEASON

Unlike Ekpe follows a pattern of inauguration akin to EKPO NY? H? but has only a single season in the year. EK? ? season begins at the tail end of June when certain key routes in the village/town are lined with EYEI, ie. fresh palm fronds to warn that the roads have been closed, notably to women, strangers and non-initiates. The ROAD CLOSED or NO THOROUGHFARE sign bears a complete encircling of two tree trunks to the right and left with EKPA EK? ? ie. round woven palm branches with the Itum? bunch, an indication of Ekpe ensign and authority. For the following two months including the actual period of celebration of EK? ? ? KEMBA activities, women, non-initiates, visitors and children are barred from going through any of the routes especially the route designated above throughout the entire territory. Barely two weeks into the month of August of every year, another special cut-out woven palm branches are placed on the main thoroughfare intimating the people of the impending kick-off of the EK? ? ? KEMBA celebration period which traditionally lasts for only two weeks unless there are serious infractions to EK? ? laws when another week or two may be added to solve whatever outstanding problems, infractions or committals that had arisen while the season lasted. There are a number of infractions to EK? ? laws and most of them are committed either by the cult members themselves or by the okpo EK? ? . Those found guilty are punished by EK? ? ? KEMBA laws and these can be very severe penalties ranging from forfeitures, the cutting of any goats around the offenders' neighbourhoods and compounds by severing the heads of goats or cows with only a single stroke of the matchet against the defaulters who must bear whatever cost is demanded by their owners; to the exacting of heavy and commensurate fines. There could also be women offenders, usually those who break the NO THOROUGHFARE law or those caught outside during the FORBIDDEN HOURS or DAYS ie. certain days like EDITAHA and EDEM-ETAHA when the IDEM IKW? is expected to appear and sing for the entertainment of the citizenry. The penalty for women offenders in the olden days was capital punishment through driving a tent-peg into their temples right through to the ground, just as Queen Jael the Kenite did to Sisera, the Canaanite Army Commander (Cf. Jd 4:20-22). But nowadays that has been abrogated and replaced with heavy and commensurate fines and other penalties as the cult council may decide. The best thing is to get the warning of not running afoul of laws because even though the penalties may be paid but there may be also dire frightening metaphysical and mysterious consequences and happenings; here we are dealing with matters relating to the spirit realm of which nobody can guarantee to offer explanations or redemption.

EK? ? ? KEMBA INITIATIONS AND DISPLAYS

Membership for initiation into the EK? ? fraternity is open to only adult males, but may be permitted to male juveniles ie. Children above the age of ten all of whom are bona fide citizens of URUAN kingdom, who can understand and keep both the secrets and laws of EK? ? ? KEMBA cult and activities. For the mean time only monetary fees are demanded and they differ from Cult Family to Family just as in Ekpe. In ancient times EDITEM UDIA EK? ? for the entire kindred was mandatory but nowadays; it is optional. However, but to simplify affairs, all neophytes in the kindred normally have to pay a contributory sum amounting to what can cover the mandatory UKA ? festivities.

PROCEDURES WITH THE CELEBRATION AND DISPLAYS

Usually the mandatory Registration and Initiation fees have to be paid up-front from the beginning of the signaling of EK? ? season for the year. Just as in Ekpe, sponsors after collecting the fees pay same to the ? B? ? EK? ? of the candidates' respective Houses/Kindreds and obtain their certificate of incorporation. On a certain appointed day during the preparatory days of the season, the neophytes are expected to attend induction and instruction, courses as also practices and the final rehearsals as arranged principally regarding the observance of EK? ? laws, secrets, procedures, drumming, music and dancing steps which must be mastered before the "D" Day. The symbols of EK? ? are the dance instruments viz. ? kporo EK? ? , nsak, it?kr?k, as also the anointing with nsei powder. All these have their different functions in the organization. The ? kporo which is a special feature at every EK? ? play and performance together with other musical instruments and accompaniments including ibit EK? ? , obodom and Ek?m? are the principal dancing instruments. EK? ? also has special forms of greetings, salutations, slogans and jingles just as in Ekpe fraternity and these are taught to the neophytes during the induction lessons. A day before the commencement of the EK? ? season proper, which falls on Ederi - Etaha market day the cult members convene in the cult bush to inaugurate and invoke the EK? ? spirits to be on the ready to "appear" and kick-start the season. Then on the day following ie. Etaha market day the neophytes assemble for the final programme and rehearsals for their "D" day ie. Edem-Etaha market day when everybody is expected to be in-doors. The ? B? ? EK? ? of each House leads his candidates to their kindred IK? T EK? ? for their induction and initiation ceremonies. After that they are led to the URUA ANWA EKPE or any other designated square of the village/town for the procession ceremonies round designated routes in the town. In the case of juveniles, their sponsors are to lead them to a convenient location close-by since their initiation is done by proxy.

This is obvious because these innocent boys true their nature and just like their mothers cannot keep secrets and they will certainly narrate the goings-on at the IK? T EK? ? initiation centres to their mothers and peers after the event, hence the wisdom of the elders not to get them initiated directly in person. It is these sponsors who represent them at the actual initiation rituals which include among others the signing and painting with Nsei. After this ceremony, the candidates are decked with their loin cloths and singlets and appropriate Nkisi scarfs round their waists. Some may wear tiny nsak rattles round their ankles and sometimes beads to match because it is the liminary season and carnivals are permitted when they could adorn themselves and dress with women attire. Some do plait their hair and carry on with all sorts of women beautification including apparels because the initiated mkparawa youths in so doing can attract the maidens and from there intimacy ensues leading inexorably to betrothal and marriage sooner or later. This concluded the neophytes are marched down to the arena which is usually the market square from where the dancing procession commences through the important roads in the village/town before they disperse to the meet finally at the residences of their respective ? B? ? EK? ? . From there they may go round visiting acquaintances and families of their choice round town. Afterwards individuals as also peer dancing groups and celebrations take off from there with visits to people's homes when dancing and other merriments may continue. In some cases, public displays and dances are organized for the entertainment of the citizenry at public squares and influential or VIP compounds.

Since what should be said about this awe-inspiring and mysterious/invisible cult has been more or less treated elsewhere in connection with the elemental spirit and spirit world in NDEM, there is hardly any need for another elaborate treatment here because of all the cult societies in URUAN/EFIK this seems to be the most unique and exotic of all. Very few would like to stick out their necks to say anything. All that makes the generality of URUAN citizens believe, appreciate and find satisfaction in IDEM IKW? is because there is always that wonderful and awe-inspiring atmosphere of beauty and mystery, though one that strikes terror by "the outing" of the IDEM which usually takes place at night because the spirit is not to be seen by any human. Most of the cult members and agents have tried to be content with just supplying the necessary instrumental music and other aspects of the beautiful melodies which aura he bears when he seems to be heard only from afar, since the actual IDEM IKW? is always a distance away from the cult members because instant death awaits any stubborn delinquent who may venture to "behold" him. Nobody has claimed that the IDEM IKW? ever physically accosted and killed anybody for that matter since it is as they say, okut akpa, and every URUAN citizen believes it and learns to keep off and accept so and leave the matter at that. It is a fait accompli mystery. Even the EKPO EK? ? spirits' movements also seem always to be heard at a distance far away from the place of action; herein lies the mystery, awe and admiration. Their main function is to ward off and warn intruders to mind their own business or find themselves suddenly dead instanter should they make any attempt at "beholding the IDEM IKW? during his mysterious appearance to "minister to the citizenry". People have tried to grapple with and unravel this mystery to no avail.

At a certain point in my life, I attempted to play the stubborn defiant. On that fateful night and since my father was away for a Church meeting, I made an attempt just at the time the okut akpa IDEM was "signing" to "behold" the ubiquitous EKPO EK? ? spirits since their advent is the only thing people seem to notice with their violent striking on the doors of women and non-initiates with such an unusual and powerful bang. Yes, they seem to be ubiquitous because once this big bang is heard probably a few compounds away, within seconds as anybody can notice or hear "the next bang is on your mother's door or your young un-initiated uncle's or someone like that" since people have locked themselves in staying indoors - both initiates and all because everybody wants to enjoy listening to the wonderful mysterious music and drumming of "the men from the underworld", particularly of the IDEM IKW? far off from the scene of the ubiquitous spirits because that is exactly what people regard them to be. Nowadays as everything has turned cosmopolitan, it is mooted that the powerful bang on doors will not anymore be discriminatory but will affect every door in the neighbourhood and the entire village/town because everybody wants to have a feel of the action of the EKPO EK? ? spirits. On my part, on that particular occasion, immediately I heard the bang some compounds away, I tip-toed, defying my mother's and uncles' entreaties not to go watch the "banging spirits" through the key hole. I vouch that the spirit did bang at our door sending me crashing on the mat although without a whimper, but I could see just nothing; and this has been the tale-tale in our family till this day. "Afo akpan-akak etre-ut? eyen emi! My mother gasping for breath could utter when she found her voice, when I finally tip-toed back to her waiting hands.

When it is time for the IDEM EK? ? to move round the town/village to "minister" to the people, there was always pin-drop silence within the entire territory as everybody endeavours to get in-doors to await the "touring mystery "spirit visitor", the IDEM EK? ? spirit. It is often said that at Idu-URUAN Head-quarters, only two families from time immemorial have been endowed with the charisma and potency of mystically being able to accost the IDEM and are therefore deputed to duari ie. "shout a command to" the EK? ? NKEMBA "to fall ending up with broken limbs". The shout must be with alacrity and with such a powerful voice by a mystic and highly spiritual or charismatic individual endowed with such power that the "IDEM spirit in his falling" automatically scatters his limbs and members. I therefore presume it is the same position throughout the towns and villages that possess the IDEM EK? ? NKEMBA because not all the clans in URUAN celebrate this special EK? ? NKEMBA cult season notably clans in URUAN south. This in simply so because IDEM EK? ? NKEMBA fraternity cult was so exorbitant in the days of yore that only certain well-to-do communities/kindreds could afford "purchasing it. As observed already, most of these cult organizations belong by right of birth or of the originating founding Kindred Fathers and to their posterity and also to certain kindreds just as the kingship and royalty belongs to specified families from which the king could emerge only from them or be selected because they own the "EKURIKU". It also implies however, that in order to get the EK? ? to move fast enough to be able to cover other locations in the territory and "sanitize" the nation, and to offer opportunity for the entire citizenry to also enjoy the benefits and blessings of the IDEM EK? ? 'S visit to their village/town, these specialist gentry have been endowed with the charisma and mystical power to shout at the IDEM EK? ? in such a way that he automatically and instantaneously falls with broken limbs at the mystical command which must be given willy Nilly. This of course is exactly what I got from my informants preferring anonymity as they ventured to narrate what is now in the public domain concerning the mystery, and that is the much everybody knows – no further explanations. Again when it is time, because this is a very organized cult, all the cultic members concerned must endeavour to be on their toes all the time in order to avoid eventualities since human life is involved in this metaphysical realities. Then all the appointed and designated old members of EK? ? ie. the Ugep EK? ? spies, move to all the nooks and crannies of the town/village specified for them in order to apprehend any intruder including women, aliens residing in the town/village, visitors, strangers, the okpo-non-initiates etc. This is one of the reasons why I said 'there is nowhere to hide' when the "spirit visitor" is 'on duty'. During this time the Ekpo EK? ? spirits are also on duty with their frightening and deafening bang on the doors as they invisibly move round the territory to alert people about the imminence and impending appearing of the IDEM spirit visitor like the moon at nightfall within the vicinity. It is one of those URUAN mysteries I first learnt from my father long before I was initiated in the late1940s because everyone thought that any bold initiated member who would be crafty and dexterous enough, could hide somewhere (and no one could ever hide anywhere considering what I have just recounted) from the prying eyes of the ubiquitous EKPO EK? ? spirits. Here it should be noted that EKPO EK? ? spirits are altogether different and worlds apart from EKPO masquerades which though reputed as coming from the spirit world, are nevertheless "human spirits" so to speak. The command usually takes the form of a drawling shouting of S-O-O-O-I! And low and behold, instantly the "spirit visitor" ie. the IDEM EK? ? suddenly goes into some sort of inexplicable "convulsive permutations" which promptly "disjoints him in all his members like a broken cripple" with some mysterious noises sounding and striking terror, awe and trepidation all over the place, and sending cold shivers down the spines of the adoring people in-doors. But within seconds, the "spirit visitor" together with his agents in tow with powerful thuds is heard in their mysterious instrumental music continuing "ministering" as it were, to other parts of the village/town seemingly some miles away. The EK? ? NKEMBA as the name implies is a very mysterious NDEM to say the least. How far this IDEM EK? ? in most of his mysterious ways recounted here and elsewhere can be the true position of affairs, nobody dares to question or dispute about, for no one living can enter into discussions with matters of the spirit world -NDEM. That is why in URUAN kingdom the IDEM EK? ? NKEMBA is "aban abak", just as the python dreads its tail. That may well explain why URUAN has chosen to categorize the cult as a distinct type from any other Grade of Ekpe throughout including EFIK kingdom, instead of allowing it remain within the other Ekpe Globes. But be that as it may, at the close of the events and EK? ? season, the "spirit visitor "together with his spirit agents on their second/final appearance, makes his final tour of the town/village to bid good bye to the adoring citizens as it were, and finally goes round the cultivated EKPENE farms of that year, uprooting and carrying away a mystical and mysterious luxurious bundle of isara herbs – the symbol of bountiful vegetation and abundant yields and harvest before disappearing just as it came till another EK? ? season. Meanwhile shouts and drumming of jubilation are heard all over the town/village and later in the evening the Adept initiates assemble within their kindreds to deliberate on the year's events and to decide on appropriate sanctions and penalties against those who might have violated the EK? ? laws before and during EK? ? season. They also deliberate on the sharing of the proceeds and fines including the initiation fees among themselves and the older initiate members as also other matters concerning the good governance and wellbeing of the citizens.

Nevertheless, it has also been suggested that aside the IDEM IKW? here-to-for represented in URUAN kingdom by EK? ? ? KEMBA cult, he could be juxta-posed with IDEM IKW? holding sway in EFIK kingdom on account of the events that have now overtaken, and if possible they could be properly integrated and harmonized with a befitting and appropriate status. But it should also be noted here that since the inner man is being confined within the mesh body covering of the IDEM IKW? it is appropriate that the conical helmet together with the antenna he bears be made to now depict him as having been brought into full conscious rapport with God. But this seems a tall and pedantic venture as it is impossible to contemplate such a physical and visible IDEM in URUAN since EK? ? has always been known to be invisible. The situation is further compounded because IDEM IKW? had lost the status that allowed him to wear a fixed hat meant to indicate closeness to God but had instead acquired a winged hat which calls for greater effort to be invested to facilitate acquisition of power from God. This further confirms the low status of the IDEM in EFIK kingdom. However, this Ekpe form is usually girdled into colours, yellow and green representing mercury and Mars halves of the Earth period respectively. The other Ekpe forms have single colour firdles as a rule.

Prescinding from any idea of trying to contradict the time tested traditions which however are being eroded in recent times by the loss of the sense of values owing to the wind of change blowing in all directions over the land. This venture has always tried to strike a balance between the new and the old with an advocacy for the restoration of URUAN/EFIK traditional institutions without which it will amount to wasted effort at achieving development and progress in the land. There is no way anybody can aim at restoring sanity and bringing about the often mouthed transformation anywhere without tested structures especially those bearing on the totality of the human person. URUAN/EFIK has always been regarded as a deeply rooted tradition based society with enviable structures including the traditional cult organizations mirrored in these pages. They have been acclaimed to have operated a world class disciplined and forward-looking system organized civil society in the last century. But unfortunately everything seems dormant and buried nowadays. It cannot be denied though, that many of these ancient societies and kingdoms have been put to test by the challenges of our times and are becoming somehow disoriented and many of the citizenry have lost faith in the goings-on in the land The advent of multitudes of Pentecostal and charismatic forms of worship to be discussed later to which many of our youth have fallen prey has also added to this crisis in the land. We are growing up with a generation especially of the youth and nation moving speedily away from tradition. People are no longer interest neither do they want to be guided by the age-old good traditions of the tribal heritage, the prognosis is far from encouraging and social peace, even more so threatened. It is only by opening new doors to resuscitate our traditional structures that can confront these hydra-headed monsters that have held the people especially the youths bound. Every age has got its own tendencies, but it must not be forgotten that the contemporary tendencies further exacerbate and distort whatever hither-to-fore was held to be right and proper. Recently, the age-old yam festivals of the Igbos and Northern Cross Riverians have received a new boost even from the Catholics in particular and the Council of Elders in general. One needs to attend these events like those organized in recent times in Lagos with the VIP Igbos in the Diaspora, the Elders and kings from the various kingdoms in the Eastern States in attendance in their traditional attires to which was also invited the Oba of Lagos, Oba Rilwan Akilo as well as the Governor of Lagos, Senator Babatunde Raji Fashola. Similar festivals have also been going on all over Northern Cross River communities during the season every year. We must therefore see in all these the potential stability, cohesion of the age-old traditional structures and norms and social values which brought progress and development for the sustenance of their communities past and present. That is why I am sounding this clarion call through these pages for an urgent but impartial study of what need to stay and what ought to go. We must resolve to preserve continuity in the midst of discontinuity which is looming large throughout URUAN/ EFIK territory today in solidarity with and adaptation of the traditional structures, values and ideals and I earnestly hope these will give ample scope for stake holders and those entrusted with the organization of traditional governance of the society to know where to begin.

NOTIONS AND ORIGINS OF EKPO NY? H? CULT IN URUAN

Mbre EKPO NY? H? in URUAN as also in other parts of West Africa, traditionally tagged EKPO (SPIRIT/GHOST) MAQUERADE is another special fraternity or "secret cult" but with an altogether different system of organization. The cult is more associated with Ancestor worship than NDEM-spirits; hence it is necessary to define the terms. Traditional and Tradition here refer to those aspects of culture and practices that have been handed down from time immemorial, from generation to generation, with calculated continuity in the life of communities or, tribes or nations, eg. EKPE URUAN/EFIK above. Therefore, traditional when applied to a community denotes the ancient beliefs and practices including those of immortality, adoration and worship of ancestral spirits etc. which have been passed down through the generations. Although unfortunately the masquerade cult is not native to URUAN, it was probably adopted with their contact with the IBIBIO, and since the cult has some aspects of EKPE, notably its secrecy, its reverence to NDEM (SPIRITS/GHOSTS) etc. in their performances and plays, the institution has found its way into URUAN. A very good example is EKPO IKONO which is usually organized around September/October. This Grade/species of EKPO NY? H? which takes its roots from IKONO in IBIBIO land. On the other hand, the word CULT from the Latin CULTUS, may be defined as: "a system of religious adoration, worship, devotion, homage, to a person or thing, for example, the cult of Saints, of the dead, or of ancestors" (H.W. Fowler and F.G, Fowler, 297).

Priscilla C. Ward also defines CULT as:

> A form of ritual /worship that emphasizes the ritual worship to a god or person as distinct from the theological aspect of Religion. In Ethnology, "CULT" refers to the formation of a group of initiates around a figure of a god or Saint…The god is worshipped according to prescribed ritual with certain attributes emphasized as basis of the cult. Traditional aspects include a priesthood and sacred lore, with rites conducted in secret. These cults frequently with political and economic concomitants may fill special needs not met by established religious tradition (Priscilla C. Danbury & Grolier Inc. 314).

Cult is therefore a complex gesture with a symbolic vehicle which embodies a central religious phenomenon with a mysterious value which the common man cannot fully rationalize attached to it such that the relationships acted out are with reference to sacred objects and the particular persons. These relationships are usually with regard to the members and the leaders implicit in the cult. It is clear from all these that CULT is always organized around a figure, divine or human but with certain attributes such that the practice is more or less around secret entity meant to be venerated through same forms of ritual actions. Within the group not only is the relationship between the figure and the cult members stipulated, but also among the members themselves. That is why some communities logically term it as Ekpe SOCIETY and will be used interchangeably here. There is the tradition that EKPO MASQUERADE INSTITUTION was originally a women's organization although this claim has often been vehemently rejected for obvious reasons and chief among these is the contestation that because Ekpo displays are one of the most energy-sapping activities employed in the organization, it would be unthinkable that women could cope with such rigorous activities.

EKPO DISPLAYS WITH EKPO MASQUERADES AND DANCES

However, this tradition has it that the Organization began as a result of a war in the distant past when men used to desert their women and kids as also leaving the ancestral spirits and divinities unattended to while the war lasted and the women felt seriously threatened as they could not perform these religious roles aside caring for the kids. As A result, the women began to wear masks left around the shrines which originally served as the paraphernalia and vests for the performance of temple rituals and this frightened the men out of their wits with the result that from their hideouts they were constrained to come back to their homes. Then the women used to call their organization or masquerade "EKPO NSAB? K". The little ones also followed suit and began to wear masks prepared from cocoyam leaves to disguise themselves and with these they could bold-facedly get into the farms and hide between the plants in order to harvest both yams and cocoyams for their mothers. Thus also began the cult of EKPO NTOK-EYEN, so the tradition goes. But these harmless cult organizations were not without their own problems. First the women in so doing had wrested in tow, authority from the men, similarly the children who could now look their parents in the eye. But most poignantly and regrettably, EKPO display normally involved the use of bows and arrows and squatting down to shoot at their victims, in this case their men. Of course in so doing they would invariably expose their nakedness to the gaze and embarrassment of their husbands as people scarcely wore pants in those days. This undoubtedly angered the men folk who as husbands could not bear the sight of their wives exposing themselves so indecently. They therefore called a council at which they decided among other things to ban the association and thereby bar the women. By this were able also to wrest the institution from the women and make it an-all men's affair. This was the beginning of EKPO SOCIETY in IBIBIO and ANNANG LAND. In addition to this, they also instituted the cult of ancestors through the erection of NWOMO (EKPO) as cult houses which they equipped with necessary household items for the use and the veneration of their dead (Ekarika J. P&R. Edet, La Citta, Rome 1979, 174). Ekpo masquerades are masked figures with a beautiful doll face but sometimes with an unusually frightful face which type is designated EKA EKPO or EKPO AYARA costumes for the adornment of the masquerade. These normally consist of the doll mask, for the head and for the body seneggelila grass, and sometimes raffia covering with a long black or white sleeve shirts and trousers. Depending on the grade, the exposed parts are painted with charcoal or white chalk. Some masquerades wear little bells, again depending on the Grades. To be tied around the trunk across the breast is a string of large spherical designs called "UNNA? " and is intended to enhance its stature and make it more dignifying, intimidation and awesome. But the most important part of its adornment is the NY? H? , a small band material tied on a string to indicate the performance of the masquerade especially as it jerks the waste in the characteristic style of EKPO dance. Perhaps that is what URUAN calls NY? H? instead of NY? H? because at the peak of its dancing, this piece of material rises from the vertical position making a ninety degrees line with the waist as the base. Around the ankles, the masquerade wears special NSAK, rattles as part of its embellishments, depending on what a masquerade wears over the shirt/raffia outfit, such a masquerade may be titled TITIA EKPO ie. one with trousers, or ? B? -IKPA EKPO if it wears frocks with types of lady shoes to match, or AKAN-ANWAN EKPO if it wears something that makes it appear like an old or pregnant woman or EKPO UM? N? if it in addition to the above is adorned with mirrors around its fringes.

Masquerades are regarded as impersonations of the ancestral spirits which the people claim do appear during special seasons to visit the earthly community and to bestow blessings and/or mete out punishments to people as the case may be. Masquerades also help to foster the belief in life after death and the cult of ancestors and to show that the dead do have an interest in the affairs of the living as well as effectively oversee and safeguard public morality as noted elsewhere.

EKPO DIGNITARIES AND GRADES

In URUAN territory in particular, there are eight Grades of Ekpo and all take their titles and appearances from the dating of Ibibio market days viz EDEM-ETAHA, Fi? -Etok, Edere-Obo, OBO, Edem-Obo, Fi? -Aran, Edere-Etaha, Etaha. Similarly, the Dignitaries/common to all clans in URUAN include: EKA EKPO, AKPAN EKPO, INY? NI EKPO IWAT EKPO, AYARA EKPO, EK? ? EKPO, and NTUK EKPO. During the luminal year outings are arranged for the displays of the different signatories and during the display week each Ekpo dignitary tries to outwit the other in its form of decoration and appearance. Before then elaborate arrangements are made regarding the sacrifices to be offered for the general welfare, power of exhibition and protection of the masquerades so that they may overcome all obstacles on their way because some of them can fall sick, or get injured or weary and worn out. There is also the fear that they can incur the anger and displeasure of the ancestors and thus bring about evil consequences on themselves. Further preparation also may necessitate the clearing and general cleaning of the routes which they are going to take during their special displays, even the village squares and other EKPO spots are kept in good conditions. EKPO routes are often lined with EYEI, ie fresh palm fronds to warn that the roads have been closed ie ROAD CLOSED or NO THOROUGHFARE sign. Women, non- initiates and children are barred from going through any of the routes throughout the entire territory. But they can use the other roads and paths in town to go for their business, farm or market provided they go with initiated escorts; one can be sufficient provided there are not many masquerades on the routes they are taking, also provided those to be exhorted are not too many for one escort. There is the exception ie provided the escort is and Adept or ? B? ? EKPO. The reason is that the escort has to either shout to the hearing of these embodied spirits to clear the way for NNAWO! (ie I /we are passing bye with human beings) to pass or simply to shout DIBE, DIBE"! ie. hide yourself (ves) in which case, the masquerades run into the nearby bush or if it is open country, they turn their faces backing the incoming escorted person(s), obviously because human beings should not behold the face(s) of spirits. On certain occasions the masquerades are expected to also make their appearance and display at the funerals of titled chiefs as well as traditional Rulers. They are even expected to display and entertain the people at public celebrations like the Independence Day, reception for various government officials principally the Head of State, Governors, Heads of Councils etc. According to Awolalu and Depomu, there are usually certain festivals connected with these secret societies like EKPO, and also festivals because they are always occasions of general rejoicing when the masquerades are to come out from their spiritual domain to display acrobatic and entertaining dances. Various sacrifices are performed in their honour when inviting them to appear on such occasions (Awolalu and Dopemu P. 275). These outings can sometimes last for a week or more depending on the importance and greatness of the occasion and sometimes for only a day. With regard to the seasonal outings these also depend on the classification of EKPO seasons. EKPO year and seasons are calculated either by reason of the feasts of the year eg. EKPO ND? K which takes place between November and December of the leap year ie ISUA ND? K, or according EKPO luminal year, EKPO INWA? which takes place during the farming season specifically to implore good yields for the crops so planted, or EKPO ID? K celebrated between August and September, and EKPO IKONO celebrated in solidarity with IKONO Clans in Akwa Ibom State due to the fact that there are still some Ikono groups of villages still extant in URUAN. EKPO season is sacred time, hence quarrelling, fighting, noise either by crying, yelling 0r shouting are prohibited. There is also the practice of fencing compounds and covering them with wine palm mats is to hide the masquerades from public view from their compounds during the season and also to prevent possible confrontations between the masquerades and non-initiates as well as women and children. Still as part of the preparations quantizes of firewood are procured since free going out and coming from farms and forests where firewood can be fetched are restricted.

MASQUERADE DISPLAYS & FUNCTIONS ON THEIR SPECIFIC MARKET DAYS

In some clans in URUAN which have acquired/bought the totality of EKPO NY? H? globes from other lands viz. Ibibio and Annang, the displays take place within the 8-Day week simply because they get their potency and authority for performance from the deities assigned to these market days. Accordingly, in URUAN CENTRAL particularly Idu, the following globes of Ekpo grades can be identified:

Ek? ? EKPO: OBO MARKET DAYS

Ek? Ekpo which derives its nomenclature from the poplar market day which is very typical in Annang country-URUA OBO ANNANG in the Central Annang of Essien Udim LGA is the 'Soldier masquerades' which "appear" on display for public gaze on Obo market days. They appear in hordes just like soldiers in their hundreds and can be very intimidating not just in their appearance and outfits as these are very colourful with smalls tinkling bells as part of their outfit, but on account of their numbers 'terrible as an set in battle array'. They are also very agile, smart and warlike and can get at their targets – non-initiates and women within the twinkling of an eye. There is no place to hide or run to when they pursue their victim and there is no point in running because they can be too fast for their victims. OBO is a very big market day into which many nationalities from far and near including those from nearby Igbo country, Ogoni land, Okrika etc. from the Rivers State of Nigeria flock in with their wares even as early as 4am. in the morning. Similarly, the OBO MARKET at Idu also captures the coming of thousands of local merchants bringing in all sorts of articles to the market. Small wonder then that Ek? signifying the military on account of their numbers, agility, smartness, focus and beautiful displays is the name given to this grade of Ekpo masquerade whose outing occurs on this market day. It is of first class Grade and those to be initiated as members have to pay a higher price for initiation. In the olden days, full initiation included editem udia, which required cooking large quantities of yam foo-foo and several pots of soup with assorted meat and fish dishes with UKA? and costly wines like Schnapps, whisky etc. People are expected to move smartly, briskly and businesslike, hence the characteristics of this Ek? Ekpo Grade on OBO DAY. As may be expected and this also applies to Ekpe URUAN some of which may not be native to a particular tribe/clan in URUAN. Adadia in Afaha/Issiet clan has the preserve of Ekpe NKANDA and has never been native to any town/village or clan in URUAN from time immemorial. My father told me of how Ekpe NKANDA got to URUAN Central and by implication Idu, through exorbitant payments in cash and kind to the NKANDA Adepts of Adadia, and this story has been passed on from generation to generation till today. Any village, tribe or clan wishing to "possess" any other Grade of Ekpe not previously existent in that clan or village, and in this case all or a particular Grade of EKPO NY? H? had to pay very exorbitantly to their "indigenous owners", not once, not twice, but as much and as many times as the Chiefs and owners might demand for any specific Grade. It also means that they had to pay for all the particulars pertaining to the complete "possession" of an Ekpe Grade or Ekpo masquerade. The same also applies to the purchase of EK? ? ? KEMBA since this is neither native to nor universal in all URUAN clans and villages even up till today. First of all, the purchaser village/clan was required to pay a certain amount which was considerable for the purchase of only "the imum" of the masquerade, which implies only the masquerade figure would be sold at the first negotiation ie. without the drums and other dance accompaniments, without the dancing steps, without the music sounds, without even the wordings of the music etc. One could therefore see the wisdom, the sagacity, the business acumen/head, the craftiness and most importantly the graft of the Annang gentry and elders at work. But then that is not all. Even if the "purchaser" was ready to pay all the negotiated amount up-front for all the necessary particulars of the cult species, the elders may not accept that; everything has to be on their terms, ie. "go and come back" with whatever was agreed upon on that occasion and on a specific locus and time; in other words, 'one at a time, whether for the purchased of instruments, music, accompaniments or whatever. EK? ? EKPO in particular was bought URUAN central and of course each village/town had to make a heavy contribution towards its purchase or to go negotiate and by for themselves from Annang country specifically Ukana clan in the years preceding the turn of 1st century AD or well back into the years of yore BC. Nobody is very sure when EK? ? EKPO "Fraternity "entered" URUAN central kingdom.

EKPO AYARA: EDEM-OBO MARKET DAYS

Typical of URUAN culture and traditions, the 'fair looking' of the mild and gentle genre is always followed by the mighty, the conqueror and the powerful - the male gender chauvinism– the "macho personality", so also regarding the Ayara Grade of Ekpo Ny?h?. Ekpo Ayara as the name implies, is the masculine genre of Ekpo masquerades which appear from their underground abode. They are as very fearful and awesome creatures both in their paraphernalia and outlook. They are ever fierce, daring and menacing, striking terror and sending shivers down the spines of their beholders. Ancient Ekpo Ayara of yore in URUAN were terrifying and frightening but in modern times their outfits almost match those of Ek? Ekpo and Ekpo Iwat with the singular exception regarding their double-faced structures ostensibly to deceive their victims. The okpo ekpo, strangers and women often get bewildered and confused because these masquerades can run very fast forwards and backwards with the result that people get confused as to which direction they are running. They also carry guns and matchets whereas Ek? Ekpo grades carry simply the "cane-asua anwan ?bu ?n? "for beating the sense out of their victims just as a husband does to his recalcitrant wife. This market day is also usen ibet and usually women and children are forbidden to go out and are to stay away from the farm and from the streams. Perhaps this may well explain why the grade appears on this day since people are nevertheless going to stay in-doors. In the olden days and up till the civil war, the women folk and their daughters, children and other extended family members of their kind used to get food items, bundles of wood especially item ifia logs in plenty and heap them behind their verandas and courtyards against the Ekpo Ny?h? season. Then days before Ekpo Ayara market days, they would go to their farms and to markets to collect whatever would be needed for preparing their meals when in-doors. The wisdom of the URUAN/EFIK founding Fathers in all these was to imitate the God of Work and Creator, who after His six days of creation - the Hexameron, rested on the Sabbath Day. They needed their wives, children and members of their extended family to enable them after their daily toil in the farms, markets etc. use this period to meditate on their life's journey here below, and from which they must one day depart. For the men folk themselves, their women of course would be at home to perform their "matrimonial functions".

Ekpo Ayara masquerades are very stubborn and only high ranking initiates and Elders may go out as "escorts" for the women especially, because they can still strike at their victims ignoring the "escort" of young men who are nevertheless initiated members. Some powerful women in society as well as those of blue-blood and of the royalty may be permitted to initiate in the grade ostensibly so that they can serve as escorts. The idea of escorts is to ward off the danger into which women, strangers and non-initiates may run into should dare go out un-accompanied since the authority of "escorts" derives from the fact that such “powerful escort initiates” are messengers of the gods, hence their recognition as such. In general escorts are required even for young initiates since initiation is done in their different Houses/Kindreds and the masquerades are likely not to know who the true initiates are. Again, since initiation is undertaken for each grade of EKPO NY? H? , such young men might not have initiated in the particular grade in their operation on that market day. Ayara Ekpo also are of a first class rank in URUA as in other climes. Their main raison d'être is because men are men, and the generality of mankind must realize this and accord them their due position in the scheme of things. We are in a man's world, and since creation it has always been so, women liberation, the often mouthed United Nations “Human Rights” and codes of freedom of this and freedom of that notwithstanding. In other words, the leit motif of their operations and displays are to teach mankind that people should learn to be law abiding and maintain public order. They should not hide under the banner of any powerful World Organizations and injunctions to flout what God had already in his Infinite Goodness and Wisdom ordained. People should always be conscious of observing the rule of law in their actions and not to unnecessarily perpetrate atrocities and afterwards claim immunity and audacity or feign ignorance of the law. On such days therefore, people learn to move about their normal business not as law breakers and busy-bodies, but to show that they should be manly, businesslike, sagacious and mindful of the fact that the rule of law respects no man; that people should move with caution, integrity and respect.

EKPO ANYAN –IKO: FI? ? ARAN MARKET DAYS

These masquerades appear on this particular market day and are distinguished in their carrying of gourd-like spikes just like soldiers or the military/mobile police. Since they appear as weak and effeminate, hence they carry them as weapons of defense since they do not normally attack people unless provoked before they can show their true colours. If provoked, then it means 'war has been declared on them' and may attack with all alacrity and ferocity. They act as task masters and literally declare war on any stubborn or delinquent offender who does not get out for the work on days when communal labour is declared in the village or town, eg. on sanitation days. Any erring citizen automatically incurs their wrath. But at other times they are sober and graceful especially in their dancing steps as they go around soliciting alms from their fellow initiate members and elders. They also carry spears which they simply stick to the ground in front of the initiates' verandas ostensibly to signal that they would not depart unless “appreciated” through gift offerings. Their paraphernalia are of mixed colours usually lazed with purple raffia instead of black. They are in the third class of EKPO NY? H? .

EKPO ESENAM: EDERI-ETAHA MARKET DAYS

They are in the second class ranking, and as the name implies they are the workers in Ekpo kingdom, the “busy-bodies”, so to speak always going along with their small gongs - ekere and rattles. They typify the working citizenry especially of the Ikot Esenam peoples of ORUK ANAM Local Government Authority and their specialty is to entertain and lure people to work hard especially in the farm and at harvest time hurry to the market with their farm produce. Ikot Esenam people are great farmers and one can only witness the breadth-taking mammoth crowd at their Ederi-Etaha market known as URUA USU? to confirm the veracity of this statement because the merchandise brought to the market are mostly farm products. This grade of Ekpo was certainly bought from this part of former Ukanafun in Northern Annang country at a very heavy price. That may well explain its ranking in their present grading in URUAN. Women, strangers/visitors and non-initiates may come out to watch their displays, but only from a distance. EDERI-ETAHA market days are the customary farming days when citizens Willy Nilly are expected to visit their farms. On such days, the Esenam masquerades line up the farm routes in their numbers to “escort people” as it were to their farms. Once people are in their farming outfits and tools, Ekpo Esenam do not attack anybody, but 'woe to those 'lazy drones' who won't come out to plant or tender their farms but continue to loiter about. Nearer home, there is a big Ederi-Etaha market situated at Mbak Etoi along Anua –Nung Oku Uruan axis. Farm produce including livestock especially rams, goats and chickens can be bought very cheap here and many of clans like Etoi, Ibesikpo, and Offot etc. and of course URUAN patronize this market. Ekpo Esenam often carry small bells as part of their outfits presumably to alert people to move out to their farms. Everybody can now begin to figure out why the masquerades operate as they do on certain and specific “market days” in the land. The masquerade grade falls within the second class and category of EKPO NY? H? .

INY? NI EKPO: EDITAHA MARKET DAYS

These are not pleasant days for anybody, initiates and non-initiates alike as these weird looking and disfigured cum-handicapped or seemingly physically challenged species seem to lord over the land. They pretend to be deaf and dumb and can attack anybody with their arrows. They are great archers like the Israelites of old. They are always in enmity with the indolent especially housewives who won't get out to prepare their articles of merchandise or attend to their farms for the 'D' red letter Day which occurs on the succeeding day, ie. EDEM-ETAHA which to all intent and purposes is another big if not the greatest market day, and perhaps the greatest and busiest market day not only in URUAN but in the entire territory because it is usen mbehe. USEN MBEHE, 'day of arrivals' as the name implies is the market day for all marketers to arrive from all parts of the world, so to speak, with their articles of merchandise, hence EDITAHA as the day preparatory for all and sundry to arise and get busy for the red letter day. The masquerades bedeck themselves with all sorts of “inconveniences” to attract sympathy but actually to warn people to stay clear. That is why they “do no listen to entreaties” and confrontation with them is instant arrow shoot-out. They are not people friendly at all in spite of their entertaining, often ridiculous dance steps. They just want to attract notice and fire people to appropriate action, namely to be duty-conscious and be about their business. This is also among the second class of EKPO NY? H? .

EKPO IWAT: EDEM-ETAHA MARKET DAYS

This special market day is regarded as a red letter day, USEN MBEHE, ie. the day after EDITAHA proper in URUAN and environs including those coming from Northern Cross River by sea. It is really “a day of arrivals” because the attendance on this market day is breadth-taking: otop ntuen isimke is? as they say-literally translates that, were one to throw up a sag of pepper grains, the grains could only land on people, and not one grain would touch the ground. Could you imagine this type of URUAN/EFIK expression! In ancient days even before the slave trade as remarked already, big time merchants used to come from the entire region of Bayelsa and Rivers States known then as “Bonny country”, and also from Igbo country and Delta to this market which was formerly situated at the beach ie. ESUK MBEHE IDU which afterwards moved upland to the present market site on the mainland URUA IDU very often to resell their wares and whatever they must had earlier bought at the beach market. Those also who were afraid of the water or on account of the marshy beach grounds could just wait and later on in the day mover over either to buy or sell at this “upland” market. One can easily see why the Ekpo Iwat species was so ubiquitous coming out in their hundreds and in their beautiful colours and adornments ostensibly to lure people to attend the market. They are smart, neat, spick and span and very lovely to behold. The paraphernalia of this grade of masquerades are the best in grandeur perhaps because of their name tag, Ekpo Iwat which typifies youthfulness, hence Mkparawa Ekpo or young people's masquerades. They are typically acrobatic and funny to entertain people. They do not carry and harmful or dangerous weapons but people are simply to watch and give way at their approach because as everybody knows, they are messengers of the spirits not human, and people should learn to draw the line and avoid familiarity with "ghosts". However, they are of course, people friendly. They are of the first class also.

EKPO ENYEHE-NDAK:FI? ? ARAN MARKET DAYS

This grade of masquerades displays on these markets days during the Ekpo season. As their name implies, they almost always carry palm branches as their weapon of terror but as everybody knows they are just like barking dogs that often can't bite or injure people around ditto tender palm branches. Their weapon is ostensibly to strike fear but they cannot really bite. They represent the pretenders of this world. They run like mad dogs after but on approaching their victims they simply cut the stem end of the palm fronds with just one stroke to intimidate and strike fear and terror and then run very fast past their victims sending them scrambling into the bush for safety without their victims coming to any harm at all. The aim is just to frighten them and put them on the alert, as if to warn: "be careful and ready to fight the battle of life every day of your lives". They also do acrobatic displays and the implication is that just as they have come from the "underworld of valour" people should be alert and duty-conscious. I think the rational is to alert people that their enemies may not be those ones lurking around which they can see, but those they do not see; therefore, everybody should be on the alert to do his duty. When striking on the doors of non-initiates and women houses as they move round the towns and villages, they do so with great alacrity and seeming violence just to strike fear and awe. Most traditional compounds have women houses separated from the men folk even if they are not those of concubines or of polygamous wives. Another idea is to teach people that "all that glitters is not gold". They fall within the third class or category of EKPO NY? H? .

EKPO IKPE: EDERI-OBO MARKET DAYS

As the name implies, this Grade of Ekpo was certainly "purchased" from IKONO as also Annang country, specifically Ikpe Annang and Ikpe Ikono clans because as observed already, EKPO NY? H? is not native to ancient URUAN/ EFIK and there is no EKPO fraternity of any Grade in the whole EFIK kingdom till today. However, URUAN having moved and settled upland had to come in contact with the largest concentration neighbouring towns and villages in Ibibio country of Akwa Ibom State if not in the whole of Nigeria. URUAN therefore became surrounded by and sharing same borders with a number of Ibibio sub-tribes to wit: Etoi, Oku and Offot clans, all in UYO LGA; Itu and Itam clans in Itu LGA; Okobo in Okobo and Oron LGAs, Ibesikpo in Ibesikpo-Asutan LGA, Nsit in Nsit Atai LGA and Odukpani LGA in Cross River State, etc. including IKONO which group of villages are within URUAN itself. Hence they must have contracted one or the other of these Grades from these border clans and sub-tribes around them and from Annang country. In fact, URUAN kingdom seems to have in her fold the largest conglomeration of aliens in her territory since it runs from north to south through the entire Akwa Ibom State.

These "Ekpo spirits" being eminently exotic and esoteric are notably weird and wild both in their bearing and especially in their outlook during "outings". Over the ages, nations have fashioned out their own peculiar ways of contracting these divinities to which they have elected to pay allegiance and worship. Ekpo Ikpe masquerades species perform on this day perhaps because the market day is universal and operates throughout Ibibio and Annang territories. There are many EDERI-OBO markets spread throughout the length and breadth of these areas and most often very big and important markets which draw hundreds of thousands of people from far and near. Popularly tagged URUA EDERI-OBO these markets "sell" all kinds of merchandize except perhaps exotic articles like cars, otherwise there is nothing one cannot find there including "live heads" and other parts of human beings ostensibly for ritual purposes. It is muted that in the olden days these were also slave markets hence the sale of human parts for mystical and ritual performances. In URUAN territory, there was the popular ancient ITUK MBANG EDERI-OBO market but has now been taken over by neighbouring EKPENE UKIM, both in URUAN south. For over ten years before the Nigeria-Biafra war, there was a bitter land dispute between these villages which later snowballed into serious controversy over the market leading litigations and court cases which lasted for years as none was ready to shift ground "acquitted or guilty" because Ekpene also "celebrated" their market on the same day. It was only the civil war that settled it all and they went their separate ways. But since ITUK MBANG with a strong stranger settler elements suffered so greatly during the war, the town became almost a ghost town when the citizenry returned from "it?k ek? " to see their town burnt to ashes. EKPENE UKIM on the other hand was not so unlucky and the people were able to pick up the pieces and muster whatever potentials they could and were able to rapidly rebuild both their town and market with the result that not long after, their market experienced a big boom and has since flourished till today.

The point in this EDERI-OBO MARKET DAY issue is that EKPO IKPE spirits whose "appearance and outing" fall on this market day, true to their bidding, are wont to be ferocious and wild to counter the influx and great concourse of people into the EDERI-OBO markets from all corners of the neighbouring states around. That is why the Ekpo Ikpe spirits there "appear" in their numbers very fierce looking, intoxicated and wild and can beat the broad daylight from any daring woman, child or un-initiate including visitors who do not behave "manly enough". They are here to put people on their toes and be about their business. In other words, their main raison d' etre is to alert people and make them behave orderly both humanly and humanely and not in a disorderly manner like animals. The idea in all this is that in human life, there is the need to hunt down law breakers and those who may behave untowardly and carelessly in town; hence the need to instill discipline among the citizenry to enable them exhibit a certain amount of manliness in their actions and to keep people in their places. It is the same thing, that people expect, which informs the Nigerian State to put soldiers and the police out on national election days ostensibly to put order into and make people behave and mean business when they troop out to carry out their civic responsibility. But Nigeria, true to type - I mean the political class especially the "Ruling party" abuse this civilized arrangement and turn the security forces against the people, using them for their perceived hidden agenda to bamboozle, intimidate and brow-beat their perceived political enemies into the bargain "and rig elections" to their benefit. Therefore, this genre of Ekpo Ikpe masquerades appearing on this manner as if running amuck, is meant to train people to learn to be always on their guard and alert and to be about their business and also to supply security and ward off dangers, wrong doing and evil practices in the markets. Idu URUAN Headquarters and market days equivalents fall on EDEM–ETAHA and OBO market days, but since the border town Mbak Etoi in Uyo LGA, operates an EDERE OBO market into which a large concourse of people passing to and through Idu, hence the appearance of this particular Ekpo Ikpe on this day.

INAUGURATION OF EKPO SEASON

Generally, EKPO there are three seasons in the year except EKPO EK? ? ? KEMBA and their inauguration takes place on Edere Obo market day with ritual cleansing and dedication of all those to be involved in the masquerades as organized by the Cult leader, OBONG EKPO. The same is the case with regard to the children's counterpart, EKPO NTOK EYEN which normally takes place after the EK? ? ? KEMBA luminal season. In the olden days the ushering in of the season was around the "first harvest" yam season. The ritual is performed at the AKAI EKPO, the customary abode of ancestral spirits who are supposedly responsible for giving birth to the masquerades. The three normal seasons include EKPO INWA? which is nowadays the first season and takes place around March /April after the bush-clearing period sequel to the planting season. The second normally comes up around June/July to usher in the harvesting of the first crops maize, yams etc. and this is sequel to EKPO EK? ? ? KEMBA which normally occurs around August. The third but not necessarily the last, if it is a luminal EKPO ND? K YEAR this takes place around October of each year. But the last occurring during the liminal year which is always an odd year like 2013, is EKPO ND? K season which falls due in November and lasts till December 31st with EDIKPAT ISUA and EDITUAK ND? K. During the preparations for the inauguration of each EKPO season, the Cult leader reminds members concerning EKPO laws and obligations of the cult while enjoining them to observe them to the letter. Within the inauguration season all the village playing grounds, roads and market squares are repaired and kept speck and span, the spirits always avoid dirty places and cannot perform in filthy and bushy grounds perhaps not to get injured or slip on such roads and grounds. Designated roads and foot-paths in the village are out of bounds, and they are sealed off with young palm fronds which are displayed at the entrance of these routes. During the season, the masquerades go from house to house announcing their presence by striking hard on the doors – women and non-initiate apartments to make sure the doors have been firmly locked perhaps also to prevent them watching from inside their rooms. At the initiates' homes the masquerades can call bye to relax and be entertained with drinks and UKA? delicacies but nowadays they may be offered some amount of money in a saucer placed on a small table outside or on the verandah. Since the Christian era, masquerades are not expected to appear on Sunday, they are also not to enter Church premises, but some violent ones do flout these orders with impunity. Towards the end of EKPO season the masquerades step up their aggressive activities with much alacrity, high handedness and violent displays. EKPO drums are played and in the case AYARA days, the EKA EKPO drums are sounded with high toned lamentations in their forests or EFE ie. EKPO lodges. There are three to five seasons in a normal year except the ISUA ND? K or leap year which always terminates with EKPO ND? K in December, lasting the enter month with customary ceremonies and rites on 31st December. The other EKPO seasons occur at the planting season – EKPO INWA? mostly staple crops viz. yam, cocoyam, pumpkin, sweet potatoes, March –April; EKPO UF? T ISUA coming on with the inauguration of EK? ? ? KEMBA August and finally EKPO US? R? IKONO season usually around October.

INITIATIONS INTO EKPO NY? H? URUAN

Just as with Ekpe, admission into EKPO cult is through initiation within a particular HOUSE of an Adept who is also the ? B? ? EKPO of that house. Membership of EKPO NY? H? , as also EKPO NTOK EYEN for boys, is open only to males who are bona fide sons of URUAN. This is very important type of official initiation and can be quite elaborate and costly lasting for days and months depending on the ability and financial muscle of the neophytes. But nowadays there are simpler ceremonies and mode of admission involving only the payment of some fee for initiation, part of which is to be shared among the older initiates at the close of the season, with or without any other prescribed items of kegs of wine, goats (fowls for EKPO NTOK-EYEN) and UKA? usually on the day of Inauguration or the last day and "sending off" ie. The close of EKPO season, UKPAT EKPO. The fees can be paid on the spot or to an ? B? ? EKPO cult Head so designated, and in this case it is simply a general admission at the kindred level. The rites take place at the AKAI UDA/UDU? ? ? EKPO where the initiates are rubbed with MBAT EKPO paste and marked with NSEI. Before the beginning of the ceremonies the big OBODOM and IBIT EKPO drums are sounded and people can hear from every corner of the town/village while non-initiates and women get indoors to await the return of the initiates bringing home all sorts of refreshments as "proceedings" from the event. Sometimes there is a symbolic bestowal of IDA? EKPO, ie. arrow and communication of EKPO secrets and laws to them. Thereafter, they can now take the oath of secrecy.

Initiation usually involves sacrifices to EKPO divinities and it is the cult leaders who take care of this at the designated ISO/ AKAI EKPO shrines. These rites as noted already involve SEPARATION, ie. the consecration and setting-apart of the neophytes -men/boys now initiated as MME ABAN EKPO cult members; TRANSITION which implies passing from an OKPO status (non-member) to a member status; INCORPORATION into the rank of an initiated member and finally COMMUNION ie. where sacrifices are involved through the communal sharing of the meal of sacrifice which the initiate participates in union with the old members and the divinities who have accepted the sacrificial offerings.
The special or complete Initiation is reserved for those who wish to aspire to the higher Grades whether as Adepts or MB? ? EKPO ie Commanders in-Chief. This is the traditional URUAN initiation as the simpler types are the same everywhere throughout the EKPO regions of West Africa. Here initiations are in staggered in stages and can last for weeks, months and years depending on the stability of the neophyte to be initiated. All these are arranged after paying due consultation fees and other requirements in order that it may be possible for the initiate to fully grasp the teachings, secrets and laws of EKPO NY? H? as a future EKPO king and leader and be able to organize himself, his business concerns, household and community, village or Clan in URUAN culture, mores, traditions and Weldtangschaaung. The same qualifications for initiation into EKPE Confraternity apply here too. An adept or OBONG EKPO can equally apply for the initiation of his young first son into this category of EKPO society. The initiation is a market day affair and depending on the Grade or principality of the masquerade to be initiated into, eg EK? ? EKPO - OBO, the initiate is expected to bring the prescribed fee and items some of which include a special 72litre keg of palm wine, gin or whisky, goat, UKA? etc to the cult leader's compound where the initiation is to take place. This means that such and such a person has officially been initiated into EK? ? EKPO which entitles him to participate only in the activities of EK? ? EKPO and be freed from its molestation and confrontations. Then on another market day eg. FI? ? ETOK, when he is initiated into EKPO ENYE? E NDAK, he now prepares for the same ritual initiations and presentation of the requirements and so on until he completes his initiation into all the Grades and principalities. On completion of the required initiations, a day is fixed for him to round off by cooking the UDIA EKPO banquet for the entire entertainment of cult members of his community or clan. He is now a full member of EKPO society in URUAN and can be introduced into all the EKPO NY? H? secrets, wisdom and norms and participate anywhere in the region. He also has acquired the prerogative of being made an Adept or ? B? ? EKPO in the future as he advances in the ranks with all the privileges, rights and duties appertaining. The author had to go through this type of initiation while yet a kid in the 1940s.

EKPO CULT ADMINISTRATION AND OFFICIALS

There are designated officials within the hierarchy of EKPO NY? H? and initiates can rise to higher ranks who exhibit a deep sense of responsibility, loyalty and capability. (a)THE ? B? ? EKPO: is the chief executive and apart from qualifications of heredity, he should also have been an Adept in other fraternities and cults eg EK? ? ? KEMBA, EKPE etc. His main duty is to preside over meetings as well as try cult cases coming up within his jurisdiction. He also intervenes in cases brought against the cult outside EKPO cult. He is the first to be contacted. He is the chief security officer of the cult as well as custodian of the property and documents of the cult and makes them available for use when the need arises. He is also the leader who in conjunction with masquerade officials performs the necessary sacrifices to flag off the inauguration or terminate the EKPO season. (b)THE AQUA EKPO: is another official within EKPO hierarchy whose function is to guide the masquerades in their outings and to take custody of the offerings made to them. He is usually very visible at ceremonial occasions because he is their mouth-piece since they must not talk. He always accompanies the masquerades with his EKPUTT rattles which he uses to sooth, pacify or coax the masquerades in their performances especially when members of the public are permitted to come out and watch during their outings. He is the Master of ceremonies and is to conduct the masquerades around the routes/arena where they are performing. (c) AMIA IBIT EKPO/DRUMMER: is another significant official in the EKPO Curia. He is the master drummer and a number of them can carry out this function that the masquerades on display behave as if driven by secret spiritual forces. As noted already, there are some cult principalities which are so mystically powerful that they can behave as if possessed to the point of causing grave bodily harm and even death to the members and even spectators. It is only this official that can tame them in order to put a certain amount of order and control into their activities. They perform very acrobatic displays to the admiration and wonderment of spectators. One of them AKWA-NKR? ? , who is an adept in the practice often takes charge of the EKA IBIT/OBODOM EKPO and the talking drums -NTAKR? K to regulate the rhythm and the dancing steps of the masquerades especially on AYARA ie EDEM-ETAHA market days, while the EKA EKPO blows the "dirge pot" at the EKPO forests as if mourning for her children "NDIT? EKPO". It simply means that his presence at such occasions is inevitable otherwise there can be no drumming or dancing (d) EKPO STEWARDS: There are usually two other functionaries who serve as stewards, the one to take charge and share the drinks, the other to take charge of eatables notably UKA? .

EKPO CRIMES AND OFFENCES

Nothing so provokes the wrath and sanctions of EKPO NY? H? as cases of violent and sacrilegious treatment of masquerades whether clandestinely, in public or in the open. For instance, it is regarded as taboo and the greatest sacrilege for a woman or a non-initiate to behold a half-masked masquerade let alone fighting with or unmasking him. Such an offence merited capital punishment by beheading or in classical URUAN traditional ritual action, EDIK? ? KE AFA, by driving a peg though the offender's head into the ground Cf. Jud 4:21-22) in atonement and expiatory sacrifice. In mitigating cases perhaps by reason of the personality concerned eg the wife or son of a traditional Ruler of titled chief, the maximum penalty could be waved and the culprit being fined a big sum of money in addition to offering a life cow as a substitutionary sacrifice. Other offence which can be regarded as minor offences since they do not attract maximum punishment include non-initiates using the barred routes, saying things offensive to the cult, falsely claiming to be initiates, initiation being carried out by non-Adepts, unauthorized use of EKPO outfits, embezzlements of offerings collected, injuring a masquerade even by initiates, Adepts etc. For these and other offences of such categories, after carefully judging the culprits guilty merits the "beheading" by a single stroke of the matchet o a goat or number of goats either in tethered for this purpose at the house of the culprit or any goat(s) found within the culprit's vicinity by EKPO in addition to fines where applicable in expiation for the offence.

FUNCTIONS OF EKPO NY? H? IN URUAN

Just like Ekpe, EK? ? ? KEMBA, etc plays in addition very significant roles in URUAN society, religious, social, political even economic. First and foremost, URUAN progenitors instituted EKPO precisely for the security and preservation of the communities by enforcing and maintaining the customs and traditions. From the religious point of view, they determined ritual behaviour and regulated social attitudes thus strengthening the power and authority of Elders. Cult helped to inculcate in the people the belief in life after death and to express the possibility of communication between ancestral spirits and their living kith and kin, a belief and doctrine hitch made it easy for URUAN Christians to readily accept the dogma of the Communion of Saints, the Resurrection of the body and life everlasting. The offering of libations taught the people how to make occasional prayers of petition, invocation of ancestors/Saints, making of offerings with a view to receiving favours from God by channeling them through the intercession of ancestral spirits /Saints when the occasion demanded it. Above all it taught the people the unique belief about good and virtuous living both by individuals and the corporate communities. Even when penalties were infected on offenders whether proportionate or not, all the same it taught the people to learn to be law-abiding, to avoid evil and confrontations with lawful authority or their representatives, in this case the masquerades.

On the political dimension EKPO society just like EKPE and EK? ? ? KEMBA has always been an arm of government since it is responsible thee maintenance of law and order and with the masquerades in tow the cult is used by community leaders, village and Clan Heads to ensure that communal functions and other activities requiring maximum coercion for the co-operation of the entire community are carried out eg corporate work on sanitation days, building of a church, school or even clearing the bush for community farms, cleaning of market and village squares, etc. Men and women in the community who may have planned their individual business on these days are compelled under sanction of disobedience lawful authority to abandon their private business and acquiesce. Penalties include forceful compulsion to obey the community summons failure of which is tantamount to violation of EKPO laws with the consequences appertaining. Not even a titled chief or Ruler of prince is exempted when EKPO is inveighed to compel compliance unless duly excused by the supreme Ruler in Council of that community. EKPO can be lawfully used to open new roads in the community, prepare for functions at which all able bodied citizen must co-operate towards the success of the function or celebration, eg. the reception of a Governor or in earlier times colonial officers like the District Officer - the DO, Resident or Consul. In the early times, EKPO leaders constituted the majority of the village, district or clan councils and as such, they formed the government of any community in URUAN. It is therefore not difficult to see why good, sanitation, security, you name it, was very effective especially up to the colonial period and why it could not be absolutely banned because the cult greatly enhanced colonial organization and governance.

On the social order EKPO cult has always been an instrument of social control mechanism for ridding the society of anti-social and undesirable elements and structures like armed robbers, "cultists, withes and wizards etc in the community. In extreme cases can conveniently overpower or eliminate them during their season. Such evil persons have no place to hide unless they never come into the village even with or without police or soldier escorts, although nowadays kid-napping and hostage taking is taking over this role. In fact, in the olden days especially at liminal seasons of EKPO NY? H? could effectively eliminate such anti-social elements whenever the season was closing in. It is the only instrument that can be used to curb the excesses of troublesome and meddlesome money bags, the so-called elites and other powerful citizens who may use their influence and status to commit felony and oppression of the poor citizenry. It is obvious that they can use their influence and money to thwart justice and treat the Elders with impunity because they can easily get the police to do their bidding, but in many of such cases the authority of the community always triumphs because they cannot successfully fight EKPO to a finish.

As observed already the cult played an important part in moral and social security by ensuring that maximum order, normalcy, security, peace and tranquility reigned in the land as fighting, violence, quarrelling and bitterness were forbidden during its season because they tantamount to sacrilege and any breach could attract the sanctions and penalties above. It helped in the recovery of debts owed especially to wives of members and the weak in society as they could run to it for redress. This gave the society cohesion and served the regular duty of policing the entire environs to keep people on the alert. Even during wrestling contests, EKPO masquerades policed the arena to ensure orderliness, harmony and security. This means that people had to strive to always live and let live in peace and harmony. In some societies of Ibibio and Annang, the people used masquerades in condemnation of evil behavior, bad manners and absence immoral activities and for the ridiculing of miscreants in the community. Sometimes their agents like EKPRI AKATA were effectively employed at nightfall to ridicule offenders especially young men and women and even adults of evil and easy living who did not respect themselves.

EKPO has been an organ of social control. Ekpo also offers social entertainments in its ceremonies, songs and dances and nowadays form part of the celebrations of Christian Feasts like Easter and Charismas and also State celebrations of Independence Day, receptions of VIPs whether in government or the Church. There are also some economic benefits of EKPO NY? H? especially as in the olden days most cult members earned their living from the initiation fees and other goodies of the cult. Even the cult leaders and financial officers, the stewards enjoyed such perks of the cult as consultation fees and from the initiates for teaching and directing those regarding EKPO NY? H? secrets and laws. Just as with Ekpe, at their initiation initiates give personal presents and gifts in kind and cash to the Adepts and functionaries and this greatly boost their economic status and needs. At cult liminal seasons especially when non initiates are harassed, quite a good number of them come out for initiation and as noted, proceeds from these initiation fees are shared equally to members. Even as a kid, I enjoyed also these perks and sometimes my father used the money to buy special shoes and loin cloth in tow for me. Apart from the fees, masquerades themselves were often given offerings though sometimes they used coercion to collect offerings from both members and non-initiates by intimidating them. On the community level leaders as law-makers of the land do on occasions place an embargo on the harvesting of crops and economic trees like oil palm, kukip, piassava etc and owners had to stay off. The village or clan Council can them appoint a day when these were to be harvested and prepared to raise funds for the projects in the communities including giving scholarships, building schools, town halls etc. In the colonial days this was the method used in collecting taxes as they could easily round up tax evaders from their hide-outs especially the youths from sixteen years of age who were by law obliged to pay tax as also getting funds to pay levies ordered by the authorities, the Assumed Local Contributions for their children in schools in lieu of school fees. EKPO cult also collected fines from both members and non-initiates. Since cult members were in charge of such collections, a certain proportion of the takings were given to them as allowances for their services to the community. But this does not mean that all is well with Elpo as also other traditional cults especially in recent times. This is as a result of the influence of modernism, Christianity and even the government of the day. In respect of Christianity and government, these cults are simply adjudged as heathen, violent and barbaric. In fact, the missionaries and Government merely tolerated the carryings-on of the cult societies in the so-called primitive societies perhaps owing to the fact that in some cases the cult greatly enhanced their work eg in building schools, town halls and preventing and punishing certain anti-social activities and crimes. Because of this and most importantly for its commitment to the policy of Indirect Rule, the colonial government helped in some cases to preserve certain traditional institutions in their traditional and cultural setting to serve as effective instruments of sustaining Indirect Rule. But in general the fanatical natives themselves caused more disaffection between the cults and host communities than these missionaries because they were their mouth-piece. The general attitude was that of contempt, blackmail and at best indifference; and as it did happen most of the pieces of land given out for building schools, churches etc were targeted at the EKPO forests and "sacred places". It is rather paradoxical that these revered places in URUAN towns and villages have become centres of development and culture, places which otherwise would have remained dark centres of fear, violence and intimidation. Also in most cases membership and active participation in these cults is forbidden to Christians since it is tantamount to idolatry and demon worship. But in order to prevent harassment by the cults Christians at least in colonial were permitted to mere get initiated by paying the fees and making the required offerings without getting involved in the actual initiation rituals and sacrifices. But it demanded on the other hand non-violence and free movement of people on the part of the cult perhaps as a mark of enforcing the people's fundamental human rights viz the right to life, freedom from torture and inhuman treatment, freedom of movement and of association.

In our examination of and treatise on the Mystery Cults of URUAN/EFIK, we have gambled in this Chapter, URUAN/EFIK traditional Cultic Confraternities beginning with Ekpe as the focal point, this time in the words of Etinnyin (Engr.) B. E. Bassey the esoteric writer on Ekpe EFIK, "to rend the veil a little" so as to show how Ekpe with EK? ? ? KEMBA and later when EKPO NY? H? Fraternity was also acquired from the IBIBIO, both became the treasury of wisdom which helped URUAN/EFIK communities to make sense of their immediate environment and to find their proper place as those among the civilized societies in the comity of nations and in the scheme of God's creation. This research was therefore designed to bring into focus some aspects of these mystery Cults and their teachings that had hitherto been buried as it were, in the sands of time due unfortunately to the wrong and unbridled living standards of later initiates and the evolving URUAN/EFIK society. I make bold therefore to exhort all well-meaning people, particularly those who love the truth to rise to the assistance of a people and culture that humanity should be proud of and I dare also to plead against their destruction by these very people to wit, URUAN EFIK citizens and aliens living in our midst, whom the Lord Jesus in His Infinite Wisdom and providence has elected to be the honoured beneficiaries and custodians thereof. Finally it is also my aim and considered view, and I hereby wish to call on all men and women of good will who will come by this book, as also lovers of whatever is true and just, whatever is noble and gracious, whatever is holy and modest, whatever is kind and gentle, whatever is good and pure, whatever is lovely and honourable and whatever is to be thought virtuous, and worthy of discipline and praise to arise and assist the initiates within and without, to learn from these blessings of God to us try to grow spiritually along the path of Christ as epitomized in these sacred doctrines and wisdom of URUAN/EFIK founding fathers and mothers of yore.

D MBRE AKATA/EKPRI AKATA URUAN

A NOTIONS & ORIGINS OF AKATA CULT IN URUAN/EFIK

Mbre AKATA or as popularly called EKPRI AKATA is not only played in URUAN/EFIK but also in other parts of Central and West African countries which form the YAM BELT as observed already concerning the distribution of peoples. It is traditionally also played along the Cross River groups of tribes and sub-tribes viz. Abakpa/Quas, Efuts, Ekoi/Ejagham, Boki, etc. in Cross River State; among the Ibibios, the sub-tribes of Etoi, Offot, Oku, Ibesikpo, Nsit, Ibiono, Itam, etc. ie. sub-tribes bordering URUAN in Akwa Ibom State; and Umuahia, Bende, Ohafia, Arochukwu etc. in Abia State which are also border sub-tribes of both Cross River and Akwa Ibom States. Similarly, certain clans, sub-tribes and villages both in Rivers, Bayelsa and Delta States are also known to be associated with the AKATA cult especially on account of their ancient trade links with URUAN/EFIK. Like all other cult societies, members go through certain initiation rites in order to attain the knowledge and secrets of those associated with the cult. There are two grades of the cult masquerades, the EKA (Mother) AKATA which is played during the day and the EKPRI AKATA, ie. the real Idem AKATA spirit which more often than not is played in the night for obvious reasons.

First of all, AKATA spirits are known to have come not from the areas and "countries" within which they operate but from "afar", ie. places thought to be very far away from the towns and villages where they are visiting, ostensibly to depict their potency and veracity of their occult powers in sooth-saying, invincibility and invisibility as also their craftiness and wisdom in divulging and explaining hidden events and mysterious occurrences within those areas of their operation. Should these spirits visit eg. towns and villages in URUAN they would claim to have come from far off" countries" away from URUAN territory, probably from the Rivers or Delta States, similarly if to EFIK territory, they would claim to have come from Igbo land or from the Cameroun Republic. The AKATA spirits also claim that they cannot and should not be watched because they are ugly being noseless hence they do not speak with the human voice but rather twist their mouths and noses in order to talk like noseless people. When asked for their names they prefer to confuse people by answering the same names such hat people cannot guess who they may be. The idea in all these is to preserve the secrecy in the organization and only initiates are able to discern, even the true identities and personalities of these human- spirits.

FUNCTIONS & ORGANIZATION OF AKATA CULT IN URUAN/EFIK

Just like other cult organizations in URUAN/EFIK like Ekpe, EK? ? ? KEMBA, etc. AKATA plays very significant roles in the society, the great f which is social and in most cases they are meant for the entertainment of the people as well as well as correcting societal misdemeanors, religious, socio-moral, political even economic. First and foremost, URUAN/EFIK progenitors institute AKATA cult precisely for the maintenance of the moral norms, security and preservation of the communities by enforcing and maintaining societal norms and standards. AKATA organization effectively does this through public ridicule and exposing of breaches of moral standards and norms of the society. It goes to the extent of exposing the names and identities of those members of the communities in the nation who have fallen fowl of or have flagrantly violated the laid down norms and standards of URUAN/EFIK by their untoward behaviours and through their actions and inactions which in the mind of the public is a violation of the laws of the land both moral, religious, economic and socio-political. AKATA constitutes the watch-dog of the communities in the territory and nobody may be presumed to be above the law. AKATA will expose all law transgressors without fear or favour. In a given context should a married man or woman flout any of the known societal laws against Matrimony such a culprit will be exposed even if he or she is the king or queen, prince or princess, noble or common. Those initiated in the cult are architects and experts in crime detection in the society and they spend their time and resources to acquire their expertise in their calling with of course the backing of the community funds and donations from individuals and groups as well as a reward from those who in one way or the other had been victims of the law breakers or had suffered in any way from infractions of the law. The ATAKA can also snuff out and expose all those who steal from farms or from barns, edep forests wine factories or from whatever sources and situations. Those who hide under and pretext to commit felony or flout the laws and injunctions contrary to laid down principles in social organizations, thrift; economic ventures etc. are also fished out by the AKATA.

In the area of entertainment AKATA cult members are great talkatives and liars with the craze for cracking jokes, poking fun of people and situations sometimes to the point of obscenities in the description of the crimes they intend to expose especially those bordering on male/female un-approved relations and scandalous behaviours. They can pretend to count /mention the number of those involved, the circumstances and situations; and in their exposition of the crimes they may exaggerate or confuse the figures in a roundabout way by saying eg. “It was six, seven then they may go back to three or four as the case may be simply to entertain but at the same time riddling and exposing the both the crimes and criminals. Their explanation to all these is: “Okut eti idighe mbia” implying that they are only doing their duty by “saying it as it is” and not as detractors or calumniators do to undermine people's integrity and good name. Certainly AKATA is not for that, they are telling the truth in the way that culprits can understand as also to alert and inform the society. AKATA cult makes use of sooth-sayers and fortune-teller's instruments like MFA or NT? KR? K to simulate their veracity and credibility in their words and actions ostensibly to make people believe that their knowledge and wherewithal come from the spirits which of course society accepts as credible and cogent. As observed already they operate only at nightfall or at cockcrow when people are expected to be in-doors and attentive. The cult season more often than not falls due at the tail end of the year shortly before and after Christmas when most of the citizens are in town for the Yuletide. The AKATA also helps in alerting and getting the citizens prepared for the Christmas and New Year celebrations which require above all god conduct and rectitude of life in words and deeds. In the olden days they used the opportunity to renovate and tidy up their environment by repainting their houses usually with NDOM clay and NSA? coloured muds excavated from certain stream and river beds. Then once the AKATA cult members have completed their “operations” and are satisfied that they have put the fear of God into transgressors and those who flout the law who by now must have been greatly shamed and rejected by God and humanity, they assemble at the market squares or designated compounds to exhibit their prowess in drumming, singing and dancing with assorted music depicting what they have just discovered in the communities while the gentry enjoy them in the comfort of their beds.

THE EKA AKATA DISPLAYS

There is also the daylight type of AKATA known as EKA or mother AKATA and this group operates in the day time and can be watched by the local gentry. The Eka AKATA always moves around the villages/towns with certain cult groups accompanied by those who act as babies and cows and dogs. The aim is to entertain people with these masquerade animals with the EKA AKATA mother leading the way. She dresses in beautiful fine silk materials and damask with NKISI velvet scarfs to match. She is a good singer and dancer with a dose of funny jokes to entertain. During her dance, she can run backwards and forwards sometime dashing out as if to "catch" some perceived enemy in front. Then people try to run for their dear lives, but she doesn't intend to or harm anyone. One forbidden thing concerning the cult which can attract very stiff penalties is divulging the identity of AKATA. This is vehemently frowned at by the society and if the matter is very grave it could lead to exacting very exorbitant fines in goods and in kind. The AKAKA spirits derive their potency and credibility from being "unknown", small wonder why under no circumstances their identities may be disclosed in any way whatsoever. They are spirits from the ancestors and therefore must be accorded due respect and wellbeing.

MBRE ATAT CONFRATERNITY IN URUAN-EFIK

E. ATAT CONFRATERNITIES AND DISPLAYS IN URUAN EFIK

There is also to be included among nightfall Cult Organizations another which is not universal among the kingdoms of URUAN/EFK but is very much enjoyed especially by the Cult members to wit the ATAT Confraternity displays which more often than not take place at night. Its raison d'être is two-fold; one to keep young women and adolescent girls from roaming about instead of helping their mothers in the kitchen. The cult is directed against the womenfolk because in the olden days evening time was usually the rush hour after returning from the market or farm and whatever enterprises or engagements to run down to the stream or river to fetch water for the evening household chores. On their going but most frequently on their return, some may drop their water pots or ikim gourds and even basins and akpan inwa hampers to go visit and gossip with their friends, peer groups and acquaintances in so doing while away and waste profitable time. In order to curtail this and maintain discipline and order in society and to keep the people at their posts the ATAT masquerades would be out on their tracts to "sting" make sure the women and those of easy virtue including young men loafing about who may also want to play truant and do funny things under flimsy excuses remain law abiding as they go about their different pre-occupations. They would certainly get into trouble as the masquerades would beat the daylight from their eyes. As a matter of fact, at night fall, since these masquerades wore scanty outfits, they would try not to be identified and therefore lurk under tree shades ready to pounce on those who do not want to play clean and smartly be about their business. Many of these women folk often try to run away for safety and in so doing fall down smashing their water pots/gourds and overturning their basins. Another main purpose for staging the plays at night was to keep alive and entertaining the funeral homes of very important titled chiefs and cult leaders in society such that the entire environment would always come alive with music, drumming, dancing and merriments during the entire period of the funeral and memorial activities of such important departed personages in society.

THE ATAT EVOLUTION & FUNCTIONS

The name ATAT applies to the stinging wasp insect which usually makes its nest under the roofs. It is often said that some powerful medicine men are known to cultivate these wasps to protect their homes and environments against physical attack by wicked enemies especially unwelcome visitors and those with evil intentions. Any untoward fellow getting into the compound uninvited or with evil intentions is often repulsed by swarms of wasps flying over his head and stinging him/her red and blue. Usually if this happens by happenstance or by mistake the medicine man would immediately discover that there was a "miscarriage of justice" and would readily apologize to the victim of attack and call the wasps to order. In such cases the victim gets instant relief and does not come to any harm, pain or inconvenience whatsoever afterwards. On several occasions I was an eye witness to this type of attack by "domesticated wasps" and saw people running helter smelter for dear life and the inmates and other members of the household and extended families and even their neighbours living around in other compounds would just go about their normal business unperturbed with indifference and sometimes with diffidence while others watch in askance laughing at the whole episode:" Serves him/her/them right", they would comment. In fact, what really happens is that there are sign notices all over the place exhorting visitors to keep calm and not be afraid but strictly warning those with evil intentions to stay clear. The sting of wasps is awesome and people are frightened to their marrows at the thought of getting stung, hence their fear and trepidation. Ancient URUAN/EFIK was a society of law and order and people at every instance were taught to be law abiding and to keep the peace. Even in modern times especially in big cities like Lagos, Abuja, Calabar etc. people are expected to be about their business and not loiter or roam about without any genuine business on hand as society frowns at this and suspects evil intentions or some wrong doing by those who wander about aimlessly. This was the situation that must have informed the formation of the ATAT/WASP Fraternity of old. It was just to enable people keep the peace and good order in the society. Good games and displays were tolerated and encouraged but not wandering about instead being about one's business at any given time and situation. The ATAT then had to be brought in to operate especially at those periods of the evening which formed the busiest period of the day when people would be returning from or going out for brisk business like going to the nearby streams or river-side to fetch water if water was not available in the house or to the evening markets and shops to purchase what might have been lacking usually for preparing supper or even snacks and other items of need close by.

THE ATAT SEASON & DISPLAYS

The ATAT Confraternity has no fixed seasons because its displays take place throughout the year except during the liminal days and months when other Cult organizations are expected to be on display viz. Ekpo Us?r? Ikono, Ek? kemba, Ekpo Nd?k etc. Again as observed already, the ATAT displays are always organized on the occasion of the demise of very important titled chiefs to back up the celebrations that often take place during the funeral and memorial ceremonies specially to keep the night activities alive and solemn. Clad in multi-coloured raffia outfits with or without head masks these beautifully attired masquerades smartly run "from pillar to post" as it were, shaking their ekput rattles to alert people that they are on the move along the edges on the road side. Their beautiful uniforms bear the replica of the Pontifical Vatican Swiss Guards. During my first visit to the Vatican in 1972, I watched mouth agape at the beautiful attire of these young Swiss soldiers guarding the Vatican City grounds especially St. Peter's Basilica Square. I was wondering whether the ATAT Masquerades from URUAN/EFIK were being hired to guard the Vatican. Like the ancient Roman Julius Caesar army outfit, the Vatican Swiss Guards wear something that looks like sliced velveteen purple or satin material which glossily shines at the slightest flicker of light making the Guards look beautiful and glorious with apoplectic and royal splendor as they stand guard and motionless. The ATAT raffia outfit drapes down to the ankles thus making it very light and easy for the masquerades to quickly run fast to get at their targets before they can scurry away to safety. Everybody can now comprehend why these Cult masquerades move like the ATAT and "sting with alacrity" like the wasp. When going about on acceptable business as enumerated above, the women folk and Okpo non-members and un-initiated males in the society are expected to go along with guides who themselves are initiated Cult members. At the approach of the masquerades, the guide leaders are expected to loudly shout to the hearing of the masquerades by saying "YIRE – YIRE", implying "I or we implore you to attach yourself "yire" = move into or stick firmly to your nests". Thus the masquerades would promptly run and hold unto the ropes which join the poles erected at intervals along the road side all over the village/town During the Cult season, just as wasps are wont to fly to their nests under the roofs or wherever they inhabit the masquerades would run and scamper to get hold of the ropes in order to allow the guides "lead the people" along unmolested. The poles are fixed on the ground some yards apart and secured with strong ropes to enable the masquerades run and hold unto the ropes while facing the edge of the road with their gaze completely away from the people since they are not expected to "behold the masquerades". That is why as soon as the ATAT season comes round; all roads in the town are lined up as described above intimating the citizenry that the ATAT season is close at hand. The road is now safe and clear for the women including strangers living among the people, visitors and other non-initiated members to go about their business until they approach the next Cult group along the way, in which case the guide/s would repeat the command for clearance and those going about their business would come to no harassment by the masquerades. When ATAT is on display at funerals and Memorials, a designated area is allotted to them at the funeral compound where they mount their poles as described above. Nobody except Cult members is expected to get near. During their night displays, they dress up this time wearing their beautiful and colourful face masks singing, dancing, and blowing the UTA horns, a unique spectacle to watch. When suspected non-cult members, women or visitors are passing through, they quickly run and hang onto the ropes turning their faces away from the gaze of the passers-by until the latter disappear into the inner part of the compound where the celebrations are taking place. The ATAT is simply meant to be a call-up for people to be law abiding while going about their lawful business and to respect the laws of the land. For the men folk it is to alert them to quickly get initiated once they have reached the age of majority so that they can go about their business unencumbered. ATAT initiations take place at their designated shrines after the fees and dues for registration and other aspects of initiation requirements including items for feasting have been met. The leit motif in all this is to make sure people join and participate in whatever Cult organizations the people are expected to initiate in both for their social life, entertainment and of course for the economic benefits, socialization and joyful moments and past times appertaining.

F. WOMEN CONFRATERNITIES - EBRE AND IBAN ISONG SYMBOLS OF WOMEN FRATERNITY ORGANIZATION

WOMEN PERSONALITIES IN URUAN-EFIK

Preamble: We would be failing in our examination of the numerous Cult societies in URUAN/EFIK if we did not include some of the Fraternities and past times that adorn the lives of different categories of women in the two kingdoms. Most of the women associations can be better described as clubs rather that cult groups because most of them do not necessarily bind members to any form of initiations and secrecy except perhaps one or two ie. Iban Isong and Abre. The latter was baptized and rechristened ka Adiaha ? b? – "Our Lady's the Princess of Heaven Organization" a.k.a Catholic Women's Organization C.W.O. Nigeria precisely in 1954 by the legendary first Cardinal of West Africa, the late Dominic Cardinal Ekandem. All that may be required for admission or registration into the Society is the payment of certain admission fees for registration, and the candidate is automatically regarded as a registered member. Two Associations mentioned above are strictly for adult women who in most cases must be married viz. MBRE ABRE and IBAN ISONG Societies. The others are mainly operative as past times, dances and entertainments. The EBRE society exercises social and judicial functions as members are usually expected to stage certain plays during traditional festivals eg. at New Yam Celebrations, Marriages, Memorials of Chieftains, Celebrations of Honours like award of Chieftaincy titles, Anniversaries, Dignities and Recognitions of Honour and other important personalities in society as also for newly registered members since these are occasions of festivities and rejoicing. Iban Isong in particular is the most vibrant and as a female traditional Institution/Cult, it is concerned with what may be classified as "Okpobom/ ? kp?kp? kp? Is? " ie. the overall Association/Organization which embraces all life and for all humanity on earth. Iban Is? as the name implies embraces the womanhood and therefore is concerned with the dignity, protection and wellbeing of the women folk with special reference to their rights and privileges. From its very designation, "Women of the Land" or "Traditional Community" it seeks the wellbeing of the entire common wealth, not just of the women but also all classes of the humankind, and deals with all aspects of life's endeavours and even the vagaries of life. It is also meant to discipline both men and women and to impose sanctions on those who flout their laws and those of the society as well.

DANCES ASSOCIATED WITH IBAN ISONG & EBRE SOCIETIES

In URUAN/EFIK, no celebration may be regarded as complete without the social dances associated with women since such dances and pastimes form the warf and woof of social entertainments in the land. These grades of dances in their colours, performances and costumes form the galaxy of women entertainments and dance in URUAN/EFIK viz: Abang, Awa, Uwa Iban, Abinsi, Ayo, Eme-idem, Ekombi Ikpaya, Konkoma, Mbaya, Ntimi, Udominyang, Ukwa Iban etc. including the Abre dance itself. Most of the instruments used aside those listed in the pictures are kwo , Aba Mbre, it?kr?k, nsak and Aba ukot which is either placed on the ground or placed between the thighs and beaten with a foam-padded card with a handle. The bottom of the pot is always secured with padded foam material to give it a soothing, soft, and gentle sound. The distinguishing factor in any of these is the characteristic costumes, drumming/music accompaniments and dance/dressing styles and also in the movements of the legs, back, waist and hands. In particular, the ABRE IS? or ABRE AYAK dances are often organized to sensitize and fire the women fold into action especially those who may be too slow and full of languor and sloth. Various slogans and expressions are used to maximize and ginger the women into action. At such displays exclamations and interjections like: Ko – Ko – Ko ! Ukpabio, Ukpabio –o! Iyay?! Abre timm - Abre timm: ? du?! Iban Is? ?–o: Iyah! Iban In? Uyo – o: 0-0-0! OR more emphatically: Is? , Is? , Is? Odot Ukana: Odot Ukana Iban/Is? ! OR Is? , Is? , Is? , Fud: Ede e/Abit! and on a more dramatic and special occasion, Iban kohore: kohore Iban! Iban Asian: Asian Iban! Iban Ndoho:

Ndoho Iban! Uya: Uyai Iban! Iban In? Uyo-o: 0-0-0! Such type of exclamations are the prerogatives of women and often set the women on frenzy, energize and empower them to set into action and set about doing whatever they have purported to do with a finesse and dispatch, eminently admirably and ennobling. Some of the exclamations above are typical qualities and endowments which adorn mostly women of valour and honour as also women of colour and integrity. They colour and adorn them with beauty, coolness, gentleness, alluring/allurement, attractiveness, "delicateness" etc. Such epithets are bound to set those women who in fact find themselves in these categories on frenzy making them gesticulate and fall on top of one another with mirth, glory and full of happiness with themselves.eg.

ABRE ASSOCIATION SEASON AND DISPLAYS

As observed already, there is no specific season for the Organization to go on display, but almost always it is during the month of October shortly after Ekpo Ikono season has been celebrated when by then there is not much to be done in the farms, the women get set to organize their own season of ABRE. In the olden days, October or the so-called "ember month" was considered optimal for initiations and getting adolescent girls to get into the traditional UF? K NKUH? seclusion Rites preparatory to their Nuptials in December. It was also considered appropriate to mark it as the last of the Celebrations of the year. The seclusion Rites are usually signaled by ASE IBIOK – a litany of achievements and exploits of the men and women of valour who had gone to the war front and come back hale and sound like those IDU valiant youths who got conscripted into the Nigerian Army at Okoyong for the grand battle for the liberation of Calabar, Uyo and Port Harcourt, and who returned in glory after the fall of Port Harcourt to the waiting hands of their parents and fiancés. It was meant to be a sort of Eulogies and Ballads specially organized in praise of womanhood in the land. Such ballads are almost always staged for the Enthronement of a New Obong of Calabar or the Nsomm of URUAN. There are also special dances to signal this momentous season climaxing in the playing of the xylophone of which women are experts in URUAN/EFIK.

Part of an ASE for the Coronation of the Obong of Calabar could read like this:

MFIN EMI EDI AKWA USEN	ASE-O!	TODAY IS A VERY IMPORTANT DAY
EDI EDISE UTIBE KP?	ASE-O!	COME AND WITNESS WONDERS
OKUT KP? K'ENYIN ENYE ? FI? K MBUK	ASE-O!	IT'S THE EYE WITNESS THAT CAN SAY

IBAN IS? INITIATIONS & MEMBERSHIP

Iban Is? Organization in particular demands that women be properly initiated and registered into the Register of members. This is also a special avenue to raise revenue for the Organization and for the upkeep of officials. Certain qualifications and conditions as in every other Cult Society like this are demanded for registration. Intending members above all must be women of probity and in most cases married. Widows and mature girls already undergoing puberty rites and fattening are also eligible after thorough screening and recommendations from initiated women of honour. It is also required that women aspiring to be members are disciplined, morally sound, not flippant and querulous or heavy drinkers, hardworking, respectful, gentle and generous. That is why women often regard themselves as members of Nka ? f?n

Mbuk, implying that the character and behaviour of these women speak for them. Any cult member convicted as a thief - in? or gossiper – owo inua-ik? is summarily expelled and if only a neophyte, she cannot be formally initiated into the Cult. Non-initiates are forbidden to use the slogans of the Cult just as the non-initiate in Ekpe is as also giving the slogan command. Members are usually organized into two grades the Adepts and titled groups designated Mkpisong Iban with their leader designated as Oku Idem Anwan or Obong-Anwan. They are very prominent in every village or town and have great influence as women of honour and valour in society because they are deputed to be under the inspiration, direction and guidance of their deceased cult leaders – the Mbukpo ancestors. The second grade includes the versatile lady/ordinary members designated as Iwat Iban ie. agile and sporty women of society. For the actual Initiation Rites, neophytes and candidates seeking admission into membership in the Cult are expected to pay a certain amount of money not exceeding, and equivalent to two thousand Naira for the initial fee and up to three thousand Naira for other sundry and specified requirements according to the Categories of Iban Isong prevalent in the area and for which initiation is sought. For the socials and other items of entertainments, these include iso Abia equivalent to five large yam tubers, a specified number of Eto-iyak in bundles of assorted smoked fish, special fish like akpan ata, anim etc. including stock fish for the uka , a specified number jars of palm wine and crates of drinks, and for offerings and decorations for those who want to adorn their legs, necks and backs (since they are no longer expected to go half nude wearing only ikpaya cloth up to the waist as of old) mme-mme, ndom clay placed in usang usi? earthen wares as also uf?n/nsei coloured powder. wewep leaves are also used as a sign and symbol of fruitfulness and peace and represent the Itum? used by Idem Ekpe as a mark of honour and friendship to express that the Association is one without malice, with no intentions of evil/harm intended or wished. Then on a specified day of Initiation which usually falls on an Obo market or Edere Obo day, all the initiated cult members appear in their numbers gaudily and gaily attired. They march in procession, first to the Oku Idem Anwan compound for the bestowal of tokens, adornments and dressing up of the initiates and afterwards all march in proceed to the town square or market for the displays ostensibly for the entertainment of the public and admiration. There the initiates are formally presented as it were to the nation. All join in dancing and merriment thereafter. It is usually a red letter day for the women in town as they appear in their various outfits and adornments to add colour and grace to the occasion. Individual members can arrange for their invited guests and acquaintances at their homes thereafter.

SYMBOLIC INSTRUMENTS OF THE ORGANIZATION

The Akpan MBRE with IKWA IBOM and ABANG MBRE constitute the highest point in all women paraphernalia in their performances and dances and these are special ornamented "basket" AKPAN MBRE. These contain those adornments for initiation and symbols of womanhood carried on the head by the dance leader who is regarded as the master-mind of the show or display. Akpan Mbre is a specially woven traditional basket made from ? b? or kukip and is covered with mat ie. ikiben material. Strapped on top of the Ikiben is the Ikwa Ibom, also an ornamented matchet decorated from the customary sword symbolizing the instrument of warfare since the Cult is the men's counterpart as a version of the men's warrior Society in URUAN/EFIK. The whole Akpan when completely structured looks like a curved ark typifying the Jewish "Ark of Covenant which contains traditional ritual items relevant to womanhood. It typifies the symbol of female Royalty characteristic of UBONG Iban OBIO – "Women of the Town/Kingdom". It is only the Oku Iban who may carry the Akpan with sword. The Obong Anwan Oku Idem is the sole Trustee of the paraphernalia of Iban Isong and often has a shrine designated for her office use. It is also her sole prerogative to get in and out from the shrine. in order either to take out or bring from the Shrine instruments such these as the occasion demands. Certain requirements, usually natural, adorn the personality of both the bearer and dancer-in-Chief and these concern the personal physique her bearing, her gait including her facial beauty, stature, make-up, carriage, weight, colour of skin, the hair-do, voice, dancing ability, etc. Sometimes it could also be said that such women with these abundant adornments are born not made and this can be true because such women are usually, naturally endowed.

With regard to IBAN ISONG a.k.a WOMEN OF THE LAND organizations, their raison d'être is above all, to provide a voice and status to the women folk in society and as well enable them carry out their statutory functions regarding the upholding of the dignity of womanhood in such a way that womanhood may not be abused or dragged into the mud. It is therefore the duty of the Organization to exercise their authority, to discipline and sanction anybody, no matter how highly placed – men and women – who may trample upon and debase womanhood. Iban Isong therefore deals with womanhood, the dignity and wellbeing of women as an organ of the protection of the rights of womanhood in the land. More than anything else, this Organization is the counter part of the men's EKONG Warrior Society since in ancient times, it was customary for warriors' wives and other women from noble families to march out gaily dressed in special men' attire girded with swords to the battle fields. On occasions such as these, the women would parade along the streets singing and dancing war songs just as it is being done nowadays during Carnivals. In those days they used to accompany the men fighters to the war fronts as scouts.

FUNCTIONS OF EBRE & OTHER WOMEN CLUBS IN URUAN/EFIK

The EBRE Society still remains one of the main titled Confraternities specifically the prerogative of the women folk. Though open to women of all Age-Grades, and as observed already, it is generally organized by mature women, ie. women who are legally married. It strikes a note midway between Freemasonry and Trade Unionism which Talbot (189-192) has observed that women employ it to seek redress and fight against the tyranny of their men folk should they infringe upon their legitimate rights. One main aspect of this society concerns the dress code of their members which may vary from tribe/clan to tribe, and may be quite elaborate, extravagant and often times very expensive to the extreme so much so that only the wealthy can afford to join. EBRE has many varieties of plays and dances to entertain and may be organized according to the seasons and circumstances mentioned above. Its principal rule is the authority it exercises over the unmarried girls. It also supervises the boudoir fattening houses where young adolescent girls and ladies are being prepared for their marriage as was the vogue in ancient times because the custom is gradually dying out. The other function in the community is the restraining of the conduct of women. Nowadays the Church has adopted this Confraternity of Women and re-christened it as KA ADIAHA ? B? – the Princess of the Lord in what Vatican II has tagged Catholic Women Organization (CWO) and even adopted by the Nigerian Constitution in the National Council of Women's Societies (NCWS). But these women's Organizations are organized mainly for entertainments since most of them involve a great deal of music and dancing for the entertainment and amusement of the public in general. They also promote the social and cultural life of the women in particular. Certain taboos, moral duties and regulations are drummed into the minds of initiates to help them behave appropriately and to curb certain undesirable habits and practices among the members. The whole import in these organizations is the welfare, self-discipline and good order in the society. The organizations especially in the past also enabled the women to have a say in the governance and socio-political affairs of the society. They gave the women not only a voice but also social status to stand side by side with the men and to be able to contribute towards the welfare of society. The EBRE in particular was organized in such a way that women had a reckoning and were able to exercise a great influence in the political and social orders especially towards the maintenance of law and order. Social practices included singing, dancing and the recitation of poems including folk-tales to teach their young girls manners and rectitude of life as also the use of appropriate costumes and fashion relevant to the norms and taboos of society.

SANCTIONS AND RULE OF LAW IN WOMEN CONFRATERNITIES

As observed already the main function of women in society is to lead their children and wards who will grow up to become law abiding citizens of the society and in the land. It is therefore their duty to mete out disciplinary penalties and punishments to women and girls guilty of misdemeanors or acts of public disgrace which in their judgment have debased or lowered the dignity of womanhood. That is why one of the most important services to be rendered is that of sanctioning offenders, both men and women and those who have abused womanhood. Some sanctions usually take the form of exacting fines – ISOP Iban Isong which can be money but in most cases, and depending on the severity of the offense, it can also involve demanding goats, chickens, yams drinks and other kinds of consumables to assuage the women. In addition, it can even involve stiff fines and impositions including the confiscation of property just to humiliate and "waste" the offender and bring him/her to his/her knees. No person in society no matter his/her rank who incurs a sanction can escape the law running its course to its logical conclusion so that he/she can experience the full weight of the law. But in modern times the organization has come to be integrated to serve the purpose of the Young Christian Women's Association (YCWA). As a disciplinary outfit to curb immorality in speech and acts, anyone found guilty of using obscene language, or dressing/behaving in appropriately can be sanctioned with heavy fines accompanied by confiscation household of property or even the destruction as also laying waste whatever they can destroy round the premises of those who have committed such heinous crimes to debase womanhood. Whenever certain abominations are enthroned in the land eg. gay marriages, rampant rapes and whenever obnoxious laws and impositions are made to cower and oppress the women in the Common weal, IBAN ISONG would immediately rise to action to condemn and organize public demonstrations in such a way that those in authority would have no choice but to toe the path of sanity and the rule of law and justice and to capitulate with immediate effect or otherwise incur the wrath of women just like the British Colonial Government was taught a lesson at the Aba women's Riot in 1929 during the taxation crisis in the land.

There are so many other instances when the Organization would rise to action in order to set things right. If there are inexplicable calamities of armed robbery, kidnapping etc. the Organization would rally the women to go on demonstrations and sometimes go nude and get set to "pour their MBIAM" round of the town or village and even the entire territory to register their protest; and in most cases things would get back to normal as nobody wants to incur the wrath of the women in society. In such cases they can end up taking strike action against the men folk and against the children too because the fear of IBAN ISONG is always the beginning of wisdom in the land. In such cases nobody would fetch water or firewood, no cooking as the women would cause all, cooking utensils to disappear, washing or dressing up the children would be tabooed, hence no going to school, no paying of matrimonial debts as the women would defy their beds and make themselves odious and all these could paralyze the entire polity and bring everything to a standstill thus reducing public administration to a failure and ineffectiveness. Whenever a situation becomes intractable and IBAN ISONG decides to take action, it means that everything in the land has ceased to work. It has become a failed situation and only the drastic measures of the Organization can set things right. In 2010 at the height of the insurgency and rampant kidnappings in Edo State, the Oba of Benin had no choice but to rise to the occasion to contend the situation by calling upon IBAN ISONG to take action and call off the bluff. The Women went nude and bare-breasted and there was instant curfew to end the invasion and inequities in the State and kingdom. This may be what the nation needs now to call off the bluff of Boko Haram in Northern Nigeria.

ANCIENT POPULAR GAMES/DANCES IN URUAN/EFIK

Preamble: We would be failing in our examination of the numerous Cult societies in URUAN/EFIK if we did not include some of the Fraternities and past times that adorn the lives of different categories of women in the two kingdoms. Most of the women associations can be better described as clubs rather that cult groups because most of them do not necessarily bind members to any form of initiations and secrecy except perhaps one or two ie. Iban Isong and Abre. The latter was baptized and rechristened ka Adiaha ? b? – "Our Lady's the Princess of Heaven Organization" a.k.a Catholic Women's Organization C.W.O. Nigeria precisely in 1954 by the legendary first Cardinal of West Africa, the late Dominic Cardinal Ekandem. All that may be required for admission or registration into the Society is the payment of certain admission fees for registration, and the candidate is automatically regarded as a registered member. Two Associations mentioned above are strictly for adult women who in most cases must be married viz. MBRE ABRE and IBAN ISONG Societies. The others are mainly operative as past times, dances and entertainments. The EBRE society exercises social and judicial functions as members are usually expected to stage certain plays during traditional festivals eg. at New Yam Celebrations, Marriages, Memorials of Chieftains, Celebrations of Honours like award of Chieftaincy titles, Anniversaries, Dignities and Recognitions of Honour and other important personalities in society as also for newly registered members since these are occasions of festivities and rejoicing. Iban Isong in particular is the most vibrant and as a female traditional Institution/Cult, it is concerned with what may be classified as "Okpobom/ ? kp?kp? kp? Is? " ie. the overall Association/Organization which embraces all life and for all humanity on earth. Iban Is? as the name implies embraces the womanhood and therefore is concerned with the dignity, protection and wellbeing of the women folk with special reference to their rights and privileges. From its very designation, "Women of the Land" or "Traditional Community" it seeks the wellbeing of the entire common wealth, not just of the women but also all classes of the humankind, and deals with all aspects of life's endeavours and even the vagaries of life. It is also meant to discipline both men and women and to impose sanctions on those who flout their laws and those of the society as well.

DANCES ASSOCIATED WITH IBAN ISONG & EBRE SOCIETIES

In URUAN/EFIK, no celebration may be regarded as complete without the social dances associated with women since such dances and pastimes form the warf and woof of social entertainments in the land. These grades of dances in their colours, performances and costumes form the galaxy of women entertainments and dance in URUAN/EFIK viz: Abang, Awa, Uwa Iban, Abinsi, Ayo, Eme-idem, Ekombi Ikpaya, Konkoma, Mbaya, Ntimi, Udominyang, Ukwa Iban etc. including the Abre dance itself. Most of the instruments used aside those listed in the pictures are kwo , Aba Mbre, it?kr?k, nsak and Aba ukot which is either placed on the ground or placed between the thighs and beaten with a foam-padded card with a handle. The bottom of the pot is always secured with padded foam material to give it a soothing, soft, and gentle sound. The distinguishing factor in any of these is the characteristic costumes, drumming/music accompaniments and dance/dressing styles and also in the movements of the legs, back, waist and hands. In particular, the ABRE IS? or ABRE AYAK dances are often organized to sensitize and fire the women fold into action especially those who may be too slow and full of languor and sloth. Various slogans and expressions are used to maximize and ginger the women into action. At such displays exclamations and interjections like: Ko – Ko – Ko ! Ukpabio, Ukpabio –o! Iyay?! Abre timm - Abre timm: ? du?! Iban Is? ?–o: Iyah! Iban In? Uyo – o: 0-0-0! OR more emphatically: Is? , Is? , Is? Odot Ukana: Odot Ukana Iban/Is? ! OR Is? , Is? , Is? , Fud: Ede e/Abit! and on a more dramatic and special occasion, Iban kohore: kohore Iban! Iban Asian: Asian Iban! Iban Ndoho: Ndoho Iban! Uya: Uyai Iban! Iban In? Uyo-o: 0-0-0! Such type of exclamations are the prerogatives of women and often set the women on frenzy, energize and empower them to set into action and set about doing whatever they have purported to do with a finesse and dispatch, eminently admirably and ennobling. Some of the exclamations above are typical qualities and endowments which adorn mostly women of valour and honour as also women of colour and integrity. They colour and adorn them with beauty, coolness, gentleness, alluring/allurement, attractiveness, "delicateness" etc. Such epithets are bound to set those women who in fact find themselves in these categories on frenzy making them gesticulate and fall on top of one another with mirth, glory and full of happiness with themselves.eg.

ABRE ASSOCIATION SEASON AND DISPLAYS

As observed already, there is no specific season for the Organization to go on display, but almost always it is during the month of October shortly after Ekpo Ikono season has been celebrated when by then there is not much to be done in the farms, the women get set to organize their own season of ABRE. In the olden days, October or the so-called "ember month" was considered optimal for initiations and getting adolescent girls to get into the traditional UF? K NKUH? seclusion Rites preparatory to their Nuptials in December. It was also considered appropriate to mark it as the last of the Celebrations of the year. The seclusion Rites are usually signaled by ASE IBIOK – a litany of achievements and exploits of the men and women of valour who had gone to the war front and come back hale and sound like those IDU valiant youths who got conscripted into the Nigerian Army at Okoyong for the grand battle for the liberation of Calabar, Uyo and Port Harcourt, and who returned in glory after the fall of Port Harcourt to the waiting hands of their parents and fiancés. It was meant to be a sort of Eulogies and Ballads specially organized in praise of womanhood in the land. Such ballads are almost always staged for the Enthronement of a New Obong of Calabar or the Nsomm of URUAN. There are also special dances to signal this momentous season climaxing in the playing of the xylophone of which women are experts in URUAN/EFIK.

Part of an ASE for the Coronation of the Obong of Calabar could read like this:

These and others to come namely, all kinds and classifications of birds and animals in the animal kingdom including vegetables in what can be termed PLANTS AND ANIMALS form part of what Dr. E. N. Amaku very eminently and powerfully describes as past times for children. They can be very interesting plays or Drama to poignantly teach children to recognize and at the same time be able to name common animals in the Animal Kingdom in Efik including birds, fishes, trees etc. In those good days, these plays used to be dramatized during the moonlight. The modus operandi of the drama involves choosing usually a mature girl or preferably a Mater familias a.k.a a venerable, amiable, knowledgeable and benign old woman in the kindred to preside as "PRESIDENT/KING OR QUEEN "over the exercise. Another single-minded, not a mischievous of flippant little girl is also selected to act as the "MESSENGER" of the Drama as second dramatis persona. When everything is set, the two women sit a little far away from the "CROWD" opposite them out of earshot where they will direct the exercise. Thereafter the ""PRESIDENT "directs the "MESSENGER" to go over to the "CROWD" of people ie. children, students or pupils sitting in a line or two to inform them that the Queen is requesting them to mention the correct name of the fish, animal, tree, or bird she has chosen. Anyone who mentions it would be rewarded by sitting beside the Queen. Meanwhile the particular name of animal, bird or tree to be mentioned by the people is known only to the "MESSENGER" who has been briefed beforehand by the "PRESIDENT/QUEEN ". The altercation between the "KING/QUEEN "and the "MESSENGER takes this form:

"Go to my people (Children, pupils, etc.) and tell them to mention the choice I have briefed you eg. "SHARK or ANTELOPE", etc.: "Ka k?d?h? mm? ete yak eta Ede OR Edop"! Then the "MESSENGER" goes and asks them to mention what has been decided. One by one they try to mention the correct name of the object: eg. HERRING or LION. But these names are evidently wrong, so the "MESSENGER" continues till everyone in the CROWD" has made his/her response. If along the line, anyone among them mentions the correct name, the "MESSENGER will ask him/her to stand out in the middle and bow to the crowd. All will clap for him/her for mentioning the correct name, then of course everybody will then know that it was the correct answer or choice that was given. Then the winner will walk along with the "MESSENGER" to take the place of honour beside the "QUEEN ". But should none in the crowd be able to mention it, the "MESSENGER" would bow to the people and say: "Now I take back my HERRING or LION to the "QUEEN – o": Sese mada Ede mmi OR edop mmi ny? – o! Then the play would continue until many more animals, fish, etc. would have been mentioned. Sometimes the Drama would not terminate until the number of winners are exactly the required number. The winners must fill the number of seats arranged for them beside the "QUEEN ". When there is sufficient time to carry on, the play would only terminate after all the participants as "CROWD" except one person, would have been able to mention the correct items. Then this unlucky participant who could not mention the correct name/s would be carried hands and feet by the "CROWD" and dropped at the refuse dump of the neighbourhood to shame him/her for being such an ignorant and lazy child. This beautiful and interesting play can be dramatized whether in English, Igbo, Yoruba, Tiv, or Hausa etc. The idea is to popularize the Indigenous Vernacular Culture whereby children/ students etc. can appreciate and learn to use their mother tongue and to be able to identify the local birds, trees, animals etc. in their local languages.

CHAPTER IV

URUAN-EFIK RELIGION–BELIEFS & PRACTICES
A. URUAN/EFIK CONCEPT OF GOD – HIS ATTRIBUTES

PROBLEMS OF RECOGNIZING AFRICAN RELIGIONS IN GENERAL

In URUAN/EFIK and throughout Africa and elsewhere, the problem of early religious and cultural history is enormous owing to the serious lack of archaeological and cultural – historical information because of the highly mixed cultural situation of our times. We do not have nowadays such so-called "primitive" societies of purely hunting –gathering peoples apart from a few relatively isolated Bushmanoid groups in the Kalahari Desert. It is therefore difficult to reconstruct with any certainty the original forms and patterns of religious change of any given African heritage such as URUAN/EFIK. Nevertheless, it is possible here, and this is the main aim of this enterprise, to attempt a reconstruction and interpretation of Uruan/Efik speaking religious culture through a combination of approaches viz field work projects, oral traditions, politico – cultural history, contemporary socio-religious analysis, philosophically and theologically oriented comparative analysis as also using traditional religious statements already employed by the early anthropologists, culture historians, ethnologists and Missionaries. By this perspective it will be possible to present a unifying notion underlying Uruan religious change whether from the point of view of cosmology and ethics or of ritual, Therefore in proposing this poly-methodic approach which seems to be dictated by the very nature of African Religions, effort is made to present Uruan religious culture as traditional religion, as an arrangement which is in line and sympathetic with the religion of our fore fathers, at least as that resulting from the sustaining faith held by our ancestors and founding fathers from time immemorial, and which to greater or less extent, is still practiced or at least acknowledged by URUAN/EFIK including some who purport to be Christians or Muslims or even agnostics. It is therefore not a theoretical treatise or a pseudo-science even though the use of western theological and ontological categories cannot be entirely ruled out. Western concepts where used are those taken from theological and philosophical discourses with a view to elucidating our African thought and experience – simply within concepts which apply to all cultures worldwide. Many early anthropologists, historians and in places, some high ranking Government officials like Hugh Goldie, James Watt, G. T. Basden, P. Amaury Talbot, R. F. G. Adams etc. of Old Calabar, who had come to these parts following the SCRAMBLE FOR AFRICA, tended to describe the Religion of Africans as PRIMITIVE – at least in the sense that whatever they discovered as in the lifestyles, practices, customs and traditions of Africans whom they regarded as under-developed and simple folks came to be tagged as PRIMITIVE, in contrast with the sophistications of their CIVILIZED society.(RAY, 15) usually based on inaccurate information and cultural prejudice, these people had tried to make African Religions appear to be a morass of bizarre beliefs and practices. Thus their perspective of Africa was that of a savage world, the reverse of European civilization. But it can be very misleading if not naïve when PRIMITIVE becomes associated with Religion. No one can in all seriousness maintain that Buddhism, Hinduism, or Islam (even at this time we are talking about) is primitive or unsophisticated religion to say the least, even though poverty, slum life and low standards of living are to be found in those areas where these Religions are practiced.

(B) PROBLEMS OF DEFINITION OF RELIGION

From any analysis of Religion, as soon as people begin to discuss whatever is to them "religion" the tendency will be to end up invariably with a moral consciousness and commitment to whatever they find themselves believing. This indeed is in recognition of what of course should be the general nature in the matter of what people regard as "Religion." so also in the study of religious science; a measure of commitment to the truths of transcendental realities already claimed for Religion, ie. a readiness to accept emotional attachment and psychological involvement in the objective understanding of what Religion should be all about as well as the study of true Religion. This means of course that we are embarking on the understanding of what St Augustine of something whose starting point is the premise of Faith for it is only in consequence of Faith, from believing that understanding comes and any talk about Religion takes this as its point of departure. So we are talking here about what Uruan people, nay Africans believe in. But Religion invariably extends to the external and secular expressions which involve such Disciplines as Philosophy, Psychology, Anthropology, History, Geography, and Sociology which come under the aspect of Phenomenology of Religion.

(C) GENERAL NOTIONS AND CONCEPT OF RELIGION

Every scientific study of Religion such as we are embarking upon here has for its subject matter religious facts and their manifestations (phenomena). These are drawn from the observations of the people's religious life viz Uruan, and their religious attitudes in specific areas such as prayer, rites and ceremonies, creeds, artifacts, etc. According to M. Dhavamony in his definition of religion they are also contained in people's conceptions of myths, symbolisms, beliefs about the sacred, supernatural beings, gods, ancestors, agents, prophets, diviners, etc. In fact, anyone who is absolutely uncommitted to any truths claimed for Religion and in this case African Religion vis-a-vis Uruan, will most likely disapprove of every religious assertion and become biased against Uruan Religion from the start. Religion must therefore be understood from within and from those who are religiously conditioned to using those categories that have arisen from the nature of Religion (Max Weber, 19). Therefore, some measure of commitment to or experience of the truths claimed for Religion is demanded otherwise the conclusions reached from mere academic understanding of will be irrelevant and absurd (Cantwell, 12). As we know, the history of religions deals with the most vital aspect of human life to the extent that it sees Religion as the deepest and noblest realm of spiritual and intellectual existence of man. Religion is not simply a matter of the heart it is even more so that of the mind; one which should affect our very marrows and contribute to the development of character and the affective domains of mankind. According to E.O James: Anything about Religion whether seen as an academic study or concerning a people s way of life should be:

> In the interest of inter-religious understanding and international peace… demands Both A historical and scientific approach, theological and philosophical evaluation, If it is to be understood in its essential nature and ever developing content (23).

Finally, any definition of Religion must be such whose content is related to the individual and his society. Only in this light can its relevance become obvious even to those disparaging it. Therefore, every religion should in its beliefs and practices be related to the nature and destiny of mankind. It is in this sense that I define Religion to tally with Uruan concept and understanding of Religion and what it means to the people. But many people see religion from the prism of their own understanding and perspectives and that might have informed the early European view regarding Uruan as seen above. The reason is simply this, that no one, not even an atheist or non-conformist denies or is ignorant of the existence of Religion. But we know that religion is as common place as trees and like trees, they grow in an endless variety of shapes, sizes and colours all over Africa, even the entire world. Some may be as gigantic like the Iroko tree; some as small as the twig, so too with the variants of religions. That is why there are so many shades of definitions of Religion. Some even say there is not really a true or adequate and satisfactory definition of Religion. A few examples will suffice for our purpose, but as far as the writer is concerned there is a true and correct definition of Religion which also is that accepted and understood by URUAN/EFIK. Many define Religion in terms of belief (Faith) in spiritual or mundane or supra-sensible beings hence participation in one form of worship or another in religious organizations would seem to connote their idea of Religion. Still some in their definition of Religion relate it to individual experiences regarding people's feelings and actions; eg experiences of people who in their practice of a life of solitude make them to apprehend themselves as standing in need of or in relation to whatever they consider to be divine. If Religion mean one thing to one man and an entirely different thing to another, then the concept /definition of religion for any person at all, is as good as nonsense. Surely Religion, as a univocal term if it is to mean anything at all, should mean that which everybody else means; hence there is a true and only concept of definition as we are going to see. But whether we are considering the essence or the consequence ie. the FUNCTION of Religion, we shall always come to discover that all religions seek to help man to find meaning in the universe which seems to be hostile to his interests. To this end, Religion becomes the way in which man hopes to gain help from unseen (supernatural) forces in order to offset those elements which militate against his interests and wellbeing. Thus this saving help will automatically aid him to avoid evil and secure for himself some positive benefits eg good health, position, happiness, etc. Since man is a social being, religion is given a concrete expression in the life of the society in which he lives – and this can be in terms of myths, rituals, sacred writings, etc. Religion then becomes a set of symbolic forms and acts which relate man to the ultimate condition of his existence. From the society's point of view vis-a-vis URUAN/EFK, Religion is a system of beliefs and practices by means of which a group of people struggles with the ultimate problems of life. And from the individual point of view Religion is first and foremost, a belief that evil, pain, disaster injustice, etc are fundamental facts of his existence. Secondly, it is a set of practices related to sanctified beliefs which express the conviction that man can ultimately be saved from these facts of life. We are now in a position to conceptualize Religion and in summary, according to Webster's dictionary say that "RELIGION IS THE OUTWARD ACT OR FORM BY WHICH MEN/WOMEN (AS INDIVIDUALS OR GROUPS) INDICATE THEIR RECOGNITION OF THE EXISTENCE OF GOD/gods HAVING POWER OVER THEIR DESTINY, (GOD/gods) TO WHOM OBEDIENCE, SERVICE AND HONOUR ARE DUE; THE FEELING OR EXPRESSION OF HUMAN LOVE, FEAR, OR AWE OF SOME SUPERHUMAN AND OVERRULING POWER, WHETHER BY PROFESSION OF BELIEF, BY OBSERVANCE OF RITES AND CEREMONIES, OR BY THEIR CONDUCT OF LIFE. Thus we are now in a position to correctly define RELIGION as well as accept and conceptualize that Religion is and seems likely to remain an inevitable part of human existence as do Uruan people and those who believe in God and unseen supernatural powers. What then earth is the true and only concept of Religion?

(D)THE CORRECT CONCEPT OF RELIGION / DEFINITION

Yes, the URUAN/EFIK speaking peoples have always understood what people the world over mean by the word Religion. They have always recognized the Supreme Being Whom everybody calls by the name GOD. He is God Almighty, the eternal and ever-living God, Creator of heaven and earth, and also the ONE with whom it is essential to maintain harmony and have communion, because all problems about Religion are more often than not the problems of man's relation with God, the Infinite Being. In general Religion is man's relationship to the unseen world, to the world of ancestors, of the Saints, spirits, demons, GOD/gods, etc. Despite the multiplicity of nations, cultures and languages with their myriads of dialects Uruan has basic similarities with other African religious systems, indeed with others worldwide There is the concept of Religion including GOD; different names as also of divinities and sprits, of beliefs after death, with specific cults whether of God Almighty or of spirits, ancestors as a consequence of this as said above since every tribe or clan seems to have its own deities, festivals etc. But the pattern is the same. eg. There seems to be everywhere the correct concept of the GODHEAD called by different names viz ABASI, URUAN/EFIK; or in other Nigerian languages eg CHUKWU, Igbo; OLODUMARE/OLUWA, Yoruba; ALLAHU, Hausa, YAHWEY, Hebrew, or ALLAH, Islam. This name GOD eminently designates the transcendent Supreme Being as held by the three great Religions: Hebrew, Christianity and Islam. It also connotates the idea of MONOTHEISM - the existence of one True, Sovereign and Benevolent God, Who is Creator, Conserver and Rewarder of mankind (Cf I AM WHO AM; Exodus 3:4). This last concept of God as the One who exists and the Lord of Life -YAHWEH - is further articulated by Rev. Fr. Donatus Udoette in his The Bible and the Transformation of Ibibio Society of Southern Nigeria:

> The name of God is a combination of the verb TO BE (aba) and FOR EVER; (ke /nsi –nsi) ABASI. Therefore, it means a Being that exists for ever. And IBOM which is used to qualify Abasi refers to the firmament (HEAVEN) limitless universe. It is used to qualify Abasi in order to underline God's supremacy and limitlessness. Abasi Ibom is that Being that exits limitlessly forever as Lord over the whole boundless universe and everything and everything that is in it. He is understood as the Creator and Ruler of the whole visible and invisible world (101)

This concept is further corroborated by URUAN/EFIK in her unique name for God Almighty, ODU-UWEM ABASI the one who exists for ever, IPSUM ESSE. He cannot be seen though, but He is present everywhere and at all times. His particular abode s Heaven –Enyong – where HE lives presides and supervises everything. With Him everything is possible and without Him, nothing can be accomplished.

ETYMOLOGICAL DEFINITION OF RELIGION

Religion derives its name from these Latin words: RE-LEGERE; RE-ELIGERE, or even RE-LIGARE. In his treatise on Religious Philosophy regarding the Recognizabililty and Criteriology of natural and supernatural Religions J. P. EKARIKA opines that Lactantius, Cicero, and St Augustine were able to very accurately define RELIGION from these etymological Latin derivatives (Ekarika J.P.26). Thus among the ancients, Lactantius, the celebrated 3rd century Christian scholar in his DE AVE PHOENICE (Jurgens III,108), derived the term RELIGION from RE-LEGERE (De divina institutionibus II,28 Cf. MIGNE PL 6,882)= to read very closely and thoroughly; to read and study again and again. If this derivative is accepted, RELIGION then signifies an attentive and deep study of matters pertaining to God and His worship thereof; hence RELIGION is that branch of studies about God. Again Marcus Tullius Cicero (3rd Jan 106 – 7th Dec 43 BC) that great Roman lawyer, orator, poet, politician and even philosopher the world has ever known defined RELGION from the Latin RE-LIGARE (De natura Deorum ii, 28) = to fasten, to bind oneself again and again; to unite oneself to something/ somebody, hence to bind oneself fast to the gods and in our case, GOD, in worship and adoration by the bond of piety. Therefore, Religion has always the connotation of duty and commitment towards God our Creator and those things appertaining, viz. the consecration of priests and nuns as also the devotion and dedication of prophets, Dibias, Visioners, Traditional priests and Medicine men and women in their religious functions etc. Similarly, Aurelius Augustinus (354 – 430 AD) defines RELIGION from the Latin derivative RE-ELIGERE (De Civitate Dei X 3,2 Cf MIGNE 41,4) = to choose once more, to choose absolutely, or again, to select as one's own like choosing or voting for someone in an Election; to make a return of homage to Him who first gave us being, for in Him we live and move and have our being" (Acts 17:28). Cf. "I come to Thee once more my God, no longer will I roam" (Christian Hymnal) for God is our all.

GRAMMATICAL DEFINITION OF RELIGION

The real definition of Religion therefore signifies man's relationship to God but this does not imply the ontological relationship by which every creature in the universe depends on God for its whole being. It designates rather the moral relationship by which man in particular who has recognized his dependence on God and the duties which follow that dependence, pays Him homage and honour both in theory and in practice ie. through WORSHIP properly so called. Grammatically RELIGION may be defined simply as THE VIRTUE (ie. the POWER OR CUSTOM OF DOING SOMETHINNG RIGHT) WHEREBY WE OFFER GOD THE WORSHIP THAT IS RIGHTLY HIS ON ACCOUNT OF HIS SUPREME EXCELLENCE.

This definition implies the concrete expression of the moral ideal, the yearnings and challenges of the highest emotional sanctions which man exhibits in his consciousness by setting before him a goal, and stills more a sort of universal frame of reference by which he identifies himself, and making this manifest through his religious conceptions. But all that has been said so far pertains to the objective element of Religion. RELIGION in its subjective sense embraces all the duties by which we worship God, the sum total of theoretical and practical truths pertaining to God and our relation to Him. This sum total regarding the duties implied by Religion can be summarized in the Formula of the three Cs – C C C: CREED, CODE, and CULT, ie. BELIEFS in the articles of Faith of any given Religion; its RULES OF CONDUCT and RITES/ CEREMONIES or RITUAL ACTIONS. In every religion whether Christian, Muslim, Hebrew or African Traditional Religions (ATR) all these elements are paramount. And this should inform our three etymological definitions above vis-à-vis Uruan or any other African national and its implications thereof. They imply what we must belief concerning its DOCTRINES OR DOGMAS; what we must do and practice as contained in the codes of morality and conduct ie. COMMANDMENTS as also what we must practice by way of adoration, sacrifice and worship in what is known as CULT OR THE LITURGY in Christianity.

That is why all creatures both "primitive" and "civilized" acknowledge the Supreme Being. This after all, as Geoffrey Parrinder has so admirably acknowledged "is the Traditional Catholic and Christian position" since God has not left Himself without witness" and the ancient Greek philosophers had also acknowledged "for we are also His offspring" (Acts 17:28). Thus it can be said that RELIGION signifies that one chooses once more God whom one has lost through sin. Hence Religion always has the connotation by which we make God the object of our predilection. "I come to Thee once more my God; no longer will I roam. For I have trod the worldwide through, and never found a home" (Christian Hymnal). All these definitions seem to tally with URUAN/EFIK understanding of Religion. as man's relations with the Supreme Being. For no matter when and how man has developed, there has always been in him from time immemorial that irresistible urge to worship, to praise and to adore God or something supernatural, and this has created and will continue to create endless forms of religious behaviour and beliefs patterns and Uruan, nay the people of Africa cannot be the exception for they have always believed and worshipped. This force or urge lies within the diversity of beliefs, attitudes and practices of mankind which enables man to penetrate the mysteries of life.

For URUAN people, this Supreme Being is God Almighty – ABASI IBOM (Amaku II,2). He lives in the sky (Heaven) OBIO ETINNYIN ABASI KE ENYONG i.e. the Home of God the Father. In fact, all URUAN mythology on creation refers to God as carrying out His work from this abode. (BAUMAN,17) He created heaven and earth and all things in them, viz. the heavenly bodies, plants and animals, and men, as well as the lesser gods and spirits – mme NDEM and MBUKPO (singular – EKPO) as His servants and messengers. He is never worshipped directly through sacrifices, but He is invoked and prayed to directly especially at functions. Very often, imprecatory prayers and libations are made invoking His name viz the God who owns Heaven and Earth – ABASI ENYONG, ABASI ISONG. (Ekarika,154 ff) The reason for this is that in URUAN/EFIK mentality, everything belongs to God and is intimately associated with Him since everything is part and parcel of God's household. This question concerning the nature of African Supreme God who seems to be generally remote and unworshipped has often puzzled and has continued to agitate the minds of Westerners as some of them see it as pure contradiction. For how can the Creator God be supreme, yet withdrawn and unworshipped? One of these James O'Connell contending that God for Africans is remote has this to say: But in spite of these Attributes, the high God is not usually directly worshipped. He has no priests and no shrines dedicated to him; people may make a token offering to him in every sacrifice, but hardly do they offer a sacrifice exclusively to him (328) (SPCK London, 1964). But they (Africans) worship God only through intermediaries and they offer sacrifices to ancestors and idols in what they term "idol worship" nevertheless, they also regard as "mighty beings" In defending this aspect of URUAN/EFIK, nay African religious practices it must be noted that Africans never compare even the greatest idol with God. The reason for this is that in African mentality everything belongs to God and is intimately associated with Him since everything is part and parcel of His household. God is not therefore a DEUS INCERTUS or DEUS REMOTUS. He is to be understood as in the context of a constant religious structure and culture of transcendence. And ultimately (Pettazzornni Raphsael.,16. Cf. Paul Tillich,218-227). URUAN also visualizes God as "Father" – ETE NNYIN ABASI – and in terms of His position as the universal Creator and Provider in the sense that He is always available to help in times of need (MBITI J. 48). In line with these moral and philosophical views many other tribes of Nigeria like the Yoruba, Uruan has a very exalted notion of Go's providence and makes God the efficient, though not always the instrumental Creator. According to Bowen, T. Jefferson (310), many Nigerian tribes have a sound notion of God's justice and holiness and talk much of His goodness, knowledge, power and providence. The concept of God as owner and provider is also evident in their attribution of certain works of God especially creatures and natural phenomena to him especially in their articulations viz. swallows are designated AKARANG ABASI (the razor of God) on account of their speed and maneuver, the rainbow as ORUK ABASI (the horn of God) Similarly those objects and instruments dedicated for His worship eg. USAN ABASI (God's plate or bowl; and to the gods NDEM - USAN NDEM) etc. It can therefore be concluded that from all these that URUAN and indeed all Africans have a remarkable SENSUS NUMINIS and a true philosophical concept of the Supreme Being comparable to that of many thinkers of the West and elsewhere. According to the Yoruba scholar, Professor, Patriarch E. B. Idowu, the concept of the supreme Deity is the one essential factor by which the lives and beliefs of Africans cohere and have sustenance (E. B. Idowu, 10). For URUAN and Africans, the lesser gods which form the pantheon of African Religion are simply Attributes and Functionaries of the One Supreme Being, God.

B. ATTRIBUTES OF GOD-DIVINITIES AND GOD'S SERVANTS/COSMIC INFLUENCES

In URUAN/EFIK conception of the universe, God's world or abode, OBIO ABASI and the world of creatures as also the UNDERWORLD OBIO EKPO, form a unit and these three intermingle and dovetail into each other in such a way that it is not easy or even necessary to draw the distinction or separate them. Hence to understand their religious ethos, vis-à-vis their philosophical perspectives, it is essential to consider their concepts of the entire universe along the line of the heavens above - ENYONG the earth beneath -ISONG and the middle or underworld (IDAK ISONG) with their concept of God, since everything is tied up with the spiritual, and the spiritual is integrated with the concrete organic fabric of everyday occurrences. According to Rudolf Bultmann, this seems to be a mythical worldview where "the earth is not a scene of natural day-to-day occurrences, but rather a theatre for the working of supernatural powers; God and His angels, Satan and his demons" (Rudolf Bultmann, 243). These supernatural powers intervene in natural occurrences and in the thinking, willing and actions of men. Human beings are not just their own masters since demons can possess them and Satan can put evil thoughts and ideas into their minds. But God can always direct their thinking and willing sending them heavenly visions. That is URUAN/EFIK mentality, and indeed all Africans attribute all kinds of misfortune to the influence and attack of cosmic forces, especially Satan and demons. They argue that misfortunes could come through the direct intervention of malevolent cosmic forces and physical agencies like poisoning, sorcery, witchcraft including the destruction of certain vital life interests and business enterprises of individuals or groups (C.I. Elizu, 3).

Traditionally, since there is no scientific diagnosis for treatment of sicknesses, they are rather attributed to those mystic and cultic powers like IF? T (Witchcraft) EKPO/MBUKPO (Evil spirits, ghosts and demons), NDEM (mermaids, water spirits eg. mmami water) MBIAM and IBOK (harmful concoctions, esoteric charms and juju), EKA ABASI (Goddesses) ESSIEN AMANA (fate or re-incarnated spirits which affect children), EKPINOI, UNAM OKUK, UMEN etc. (all corresponding to cultic evil powers and secret societies) All these also decide the fate and misfortunes, whether in sicknesses, deaths, ill-luck and decline in business and that can befall mankind here below. The agents or mediators of safeguarding the wellbeing of man are believed to be the ancestors and medicine men and women. There are also deities for particular cases such as deities of fertility, rain, agriculture, famine, droughts, epidemics or pestilences with their respective priests/priestesses to perform suitable rituals in times of need. DIVINITIES AND GOD'S MINISTERS/SERVANTS: In URUAN/EFIK conception of the universe, Gods world – Obio Abasi and the world of creatures form just a unit and these two are integrated. They intermingle and dovetail into each other in such a way that it is not easy or even necessary to draw the distinction between or separate them, one from the other. Hence to understand their religious ethos, vis-à-vis their philosophical perspectives, it is essential to consider URUAN/EFIK concept of the universe along with their concept of God since everything is tied up with the spiritual, and the spiritual is integrated with the concrete organic fabric of everyday life such that men and women can live together with God. The Secretariat for non-Christians has put it this way:

> The first thing to realize is the close bond that exists between religion and social life of the Community. They are the beginning and the end of everything. Reduced to essentials, their Weldtangschaaung their vision of the world, is a unifying factor, because it does not imply any clear-cut difference between the profane and the sacred; between matter and the spirit. (Secretarius pro non-Christianis, Meeting the African Religions, Rome 1969, 23).

That is why in URUAN/EFIK the physical world is often linked with the spiritual and the spiritual creatures ie. NDEM and other divinities are assigned or designated of the physical world. as guardians or intermediaries of the physical world. Some of these are regarded as the source of good fortune, health, prosperity, fertility etc. while others are simply enemies of mankind, of animals and crops, and such must always be placated with sacrifices and votive offerings. We can interchangeably call all these divinities but a distinction has to be made between what are strictly divinities – NDEM in URUAN/EFIK and the gods and goddesses which are well discussed in Chapter III above. According to Mbiti, divinities seem to cover all such concepts as the personifications of God's activities and manifestation of natural phenomena and those objects some of which anthropologists designate as deified heroes or mythology gods, nature spirits, ancestral spirits, demigods etc. (Mbiti, J.S, 76). In URUAN/EFIK, Ibibio, Annang etc. most of these tribes and sub-tribes have a number of these spirits and they also organize festivals in their honour eg. URUAN/EFIK – ANANSA, Iman – AWA, Ikono – ETEFIA, etc. Most of these gods and goddesses when examined philosophically, seem to "historicize" certain happenings in the ancient past and what people have always experienced in another context, as divinities as well as explaining the ideas, customs, traditions, and institutions whose origin is otherwise lost to historical sight. Thus each spirit seems to have a unique power to control certain aspects of nature and the activities of men. There are also minor spirits and these are departmentalized as it were, according to people's activities, experiences, and socio-political structures eg. as guardians of harvests, water – oceans, rivers and streams, seasons, mountains and valleys, forests, as also events such as festivals, disasters, misfortunes and calamities. Since these divinities are said to be nearer to God, they can more readily and effectively implore God's favours or even vengeance when they are invoked. That may well explain why they are often invoked in blessings and curses as well as when they are called upon to intercede, usually after the name of God Almighty – the owner of heaven and earth – has been duly paid homage to. All this goes to show that God is ultimately the arbiter and sanctioning power in all blessings and calamities that can happen to or afflict mankind. God is therefore the guardian par excellence, of established norms of behaviour in relation to His intermediaries – the divinities properly so-called. It is this that moves people to always seek a condition of peace and righteousness before God as also the spirits for their deliverance from the evils and misfortunes of life.

CLASSIFICATION OF DIVINITIES IN URUAN/EFIK

In URUAN/EFIK also, the most important of these spirits and divinities is the ubiquitous Pantheon goddess EKA ABASI often regarded as the mother of Gods who is often equiperated with Mmami-Water – the goddess of the seas. She is the mainspring of the social and spiritual life of the people, the guardian of morals and law as also the fair and beautiful especially women and children. She it is who exercises control over fertility, fecundity, good harvests, the health and wellbeing of infants and their nursing mothers. Most often than not people make offerings to her at the river side with eggs put in ekete for the wellbeing of childhood. This goddess as also the other divinities are believed to assume corporeal forms while others may assume all kinds of shapes animate and inanimate. Some of the divinities instead of assuming corporeal forms are often noticed to appear in dreams especially to diviners and Mbia Idi? as recounted elsewhere in this book. In fact, it is such appearances that account for the potency and authority of the Dibias, priests, Idi? devotees and medicine men and other cultic practitioners in order to impart them with certain information which can assist them in their work. Spirits are generally considered to be ubiquitous and unpredictable; hence the safest thing for people to do is to keep away from them. As noticed already, some spirits especially the evil ones are often said to possess men and are often attributed to certain kinds of maladies eg. madness, epilepsy in fair skinned young women and children. In some cases, these are attributed to Mmami-water. There is also the general belief in the spirits of the "living-dead" as they are often called and these are said to understand the language of men and women with whom they lived while alive on earth as also the language of the spirits and of God to whom they are ontologically drawing especially if they had lived according to His divine will. They are the ancestors, so to speak because they are dead but they are also alive because as they say: ekpo akpa enyin ikpaha ut? – only their eyes are closed in death, but they still hear and know about what is happening in the world of the living. For whom them there are shrines either in the forests or rivers. They are the ones who are guardians of the Elders, Etuboms and Chiefs whether as Clan Heads of simply as Royal Fathers who are still living and carrying out the work of governance and the security of their subjects within his domain. Among these are to be included the tribal and clan spirits - NDEM to protect and direct them in the affairs of the village or city, the spirits of Clan Chiefs/Heads and other important personalities for that is why they are alive an often appear in dreams especially during those great moments of distress and need eg. sickness, misfortune or even moments of happiness and great anxiety and of momentous forebodings. Yet there is also another group of spirits which are the spirits of known relatives some of whom are heads of lineages, the ancestral benevolent and protective spirits. Some are those of relatives who died with grudges and are therefore to be greatly feared and placated to ward off evil in the family or kindred. The third group consists of the spirits of unknown persons and dangerous animals which are believed to dwell in the forests, streams, gigantic trees eg. UKANA OFFOT at Anua, and rivers/rivulets eg. AWA ITAM on Calabar - Uyo Road. These are designated in general as NDEM, since they are localized. Some of them have shrines erected for them especially should there be the need to placate them or seek their intercession. In general, each village or clan has one or more of this class of divinities, in which case shrines may be erected for the particular god/goddess or spirit to look after the people's welfare. Such type of divinities - NDEM are served through the ministry of Oku Ndem – priests. This helps to explain why the priesthood has been given such a position of honour and recognition in most tribes of Africa and priests are known to have tremendous influence both in the political, civil and legal organizations (Fortes, 74-76).

THE WORSHIP OF GOD AND SPIRITS IN URUAN/EFIK

URUAN/EFIK to put it concretely do not separate their religious life from the economic and social or political life; their way of life, their beliefs and practices, their conduct in the life of the community, all form an integral unit in such a way that each penetrates the other in a continuous and common destiny. In other words, they live their organic life as a sacrament, for in general, the African way of life, their culture, everything is as it were, a ritual which assists them to approach reality (Eliade M. 31). Religious perspectives are made to permeate the customs, the morals and sanctions of the tribe and clan and so community life is integrated both in the profane and religious, thus making religion become simply as a way of life. There is no other way of life – for them God is the source of life, fortune and every form of blessings; prosperity, good health, abundant yields, rain, safe journeys, etc. Hence God is to be sought and found in the community and that is my proposal for a new URUAN/EFIK today as our society's way of life. It is on account of this that we must search for Him in our symbols; events and in works of nature and the mysteries of life and death. This search may take different forms - formal and informal and the regular inherited practices of our forebears as regulated by the immediate needs and circumstances we find ourselves (BAUMAN, H, 17).

They can also be through communal and individual rituals or ceremonials by using words and actions or simply by gestures and symbolic practices (AMAKU, E.N. Edikot Nwed Mbuk 2).

C. RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCES IN URUAN/EFIK
1. MYSTICAL EXPERIENCE IN URUAN/EFIK

URUAN/EFIK also have a strong belief in Mystical Experiences and see them as distinct from sensuous experiences which fall within the normal everyday experience of the senses like observing the moon, watching videos, wrestling or theatrical shows. Mystical experiences are not describable in terms of our concepts and language. According to W. T. Stace, they entirely transcend 'our sensory and intellectual consciousness (Stace, W. T. 24). That is why mystics say their experience is ineffable, and they also distinguish these from visions, dreams etc. In fact, visions are in the category of sensuous experience although with most unusual objects, but they can be described using our concepts and language. Mystics say the experiences are ineffable because they involve a deep insight into Reality and the nature of things. Here mystics are regarded as mystical beings that have been transformed through INAM institution which will be discussed in Chapter four. Mystical experiences involve the appreciation of an ultimate non-sensuous unity of things to which neither the senses nor reason can penetrate. Mystical experience or contemplation as distinct from ecstasy i.e. infused contemplation involves an application of the mind, a gentle look attended by love for God and divine things, but that of an INAM is not communicated in the experience of the Divine. It is that kind of experience that has evolved through years of long rigorous exercise and training bordering on ascetic practices. What is envisaged in Infused Contemplation is that experience whereby God in a special way moves the mind to know and the heart to love divine things, through the powerful light that has been shed upon the mind by God in such a way that the mystic acts rather in a passive way since God has taken full possession of his faculties. In this state of perfect union with God, God suspends the mental capacities of the mystic i.e. the exercise of the understanding by preventing it from reasoning, halts his thoughts, by centering them on a determined object of predilection, causes speech to die away upon the lips so that one cannot utter a single word. Then under the influence of this divine action, the mystic gazes on God and by loving and appreciating Him and what he is just experiencing, he thereby receives an influx of spiritual energy which considerably increases his own and he feels transformed, carried up and lifted on toward God. In this state, God appears to the mystic under a new aspect as a living reality which human languages cannot express. God is no longer known by a process of induction or deduction but by a simple intuition. William James agrees that this type of apprehension is anti-naturalistic and other worldly (James Williams, 43).

The question now is whether mystical experiences provide the mystics or anyone else with knowledge of some objective reality. To be sure, the mystic claims above all that he knows the existence of the reality through his experience, but is that experience of the type that generates knowledge of some reality other than the subjective state of the mystic? Ordinary people with regard to their experiences (empirical) lend themselves to checking and testing by themselves and others – hence the credence to the ordinary perceiver's claim that what he has experienced really exists. This inter-subjective testing is noteworthy, but I believe in the case of an INAM ascetic, his mystical experience and knowledge smack of the profane and worldly wisdom and seem to deal with mundane issues that border on human wisdom, age, and experience. What then happens to his ascetical life and practices? Some philosophers and religious scientists just like William James simply conclude that such knowledge rather than lead to the knowledge of reality stops short of mere intuition, astuteness and mundane consciousness, but I don't think so. More fundamentally, it means that the claims of a religious mystic resemble only normal claims about subjective claims but I think this is denying Reality. For the mystic, his certainty cannot cast doubt upon his claims, he is sure of his experience of Reality. Then we may ask: can the mystic avoid the assimilation of his claims into the ordinary man's claims – something the mystic surely wants to avoid? That is the question, and the illusion/confusion continues but only to the unrepentant skeptic! Mystical experience is a very complex term, enormously comprehensive and embracing almost everything psychological viz. visions of all kinds, trances, ecstasies, inspirations, dreaming and waking - as part and parcel of normal religious experiences. Anthony Flew in his essay on religious experience puts it this way that" also and even affections, sensations, dispositions including convictions and beliefs share the same generic term" (Flew Anthony, 23). But Thomas Hobbes has commented that there are many of those who judge religious experiences as 'passing from subjective experience to the conclusion that this must have been occasioned by some appropriate object in the world outside'. He contends in his LEVIATHAN that this is mere pretense, for to say some god has spoken to him (Hobbes) in a dream is no more than saying that 'he dreamed that God spoke to him'- can you beat that! Therefore, A. Flew concluded from this that though a person may truly have subjective experiences, it should never be inferred that there are experiences of what is truly and objectively the case; neither should it be assumed because such experiences are in some sense truly religious that they must be as such, and consequently, that they represent religious truths (Hobbes T. 32).

We can begin to reply to all these with a succinct statement of Joachim WACH drawing on the definition of Rudolf Otto to the effect that 'Religion and by implication Religious experience is the experience of the "HOLY" (Wach Joachim, 143). This seems to stress the objective character of religious experiences vis-à-vis Mysticism in contrast with the psychological theories of its purely subjective and of quite an illusory nature which are commonly held by Anthropologists and Humanists. What then can be the meaning of the objective experience of the HOLY? Simply put, it means the HOLY exists. This also means that all religions have God as their end. Ninian Smart thinks the same arguing like this 'In the abstract, faith is fraught with acute difficulties (Smart N., 19). It is abstract because it is not supported by facts. The Theravada Buddhism for example, has no belief in God at all. For them the supreme value is the Nirvana, which is not described as a personal being or Creator or an object of worship in any way, but is a fact. Hindu tradition also has contemplative mysticism, and just like the Buddhist experience, it consists in contemplation. For yet those who think of religion in terms of relationship to God or the gods, this becomes a case of denying Buddhism as a religion. But Buddhism is a religion; it is known to contain monasteries, temples, myths, rituals, etc. as its paraphernalia of faith even though that faith is not typically experienced as faith in any god or the divine or whatever. It becomes therefore one thing to take the objectivity of the HOLY seriously, quite another to believe in it or deny. Then the idea of the objectivity of the HOLY or the Transcendent Being (GOD), as meaning that somehow the experience of the HOLY etc. reveals something objective in reality, namely, something as true, which can mean that there is really something HOLY existing independently of ourselves which is revealed or manifested through the experience. This would seem to be URUAN/EFIK position but the position of most modern philosophers seems to imply: "there is no objectivity in the experience", they would say.

2. RELIGIOUS WORSHIP AND RITUAL PRAYER

URUAN/EFIK understands that every form of religious experience such as prayers and rituals are the different ways of gaining union with the HOLY i.e. through worship and cult. Prayer which is the concrete expression of the believer's belief in the Transcendent and his duty of adoration, praise and worship which has accordingly has been defined as 'the elevation of the soul to God to offer Him homage and ask his favours in order to have union with him, and for Christians and others, in order to grow in holiness. But this type and function of religious prayer can be variously interpreted to mean 'being at rights with the Creator, the Divine, ancestors or even the gods and spirits. This elevation is seen as the detachment of self from worldly creatures and from self in order to fix the thoughts on God who surrounds and dwells in the soul of the believer. This act they claim is to render religious homage just as a person begins to salute those with whom he holds in converse. Then after that he may begin to make his requests or thank him for past favours, or beg for pardon if he had transgressed. Thus prayer makes union with God more complex and perfect. In order to foster prayer, several actions both public and private are demanded. These may be through ritual actions, e.g. sacrifices, symbols, etc. as forms of worship and adoration.

What considerations then have we for all these in URUAN/EFIK in philosophical terms? First of all, it is important to note that classical religions embody a variety of claims about the sort of actions that people should normally do and should not do. Some are straight-forward moral claims having to do with relations between people, and are therefore an open question as to whether or not these claims are really dependent upon the theological suppositions of that particular religion. Some actions of course deal with the relationship of man with God e.g. to thank God, to show the proper respect for Him in a variety of ways, etc. Some call upon the people to do or not to do certain actions whose purpose is unclear; or simply to do or not to do something because that is what God has commanded. These seem to depend upon the theological suppositions of that particular religion. But what are the people normally expected to do in the nation and what are their claims about religious worship and cult? Here we are dealing with the outward suppositions and appearances of religious expression; outward in the sense that they are composed mainly of fixed and regulated structures, which however reflect the genius and culture of URUAN/EFIK people or any other community for that matter. This is the most extrinsic sector of religion and concerns that which is most subject to the transformation and the wear and tear of history, where accumulated traditions can dry up and lose touch with the realities of life when they cannot respond any more to people's personal religious yearnings and temperaments. These can even decay or be abandoned, or they can persist simply as pure social and cultural patterns, and this often happens every time as the society progresses or comes in contact with new realities of the moment and modernist influences as is happening now in the nation. Because these exist as an analogy or rather as some fundamental coincidences in the attitudes and religious experiences of mankind, it becomes obvious why we can expect some similarities and affinities among the expressive forms of religion.

In fact, it calls for a scientific enquiry and absolute strictness of method into the phenomenal level of religious practices to be able to place individual patterns in the appropriate historical and cultural contexts. Since the religious inclination consists essentially in a relationship with the invisible, the first expressive form cannot but be prayer understood in the general sense and definition given earlier. It boils down to the movement of the religious soul to, and leaving out the tendency of the empirical, to enter into contact with the supreme Reality. In Christian and other religions prayer assumes the form of a fundamental obligation whereas in URUAN, it is left to the spontaneity of the individual and to the circumstances as people do not just wake up or kneel down to prayer, the particular situation in which the individual finds himself can be the leit motif of prayer. In these circumstances, the so-called ethnological religions, prayers are often richer and more variegated such that in their great mystics like INAM devotees prayer assumes incomparable forms of ardour and loftiness. We must not also forget that besides individual expression, prayer can be very much and naturally a collective act. We should also consider that vocal prayer generally implies and also takes the form of gestures and symbolisms which are very much the familial and tribal forms. This is as a result of the social projections of religious tendencies. URUAN/EFIK worshippers very often pray with their whole being, body and soul, with gestures, symbols, rhythms and dances. They sing, invoke and supplicate with all their might and they also beg, appease and praise with thanksgiving or curses. Sometimes they can bless or simply remain silent in meditation and contemplation. There are fixed formulas and stereotypes, improvised invocations, periodical celebrations. In these are poured out fears and desires, joy and remorse, solitude and bitterness, hope and disappointments. There are also external means and aides of prayers; prostrations, rhythms, wheels, rosaries, masks, sounds, ablutions.

Strictly connected with prayer and deriving from man's psycho-physical nature is the rite, which the religious man carries out in order to integrate himself with the world of the transcendent. In many religious formations the rites of initiation [into society or into life, in the light of the ultimate Reality] are of particular importance, as also the so-called rites of passage, in which are reflected both the belief that the transcendent is not a direct object of experience, and the urgent need for a transit, for a conversion, for a passage generally hard and risky in order to rise from the religions [Christianity, Judaism, Hinduism, Buddhism, Taoism, Islam] the practice of ascetic ideals often gives rise to forms of solitary monastic life and more generally organized confraternities with various degree of participation in it. The practice of meditation is frequent in the profession of ascetic life, often becoming ardent interior concentration in monistic religions. The religion of theistic structure experiences contemplation as a supreme form of interior donation to the point of immersion in the divinity. Equally typical of religious behavior in which the tension between the human and the superhuman, the everyday and the eternal is expressed is the pilgrimage towards places and objects where the other world particularly reflects its presence on earth. It is for this reason that the religious men often become pilgrims. The sanctuaries of Delhi, Jerusalem, Rome, Mecca, Bodghaya, Kandy, Fujiyama, and Taize are only a few among innumerable places of religious pilgrimages. Islam has included pilgrimage among the 'five pillars' of religion, for which reason the Hajj of the Muslims to Mecca has become the most famous of all mankind's pilgrimages. A distinguishing factor in the sphere of religious phenomenology is noticeable in a series of beings and people who are placed by their activity as mediators between the two worlds of the super-perceptible and the perceptible, the divine and human, thus becoming a bridge or means of contact between the two spheres.

A. MYTHS AND RITUALS IN URUAN – EFIK

A religious myth is a story, a true and sacred story modeled on example. It presents exemplary models in the form of gods or ancestors which the people have to copy or be initiated into. A myth is a statement of a higher and more important truth of primeval reality, which is still regarded as the pattern and foundation of primitive life. It transmits the tradition of the people, and has sacred or religious character. Myth relates a sacred history, a series of event that took place at the beginning of time. It relates the deeds and doings of the supernatural beings at the beginning, the result of which the word or part of it came to existence, as it is now. Hence myths disclose the creative activity of divine beings and reveal the sacredness of their works. Myths consolidate and stabilize society by dictating their beliefs, defining their rituals, acting as chart of their social and order pattern of their moral behavior. Religiously, myths are thought to have a certain salvific power when regarded as factors that recreate or transform those whom they are communicated. They alter the capacity of the recipient to perform to the task of the new statutes ahead of him. Thus the function of the myths is that of the sanctifying standardizing. They give forms and meaning to religious expression. Myths are classified into Religious and Secular myths which are further classified into the creation myths, [cosmogonic] and anthropogenic myths. Creation myths are those which narrate the creation of the universe out of preexisting matter with the aid of an agency but in Christian mythology, the creation of the world is ex nihilo ie. from nothing pre-existing as in the Genesis narrative. An Anthropogenic myth tells about the creation of man. Secular myths are perfected ideas which are not possible practically. These are sometimes called ideology eg. Capitalist and communist ideologies. Myths exist in all cultures and the purpose of the ritual. Myth itself is a ritual act, something that is uttered, an oral event taking place in the living society. To these should be added the idea of Totemism as another aspect of Myths which according to Emile Durkheim is the initial religious expression of mankind (Durkheim, E., 34). He defines Totemism as the worship of a particular animal or tree as symbolic of the tribe and clan. In URUAN/EFIK, the totem is Mbukpo ie. the hawk or African black kite which is a bird of prey, for Itam Clan it is EB? K the monkey, for Afaha Obong Clan in ABAK, it is ENEM cocoyam, the sweet potato. What influenced primitive man to observe these were the outstanding forces of the society, the clan of which he was a part and to which he owed protection and knowledge without which he would be a nonentity, hence the need to have recourse to a particular symbolic creature as a means of protection and wellbeing. But of course Durkheim failed to understand the other side of man and thus overlooked man's profound spiritual experience especially in human events like birth, adolescence etc. in the so-called rites of passage.

B. MAGIC AND MYTHS IN URUAN-EFIK

Magic is a phenomenon which is known and understood everywhere but appears to defy all attempts at defining it exactly. We can only describe it because URUAN/EFIK life and worldview is full of magic. Durkheim also tried to make a distinction between magic and ritual by defining that the function of magic is to fill the gaps left by lack of knowledge in man's pragmatic pursuits. But we may ask: Is magic purely science base on only pragmatic purposes or can it be an aspect of social life providing explanations or coincidences or disasters? Some say it is simply the manipulation of supra-mundane powers for one's benefits. Hence it is a ritual employed to project man's desires into the external world on a theory of human control to some purpose in view. But as a ritual it uses verbal formulas to do this. Ethnologists commonly differentiate between black and white magic depending on whether it is carried out to help or harm someone. In general black or destructive magic is unethical both as a matter of attitude and as an interference with inter-personal relationships because according to Joe Frazer magic is not as oriented towards spirits and other beings which transcend the natural order of the physical world as religion does. The magician is more closely related to the scientist than to religion and therefore magic is pseudo-science which is a set of pragmatically intended and rationally calculated ritual procedures based on false beliefs in impersonal powers. But while seemingly agreeing with this notion, R. Malinowski argues that magic is individualistic while Religion is predominantly a matter for society (Malinowski. Magic, 53.) Religion is an organized cult through which individuals can participate and is expressed in myths and rituals and with a social import and is usually an affair for the whole tribe/clan or community; while magic is usually an affair by which a private individual magician seeks to accomplish some specific goal eg. to cure some sort of disease or win victory or some advantage, etc. The magician in doing so attains an essentially manipulative relation with the forces of nature at his command which he can control for personal ends. Religion on the contrary seeks to enter into communal relationship with God or other spiritual beings who are more than impersonal forces eg. Religion may seek help from God/gods/spirits whom the worshipper/s can only beseech but not command as would the magician. Some types of magic are productive eg. the Azande magic which the tribesmen and women employ to increase the yield of their crops. Magic is a technique that is supposed to achieve a concrete purpose. It is a tool for achieving certain ends; it as occult science and as such it uses verbal formulas to project man's desires and needs. There is productive magic which aims at the individuals or specialists either to avert misfortune or to protect property and implies in general three viz. things to be done eg. the spell; things to be used eg. Instruments like the medicine etc. and thirdly the words that are to be spoken. Some scientists like Edward Taylor opine that although some of the results intended in magic do occur but trickery is being practiced though the use of medicines in many cases by magicians mostly to deceive people and the magicians themselves do believe as firmly as do others in the efficacy of the magic. (Taylor E. 1964, 112). There is also the belief in counter magic as a cultural response to situations of uncertainty. Examples are many in African traditional societies since magic and religion are seen as specialized behaviour directed towards those elements of human experience which fall outside man's mastery of his surroundings and destinies. But some see a certain relation between magic and religion because magical acts involve some spiritual powers except that they are impersonal and do not require the will of higher spiritual forces. Religion is belief in some power in the universe which is by far greater than that of man himself. Magical potency is believed to reside in the material substances used or the verbal elements employed. In practice magical operations employ the same devices as witchcraft especially in destructive magic which provides a native theory of failure, misfortune or even danger of death.

RELIGION AS SYMBOLIC ACTION-RITUAL IN URUAN-EFIK

A rite or ritual is a set form of carrying out a religious action or ceremony. It is a means of communicating something of religious significance through word, symbol and action. Therefore, a ritual reveals the religious sentiments as well as the doctrine of faith or beliefs. The ritual word is powerful since it is spoken in seriousness and solemnity, and it is repeated every time a ritual is performed. Rituals also help to show the relationship of religion to the structure of society. They generate a sense of certainty and familiarity and provide continuity among those who perform or attend them. In turn people fine a degree of identity through this common observance and experience. Through ritual action and word, people feel able to exercise a certain amount of control over the invisible world and the forces of nature. In this way the universe is but a creative agent for the purposes of including symbols and colours, incantations, oral formulas most especially invocations and prayers. In URUAN/EFIK as also other African societies, there are so many rituals that they may be summarized under two headings: Personal and communal rituals. Personal rituals are those performed along the life's journey of individual. They begin during pregnancy and continue after death. Thus the life of an individual is accompanied by rituals. In addition to personal rituals, individuals also take part in communal rituals. Personal rituals draw attention to the uniqueness of the individual. They tell him and the world around that he also matters, that he is valuable, and that he is a member of the wider community.

On the other hand, communal rituals since they are those that affect the community as a unit such as rain making, agricultural rites, and purificatory rites in times of disasters and epidemics lend themselves to communal scarifies which is the core of communal ritual actions. Rituals refer to mystical notions, which are patterns of thought that attribute supra-sensible qualities to phenomena which, or part of which are not derived from mere observations. They cannot therefore be logically inferred from those which do not possess objectified order. It is only objectified order of symbols that can express attitudes and feelings that mould the personal dispositions of worshippers after their models (Herder Rousseau,32) This objectification is necessary for continuity and sharing within the religious group otherwise collective worship would be mere external action. In its true religious meaning, the ritual is the representation of the sacred beings through gestures and actions of divine beings which allow participants to become contemporaneous with the sacred past and thus perpetuate the sacred traditions and renewal of the functions and lives of the members as a group.

Rituals have four main functions; they express the holy by bringing about the realization of the presence of the Divine thus creating a link between the flow of ordinary time and the representations or symbols situated outside of time. The ritual symbols unite and cover beneath an external presentation many ideas and images which elude logical analysis. They refer to the sacred. They express the cosmology i.e. the image of the universe which goes with the experience of the sacred change with time, hence the necessity of new and meaningful images to replace the old ones. They support the current social order by helping individual members to adjust to a life situation. The social order has to be expressed in rituals in order to enable the individual interiorize his faith action. Thus rites can imply two things; factitive and constitutive. Factitive rites which are seasonal increase the strength of productivity, purify, protect and in other ways increase the material well-being of the individuals or the community as a group. These are also sometimes referred to as rites of intensification. They are group rather than individual-centred and include such events as Memorials eg. Christmas, the New Year, New Yam Festival, Easter, Pentecost.

Constitutive Rites express and can also alter social relationships with reference to mystical notions, of which rites of passage are typical (Cf Ekarika J.P. 70 ff). They are sometimes referred to as non-seasonal rites. All rituals are directed towards the problem of transformation of the state of human or nature beings, hence the celebration of transit of an individual from one social status to another in Rites of Passage. This generally assumes the state of separation, transition and incorporation. Ritual relives and reinforces the beliefs contained in myths. It effects an inner change in a man and transforms him to a new state of being by inserting him into the sacred.

3. OFFERINGS & SACRIFICES IN URUAN-EFIK

A sacrifice is the offering of a material gift such as food or drink or animal or even money to a supernatural being or ancestor(s) as a sign of worship and this entails adoration, gratitude, supplication and communion as well the consumption of the offering by him or by parties, the offerer and the gods (ancestors). In URUAN/EFIK all these four aspects of the consumption of the victim or object of sacrifice apply. Usually in the case of offering an animal like a goat, cow or sheep, only the blood of these victims is offered by pouring it on the "altar or a specially dedicated object eg. A stone, or a designated spot on the ground or objects – trees, mountains, streams etc. while the meat of the victim is taken home for consumption either by the "priest or "agent" himself who made the sacrifice or by both the agent and the "members" of the community concerned. The members could be either the entire family for whose benefit the sacrifice was offered including the agent or only the designated members in case of the initiated members of the cult or society like Ekpe, Ek? ? kemba or Ekpo Ny?h?. In certain instances, those to participate in the consumption of the sacrifice are clearly stated as well as those to be excluded. In a general sense including Christian sacrifice like the Catholic Mass, the sacrifice includes all actions done so as to cling to the object of worship or reverence like ancestors, gods and goddesses or to God Almighty in communion of holiness, wellbeing atonement etc. in order to achieve blessedness and wellbeing. In fact, this seems to be URUAN/EFIK understanding of sacrifice because it is an outward expression of the spirit. In Israelite times, the prophets often denounced those sacrifices that were not from the heart and this must have been the reason Jesus said: "I desire mercy and not sacrifice" (Cf. Hos 6:6, Mt 9:13). Sometimes out of personal devotion usually expressed by need, the people often make one sacrifice or other to achieve some favours from God or the ancestors. It may be a bit difficult nowadays using the categories of our forebears on these matters to draw the line, but I can always recall that whenever there was a felt need or when some problems or calamities arose, they often resorted to offering sacrifices and calling upon those recognized agents of the nation to make these sacrifices on behalf of the beneficiaries, ie. The people who want the sacrifices made. By sacrifice therefore a religious man (and mankind is generally a religious being) makes an offering to the Deity by means of a gift on behalf of himself, his wife/wives, his children, his relations and neighbours including his servants and those around him whom he wishes to include as beneficiaries, in order to be in the closest communion and communication with the Deity or ancestors. Thus a quasi-relationship is established between them through the sharing and participation in the consecrated offering. Sacrifice holds a central place in URUAN/EFIK rites and is an important religious ritual in itself. Ritual sacrifice is really a form of exchange between man and the supernatural being since the human offerer presents his goods and the divine receiver reacts to it. This exchange of goods here in the religious context does not imply equal reciprocity. One can offer goods to express gratitude, to pay homage or honour, to expiate wrongs done, to celebrate special events or to maintain good relationships. The offerer of the victim makes the transit to the sacred, and in so doing becomes religiously transformed. The things consecrated become an intermediary between the offerer of sacrifice and the Deity/gods/ancestors to whom the sacrifice is made. It is the victim that effects this communication between the sacred and the profane while the priest (offerer) is both the agent of sacrifice and the delegate of the Deity/gods or the ancestors; he is therefore the presiding officer. From the above analysis we canseURUAN/EFIK understanding of sacrifice and ritual as involving four key dimensions: atonement/sacralization, offering/dedication/consecration, andparticipation/participation/consumpti consumption and finally communion, /unification/ deification, by a sort of deifying or elevating the offerers and participants from the profane to the divine.

DIVINITIES AND GOD'S MINISTERS/SERVANTS: IN URUAN/EFIK

In URUAN/EFIK conception of the universe, Gods world – Obio Abasi and the world of creature's form just a unit and these two are integrated. They intermingle and dovetail into each other in such a way that it is not easy or even necessary to draw the distinction between or separate them, one from the other. Hence to understand their religious ethos, vis-à-vis their philosophical perspectives, it is essential to consider URUAN/EFIK concept of the universe along with their concept of God since everything is tied up with the spiritual, and the spiritual I integrated with the concrete organic fabric of everyday life such that men and women can live together with God. The Secretariat for non-Christians has put it this way:

> The first thing to realize is the close bond that exists between religion and social life of theCommunity. They are the beginning and the end of everything. Reduced to essentials, their Weldtangschaaung their vision of the world, is a unifying factor, because it does not imply any clear-cut difference between the profane and the sacred; between matter and the spirit. (Secretarius pro non-Christianis, Meeting the African) Religions, Rome 1969, 23).

That is why in URUAN/EFIK the physical world is often linked with the spiritual and the spiritual creatures ie. NDEM and other divinities are assigned or designated of the physical world. as guardians or intermediaries of the physical world. Some of these are regarded as the source of good fortune, health, prosperity, fertility etc. while other are simply enemies of mankind, of animals and crops, and such must always be placated with sacrifices and votive offerings. We can interchangeably call all these divinities but a distinction has to be made between what are strictly divinities – NDEM in URUAN/EFIK and the gods and goddesses which are well discussed in Chapter III above. According to J. S. Mbiti, divinities seem cover all such concepts as the personifications of God's activities and manifestation of natural phenomena and those objects some of which anthropologists designate as deified heroes or mythology gods, nature spirits, ancestral spirits, demigods etc. (Mbiti, J.S, 76). In URUAN/EFIK, Ibibio, Annang etc. the most of these tribes and sub-tribes have a number of these spirits and they also organize festivals in their honour eg. URUAN/EFIK – ANANSA, Iman – AWA, Ikono – ETEFIA, etc. Most of these gods and goddesses when examined philosophically, seem to "historicize" certain happening in the ancient past and what people have always experienced in another context, as divinities as well as explaining the ideas, customs, traditions, and institutions whose origin is otherwise lost to historical sight. Thus each spirit seems to have a unique power to control certain aspects of nature and the activities of men. There are also minor spirits and these are departmentalized as it were, according to people's activities, experiences, and socio-political structures eg as guardians of harvests, water – oceans, rivers and streams, seasons, mountains and valleys, forests, as also events such as festivals, disaster and calamities. Since these divinities are said to be nearer to God, they can more readily and effectively implore God's favours or even vengeance when they are invoked. That may well explain why they are often invoked in blessings and curses as well when they are called upon to intercede, usually after the name of God Almighty – the owner of heaven and earth – has been duly paid homage. All this goes to show that God is ultimately the arbiter and sanctioning power in all blessings and calamities that can happen to or afflict mankind. God is therefore the guardian par excellence, of established norms of behaviour in relation to His intermediaries – the divinities properly so-called. It is this that moves people to always seek a condition of peace and righteousness before God as also the spirits for their deliverance from the evils and misfortunes of life.

CLASSIFICATION OF DIVINITIES IN URUAN/EFIK

In URUAN/EFIK also, the most important of these spirits and divinities is the ubiquitous Pantheon goddess EKAABASI often regarded as the mother of Gods who is often equiperated with Mmami-Water – the goddess of the seas. She is the mainspring of the social and spiritual life of the people, the guardian of morals and law as also the fair and beautiful especially women and children. She it is who exercises control over fertility, fecundity, good harvests, the health and wellbeing of infants and their nursing mothers. More often than not people make offerings to her at the river side with ekete and eggs for the welfare of childhood. This goddess as also the other divinities are believed to assume corporeal forms while others may assume all kinds of shapes animate or inanimate. Some of the divinities instead of assuming corporeal forms are often noticed to appear in dreams especially to diners and Mbia Idi? as recounted elsewhere in this book. In fact, it is such appearances that account for the potency and authority of the Dibias priests and Idi? devotees and medicine men and other cultic practitioners in order to impart them certain information to assist them in their work. Spirits are generally considered to be ubiquitous and unpredictable; hence the safest thing for people to do is to keep away from them. As noticed already, some spirits especially the evil ones are often said to possess men and are often attributed to certain kinds of maladies eg. madness, epilepsy and fair young women and children ie. Mmami-water...There is also the general belief in the spirits of the "living-dead" as they are often called and these are said to understand the language of men and women with whom they lived while alive on earth as also the language of the spirits and of God to whom they are ontologically drawing especially if they had lived according to His divine will. They are the Ancestors, so to speak because they are dead but they are also alive because as they say: ekpo akpa enyin ikpaha ut? – only their eyes are closed in death, but they still hear and know about what is happening in the world of the living for whom there are shrines either in the forests or rivers. They are the ones who are guardians of the ling Elders, Etuboms and Chiefs whether as living Clan Heads of simply as Royal Fathers who are still living and carrying out the work of governance and the security of their subjects within his domain. Among these are to be included the tribal and clan spirits NDEM, to protect and direct them in the affairs of the village or city, the spirits of the clan Chiefs and other important personalities. For that is why they are alive and often appear to us in our dreams especially during those great moments of distress and need eg. sickness, misfortune or even moments of happiness and great anxiety and of momentous forebodings. Yet there is also another group of spirits which are known relatives some of whom are heads of lineages, the ancestral benevolent and protective spirits. Some are of relatives who died with grudges and are therefore to be greatly feared and placated to ward off evil in the family. The third group consists of the spirits of unknown persons and dangerous animals which are believed to dwell in the forests, streams and rivers; these are designated in general as NDEM, since they are localized. Some of them have shrines erected for them especially should there be the need to placate them or seek their intercession. In general, each village or clan has one or more of this class of divinities, in which case shrines may be erected for the particular god/goddess or spirit to look after the people's welfare. Such type of divinities NDEM is served through the ministry of Oku Ndem – priests. This helps to explain why the priesthood has been given such a position of honour and recognition in most tribes of Africa and priests are known to have tremendous influence both in the political and legal organizations (Fortes M.74-76).

WORSHIP OF GOD AND SPIRITS IN URUAN/EFIK

In URUAN/EFIK to put it concretely do not separate their religious life from the economic and social or political life; their way of life, their beliefs and practices, their conduct in the life of the community, all form an integral unit in such a way that each penetrates the other in a continuous and common destiny. In other words, they live their organic life as a sacrament, for in general, the African way of life, their culture, everything is as it were, a ritual which assists them to approach reality (Eliade M, 31). Religious perspectives are made to permeate the customs, the morals and sanctions of the tribe and clan and so community life is integrated both in the profane and religious thus making religion become simply as a way of life. There is no other way of life – for then God is the source of life, fortune and every form of blessings; prosperity, good health, abundant yields, rain, safe journeys, etc. Hence God is to be sought and found in the community and that is my proposal for a new URUAN/EFIK today as our society's way of life. It is on account of this that we must search for Him in our symbols; events and in works of nature and the mysteries of life and death. This search may take different forms formal and informal and the regular inherited practices of our forebears as regulated by the immediate needs and circumstances we find ourselves. They can also be through communal and individual rituals or ceremonials by using words and actions or simply by gestures and symbolic practices.

(A) ATONEMENT/SACRALIZATION: Every sacrifice or ritual involves removing whatever is profane and unholy from either the place or venue of sacrifice as well as from those who are to be involved at the place and moment of the sacrifice. This denotes sacralizing the atmosphere surrounding the sacrifice. In URUAN/EFIK the agent/priest usually blows a mouthful of editibe, a concoction made up of African gin and medicinal herbs or roots around the place to dispel whatever agents or spirits of evil and uncleanness may be lurking around there. Sometimes the participants themselves are also sacralized by a sort of 'fumigation' whereby the priest/agent uses a horse tail or spray on both the object of sacrifice (victim) like the egg or fowl, whirling it over them like incense or on their heads and bodies to drive out any evil machinations or agencies from the participants. In the case of initiations, the initiates are simply smeared or rubbed with coloured nsei ground clay. Sometimes black ekim potash is incised into their bodies, usually on the chest, neck or shoulders; and this serves as a permanent sacralization to ward off evil in perpetuity.

(B) OFFERING/DEDICATION: A sacrifice is an offering of an animal or object to a deity or his representative either through the complete destruction of the object of sacrifice which is the victim, or shedding and pouring of the blood in case of an animal or simply by dedicating it in honour of deity or his agent. A sacrifice therefore is the presentation or dedication of a victim which is sometimes simply called the sacrifice or the object of sacrifice of what is to be offered to the Deity, gods or ancestors as a sign of adoration, supplication, communion and gratitude as an act of worship. A sacrifice is any action done so as to cling to God or the object of worship, ancestors etc. in communion of holiness so as to achieve blessedness and wellbeing. The duty of offering sacrifices as a genuine act of worship concerns men and women both as individuals and as members of the society because it is the moral duty of individuals and societies towards the practice of true religion. The social duty of citizens is to awaken in each individual the love of what is true and good and this requires genuine worship through offerings and sacrifices. The offerings ie. Victims whether of animals or parts thereof can be cows, goats, sheep, dogs or if human offerings; skulls, pubic hairs, and nail clippings as special parts of the human body, but if food offerings, they can be cooked or uncooked. An offering of what may look like a “holocaust” in URUAN/EFIK is simply the dedication of live animals like dogs, fowls or even goats and cows which are thrown into designated rivers and streams or may be deposited at the outskirts of village/town boundaries and left to roam into the “wilderness”. Oftentimes some poor people around or unscrupulous fellows can “capture” the victims and carry them home for their meals without any qualms or suspicion of reprisals or evil from the gods and ancestors. In the case of votive sacrifices or “dog holocausts”, they are tied aloft on a pole at the village/town frontier and left to die and rot there or be removed for consumption by some poor citizens or unscrupulous fellows around. For food offerings the same is done by placing well-dressed up on decorated bamboo tables either at the cross-roads or forest terminals in the town or village. Once the objects of offering have disintegrated or disappeared as explained above, the understanding is that the sacrifices have been accepted and the offerers begin to await bounties or a return to normalcy, good health or recovery vouchsafed by under the auspices of the Deity, the gods, spirits (Ndem) or the ancestor to whom the sacrifices have been offered. The Deity mentioned here is no other than God Almighty hereinafter represented by the ATAKPOR NDEM URUAN whose shrine is located at AKWA AKPA URUAN at the widest part of the Cross River estuary.

C CONSECRATION/DEIFICATION/CONSUMMATION

This involves the consecration of a sacrificial meal as a symbol of love and communion with the Deity, god or ancestors and the group present. In eating the victim of the sacrifice, one participates in the sacred life, in the realm of the divine. This too is an integral part of a sacrifice. It signifies the unity of the community with the Deity/gods/ancestors and with each other. This is the communion sense in sacrifices. A sacrifice may be a simply a rite of consolidation [propitiation], mending the breaches of the order between men and the gods. It may also be a rite of incorporation joining the individuals and families by ritual actions. The ritual meal binds the living and the dead.

D INITIATION N URUAN – EFIK

By the initiation rites a youth is introduced to the full privileges and responsibilities of the community, religious, social and administrative. This implies a process of transition from the family circle to active membership and followership of the community. Rites of death and rebirth form the essential aspects of all initiation rites and their religious meaning is very profound. The symbols themselves speak eloquently of the various aspect of the life-change of the individual. Fasting, test of endurance or ordeals, circumcision, a protracted period of isolation and many other symbols accentuate an important recurrent of theme of death (G.P. Parrinder,94-96). There are three kinds of initiation rites: the collective rituals which affect the transition from children from life to death or from birth to life, those which characterize the entry into the fraternity or secret society which rites are performed when the person assumes a 'mystical vocation'. These always have an ecstatic element in them. Together with the theme of death they are commonly enacted with the theme of ordeal and pain by means of which transition is made into new state of existence. These provide also an important religious meaning, for by them the fitness of the young is tested. The experience evokes a sense of the transcendent. The theme of rebirth marks the entrance into the new mode of existence which is that of the sacred. Both the themes of death and rebirth are structurally linked in the process of initiation, for new life cannot begin unless the old one becomes dead or eliminated. The rites of rebirth are symbolic, for they involve the communication of the sacred to the initiates by means of a solemn meal and investiture. This new birth signifies the process of assuming a new status within the religious community and of acquiring new rights and privileges which enable the initiates to participate fully in the religious life of the community. More deeply, the ritual of initiation produces a fundamental existential change in the life of the individual, namely; a sacred level of existence. Without the transformations, the rites themselves lose much of their signification. During the period of preparation and initiation, sacred knowledge is communicated to the neophytes. In primitive and cosmic religions, the initiates are taught the myths and secret mysteries. In some societies they are warned not to reveal to the uninitiated anything said or done in the course of the mysteries as doing so involves instant death either through natural or supernatural agencies. In the higher religions the initiates acquire faith contained in their sacred writings and the right to read and understand them. In Hinduism, for instance, only the initiates have the right to read the Vedas. The initiate is the man who knows, who has learnt the mysteries that pertain to his religion, and has had revelations about the meaning and purpose of human existence. Initiation also implies a spiritual maturing. Initiation makes the initiate aware of his spiritual-religious maturity which consists in the responsible behaviour he exhibits both in his moral and religious life. He thus becomes truly possessed of freedom and courage to practice his religion, to imitate his gods, to commune with them and to participate sacramentally in the divine life itself. In the significant words of Mircea Eliade:

Initiating death forms an integral part of the mystical process by which the novice becomes another, fashioned in the accordance with the model revealed by God or mystical ancestors. This is as much as to say that one becomes truly a man in proportions as one cease to be a natural man and resembles a supernatural being. (Eliade Mircea, 1965, 12)

It may also be a rite of incorporation joining the individuals and families by ritual actions. The ritual meal binds the living and the dead.

D INITIATION: By the initiation rites a youth is introduced to the full privileges and responsibilities of the community, religious, social and administrative. This implies a process of transition from the family circle to active membership and followership of the community. Rites of death and rebirth form the essential aspects of all initiation rites and their religious meaning is very profound. The symbols themselves speak eloquently of the various aspect of the life-change of the individual. Fasting, test of endurance or ordeals, circumcision, a protracted period 0f isolation and many other symbols accentuate an important recurrent of theme of death (G.P. Parrinder, 94-96). There are three kinds of initiation rites: the collective rituals which affect the transition from children from life to death or from birth to life, those which characterize the entry into the fraternity or secret society which rites are performed when the person assumes a 'mystical vocation'. These always have an ecstatic element in them. Together with the theme of death they are commonly enacted with the theme of ordeal and pain by means of which transition is made into new state of existence. These provide also an important religious meaning, for by them the fitness of the young is tested. The experience evokes a sense of the transcendent. The theme of rebirth marks the entrance into the new mode of existence which is that of the sacred. Both the themes of death and rebirth are structurally linked in the process of initiation, for new life cannot begin unless the old one becomes dead or eliminated. The rites of rebirth are symbolic, for they involve the communication of the sacred to the initiates by means of a solemn meal and investiture. This new birth signifies the process of assuming a new status within the religious community and of acquiring new rights and privileges which enable the initiates to participate fully in the religious life of the community. More deeply, the ritual of initiation produces a fundamental existential change in the life of the individual, namely; a sacred level of existence. Without the transformations, the rites themselves lose much of their signification. During the period of preparation and initiation, sacred knowledge is communicated to the neophytes. In primitive and cosmic religions, the initiates are taught the myths and secret mysteries. In some societies they are warned not to reveal to the uninitiated anything said or done in the course of the mysteries as doing so involves instant death either through natural or supernatural agencies. In the higher religions the initiates acquire faith contained in their sacred writings and the right to read and understand them. In Hinduism, for instance, only the initiates have the right to read the Vedas. The initiate is the man who knows, who has learnt the mysteries that pertain to his religion, and has had revelations about the meaning and purpose of human existence. Initiation also implies a spiritual maturing. Initiation makes the initiate aware of his spiritual-religious maturity which consists in the responsible behaviour he exhibits both in his moral and religious life. He thus becomes truly possessed of freedom and courage to practice his religion, to imitate his gods, to commune with them and to participate sacramentally in the divine life itself. In the significant words of Mircea Eliade:

> Initiating death forms an integral part of the mystical process by which the novice becomes another, fashioned in the accordance with the model revealed by God or mystical ancestors. This is as much as to say that one becomes truly a man in proportions as one cease to be a natural man and resembles a supernatural being. (232)

4. CEREMONIES AND CEREMONIALS IN URUAN - EFIK

NECESSITY AND PRACTICE OF RELIGION: CEREMONIES &RITUAL

The proliferation of religious organizations in recent times especially in URUAN/EFIK can only be seen as the ever continuing search of mankind for things of the spirit and the increasing interest in matters of Religion, but is it? People continue and pretend to holistically exhibit their enthusiasm for exterior practice of religion through ceremonials and rituals, but mankind can be very frivolous in these matters and in his very frivolity as a cover all weapon can disguise for a brutal egotism. Of course the first question to be put is whether people do really go out of their way to demonstrate their feelings and gestures in the practice of their religion. There is another problem arising from the necessity of practicing Religion ie. giving honour to God by religious worship or ritual ceremonies. Either upon false data or upon vitiated interpretations through the acceptance of a priori application of false philosophical principles, there are some who deny that there is any obligation to worship God. There are also some people who profess absolute indifference in religious matters maintaining that God does not really care whether we worship him or not. Consequently, they have come to the conclusion that regardless of anything spiritual or on moral grounds, religion as is as useless as it is unprofitable. But the fact is that peoples the world over whether in the past or even today have always professed some sort of religion and they have done so following the order of nature. The very order of nature demands that man, since he possesses intelligence and will, ought to assent intellectually to the ontological order of things and to conform to it (in practice) through his actions. This order of nature also demands his giving the highest honour, subjection, and love to Him by whose power and providence he continues to exist since He is our maker and keeps us made. Without doubt therefore, people all over the world and throughout the ages have been doing just this – not through ignorance or compulsion; and certainly not through backwardness or lack of knowledge of the natural sciences and technology or through irrational fears of the unknown or about the powers of the gods or nature and the veneration of ancestors thereof – but through genuine knowledge of the true means of practising religion. This universal fact can only be explained on the grounds that all peoples have been following the dictates of sound reason such a great matter like religion. Cicero himself has also acknowledged this and puts it this way:

> Nature recognizes that God should be worshipped, and there was never any man Born who lacked this natural law, which orders him to worship (Oratio pro Flacco in M. LaGrange ETL, 1928, 413).

Religion consists in acts of the intellect and will as seen already, and by these we acknowledge and love Go's excellence (eg. in interior worship) and this is often manifested by our external actions of the body or though gestures (ie. in our exterior actions of worship) since worship by its very nature demands an external expression which we call ritual actions or ceremonies. Now man continues to exist by God's power and is governed by His divine will and providence because he comes forth from Him – in Him we live and move and have our being (Acts,17:17). It therefore follows that the entire man - soul, body and spirit – because he is dependent on Him - should acknowledge this dependence through physical and practical action. This is through Ritual actions and Ceremonies. Also man must worship God not only as an individual but also as a member of the society in which he lives. This means that the society as such is obliged to worship. This worship of God must be both internal and external. It is therefore erroneous to deny public worship and simply maintain that religion should be a private affair left to the individual concerns and caprices. But we all know that just as it's individual members so also the society as a whole continue to exist by God's sovereign and sustain power. Consequently, man as a social being or the society as such must acknowledge and profess its dependence upon God through worship. Another reason why man as also the society must worship God is based on the fact that the duty of religion is the foundation of all other duties and also the basis of all morality. Common sense and reason show that man has duties towards God, himself and even to other men and women in the society. This should therefore be the concern and total outlook and way of life of any given religious community concerning their conception of what must be done or avoided in the effort to maintain that relationship with God. The fact is that no one can really be obliged to any duty except by a superior. God who is our Creator, He alone can exact worship and homage from us because mere human authority cannot legislate on any moral duties talk less of sanctions the obligations and binding force of which can only be by divine authority and the ones ordained by God Himself. Therefore, to preach a morality devoid of Religion ie. not having to do anything with God can only tantamount to the destruction of the entire fabric and moral order. In this perspective therefore, morality forms an integral part of religion for the rest of mankind and his moral life. The major role of Religion then is to be seen as the fountain head of moral ideals, the quality of any religion being judged by its power to produce worthy character in persons and a just social order. All these constitute the claims of worshipping God through ritual actions and ceremonies which come under Religious practices.

On these claims we may ask: why should God impose-ritual observance upon mankind? Does God have any reasons for imposing them or are they done arbitrarily? These would seem to imply that God has certain rewards for obedience to His commands but which He could not otherwise give. Some agree that each of these particular rituals or observances does produce some benefit to the observer, so it would be wrong to think of God as having arbitrarily chosen just any observance at all. For St. Thomas, ritual actions i.e. ceremonial precepts are acts of worship or aid to worship and the reason for their existence is so that men may be directed to God. For St. Augustine, his conception of prayer as the intensification of a religious attitude is that the bodily performance of ritual has the effect of intensifying appropriate religious attitude and affections, and "in this way a man excites himself to pray more humbly and more fervently" and this has the effect of moving the soul, and the invisible inner motion which causes them is itself strengthened and aroused more effectively to an increase of holy desires. Therefore, Metaphysics or theology aside, it seems obviously true that sometimes and for some people participation in liturgical rites or ceremonies (from Mania + Ceres = gifts of the goddess of fruits; or from Cerei i.e. candles lit on such occasions) nurtures certain religious attitudes and affections. Why these external or ritualistic actions; and above all why need one pray at all when God knows everything on could possibly tell him! Why should e.g. the believer prostrate or kneel to show he is contrite; surely God being omniscient, has no need of the information? St. Augustine himself in puzzled but he attempts an answer thus: that (i) In the first place there is an ocean of difference between our dealing with God and dealing with men.

(ii) Secondly, that the point in giving one's feelings and attitudes expression are connected.eg. To show that I am sorry, I write and tender an apology, even though the person I have wronged may by the sound of my voice, the look in my face etc. already know that I am sorry. God indeed knows that we think and feel, but why do we have to worship him in some external action? Why isn't it enough to worship him in our thoughts and feelings, etc? The problem seems to arise with regard to private worship, but for public worship these actions: excite internal devotion. They enable us to worship God with our bodies as well as minds and it is fitting since these come from God. Interior worship will inevitably spill into external worship. By making these ritual actions and ceremonies, man surrenders to God his mind and the capacities of his soul and body, subjects them to God with reverence and presents them to God. It belongs properly to religion to show honour to God, therefore prayer is properly an act of religion. Worship, since it is an act of virtue as seen above, belongs to a moral precept hence has the object of moving men to these terminations of law.

D. RELIGIOUS MORALITY: RELIGION v/s MORALITY

URUAN/EFIK Religion is quite akin to many theistic religions. In actual theistic Religions, moral endeavour is seen as related to worship, for by doing good, I am as it were, rendering honour, glory and praise to God. A person who behaves morally is seen as a religious individual. A Buddhist, for example, in his meditation, is concerned with arousing an existential awareness of the transistoriness of things. Thus he relates his religious practices to religious ideas and living meaning. The very fact that we go on asking the question as to why a person should be moral indicates that religion finds the answer. It is like weaving more and more actions into a wider framework. One aspect of this is by placing morality and other values in a wider perspective such that by connecting them with worship we are able to indicate that one manner of religion is not just an activity which is part of life, but has connections with the rest of life. Thus in URUAN/EFIK, people generally regard most of their daily activities as tied up with religion or as religious exercises eg a child who often carries out what the mother asks him/her to do like going on errands, washing pots or plates for her mother, helping her in the kitchen or market, greeting parents and elders in the compound, is seen as a very morally well behaved and religious child. In the case of adults, those who attend the village meetings, go out to clear the paths to the stream when this has been announced and a date fixed for the community work, visiting the sick or those in difficulties and consoling them, telling the truth and behaving in every manner as to what society expects and approves; all these make him a moral and religious individual in the eyes of the community. People do not normally count on the observance of the Decalogue only as behaving morally or being a good individual in the society. That is why in less than one aspect like worship, we can discover many other forms of expressing our religious ideas and actions and the process has to do with changing i.e. undergoing an experience. The object of worship is a mystery and has to do with giving people a heart and this means something that inspires awe, adoration, confidence etc. The object of worship is to create humility which then ties up with selflessness, which invariably is the pursuit of duty and enterprising demands. As a fascinating object, worship moves man to joy, overreaches and subsumes the other lesser values exciting him to adoration, obeisance, etc. adoration, obeisance, etc. Thus moral endeavour in this joint enterprise of ordinary life moments of birth, marriage, and death are solemnized and consecrated in the Christian Religions as Sacrament of Baptism, Matrimony and Funeral Celebrations etc and are thus validated by reference to worship. Sometimes failures and sufferings as well as successes and joys are subsumed under sacrifices and other religious celebrations. We see all these as moving religious experiences.

Another aspect of placing moral and other values in a wider framework is through Doctrines, myths, etc. e.g. those of eternal life: immortality, life after death (resurrection) etc. Thus people are led to relate all these to moral questions ie. their duty to do this because God demands it, hence they now have a duty towards God. But the fundamental question would now be: why should people be expected to fulfill this or that duty to God? Are these moral codes merely reflections of God's will? Are they right or wrong independently of God? In URUAN living and religious practice, people generally see whatever they do that are not reprehensible in the eyes of the community as god-like and pleasing both the living and the ancestors. Plato who lived about 3000 BC and what he wrote are of great concern to URUAN and African societies because most of them except perhaps Egypt are in the category of pre-literate era. In his Euthyphro Plato defines a holy action as an action loved by the gods. St. Thomas says there is an Eternal law promulgated by God which governs all mankind and human actions. God has implanted that in us a natural ability to discern the law: what is right and what is wrong. Law is therefore nothing but nothing but a dictate of reason emanating from the ruler who governs a perfect community. Now it should be manifest that granted that the world is ruled by divine providence, then the whole community of the universe is governed by divine reason and laws. All these go to show that preliterate societies like URUAN have always lived according to these unwritten and untaught Eternal laws for mankind According to St. Augustine, Law which is the Supreme Reason, cannot be understood to be otherwise than unchangeable and eternal. Therefore, the very notion of the government of things in God, the ruler of the universe, has the nature of law, and since divine conceptions of things is not subject to time, this kind of law must be eternal. Did URUAN know and practice all these all along? Yes, and this has been our position all along when we say: AKWA ABASI IBOM, OBONG ENYONG YE ISONG. It therefore means that these laws are dependent on God. If they were not dependent on God, it would mean that moral codes as practiced the world over, in every clime and race are independent of any religious basis – then they could be accepted on a non-religious level – it would then mean they are not really religious codes of morality at all but only codes held by a particular religious group or society. This would then leave us with no moral reason for obeying the will of God, whereas God is the Creator and therefore has rights over all of us. But of course in the eyes of most modern people who call themselves philosophers, scientists, technologists etc. this seems still an open question regarding the postulation that God is the Author of the moral law because He is the Creator. But that aside, quite a few believe that in one way or other morality needs a religious backing i.e. it must be somehow dependent on God. Our forebears especially are known to have been very religious. That is why I have devoted a whole article in Chapter nine on the need for URUAN of nowadays to retrace their steps and go back to God by living morally and religiously, for a truly moral and righteous man is necessarily a religious individual, ditto the society. I will come back to this important point. One of the many claims for this view is that there are certain moral truths that are true only because of the truth of certain religious truths, in particular, the truth about the rightness or wrongness of a given action as dependent upon the truth of certain religious claims to the effect that God wants us to do or refrain from doing that action. This claim as we have seen admits that certain parts of morality are based upon the will of God. Other claims specifically by Christians on certain moral truths are that certain moral actions have been revealed as right or wrong by God, and as said earlier, there is also the religious truth that claims the rightness or wrongfulness of a moral action on the assumption that God and in our case, the spirits, ancestors etc. will reward or punish us if we do that action. Morality consists largely if not wholly, in the attempt to realize these common elements in a coherent way and this cannot be done without adopting moral rules and codes of law. It means we need a sort of framework to the rules to which we must all conform however diverse, in order to make our aims realizable in a world we all have to share. So at least in this sense, morality is necessary. If we keep this in mind, it is possible for us to see why certain actions are right or wrong because God has willed us to do them or to refrain from doing them, but would not be right or wrong, even though God's willing were not arbitrary. First if we concede this, we would avoid the impropriety of attributing to God, the perfect Being arbitrary acts. Religious moralities tend to be de-ontological i.e. they emphasize the following of certain rules no matter what the circumstances. This seems to be childlike and infantile, whereas moral codes should emphasize the particular circumstance and persons concerned instead. But many religious people accept that morality should be de-ontological because it is a feature that is the distinctive contribution of religion to morality. Then philosophers would have to ask: Is this feature desirable? Secondly, if it is, can it be maintained in a non-religious system? We would like to answer these two posers using the very modus of these philosophers even if they pretend to be or are unrepentant atheist as some of them glory in being amoral or religionless. Wonders will never end!

1.INFANTILE MORALITY: Many modern philosophers Cf. Patrick Nowell-Smith, and the Humanists viz. H. D. Lewis, H. K. Schilling, N. Smart, B. Mitchell, etc. claim that religious morality is infantile. But does this not sound absurd? To suggest that URUAN people and by implication Africans and from the Christian point of view, that great theologians and philosophers like Aquinas, Kant, to say nothing of the millions of other Christians of lesser genius, never grew up is surely to put oneself out of court as a philosopher and to be taken seriously. The crux of the problem lies in the fact that after Plato and Aristotle, all seem to hang on to the EUDAMONIAC TRADITION – EUDAIMONIA, from the Greek word which means, "THE GOOD LIFE", which consists in fulfilling to the highest degree the nature of man, and the nature of man has to be rational, social, etc. Love must be the supreme virtue, for it is rational and social. All these deal with the concept and content of morality; sympathy, loyalty, kindness, consideration, etc. Their opposites therefore are malice, cruelty, treachery, callousness etc. But this should not be our concern here; rather it should be the FORM rather than CONTENT. Hence the question to be out should be like this: WHAT IS MORALITY AND NOT WHAT CONDUCT IS MORAL/ IMMORAL? I have moral views, but what are my moral beliefs? The next question to pose should be:" Where do I get my moral views/ideas from?" Is it from my parents, companions or from my boyhood days, from books, instructions and admonitions from my parents, and senior siblings, or from sermons in Church, instructions of teachers, Elders, etc. and also from my personal reflections and experiences? All are valid! This autobiographical answer can scarcely satisfy us. The question was not from whom or where did I get the morality but from what authority? Is this not a confusion of the question in point? The question should have been from what authoritative source? Murder is wrong, telling lies is wrong, stealing is wrong; yes, but where do I get these my impeccable views? Are they from my parents, teachers etc? They may have had the right to teach me moral views and demand my obedience, but they have no authority to make the moral law. Morality is an affair of being commanded to behave in certain ways by some person who has the authority and the right to issue such commands. Once this is accepted, it must be admitted that only God has such a right. MORALITY THEREFORE MUST BE BASED ON RELIGION, WHICH IMPLIES OUR RELATIONSHIP WITH GOD AND MORALITY NOT SO BASED OR BASED ON FALSE ASSUMPTIONS IS VALUELESS.

2. MORALITY BASED ON GOD'S AUTHORITY/RELIGION: It should now be evident that it is on this premise that being moral consists, ie. in obedience to commands, which raises the objection whether or not God has commanded us to do this or that or not to do this or that e.g. We must judge for ourselves whether or not the Bible is the inspired Word of a just and benevolent God or a curious amalgam of profound wisdom and gross superstition. To judge this is to make a moral decision, so that in the end, we can decide whether morality is based on religion or vice versa, and whether the people and indeed Africans think about God in their behaving morally and religiously. This also raises the fundamental question as to whether or not we should TAKE AUTHORITY AS A GUIDE: e.g. the authority of parents, elders or the Church or pastor on what to do or not to do. Are we in accepting that authority deciding for ourselves or not. In other words, those who decide only to do what they are being told, are they behaving morally or not? Therefore, at least in the sense that they make only this one moral decision, they must continually renew it, and that is their personal decision. It may also be noted that morality can have an external non-moral basis and yet have an internal basis, e.g. a person's views on sex, business, ethics, etc. may form a coherent system in which some other views are held. Such that what they uphold are morally the same as everybody else does. In eg Utilitarianism, all moral rules are judged by their tendency to promote human happiness. In Geometry, propositions are seen as theorems, axioms, and corollaries etc. all these are due to their derivability from one or the other Presupositum or source. But with regard to behaving morally and doing the things that are accepted by society, it would seem that there is an accepted Authority behind, they are not societal norms but norms which conform to the unwritten Eternal laws as we have seen already, and that settles it.

3. FORM AND CONTENT OF MORALITY/DEONTOLOGICAL & TELEOLOGICAL MORALITY

We can now try to distinguish FORM from CONTENT OF MORALITY: By content we mean the actual commands and prohibitions, the characteristics it lists out as virtues and vices. By Form we mean the sort of propositions morality contains and the ways they are thought to be connected with each other. The difference is between teleological morality i.e. moral rules subordinated to ends as also rules for achieving ends; and de-ontological morality, i.e. moral rules as absolute or categorical imperatives, in which their validity doesn't depend on the good or bad consequences of obeying them. Teleological Morality derives from the Greek view of morality and can be summed up in the slogan: "THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN AND NOT MAN FOR THE SABBATH". The second derives from the Jewish morality ie. de-ontological morality which views the legalistic unchangeability of rules. Rules like those of URUAN and other pre-literate societies are thought of as having been handed down from time immemorial and as such are part of the natural law and order of things; hence the authority of these rules may not be questioned. This is also URUAN/EFIK understanding of morality: "Yak owo okuka a ada a eset", which is also the Christian Rule, and is an amalgam of both elements.

In one, we see morality as a set of precepts to be followed for the achievement of ends; in the other, it is a set of commands to be obeyed. A man's morality is a set of habits of choices, of characteristic responses to his environment the people among whom he lives and the habits learnt in childhood, namely; growing up in morality, learning to cope with the world into which we find ourselves pitched, and coping with our relations with other human beings. Coping with these situations means coping with our desires and aversions, joys and remorse's; for if men were to be totally indifferent to everything in the universe, there would be no such thing as choice or making of response, and we would have no concept of morality, of good and evil whatever, but all these seem to be taken for granted. If the people and by implication Nigerians, nay Africans are to be taken seriously and as people ready and willing to behave and make progress in all human endeavours, they have to behave morally and religiously too as becoming civilized citizens of the earth. Learning how to cope with the world is learning to satisfy and to modify our desires in a world that is partly propitious and partly hostile. The world doesn't jump up to satisfy my desires e.g. I do not get fed by being hungry. Our desires are incompatible with each other and they come in conflict with those of others. We have to learn to bend the world to our wills and to bend our wills to the world in turn. A man's morality is the way in which he does this or that or avoids this or that in important matters as set down by law for him and in this case, God Almighty.

4.INFANTILE MORALITY RE-CONSIDERED

The issue of de-ontological morality is what certain modern philosophers regard as infantile morality. Children have three stages of moral growth:

AGES 1-4 - PRE-MORAL ATTITUDES:

Between these ages, a child imitates others subconsciously doing/avoiding those things which are rule-governed. In fact, he is not obeying any rule at all; eg. A child throws things or pebbles about or draws some lines on a card board: he is not playing the game since he does not know the rules, but he may happen to draw or throw those pebbles systematically as if playing that game as he watches other elderly children doing. In other words, he does not behave morally or immorally since he doesn't know the rules of the game. Similarly, the norms of morality, his actions are mere imitations of adult behavior. It is not that he is obeying any rules or regulations or acting according laid norms of the society, but he is just doing exactly what others are expected to do.

AGES 5-9: HETERONOMOUS ATTITUDES:

At this time a child has begun to act with the use of reason when he regards the rules as sacred and inviolable and acts with IPSE DIXIT ie. "nobody should infringe attitude". He may say we should do this, or not do that etc. because the child now obeys absolutely e.g. "mummy said we should not eat the oranges in the fridge". Every suggested alteration of the rule is seen as a transgression. The rule is not questioned - the child knows the rule but doesn't ask what it is for. This is the de-ontological character of rules we are talking about, the unchangeability of rules once they have been given, all must obey them.

AGES 10-20: AUTONOMOUS ATTITUDES:
By this the child begins to learn what the rule is for; what is the point in having such a rule and why this and not that. The rule is looked upon as a law due to mutual consent, which must be respected in order to be loyal. But it could be altered by or for general opinion. This therefore is the teleological stage, but it must be guarded against moral realism whereby a rule is good simply if somebody keeps it and is rewarded; bad if disobeyed and punished, and if not caught, it is good. This becomes an external morality which means the inner state of the culprit, his motives and intentions do not seem to count. But this is just like laws of nature eg. the fire will burn him, even if it is good and pretty child who falls into it; the child will be burnt nevertheless.

5. RELIGIOUS AND SECULAR ATTITUDES TOWARDS MORALITY
From the above one can conclude that Religious attitudes do retain the characteristic of de-ontology, heteronomy and realism which are proper to children and even adults. For Christians the fountain and origin of sin is that it is disobedience to God's law.eg murder is in the nature and act of sin, giving alms for God's sake is the nature of virtue; doing right and beneficial things to others, not just simply helping a hungry/poor person; it is an evangelical or divine command. This is the de-ontological norm, but is it infantile? "Don't do it lest Mmumy will …..!" Similarly, Heteronomous Morality is it infantile or just a Christian norm? eg. Not as I will, but as thou wilt"; or surrendering oneself, or even giving some help to the enemy to show love for the enemy; are the infantile! These are issues we have to contend with if we are to make progress. Laws and societal norms must be obeyed if in the nation is to prosper because these were the laid down norms of our forebears. Abraham must be prepared to sacrifice the child in obedience to God's order. Abiding faith then and heteronomous ideas must form the warf and woof of URUAN/EFIK morality and norms – we must do all by faith – sacrifice our felt-needs and moral concerns if the people must rise and as if God should require it. It is a recommendation for a sort of martyrdom by BLIND FAITH in what we have to do. This then brings us as to the problem whether the postulation of God as the author of the moral law solves any problems more than the postulation as the first cause in Metaphysics. Need we base morality on the metaphysical conception of man as the rational, social being? Then we must ask ourselves this simple question:" WHAT LIFE IS MOST SATISFACTORY TO US AS A WHOLE?" It must be through the analysis of the nature of man – that there are some things for man and by implication URUAN/EFIK to do, that some hopes are illusory, and nothing but frustration if we indulge in them! Then we shall discover that as sons and daughters of this nation, we have to live together among others, hence we should lay down rules as to how we should behave among ourselves–for being like the rest of mankind and so find satisfaction /frustration in the same things. For the people, morality must therefore consist in the attempt to realize these common elements eg. the desire for love, kindness and companionship as well as the ability to think and act in a coherent way, and this demands adoption of rules and codes of law. They should not reject these rules; but they must not be seen as inviolable laws but as adaptable, as subservient to the purpose which is all we want. The rules must be treated as a wise man treats his motor car not as an object of veneration but as a convenience. Yet we also should note that as adults, since man's aim in life often conflicts with the aims of others and because most of our aims involve the co-operation of others (even selfish aims) we must conform to rules to which others conform. This demands the ordering of our priorities. The rule should be that "men perform their covenants made".

6. Morality v/s Religion: There are many people who believe that one way or the other morality needs a backing of Religion. One reason for this seemingly ambiguous claim is this: there are certain moral truths that are true only because of the truth of certain religious truths namely; the truth about the right/ wrongness of a given action which is dependent upon the truth of certain religious claims to the effect that God wants us to do (or refrain from doing) that action. This belief bases certain acts of morality upon the will of God. Some modern philosophers, scientists etc. have not commonly accepted this claim. The argument is thus stated: Following Plato's Euthyphro we argue thus: Doing a given action X is right (wrong) because God wants us to do (refrain from doing) X. But it can also rather be that God wants us to do (refrain from doing) X because of some other reason why X is right (or wrong) for us to do it. If we accept this, certainly we would have moral truths based upon the arbitrary desires of God as to what we should do (refrain from doing) and this is objectionable as we can see. Let us reformulated the argument as follows: Let us suppose there is an Action X that is right (wrong) only because God wants us to do (refrain from doing) it. First and foremost, there must be some reason for God's wanting us to do (refrain from) doing X, some reason that does not involve God's wanting us to do (refrain from dong) it. Therefore, that reason must also be the reason why X is right (wrong). It means there are actions that are right (wrong) because God wants us to do (refrain from doing) them or, if there are such actions, that is not the only reason why those actions are right (wrong). There seems to be a contradiction here; which is which? The whole argument faces the objection that God's wanting us to do (refrain from doing) X is not the whole reason why that action is right (wrong). The additional part of the reason must be that God is our Creator to whom we owe obedience as the Eternal and Supreme Law-giver. And when we take into account the full reason, the whole argument collapses. The Euthyphro argument can thus be re-stated: Let us suppose that there is some action Z that is right (wrong) only because God wants us to do (refrain from doing) it and He is our Creator to whom we owe obedience. There must be some reason for God's wanting us to do (refrain from doing) Z, some reason that does not involve God's wanting us to do (refrain from doing) Z. Therefore, that reason must also be the reason why Z is right (wrong). So we have a contradiction as to whether either there are no actions that are right (wrong) because God, is our Creator and to whom we owe obedience, wants us to do (refrain) from doing them or if there are such actions, that is not the only reason why those actions are right (wrong). Here it is possible to deny the whole point that is, the moral relevance that God is our Creator, and that even if He is, we have no obligation to obey His laws and commandments and wishes, and therefore the reason advanced above cannot be the reason why Z is right (wrong). But can we drag on the argument this way ad infinitum? Have we for example, any obligation to obey our parents who sort of created us? If we accept this on the part of parents, a fortiori, why shouldn't it also be so in the case of God? Can we also say that we have no special obligations at all to our parents and by implication to God? Then all our argumentation collapses unless we are irredeemably lawless and opportunist crooks.

Even if we say that, it is no part of the special obligations that we have to our parents to do (refrain from doing) what they want us to do (refrain from doing) That our special obligations to our parents are due to something that they do other than merely “creating” and taking care of us (something that God does not do) so the whole question of our special obligations to our parents has nothing to do with this truth or is it? Hence it would seem that the non-traditional argument that the rightness or wrongness of an action cannot depend upon the will of God rests upon these dubious premises and things get worse when we add the idea that we have an obligating to follow God's laws and wishes because He is our Creator. But we have to admit in the final analysis that there are theological beliefs about the will of God who created the world which are relevant to the truth of moral beliefs. It would therefore be wrong to suppose that there are no moral claims whose truth or falsehood may depend upon the truth of falsehood of theological claims whether we are URUAN/EFIK or Nigerians or nonconformists. All these are necessary to keep us focused on the way forward for a greater tomorrow. One or two simple examples will suffice. Let us take a few theological beliefs on the matter.

First Example: Property Rights concerning Thefts and Robbery, 419 etc: which are reprehensible and anathema in URUAN/EFIK customs and traditions: How has one a right to property eg. land, house, some cups of garri, TV, mango trees: That one had acquisition of it (them) through legitimizing or mixing his labour, like purchasing it from the market or stores, or planting it in his compound, or by employing and paying for the labour involved, etc? …. But what right has an individual to acquire property for himself and deprive the rest of us of the right to use it also despite the above legitimizations sort of? It is because we know that there must be a point in the history of mankind when property was ownerless because there was nobody around; URUAN/ EFIK believes in the CREATION of the world by GOD ALMIGHTY. Yes, suppose that the universe was created by God – then it can be argued that God owns the earth, and so there has never been ownerless property. But suppose further that this Creator allows men to use this property that they can mix with their labour (Cf. Gen. 1:28) but with the restriction that they must not cause a great loss to other people even though the rights of these people are not infringed upon. That means the Creator allows these people to take the property only if they follow certain of His laws and wishes: "You shall not steal." Then don't they have the obligation to do so? i.e. doesn't this Creator thereby wish us not to use the things of this world in certain ways – in a way that entails moral restrictions on property rights? Hence we have stewardship over property – we own property subject to certain restrictions. We have the authority and ownership of property to the exclusion of others who must keep away from "our property." Then we can now restate it with the Euthyphro argument thus:

1. Let us suppose that there are certain restrictions on property rights to the effect that this or that property belongs to whom it is certified to belong and that they exist only because God from whom we get our stewardship over the things of the earth, has imposed them.

2. There must be some reason why God has imposed these restrictions, a reason that does not involve His wanting us to follow them.

3. Therefore that reason must also be a reason why we should follow those restrictions.

4. So we have a contradiction in (1) and either no such restrictions exist or there is some additional reason why they exist, and this implies why taking another's property without his consent is wrong.

Second Example: Murder, Abortion, Suicide: In Phaedo – 6 ZA, Plato states: "Sometimes and for some people death is better than life, it should not be right for those to whom death would be an advantage to benefit themselves". So it means that from the above statement murder, abortion, or suicide is wrong. We are God's property as seen above and as we have an obligation not to take away or destroy someone else's property, and since God created us, then we are His property and hence cannot destroy (kill) someone or ourselves.

Third Example: Slavery & Trafficking in Persons: The same Euthyphro argument can also be advanced for the wrongness of slavery and trafficking in persons. Since human beings are God's property, it is unjust for another human being to possess another. Unless we want to object whether it makes sense for God, an all-just Being that He should own or possess us human beings. It would be difficult to assess this objection, but if God created us, we are rightly His property. No other beings have such rights. Therefore, if a perfect GOD has reasons for wanting us to behave in certain ways, and a fortiori, for imposing restrictions on our behaviour, it is unclear why they must meet these very strong demands – (the reason why we should follow the restrictions). It must be clear then, that these reasons provide moral claims which involve some other theological facts besides God willing certain things to be done or not to be done. Hence certain moral claims which involve some other theological claims are relevant to certain moral truths, in this case, having to do with existence of rights of property, murder, etc. Therefore, actions are right (wrong) for us to do because God, who has created us and owns us and whom we therefore have an obligation to follow, wants us to do (refrain from doing) them. This is what humankind understands as "unwritten eternal/ Natural law", which in fact are written in our human hearts at conception?

E. UTIBE: MYSTERIES AND REVELATION IN URUAN EFIK

URUAN/EFIK has numerous mysteries concerning people, places and things including events which are generally regarded as coming from God, the spirits and the world of ancestors. These are completely different from Christian mysteries of Religion. What makes URUAN mysteries conform to the category of the religious mystery is their belief in those happenings which excite, perplex, and which also cause awe, and wonderment, sometimes fear and anxiety, because these happenings are hidden and unknown. All these seem to apply to mysteries in general, namely the hidden treasures of God, the gods - NDEM sometimes referred to as mme MBUKPO including MMAMY-WATER (AFIA NWAN IDEM MM? ?) or properly so designated as "mmeABASI", ATAKPOR, EKPENYONG, ANANSA, IDEM USUK, etc. From the Latin term mysterium and also Greek musterion, the word mystery denotes something which often arouses curiosity including MMAMY-WATER (AFIA and or "mme ABASI"; awe because it cannot be explained away, something secret which often can cause a certain amount of curiosity, even perplexity: a sort of conundrum, puzzle, riddle, or even an enigma. Events such as an eclipse of the sun, the starlights of Okukubarakpa and whales in the depths, thunder and lightning, the birth of triplets/quadruplets, all come under the umbrella of mysteries. The python is a mystery, so also the elephant and the hippopotamus as well as mountains, valleys, rivulets, lakes etc. What of the rainbow – ORUK ABASI, the Atlantic Ocean, the cawing of ikurikut *(*the owl) at nightfall, the bleating of goats or of cocks crowing at midnight, anthills, etc? All these are aspects of the mysterious in URUAN religious perspective and vocabulary.

What we have stated here goes to confirm that an authentic religion whether of natural or supernatural manifestations and revelations (Cf EkarikaJ.P.18) should contain some mysteries i.e. truths of the intellectual order completely transcending the grasp of reason. This is because regardless of the means God or who/whatever uses in making a revelation, he not only manifests a truth, but also makes those receiving the revelation absolutely sure that the truths communicated come from him. These are the truths we call Mysteries, and by their very nature they completely transcend the powers of the human reason because their existence is hidden in God; thus their existence cannot possibly be comprehended or explained away. Nevertheless, we cannot see any necessary disharmony or contradictions among them. This means that we can grasp at least in a negative way that they are possible. Since mysteries though above nature, do not contradict reason, they possibly can be grasped only in such a manner. In other words, reason cannot demonstrate that there are any intrinsic contradictions in those concepts expressing the meaning of a mystery. Obviously there would be no mystery at all but an absurdity were a contradiction to be involved in it, since this would only be discovered still by reason which would reduce it to no mystery at all.

The proposition that a true religion must necessarily contain some mysteries which are designated Mysteries of Religion, is demonstrated by the fact that God can and has in fact raised man to a knowledge and perfection above his natural capacity such that he can grasp through reason some of the most stupendous and profound events in the world. Mysteries of revelation form part of this knowledge and they include whatever are divinely added over and above natural religion and the natural law viz. man's relations with the holy which is effected through veneration and adoration and which in turn becomes objectified, embodied in creeds, words, actions and laws as well as in the sum total of the rights and duties which follow directly from the nature of man as we have seen in Articles 1-5 above.

These mysteries also include the TEN COMMANDMENTS/DECALOGUE and these are all mankind: for example, which really depend exclusively on God's free will, as also the existence of Angels, the creation of the world, the end of the world, the Incarnation, the Blessed Trinity, etc. Man is totally dependent on God, his Creator and Lord: who is Truth, it cannot therefore be correct that since mysteries are truths (propositions which are neither proved nor provable) the revelation of mysteries must be a contradiction in terms. The fact is that the revelation of a mystery denotes the making known of the existence of such a reality, but not the disclosure or explanation of the intrinsic possibility of that reality. A mystery cannot literally be revealed i.e. be uncovered or described, otherwise it would cease to be a mystery.

It is true that some of these great mysteries cannot be known scientifically through their causes, since they cannot be positively understood or demonstrated from the principles of reason or scientific methods even after revelation. Therefore, mysteries cannot be incorporated into the system of any science; nonetheless, they do not contradict neither science nor the human mind, but leave intact all the truths which human intelligence can master by its power. Therefore, we cannot but deplore certain attitudes which derive from a shortsighted view of the rightful autonomy of science or technology which have occasioned conflict and controversy and also which have led many into opposing faith/Religion and science. Without a creator there can be no such a thing as creatures. In any case, believers no matter what their religion have always recognized the voice and the revelation of God in their language as creatures. Besides, once God is forgotten the creature is only to be forgotten as well. That is why all peoples of whatever religion see the hand of God in all these mysteries and wonders. These mysteries instruct us in those matters which exceed our human capacities. Furthermore, God gave His mysteries for the sake of religious not scientific progress and advancement of technology, though these can help to further encourage scientific and technological research in those areas which the human mind can attain. By the revelation of mysteries, we are led to a deeper knowledge of the mystery and goodness of God, and this promotes reverence, gratitude, adoration and love towards God. While masteries like those of the Blessed Trinity, the incarnation, the Redemption and the Blessed Eucharist are but mysteries so sublime and ineffable, they are there to excite, strengthen and confirm our Faith. There seems to be no Mysteries in Islam except the Koran itself which is the greatest mystery of Allah. There is nothing secret in Islam; everything is open and public. In African traditional brands like those of URUAN/EFIK mysteries mentioned earlier, they include mystery cults and those that are particularly worldly customs and practices e.g. sacrifice, the initiations, rituals (sacraments) etc which are the most common.

1. CLASSIFICATION OF MYSTERIES IN URUAN/EFIK
(A) MYSTERIES IN THE WORLD OF NATURE

These mysteries more often than not are those connected with natural events like thunder, lightning, eclipse, waterfall, ant-hills, animals, etc. Nobody seems to know how and why they occur though some circumstances of their occurrence can be predicted or anticipated eg lightning. No man or woman can predict an eclipse unless he is a scientist, and in that case he is not doing so as an URUAN/EFIK man but as a scientist or a Greek, a Roman and of the modern European genre and pedigree. Such mysteries do not only strike awe and fear but make the people wonder at the profundity, magnificence and supreme transcendence of God making them call on Him to intervene and prevent any untoward calamity or disaster in the land. An eclipse of the sun which occurred in 1947 made the people accept the supreme majesty of God though some used it to predict the end of the world which never happened to this day.

(B) MYSTERIES OF EVENTS & HAPPENINGS: There are certain unusual occurrences like an influx of aphids (affidon), which are maggot-like creatures which can destroy an entire kingdom or community farms. They spread throughout the length and breadth of football and rice fields, gardens and farms eating up and destroying all crops in sight. I can still remember this occurrence in 1949 when the entire school system was paralyzed as the pupils and teachers were hard put to it trying to kill them with flat wooden bars such that the more they were beaten with the sticks, the more they appeared making "nyak-nyak" under our feet as pupils scarcely wore shoes to school in those days. Schools had to be closed down because it was very cumbersome and inconvenient to walk along and even people feared an epidemic would ensue. The whole of URUAN/EFIK nation cried to God for protection, while the traditional Rulers, chiefs and priests/priestesses would in such an event call upon the local prophets and medicine men to make incantations and sacrifices in order to "send" the invaders away. People everywhere were busy offering Masses and holding church services and intercessions, calling upon God for the calamity to abate. There was also before this as my mother told me, an influx of locusts into the land in 1942/43. I can recall in a writing/dictation class, which was usually the first lesson after Recreation time, our teacher wrote on the board to be copied three times: "? kuku kp?y?riy?; asua idem ama ndu", and this was also to be recited as a rhyme as well a chant. It was on this occasion that my mother told me of that event in 1942/43. She also explained the meanings of the "writing text". This is a proverb pregnant with varied meanings and interpretations viz: "Hate the evil/sin but do not hate the sinner. Life is bitter /sweet. Do not look at the surface but look at the inner meaning of life, events, etc." Locusts can destroy a whole nation as they almost destroyed the land of Egypt owing to Pharaoh's intransigence and disobedience to Moses by refusing to allow the children of Israel go and sacrifice to their God; the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. In fact, most of those calamities and plagues which befell the people of Egypt can be regarded as the type of mysteries we are trying to recount under this classification. Though they were direct interventions by God, but that is exactly what has been happening all the time whenever people recognize the infinitelyultimate transcendence of God Almighty and His relation towards His creatures. Nevertheless, these have been (mis)taken for mysteries but they also go to confirm our analysis here.(Cf.Exd.4-10)

(C) MYSTERIES ON OCCASIONS OF DISASTERS, EPIDEMICS, ETC: URUAN/EFIK people also recognize certain mysteries which occur as epidemics and calamities to the people. My father could recall as a kid ud? ? Efiom-nsa (influenza epidemic) of 1918 which they said afflicted the whole world. Mfat-ito epidemic (small pox) is also a veritable example of mystery. This epidemic which occurred in 1951 did not leave any soul, child or adult untouched. People ran helter shelter looking for medicine men and ritualists wherever they could be found. Many stories and tale-tales went round and village chiefs and kindred heads ordered that prayers and intercessions be offered to God and ancestors. Various vegetable and root concoctions were rubbed on the body and some taken as potions. The idea in all this was that something mysterious had befallen the land. On occasions like these the only thing engaging the people is gossiping about anything and everything, simply because people find no explanations; kpukpru edi UTIBE, they all seem to say.

(D) MYSTERIES OF UNCOMMON AND UNUSUAL OCCURRENCES: like the cawing of the owl at nightfall, the bleating of goats or a cock crowing at midnight, ie. before kp?-usiere (dawn cockcrow), is simply an enigma which evokes wonder and anxiety. It is something bordering on the conundrum sort of. At certain times a multitude of bees or very tiny white ants can appear from nowhere to astound the populace. It can also be an unusual type of snake or python or millipede, very unusually big and black. In 1962 while at a meeting in the compound of the Ntoi (paramount Ruler of repute) of Ikot Ansa, a black long and fat millipede appeared from nowhere and was crawling towards the centre where the chief was seated. Many people were frightened stiff to the marrows. But the royal lord unruffled held out his Esa - Ub? (king's walking stick) talking in their Ekoi/Abakpa tongue to it. He then spat out in front of the visitor which turned back and disappeared as we were watching with eyes transfixed. Nobody saw where it went as it had disappeared just as it came. It was a messenger, it was sent. URUAN/EFIK people often believe that such a phenomenon cannot but come from God, NDEM spirits or ancestors as messengers. A similar incident also occurred when I was a mere juvenile of about 8. A vulture flew down from nowhere as many people were gathered in the compound of a certain paramount Ruler. As no animal was slaughtered within the vicinity it was therefore very unusual for a vulture to come calling on the roof. It flew directly over the royal lord's head. Unruffled, he stood up and spoke to the intruding visitor. He then ordered that an Uka obu be prepared and brought in Usan Abasi. This was done, and the king proceeded to talk to the creature since everyone there knew it must have come as a "messenger from the underworld. Simply put, the address on such an occasion can be summarized like this: "If your message is of good forebodings and are beneficial, you may eat this and prosper, but if it forebodes evil, return to where you came or perish, you bearer of iniquity." The reason for this is that as it did occur, the Royal overlord must have seen quite beyond us mere mortals, and that it wasn't a good omen at all. It is no gainsaying that the visitor did eat everything and in the end could not just fly away. It strode about the compound-bush and died some days after. This was another wonderment, but one of serious forebodings for the citizenry at large. The sense of the mystery is that after all are said and done, the people are still left in amazement, confusion and anxiety. But more often than not these prophets say they are messengers from God or the ancestors and the spirits, yet concerning the very message, they do not understand, neither can they interpret nor analyze it to the satisfaction, comfort or even the consolation of the citizenry.

(E) NATURAL INCIDENCES OF VERY PERPLEXING AND UNCOMFORTABLE NATURE: Many a time people wake up to find Ediene (anthills) sprouting up with alacrity and force to the point of occupying even the living room, edem-esa (courtyards), beside and even near a coconut, orange or palm tree. Anthills can take up quite annoying and awkward positions where they shouldn't be at all. There was this incident when an anthill sprouted up with all its force in the living room of a parish manse. Both parishioners and town people all came out as was directed by the paramount ruler to break down the intruder; but the more people tried to knock it down the more it grew like a chimera. Sacrifices were made, Holy Mass offered, all sorts of things both native and Christian, orthodox and profane were done to no avail. "What has happened? Who has anathematized or apostatized for such evil to befall us," the people asked? But there was no answer from any source! Then after a few days it disappeared. How the whole thing vanished as it came, nobody could explain! As often happens especially at sea, and even on land; people might be rowing, going to or coming back from their destinations, low and behold, all of a sudden quite in front of them a little distance away, just as happened to the disciples of Jesus (Cf. Mt 14:22-33; Lk 8:22-25) a serious awawa (storm) can occur almost to the point of capsizing their canoes! Sometimes an Esik whirlpool - ?kp?s? us?p-mm? ie. tsunami during a great storm can suddenly be seen a short distance away from the canoe as people are making their way to their business, or it could be a thick haze, with fogs and dark clouds of smoke enveloping the whole area thus making visibility impossible. In the ocean a Berbunda/Barbuda can also occur. The people can take fright and panic as waves and billows enter their boats or canoes; but in most cases they try to steady their canoes and maneuver by rowing in ndadaha until the sea calms down for them to anchor in safety, peace and happiness again. It can also happen that as people are going about their normal business exploits paddling on to or from their destinations, they suddenly begin to see right before them what looks like iba ba - buoys covering the entire surface water as far as the eye can carry; sometimes it can be a hurricane or as often happens, sand dunes, whereas there is no sign of low tide at all. Rowing becomes difficult and they begin to get so exasperated, confused and awe-struck that they cannot clearly see before them again. The buoys have appeared from nowhere to frighten and harass them. Many a time also at sea, starlets from okukubarakpa (whales) may suddenly light up the entire surface of the sea from nowhere all to the discomfiture, trepidation and dismay of us poor humans. On land it can be a whirlwind, an eddy or something very frightening and untoward. In all such cases, people often come to the conclusion that NDEM may have caused such calamitous and unwarranted machinations and distractions to frighten them. But again just as they occurred, they also disappear and calm and tranquility begin to envelope the scene once more. With equanimity and self-assurance, the people sing and paddle or row and if on land drive on to their destinations.

(F) COMEDIES & UNCOMMON AWE-STRIKING MYSTERIES FROM THE SERPENT WORLD: There are also some well-known mysteries that do not cause so much panic and fear, but certainly not without a little anxiety in connection with the issue of serpents in URUAN/EFIK religious perspective and Weldtangschaaung. Some of these incidents are oftentimes even anticipated and welcomed. A hard-working nursing mother may go to the farm taking along a mat and all that is necessary for the comfort of the baby. On arrival, she places her baby on the mat under the shed of a tree with the toys and other baby paraphernalia, while she goes about weeding, planting, harvesting cassava or whatever. Of course she knows that there might be a "guardian angel" lurking around just like a nurse to look after and take full control and complete care of her baby. Then as sure as the moon, a python appears from nowhere sitting beside the baby and watching it for the mother eagle-eyed. It is a very common phenomenon in URUAN/EFIK. It is only that in recent times, people do not even know where the farm is situated, and from where they get the fresh and nourishing vegetables they see in the supermarkets these days. Surely, they do not come from the skies; so the more they guess so much more the wonder grows - Utibe kp? ny?, mme kp?-ndik ye kpa-idem! Taking account from the great Greek philosopher Pythagoras (+445 BC) he had perfected the theory of metempsychosis, because often two children may be sleeping together on a mat or sofa, suddenly cries and swoons are heard; low, there is a big python lying side by side or between the children. Wonders, wonders, wonders! But these do happen, and by just straightening an Indian bamboo across in the direction of the door towards the head of the "august visitor", the serpent simply crawls away with everybody's eyes transfixed as it disappears just as it came. What of the rain falling and the sun shining with the rainbow appearing on the horizon and may others too numerous to classify? It serves our purpose that even though some of these "mysteries" can be explained away; like the Esik which scientists explain is caused by a combination of atmospheric pressure, differences between portions of the water (river or sea, even the ocean) as also differences in temperature; these occurrences are indeed a mystery to ignorant humanity here below. For the simple unsophisticated and "unadulterated" folks, those who go about their normal daily business, whether Christian or pagan, but certainly not "heathens" as some foreign writers in the past would have us believe, these fellows who have the Law of God written in their hearts, and there are not wicked, thieves, adulterers or something, such humans whether URUAN/EFIK or Negro or even Caucasian/Aryan anywhere have come to believe that the hand of the Lord of Heaven and Earth, Deus Tremendus, knows and has a hand in all these things, simply to manifest His glory and sublime Transcendence.

(G) MYSTERIES IN THE CONTEXT OF WORLD RELIGIONS: To be able to appreciate mysteries in World Religions, what comes to mind are those cosmogonies and cosmologies surrounding mystery cults like those of the great ancient world religions of Egypt, Mesopotamia (Babylon, Ancient Persia and Sumeria in present day Iraq, Iran and Turkey) as also the religions of Greece, Rome and of Asia and these should not detain us here otherwise we shall be writing another book. I have already covered these in my earlier works. (Cf. Ekarika J.P.23) These mysteries cover the Eleusinian mysteries of Attica in ancient Athens about Demeter the god and his daughter goddess, Persephone, also the secret rites and initiations of ancient Greek and Roman mystery cults. But for our purpose, suffice to say most of these cultic mysteries are different from those of URUAN/EFIK and other African traditional brands. As the name implies, they border on cultic rituals and symbols. They often talk about the underworld of gods and goddesses like the Mithraic mystery cults of the Greco-Roman world which are very weird and unintelligible to Africans; but of course they all share the same patterns of nature mythologies and mystical experiences.

(H) MYSTERIES OF CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS: A mystery is a particularly unique event in the revelation of the mystery of salvation and for Christians, it is a truth altogether surpassing and beyond the range and grasp of reason which God has revealed to be believed with the authority of Faith, since God himself has said or manifested it. There are hundreds of such mysteries in the Christian Religion. Mysteries like those of the Blessed Trinity, the Incarnation, the Redemption and the Blessed Eucharist are but mysteries so sublime and ineffable. They are there to excite, strengthen and confirm the Faith of Christians for who can understand or explain the Virgin birth of Jesus or how mere bread and wine can change absolutely into the Body and Blood of Christ or how a mere woman should be called Mother of God? When Jesus foretold that He would be crucified to death but would rise immortal on the third day, who could believe that! (Cf. Mt 16:21; Mk. 10:12-14; Lk18:31-34) All these are very outstanding and beyond human reasoning. Christians believe as if their life depended on them. All these mysteries also form the bedrock of Christian doctrines, life and practice as Creeds of the Church.

PROPHECIES IN RELIGION vis-a-vis URUAN/EFIK

1. NOTIONS AND DEFINITION OF PROPHECY

We have to include here prophecies among the criteria of authentic Religions whether natural or supernatural ie. those within the context of Revelation as also of religious experiences since God is known to have spoken or given testimony about Himself to man. From the Greek prophanai meaning "to speak for another or in place of another", prophecy has come to mean the proclamation of God's words to men through the prophets so appointed by Him. According to St. Augustine, prophecy is the proclamation of God's words to men and the proclaimers are the prophets. That is why sacred Scripture calls the prophets," those men who by God's impulse speak about divine things either by interpreting the scriptures or by exhorting the people or by praising God." eg. Moses, Samuel, Isaiah. (Cf. Num. 11:25-29) Prophecy can also be derived according to St. Thomas Aquinas, from a combination of the Latin pro (cul) i.e. "from afar" and Greek phanos i.e. "an apparition", hence prophecy means the making of far off things apparent to men by the prophets. Because men were moved by divine impulse to make known certain hidden realities, the term prophet has come to mean "one who manifests hidden things, whether past, present or future". eg. After the Jews had struck Jesus and buffeted Him, they said: "Prophesy to us O Christ who it is that struck Thee". (Matt. 26:68); or the prophet Isaiah telling King Ahaz/Ahab: "The Lord Himself will give you a sign; behold a virgin will conceive…God-is-with-us". (Is 7:10-15) In a very strict sense, because future realities are the most hidden, the prophet has come to mean "man who experiences God's gracious self-communication and correctly foretells future events"; and it is in this last technical and apologetical sense that the term prophecy is going to be used as an aspect of Religious experience. We can then define Prophecy as the sure and definite prediction of some future events which could not be foreseen through rational causes. This prediction must be absolutely sure and certain, hence there should be no guess work; therefore, suspicious and apodical assertions are excluded, since prophecy consists principally in sure knowledge. The predication must be definite and unambiguous because predictions that can be twisted about or applied to any event like those of pagan oracles which have often double meanings and are obscure and usually, they are combinations of ambiguity and fraud which do not and cannot deserve the name of prophecy at all. But here we seem to be putting the cart before the horse as we started with the Christian prophecy instead of prophecy in URUAN perspective and usage. For a good purpose yes, because URUAN does not speak about seers as also Idi? but kukut ye mme okut kukut, ie. Prophecy and prophets when dealing with these things as we are going to see. The above objections regarding oracles, juju men and fortune tellers do not apply to URUAN/EFIK prophecy and prophethood though these are also known and practised in URUAN/EFIK but not in the context of prophecy. The use of the word prophecy is akin to that of the Christian Religion because this deals with men of great sanctity, wisdom and holiness who may not be Christians at all as happened in ancient past. We have devoted a whole article on INAM ie. those who should be regarded as prophets in URUAN/EFIK in chapter four. Oracles, soothsaying, Idi? , etc. are of another curious category which is treated elsewhere.

2. NATURE & PURPOSE OF PROPHECIES

A true prophet understands at least to some extent, what God, and for some in URUAN, the spirits, ancestors, Mbukpo etc. wishes to announce through Him eg. an Inam or Moses. To prophesy without understanding the things spoken about is contrary to human perfections and only idiots, the mentally deranged and dreamers would act in such a manner. A true prophet never utters revelations in a state of delirium but always has a clear and intellectual grasp of the things he is prophesying. The prophet must also realize that it is God (or the spirits) who has given Him the message. Sometimes the prophet experiences a sense vision (corporeal prophecy) when he perceives something by the eye or ear. (Cf. Daniel 5:11-30); The prophet may also experience an imaginative vision (imagery prophecy) by which God either imparts completely new images put previously there from the senses. (Cf. Acts. 10:10-15). Finally, the prophet may experience an intellectual vision (intellectual prophecy) when God directly puts new intellectual ideas or infused knowledge into the intellect. (Cf. Acts 2) as in the case of the Apostles when the Holy Spirit descended of them. All these can happen to an URUAN/EFIK man or woman or INAM. But here as in other matters also, there are some really good-living people "without guile of sorts" in the land - men and women, even children, whom the Lord in His inscrutable and infinite wisdom and liberality has endowed with wisdom and understanding "to see and say" things that are simply outstanding and ineffable. They are born not made. Thus the judgment about this criterion is that the divinely strengthened intelligence of the prophet decides with infallible certitude both as to the meaning of a given revelation and the fact that it has been given to him by God. Therefore, if the existence of God is granted, the possibility and Recognizabililty of prophecies cannot be denied. The very nature of the event predicted or prophesied about or at least the very circumstances, under which it occurred, will certainly show that the prophecy cannot but be the divine guarantee of an authentic religion, and so the alternative explanations must be excluded. Future events, since they are dependent exclusively on God's free choice, can in no way be known before hand by men, the power of human foresight notwithstanding. No created intelligence can foresee with certitude future events which depend on the exercise of God's free will or even the free will of men. In their fulfillment too, prophecies cannot be explained on the grounds of chances. The virginal birth of Christ predicted by Isaiah (Is. 7:7) cannot be an illusion or fulfilled by mere chance. Divine Providence which controls even chance happenings would certainly not permit a false religion to be strengthened if it had not truly got the stamp of divine approval and authentic revelation. When therefore there is a question of a prophecy given as a guarantee of a religion or for the benefit of the people or some persons, means will not be lacking to distinguish genuine prophecy from divination, wise predictions, or Idi? , or oracles or even what the witches may say. Hence oracles, predictions of parapsychologists, diviners, soothsayers, Dibias, Visioners, medicine men including predictions through witchcraft, Nemancracy (Cf 1 Sam28:7-14), etc. whether of the traditional or of other cosmic religions cannot be included in the above context which the people understand, though in a sense, they may have their raison d'être in the other religious experiences of mankind.

3. PROPHETS IN THE CONTEXT OF WORLD RELIGIONS

Islam has Prophets but certainly not in the above context. In Islam, prophets are simply the Messengers of Allah, they are those people sent by Allah to various countries and at various times to guide mankind. From the Arabic, nabyy or nabi, prophet for Muslims means one who announces. He is the ambassador between Allah and man. He is the one inspired by Allah. He receives Allah's message and delivers it to mankind by promulgating the divine law. Cf. Musa, (Moses) Isa (Jesus) and finally Muhammed himself. One of the six Articles of Faith in Islam the IMAN is belief in the Holy Prophets or messengers of Allah: "True piety is this, to believe in Allah, and the last Day, and the Angels, the Book and the Prophets". (SURATIL 2 V. 177) Prophets according to Muslim tradition were to teach and guide and among them were the Messengers RASUL some of whom are also found in the Christian Tradition also ie. in the Bible with special titles. Cf. Adam 3(Adamu) "Chosen of Allah"; Noah (Nuh), "Prophet of Allah"; Moses (Musa) "Converser with Allah"; Abraham (Ibrahim) "Friend of Allah", Ishmael (Ismail) "Sacrifice of Allah"; Jesus (Isa) "Word/Spirit of Allah"; Others were David (Dawud) Solomon (Suleiman) Isaac (Ishaq) Jacob (Yakubu) John the Baptist (Yahaya). Muhammed himself was the last and seal of all the Prophets, the "Apostle of Allah". For the Muslims, prophethood is a free gift of Allah; no man can become a prophet simply by his own choice. Prophets must be free from disfiguring, and disabling diseases; they must be free from telling lies, committing wrong deeds and wickedness as some of these …are. They must be free from stupidity, laziness, concealing any part of the message given, etc.

But within the Judaic/Christian tradition prophets in the O. T. were regarded as instruments of God's purposes in leading, guiding, instructing, disciplining, and punishing His people. The prophetic interpretation of history would see events described by the secular historian as the outcome not of political, economic, sociological and geographical factors, but as incidents in a dialogue between God and His people. Here it is important to note that for these people, the prophets were not formulators of history in the sense of hypothesis applied retrospectively to the facts, but as reporters of their actual experience of these events. They were conscious of living in the midst of Salvation History. The same epistemologically and religiously runs through the New Testament. Thus Jesus the great Prophet of N. T. is seen as the "Messiah of God", the one in whom the world was to witness the divine Son living a human life and giving Himself for the renewal of mankind. Prophets in Asian Religions were simply those great founders and priests like the Brahman, the writers of the Vedas, Yoga and other Vedic literature eg the Theravada, the Upanishads. Gautama (Buddha) the "awakened man" the founder of Buddhism whose principle was "enlightenment" had teachings just like the Upanishads. The Chinese king, Futzu (Confucius), the father of Confucianism, regarded himself as the revealed master, foretelling the future and ministering to his Chinese people. Shen-toa,3 founder of Shintoism, whose religion was seen as the "way to the gods" led his Japanese people to accept that the only way of knowing what should be done in any instance or at any particular circumstance was to live in communion with the universe and the gods. Zoroastria whose religion, Zoroastrianism he introduced in Persia (Iran) was mostly concerned with occultism, magic, divination, alchemy, astrology which type of prophecy is exactly what we were talking about as alien to URUAN/EFIK including death and other various mystical speculations. Similarly, the religion of the legendary Lao YTzu (old Master) which flourished in most parts of China, Japan, Sly Lanka (Ceylon) dealt mostly with various mystical speculations, building up on the natural way as a means of arriving at Reality and knowledge insisting that all malpractices and maladjustments in human moral behavior like theft, murder, adultery, incidents of violations of the natural Way.

F. MIRACLES IN PHILOSOPHICAL AND CHRISTIAN PERSPECTIVES

1. AGNOSTIC POSITION – D. HUME & MIRACLES

PREAMBLE: Let us preface this series with the problem of the Real presence. Dr. Tillotson's argument against the Real presence comes to mind and is as strong and argument as any that can possibly be instituted against a doctrine so little worthy of serious refutation: It is acknowledged according to the learned prelate that the authority either of the scriptures or of Tradition is founded merely on the testimony of the Apostles who were eye-witnesses to those miracles of our Saviour by which He proved His Divine Mission. Our evidence then, for the truth of our Christian Religion is less than the evidence for the truth of our senses – because even in the first authors of Religion it was greater – and it must diminish as it passes from the Apostles to the disciples, etc. but as we know a weaker argument can never destroy a stronger, and therefore, were the doctrine of the Real Presence ever so clearly revealed in the scripture were to be denied or contradicted, it would be directly contrary to the rules of just reasoning to give our assent to it. It contradicts sense, though Scripture and Tradition on which it is based do carry no such evidence with them as sense when they are considered as mere external evidences, and are not brought home to everyone's breast by the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit. Nothing then is as convenient and decisive of an argument of this kind as that which must at least silence the most arrogant bigotry and superstition and free us from impertinent solicitations. All this has been the starting point of David Hume. Then he goes on to flatter himself that he has found an argument which with the wise and learned as also the unlearned would be an everlasting check to all kinds of superstition, delusions etc. and consequently will be useful as long as the world endures, with regard to miracles and prodigies found in all history both sacred and profane.

THE MIRACLES NOT AN EFFECT FROM CAUSE

Hume admits that though experience is our only guide in reasoning concerning matters of fact, it must be acknowledged that this guide is not `altogether in fallible, and in some cases can lead us into errors. One in our climate e.g. in March is any week, would expect a better weather tan in July – reasoning conformably to experience, but it is certain that he may happen in the event to find himself mistaken. But he should have no cause to complain of experience, because it commonly informs us beforehand of the uncertainty by contrariety of event which must be learnt from diligent observation. ALL EFFECTS FOLLOW NOT WITH LIKE CERTAINTY FROM THEIR SUPPOSED CAUSES. e.g. Some effects are found in all countries and all ages to have been constantly conjoined together, others are found to more variable, and sometimes to disappoint to disappoint our experiences, so that in our reasoning concerning matters of fact, there are all imaginable degrees of assurance – from the highest certainty to the lowest species of moral evidence. A wise man must therefore proportion his belief to the evidence. In such conclusion as are founded on infallible experience, he expects the event with the least degree of assurance and regards his past experience as a full proof of the future existence of that event. In other cases, he must proceed with greater caution – he must weigh the opposite experience – to that side he inclines which is supported by the greater number of experiments – to others he inclines with doubt and hesitation. When then he fixes his judgment – it is not really on PROBABILITY which presupposes an opposition of experiments and observations where one side is found to over-balance the other and to produce a degree of evidence proportionate to the superiority, but that the contradictory could not prove the case, except a strong degree of assurance.

2. THE MIRACLE A CONTRARIETY OF EVIDENCE

Hence as we try to apply these principles we may observe that there is no species of reasoning more common, more useful, and even more necessary to human life than that which is derived from the testimony of men, and the reports of eye-witnesses and spectators. Or course this type of reasoning may be denied on the relation of cause to effect. It is known that all our inferences are founded on the principle of observation that no objects have any discoverable connection together except those founded on the experience of their constant and regular conjunction. As the evidence derived from witnesses and human experience, 'testimony is founded on past experience, so it varies with experience and must be seen either as a proof or a probability, according as the conjunction between the report and the object has been found to be constant or variable.

Where this experience is not entirely uniform on any side, it is attended with unavoidable contrariety so much so that there is attended the same opposition and mutual destruction of argument as in every other kind of evidence. This contrariety of evidence may be due to the opposition of contrary evidence, the character of the witnesses, the manner of delivering their testimony, etc. and these may diminish or destroy the force of the argument, and hence we may not make an exception to this maxim in favour of human testimony. But we also have to admit whether the human memory is not tenacious to at least some degree, whether men haven't a common inclination to truth and a principle of priority, and whether men are not sensible to shame when detected in falsehood. And these are qualities inherent in human nature, and then we can afford not to repose the least confidence in human testimony. A man delirious or noted for falsehood and villainy has no manner of authority as we know. And as the evidence from human testimony (from witness) is founded on past experience, certainly it has to be as the conjunction between any particular kinds of report has been found to be constant or variable.

Let us use the above preambles in examining Hume's idea of miracles. Hume begins by saying that the same principle of experience which gives us a certain degree of assurance in the testimony of witness gives us also another degree of assurance against the fact which they endeavour to establish from which contradiction there necessarily arises a counterpoise and mutual destruction of belief and authority eg. Supposing the fact which the testimony endeavours to establish partakes of the extraordinary (MIRACLES) and the marvelous, in that case the evidence resulting from the testimony admits of a diminution, greater or less, in proportion as the fact (MIRACLE) is more or less usual.

3.MIRACLE AS VIOLATION OF THE LAWS OF NATURE

Assuming the testimony of witnesses to miracles, let suppose that the fact (MIRACLE) which they affirm is really miraculous, and suppose that the testimony considered apart, is an entire proof – then in that case we have a proof against a proof – of which the strongest must prevail. A miracle therefore is a violation of the laws of nature, and as a firm and unalterable experience has established these laws – the proof against a miracle from the very nature of the fact, is as entire as any argument from experience can be possibly imagined. Why e.g. is it probable that all men must die; that lead cannot itself be suspended in the air, that fire consumes wood and is extinguished by water? Unless it is seen that these events are found agreeable to the laws of nature; and there is ESTEEMED A MIRACLE IF IT EVER HAPPENS IN THE COMMON COURSE OF NATURE. eg. Turning water into wine. It is no miracle that a healthy man should suddenly die because such kind of death, though more unusual than the others, has yet been frequently observed to happen. But it is a miracle that a dead man should come to life; that has never been observed in any age or country. There must therefore be a uniform experience against every miraculous event; otherwise the event would not merit the appellation. And as a uniform experience amounts to a proof, there is here a direct and full proof from the nature of the fact (MIRACLE) against the nature of any miracle. There is naturally required a very strong testimony to engage our assents to facts that arise from the state of nature with which we are unacquainted, and which bear so little analogy to these events of which we have had constant and uniform experience. Though these may not be contrary to our experience they must not be conformable to it. Hence according to Hume, the plain consequence is that no testimony is sufficient to establish a miracle unless the testimony is of such a kind that its falsehood would be more miraculous than the fact which it endeavours to establish. And even in that case there must be a mutual destruction of arguments – the superior can only give us an assurance suitable to the degree of force which remains after deducting the inferior. Hume contends that e.g. if anyone tells him that he saw a dead man restored to life, he would immediately consider whether it were more probable that the witness is deceiving or is deceived or the miracle had really happened. Then Hume would weigh the miracle of fact against the miracle of opposition and pronounce his judgment on the superiority and reject the greater miracle. If the falsehood of his testimony would be more miraculous than the event ie. (witnessed miracle) then, and not till then can the witness pretend to command Hume's belief or opinion.

4. MIRACLES IN THE CONTEXT OF AN UNSCIENTIFIC DEFINITION

A. NOWELL-SMITH & MIRACLES

According to Nowell-Smith, our argument has to begin with Lunn's definition of miracles; an explicit attack on the Modernist Thesis that "Jesus was a man to whom fabulous stories have been foisted to prove that he was a Man-God". Lunn's view on the contrary was that he was always God and that the growth of the gospel stories was not the progressive deification of a man but the progressive humanization of God. A miracle is an event above or contrary to or exceeding nature which is explicable only as a direct act of God. Miracles certainly occur. There is plenty of evidence for them if only people will bother to investigate it instead of rejecting them out of hand. Miracles are "evidences provided by God to demonstrate the existence of a divine order". Therefore, we must believe that reality is not "coterminous with the natural order" and must answer in the negative the momentous question whether all phenomena recorded and witnessed by man are due purely to natural causes? Moreover, it is to the authority of the scientists themselves that we declare that a particular phenomenon is inexplicable, as the effect of natural agents, and must therefore be ascribed to supernatural agents. We must admit first of all, that every Religion has its own stock of miracles, some of which are well attested as the Christian miracles. It would therefore be futile to assume that only a particular stand-point would guarantee the existence of miracles because other religions also prove the existence of their gods from such evidence – miracles. Then we must also accept the God of Muhammed and the whole Greek and Hindu Pantheons. To say that miracles as such are inexplicable as the effect of natural agents is not a scientific explanation – i.e. that these must be ascribed to supernatural causes/agents – we can only say that no known scientific method or hypothesis has yet explained the Phenomenon.

Secondly, it is not scientific to define miracles as events exceeding nature and explicable only as direct interventions or Act of God. This point is only offering an explanation and not reporting its occurrence. The fact is simply that extraordinary phenomena occur – and it is only in this evidence that we admit that miracles occur. An evidence must be kept from explanatory theory otherwise in accepting evidence, we are already committed to accepting the theory. No matter how strange an event someone reports, the statement that it must be due to some supernatural agent cannot be part of that report. Known laws and factors may not be able to explain this phenomenon (Miracle). There must be something outside but which I cannot here and now tell. An explanation must explain how an event comes about; otherwise it is simply a learned (or tendentious) name for the phenomenon to be explained. It can be admitted that the present hypothesis of science can never be expanded to cover miraculous phenomena: we may require new concepts and new laws. Then we may hold that the problem is not whether science can explain everything in current terms, but whether the explanation of miracles requires a method quite different from that of science, otherwise we must prove that it is not, since it is hard to see why miracles should be called supernatural; i.e. explicable only as direct acts of God. Hence we may not hold that science must either be able to explain everything here and now or be able in the future to explain everything in terms of the current. For there is still the possibility that science may be able in the future to offer an explanation, which though couched in quite new terms, remain strictly scientific. There is therefore no theory that should hold a phenomenon inexplicable – and therefore there is not warranted a leap to supernatural agencies for explanation, and that such agencies indeed explain the phenomena. If miracles are possible and lawful, it should be possible to explain or state the laws governing them, if not the alleged explanations amount to a confession that they are inexplicable. The supernatural is, either so different from the natural that we are unable to investigate it at all or it is not. If it is not, then it can never have the momentous significance claimed for it; and if it is, it cannot be invoked as an explanation of the unusual.

We cannot assume that certain events would require that we postulate an unknown Cause X, and call this X God; and then we claim to have proved the existence of the original evidence. This only looks like an explanatory hypothesis, but in fact it is not. To say that God's interventions in the natural order are lawful, but that we cannot use these laws for prediction is to retreat into an asylum of ignorance and to use the word "Law" in a most paradoxical sense.

5. MIRACLES IN RELIGIONS & PHILOSOPHY IN URUAN - EFIK

Miracles in URUAN differ both in their philosophical and Christian perspectives. Just as with mysteries, the perception of a miracle is not necessarily anti-natural because a miracle in the general meaning is a happening completely beyond the range of nature since they happen without the use of apparatus though of course through the human agency who must be of a certain pedigree from ordinary people eg. medicine men, magicians, an Inam or even a heathen who may or may not be regarded as blameless or a holy person. Most people especially philosophers in modern times think of miracles as violations of the laws of nature in so far as those things reported as miracles happen outside the range of normality. For example, how can in all honesty water turn into wine without anything being added to change the texture and taste? If a train driver on sighting a little child lying on the train tracks suddenly applies the brakes to save the child, and in so doing the train automatically stops just in time, would that be regarded as a miracle? This I guess would be regarded as luck, though religiously considered it is an act of God's grace. But couldn't this be just a coincidence for which we are thankful to God and the child's star or guardian angel? In fact, this type of concept is simply naturistic and far from that exemplified in biblical (Christian) conception of the miraculous; it is just a contingency concept. For people like Baruch, Spinoza, Leibniz, etc, there are certain genuine contingencies like the above case of a child. But for certain Christian thinkers like Paul J. Dietl, Andrew Flew, A. McIntyre, Ninian Smart, etc. miracles that do occur are divine interventions in the laws of nature ie. in God suspending these laws because He is the Lord and giver of laws, for the benefit of humanity. GOD in this case is ABASI IBOM, the one Supreme and Infinite Personal Being, the Creator and Ruler of the universe, to whom man owes obedience and worship. It means God is unlimited in every kind of perfection such that every conceivable perfection belongs to Him in the highest conceivable way according to the Catholic encyclopedia definition of God. It simply means that no one can play God even if upstarts try to do so by trying to work miracles; the legendary D.D. Lawrence who tried to play God is such an example; also Pharaoh who used his magicians to play God. In brief, nobody can work miracles except by the power and authority of God; and this help us distinguish miracles from magic, sorcery, witchcraft, ancestors, Ndem, mmami-water, Atakpor, Ekpenyong, etc. While a miracle is completely an act of God by which impossible things are made to happen or can just happen eg. water turning into wine, or a loaf of bread turning into thousands of loaves or even a blind man receiving his sight instantly, or a virgin getting pregnant without a man. Magic is simply an act of man or the devil or spirits by which some secret power appears to make impossible things happen by saying special words or doing special things through charms and sometimes by playing tricks to entertain people eg. manipulating coins to become something like genuine money or even currencies. As far as they are concerned, not even science can demonstrate how miracles occur because they are inexplicable, sublime and ineffable. The fact is that there is a usage to which miracles are put and to which, to call an event a miracle, is to attribute it to the will of a supernatural agent and to claim that if the supernatural agent had not intervened, that event would never have occurred at all. This is indeed the unquestionable usage of the concept miracle in the history of Religions, but does URUAN cosmology and epistemology subscribe to this view? The question now is whether or not any agent, human or spirit could ever be rationally described as a manifestation of the power of such a supernatural being.

(A) CONTEXT, GENERAL MEANING & DEFINITION OF MIRACLES

Miracles in the first place have different terminologies and interpretations depending on the aspect under which they are considered and in which they can occur. Thus, when considered as symbols of religion manifesting something supernatural, they are called Utibe ? kp? Idi? ?, ie. "signs". When they are considered from the point of view of their excellence in as much as they excite awe, wonder, admiration and amazement, they are designated as kp? ute e, ie. portents; but when considered as effects surpassing nature's power, they are simply called utibe ? kp?, properly designated as miracles or powers. The word miracle is derived from the Latin miraculum which means something of admiration, wonder, prodigy. Wonder arises when effects are visible but the cause is hidden. Thus a simple folk or rustic for example is struck with wonder and admiration at seeing an eclipse; he is ignorant of its cause and for him an eclipse is a miracle or mystery. Of course this is not a miracle to an astronomer who already knows that this is an effect from a certain cause viz; the meeting so to speak, of the earth and the sun; the effect being the darkening or loss of brilliance of a heavenly body, the sun or moon due to its obscuration or intervention by another heavenly body which is the cause between it. A miracle therefore receives its name because it is completely wonderful since it has a cause that is absolutely hidden from us though in reality that cause is God Himself who produces the effect ie. the miracle that we see in such a manner which is over and above the normal range of nature and causes known to us. We can now define miracle to mean AN EFFECT PERCEPTIBLE BY THE SENSES ie. to us and hence by our senses BUT BEYOND THE RANGE OF ALL NATURE. It surpasses the ways whereby created realities operate since they supersede the normal course of nature and things. Miracles are therefore not extraordinary because they are rare, but because they take place beyond the natural order of things, hence even if for example, blind men were to receive their sight every day, what has happened in each case would still be regarded as a miracle; but women giving birth every day and everywhere through conception and birth would not be normally taken as a miracle though for us as a religious people, the birth of a child is a miracle, but only considered so because it is a gift from God. In this case of course, the generative action of parents does not transcend the effective operation of nature viz; the nature of man and woman to reproduce their kind.

(B) TYPES OF MIRACLES IN URUAN/EFIK

All these will depend on what URUAN people understand as miracles according to the definition as outlined here. Yes, and no, miracles are miracles as understood generally, but in URUAN and in many cases no! For many people, miracles are so much an essential part of their religion and faith and many people look for them today as at long ago and see them as at now as an act of God. Both the Old and New Testaments have given us plenty of food for thought regarding the miraculous.

(I) OUTSTANDING OCCURRENCES IN PERSONS OF GREAT POWER AND AWE

Many years past, it was usual that some important royal lords of integrity, power, authority and awe were known to be able to walk through the rain untouched, with no sign of rain falling in their path. In addition to these, there were and are still acknowledged such specialist medicine men and women who can cause or prevent rain by simply blowing some nsei into the air or waving their cow or leopard tails. Some of course use other manipulations with concoctions which are known to be simply scientific, eg. It is known that blowing certain chemicals into the air can cause the clouds either to gather and result in rain or scatter the clouds thus dispelling and stopping the rain. But mere mortals regard all these as working miracles. In these cases, everything about the miracles begins and ends with the persons in the show since they deal with merely things in nature.

(II) MIRACLES OF HEALING BY THE APPLICATION OF METEMPSYCHOSIS

Whenever a person suddenly falls sick swooning and groaning as if to die, people suspect "his/her ukp?? (soul) has been mystically shot". Sometimes the location of the sickness can be easily ascertained, whether the pains are in the neck, or stomach, or leg, or the waist; in which case the person has been shot in that region or organ of the body. What the miracle worker, who by implication is the "native medicine man/woman" does is to get a hunter (or in many cases as often happens, he/she is both a hunter and "doctor") to go into the bush and there discover an animal ie. his/her soul has been shot and mortally wounded in the very part of the body as ascertained before. The sick person's recovery depends on the recovery of that wounded animal, which by now has been removed to a comfortable spot in the bush and allowed to recover. On recovery, people usually see this as miracle healing. The same also applies in the healing of terminal wounds and lesions. When the wound is so serious and painful to withstand the agony of the patient, instead of directly treating him/her, a big and deep cut is made on a live tree; the healing of the patient depends on the reaction of the tree when the medicines are applied to it instead. If he/she recovers, there is the miraculous healing. The same also applies to fractures and serious dislocations. When such happens, a healthy cock's talon or a goat's or even a dog's leg can be broken and thereafter treated with appropriate medicines; the healing of the patient depends on the recovery of these animals so "dislocated".

(II) MIRACLES OF SECURING PREGNANCIES IN BARREN WOMEN

To-date URUAN people still attribute miraculous giving of pregnancies to barren women even after the menopause. The reason for this is the belief that only the woman can be barren at least for the explanation that a "surrogate husband" must have been tried and all to no avail. Therefore, whichever medicine man has succeeded through native medication and "compensation of MBIAM" to secure pregnancy does that miraculously. Many a time the barrenness is attributable to the reaction of MBIAM or mammy-water (water goddess) or …ie. her "fate from birth."

(III)MIRACLES OF HEALING AND COUNTERACTING POISONS, SNAKE-BITES ETC.

When the wound is so serious for direct treatment, some medicine men who are said to possess miraculous and magical powers either from birth or through acquisition are brought in to assist the patient. In any case, whenever they can heal the snake-bite or counteract the poison through giving of some potion or whatever application, the healing is said to be miraculous.

(IV)MIRACLES THROUGH THE APPLICATION OF EKIM ("POTASH")

The use of ekim as often happens may be employed in miraculous circumstances whether as medicine, or editibe mystical as whatever is done is at the instance of unseen spiritual powers and mystical numbers are employed. The medicine man simply makes a certain number of cuts with a razor blade or akara on the face, neck, and both sides of the breast, waist, back, the legs or hands and dips the ekim on the scratches so made. With this, the person so "lacerated and initiated" as it were, can perform all kinds of prodigies and wonders eg. He can sit on a poisoned chair, or drink poisoned "cup" and the chair simply breaks or the glass cracks and breaks into pieces with him/her coming to no harm whatever.

(C)AGNOSTIC POSITION ON MIRACLES – DAVID HUME REVISITED

Let us preface this series with the problem of the Real presence in the Catholic Church. Dr. Tillotson's argument against the Real presence comes to mind and is as strong an argument as any that can possibly be instituted against a doctrine so little worthy of serious refutation: It is acknowledged according to the learned prelate, that the authority either of the scriptures or of Tradition is founded merely on the testimony of the Apostles who were eye-witnesses to those miracles of Christ, the Saviour by which He proved His Divine Mission. According to David Hume, the evidence then, for the truth of the Christian Religion is less than the evidence for the truth of our senses, because even among the first authors of Religion, it was greater. But it should diminish as it passes from the Apostles to the disciples and from the disciples to the next Christian generation, etc. But as we know a weaker argument can never destroy a stronger, and therefore, were the doctrine of the Real Presence ever so clearly revealed in the Scriptures to be true, it would be so directly contrary to the rules of just reasoning to give our assent to it. It contradicts sense, though Scripture and Tradition on which it is based do not carry such evidence with them as sense when they are considered as mere external evidences, and they are not brought home to everyone's breast by the immediate operation of the Holy Spirit. Nothing then is as convenient and decisive of an argument of this kind as that which must at least silence the most arrogant bigotry and superstition and free people from such impertinent solicitations. All this has been the starting point of David Hume. Then he goes on to flatter himself that he has found an argument which with the wise and learned as also the unlearned would be an everlasting check to all kinds of superstition, delusions etc. and consequently will be useful as long as the world endures with regard to miracles and prodigies found in all history both sacred and profane. On all counts therefore according to Hume, the miracles cannot be an effect from the cause. Though experience is our only guide in reasoning concerning matters of fact like this, it must be acknowledged that this guide is not altogether infallible, and in some cases can lead us into errors. In March in any week in our climate for example, one would expect a better weather than in July, reasoning conformably from experience, but it is certain that one may happen in the event to find himself mistaken. But no person should have any cause to complain of experience because it commonly informs us beforehand of the uncertainty by a contrariety of event which must be learnt from diligent observation. From this Hume concludes that all effects do not follow with like certainty from their supposed causes eg. Some effects are found in all countries and all ages to have been constantly conjoined together, others are found to be more variable, and sometimes to disappoint our experiences, such that in our reasonings concerning matters of fact there are all imaginable degrees of assurance, from the highest certainty to the lowest species of moral evidence. A wise man must therefore proportion his belief to the evidence before him. In such conclusions as are founded on infallible experiences, he should expect the event with the least degree of assurance and regard his past experience as a full proof of the future existence of that event. In other words, he must needs proceed with greater caution and try to weigh the opposite experience to that side he inclines which is supported by the greater number of experiments and to others he should incline with doubt and hesitation. When then he finally fixes his judgment, it is should not be really on PROBABILITY which presupposes an opposition of experiments and observations where one side is found to over-balance the other and to produce a degree of evidence proportionate to the superiority, but that the contradictory could not prove the case, except perhaps a strong degree of assurance.

From these as we try to apply these principles, we may observe that there is no species of reasoning more common, more useful, and even more necessary to human life than that which is derived from the testimony of men, and the reports of eye-witnesses and spectators. Of course this type of reasoning may be denied on the relation of cause to effect. It is known that all our inferences are founded on the principle of observation that no objects have any discoverable connection together except those founded on the experience of their constant and regular conjunction. As the evidence derived from witnesses and human experience, a testimony is founded on past experience, so it varies with experience and must be seen either as a proof or a probability, according as the conjunction between the report and the object has been found to be constant or variable. Where this experience is not entirely uniform on any side, it is attended with unavoidable contrariety so much so that there is attended the same opposition and mutual destruction of argument as in every other kind of evidence. This contrariety of evidence may be due to the opposition of contrary evidence, the character of the witnesses, the manner of delivering their testimony, etc. and these may diminish or destroy the force of the argument, and hence we may not make an exception to this maxim in favour of human testimony. But we also have to admit whether the human memory is not tenacious to at least some degree, whether men haven't a common inclination to truth and a principle of priority, and whether men are not sensible to shame when detected in falsehood. But these are qualities inherent in human nature, and therefore we can afford not to repose the least confidence in human testimony. A man delirious or noted for falsehood and villainy has no manner of authority as we know. But as the evidence from human testimony (from witnesses) is founded on past experience, certainly it has to be regarded either as a proof or at least as a probability according as the conjunction between any particular kinds of report found to be constant or variable. All these can be used as preambles in examining Hume's idea of miracles.

Hume begins by saying that the same principle of experience which gives us a certain degree of assurance in the testimony of witness should also give us another degree of assurance against the fact ie. miracle which they now endeavour to establish. But this seems to be a contradiction because there will necessarily arise a counterpoise and mutual destruction of belief and authority. Let us suppose the fact which the testimony endeavours to establish partakes of the extraordinary ie. MIRACLE as the marvelous, in that case, the evidence resulting from the testimony admits of a diminution, greater or less, in proportion as the fact MIRACLE is more or less usual. According to Hume therefore, a miracle is a contrariety of evidence, because the miracles recorded and reported in the Gospels by the disciples, are reports, they cannot be evident and should be seen simply as reports.

We come now to the last and final argument of David Hume that miracles are violations of the laws of nature and therefore they do not happen and can never happen in the world of reality. Assuming the testimony of witnesses to miracles, let us suppose that the fact MIRACLE, which people affirm is really miraculous, and suppose that the testimony considered apart, is an entire proof, then in that case we have a proof against a proof of which the strongest must prevail. Hume therefore concludes from this that a miracle is a violation of the laws of nature, and as a firm and unalterable experience has established these laws, the proof against a miracle from the very nature of the fact, is as entire as any argument from experience can be possibly imagined. Why for example is it probable that all men must die? Why is it that a piece of lead cannot itself be suspended in the air or that fire consumes wood and is extinguished by water? Unless it is seen that these events are found agreeable to the laws of nature: THERE AND THEN WOULD ANY EVENT BE ESTEEMED A MIRACLE IF IT EVER HAPPENS IN THE COMMON COURSE OF NATURE.

It is no miracle that a healthy man should suddenly die because such kind of death, though more unusual than the others, has yet been frequently observed to happen. It is a miracle that a dead man can be brought back to life; but that has never been observed in any age or country? There must therefore be a uniform experience against every miraculous event; otherwise the event would not merit the appellation, miracle. Since a uniform experience amounts to a proof, there is here a direct and full proof from the nature of the fact MIRACLE, against the nature of any miracle whatsoever. There is naturally required a very strong testimony to engage our assent to facts that arise from the state of nature with which we are unacquainted, and which bear so little analogy to those events of which we have had constant and uniform experience. Though these may not be contrary to our experience, people must not be conformable to it. Hence according to Hume, the plain consequence is that no testimony is sufficient to establish a miracle unless the testimony is of such a kind that its falsehood would be more miraculous than the fact of miracle which it endeavours to establish. Even in that case, there must be a mutual destruction of arguments the superior can only give us an assurance suitable to the degree of force which remains after deducting the inferior. Hume contends that if anyone tells him that he saw a dead man restored to life, he would immediately consider whether it were more probable that the witness is deceiving people or he is deceived or that the miracle had really happened at all. Hume says, if this ever happened, he would weigh the miracle of fact against the miracle of opposition and pronounce his judgment on the superiority and reject the greater miracle. If the falsehood of his testimony would be more miraculous than the event ie. (witnessed miracle) then not until then can the witness pretend to command his belief or opinion. With David Hume therefore it seems plausible that we cannot talk about the existence of miracles whatsoever.

(D) MIRACLES IN THE CONTEXT OF UNSCIENTIFIC DEFINITION: NOWELL - SMITH

A miracle is an event above or contrary to or exceeding nature which is explicable only as a direct act of God. This has always been the definition of miracles from the view point of those who uphold the veracity of miracles. But According to Nowell-Smith, this is a very unscientific proposition because this is simply to assert that Jesus was a man to whom fabulous stories have been foisted to prove that he was a Man-God. The above was Lunn's definition of miracles; an explicit attack on the Modernist thesis because as a Christian scientist/philosopher, his view on the contrary was that Jesus was always God and that the growth of the Gospel stories was not the progressive deification of a man but the progressive humanization of God viz.

that Christ as man in performing miracles proved that He was God. Therefore, miracles certainly occur. For Lune, there is plenty of evidence for them if only people will bother to investigate it instead of rejecting them out of hand. Miracles are "evidences provided by God to demonstrate the existence of a divine order." Therefore, we must believe that reality is not coterminous with the natural order and must answer in the negative the momentous question whether all phenomena recorded and witnessed by man are due purely to natural causes? Moreover, it is to the authority of the scientists themselves that we declare that a particular phenomenon is inexplicable, as the effect of natural agents, and must therefore be ascribed to supernatural agents.

We must admit first of all, that every Religion has its own stock of miracles, some of which are well attested as the Christian miracles. It would therefore be futile to assume that only a particular stand-point would guarantee the existence of miracles because other religions also prove the existence of their gods from such evidence – miracles. Then we must also accept the God of Muhammed and the whole Greek and Hindu Pantheons. To say that miracles as such are inexplicable as the effect of natural agents is not a scientific explanation. They can only be ascribed to supernatural causes/agents. We can only say that no known scientific method or hypothesis has yet been able to explain the phenomenon of the miraculous. Secondly, it is not scientific to define miracles as events exceeding nature and explicable only as direct interventions or Act of God. This point is only offering an explanation and not reporting its occurrence. The fact is simply that extraordinary phenomena occur, and it is only in this evidence that we admit that miracles occur. Evidence must be kept from explanatory theory otherwise in accepting evidence; we are already committed to accepting the theory. No matter how strange an event someone reports, the statement that it must be due to some supernatural agent cannot be part of that report. Known laws and factors may not be able to explain this phenomenon (Miracle). There must be something outside but which I cannot here and now tell. An explanation must explain how an event comes about; otherwise it is simply a learned (or tendentious) name for the phenomenon to be explained. It can be admitted that the present hypothesis of science can never be expanded to cover miraculous phenomena; we may require new concepts and new laws. Then we may hold that the problem is not whether science can explain everything in current terms, but whether the explanation of miracles requires a method quite different from that of science, otherwise we must prove that it is not, since it is hard to see why miracles should be called supernatural; ie. explicable only as direct acts of God. Hence we may not hold that science must either be able to explain everything here and now, or be able in the future to explain everything in terms of the current. For there is still the possibility that science may be able in the future to offer an explanation, which though couched in quite new terms, remain strictly scientific.

From Nowell-Smith's position, there is therefore no theory that should hold a phenomenon inexplicable, and therefore there is not warranted "a leap to supernatural agencies for explanation," and that such agencies indeed explain the phenomena. If miracles are possible and lawful, it should be possible to explain or state the laws governing them, if not the alleged explanations amount to a confession that they are inexplicable. Thus the view of Nowell-Smith is that the supernatural is, either so different from the natural that we are unable to investigate it at all or it is not. If it is not, then it can never have the momentous significance claimed for it; and if it is, it cannot be invoked as an explanation of the unusual, ie. miracles. Then Nowell-Smith goes on to say that we cannot assume that certain events would require that we postulate an unknown Cause X, and call this X God; and then we claim to have proved the existence of the original evidence. This only looks like an explanatory hypothesis, but in fact it is not. To say that God's interventions in the natural order are lawful, but that we cannot use these laws for prediction is to retreat into an asylum of ignorance and to use the word "Law" in a most paradoxical sense. Therefore, according to him, as a scientist philosopher, every event ie. Miracle should be explainable.

(E) MIRACLES IN CONTEMPORARY CHRISTIAN PERSPECTIVE

Both the Old and New Testaments of the Christian Bible have given us plenty of examples of great signs from God which fit into the general pattern of the religious experience we call miracles. They also have provided their persuasive force to the minds of Christian believers. But we can find out in the final analysis that most of the patterns of miracles discussed above about URUAN/EFIK do not seem to fit here. First with regard to Christian miracles there is nothing wrong in one person (agent) being able to perform several miracles. Cf Moses performed over a dozen miracles with which he attempted to melt Pharaoh's heart (Exd 7-12). Second, the elaborate circumstances in which miracles may take place since the people who wrote the Old Testament certainly had the notion of how to distinguish the real events, miracles from the fake; for example, the story of the prophet Elijah and the prophets of Baal (1Kgs 18). We can also note from this that there is nothing wrong with applying somewhat sophisticated experimental designs to miracles. In all these, one can discover that these poignantly establishes that there is something at work other than that have operating if the prophet had not been there because there is a law governing these happenings and these are vastly different from ordinary scientific laws. No natural law can bring about such an effect unless we want to postulate a new metaphysical law to explain the event of a miracle. The point is that the concept of a miracle demonstrates sophistication such that what a miracle portrays can never be discernible other than the claims to the contrary. Believing in miracles inevitably involves believing on the suspension of some natural physical laws. We should therefore be able to distinguish between veridical experiences of faith and hallucinations eg. the account of the miraculous drought of fishes. The raising of Lazarus to life or the cure of the man born blind etc. are not hallucinations, there can never be any evidence then concerning miracles which stems from the faith of the people concerned viz. the type of faith they say 'can move mountains'. Calling an even a miracle has no explanatory meaning over and above the descriptive statement of the phenomena to be explained. We must admit therefore that as in the Elijah story, a prediction was involved in that Elijah most have known (predicted) beforehand what was to happen. It is impossible to conceive how one could pin down God as the independent variable unless predictions like those were possible. This is important because part of the point of interpreting an event as a miracle and credible is not to see it as a natural event, but rather as an action or result of an action of an Intelligent Being whom all call God. Paul F. Dietl, a Christian Scientist/philosopher sees all these as "events subsumable under the laws even less credible than all other events are. According to him, an action of this kind can always be made intelligible by showing its point; eg. that it is done to reward a holy person, to save the Chosen people of Israel, to show an act of benevolence like in the multiplication of loaves or to cause the conversion of people and bring them back to the truth. Showing the goodness of an act like a miracle s not automatically to subsume it under the law but that according to Dietl, to show that miracles are events which occur as a result of supernatural interventions into the natural course of events. The Roman Catholic Church for example, still officially approves of the occurrence of miracles for the Canonization of Saints, yet many Christian scholars today no longer feel that the truth of Jesus stands or falls on miracles. Many evangelical and Pentecostal assemblies especially the Alladura see miracles as a necessary ingredient to the faith of their adherents. We can only recount the amazement or even admiration, the new interest in and association of many Africans especially here in Nigeria today in the proliferation of new Independent Pentecostal and evangelical cum healing churches precisely for their avowed powers and claims of miraculous exploits viz. Cherubim and Seraphim sects, the Ernest cum Mark Nwulu TV healing experiments including those of Joseph Oritsejafor, Chris Oyakilome, Enoch Adeboye, William Famuyi, Uma Ukpai, …. as well as the Goddians, Ekankar and other Celestial Assemblies. In 1998, the late Pope John Paul II was in Nigeria for the Beatification of the Servant of God, Michael Iwena Tansi of Aguleri in Anambra State precisely because a miracle had been performed in his (Tansi's) name when a girl who had terminal cancer was healed instantly as she was helped by the Rev. Sister of Borromeo hospital Onitsha to touch Tansi's coffin as it was being rolled to the altar at the Holy Trinity Basilica, Onitsha for the funeral Mass.

A miracle must therefore be seen not as an event in the horizon of our human experience but precisely as an event which supersedes the normal course of nature, which defies explanations according to the intrinsic laws experienced in the world. According to Karl Rahner, it is that which summons us to that depth of our being and which alone communicates with our empirical world and transcends it in the interior accessibility and universal openness of our intellectual nature. There is thus in us a humble sense of wonder, such that having conscientiously examined these events in the world of our experience which are inexplicable in natural terms, we now come to the conclusion that they have been directly intended and caused by God Who accepts our summons to the historical dialogue with Him. This historical intervention of God by a miracle, therefore only brings into play a qualitatively new mode for the intrinsic sovereignty of God over and above all His creatures. God alone, and no one else can be the efficient cause of miracles. But creatures however play some role as the instrumental or ministerial causes in miracle working. A man or an angel can as it were; cooperate with God to produce a miracle. He can do so morally, by moving God through prayers and intercessions to work a miracle, or potentially, by simultaneously presenting the divine command to nature and thus impose on nature the proximate necessity of being the subject of a miraculous change, the change of course being caused by God alone eg. The miraculous draught of fishes when Peter actually cast his net in the sea.

(F) CLASSIFICATION OF CHRISTIAN MIRACLES

Christian miracles may be classified as follows: (i) In respect of the very nature of the miracle: This is when the effect produced exceeds by far the power of the creatures themselves. Eg the compenetration of two material bodies as was the case of the Resurrection when the glorified Body of Jesus compenetrated the closed doors and windows of Upper Room where the disciples were on Easter Sunday. (ii) In respect of the particular agent in which the effect is produced: This type of miracle is caused by nature but not in the same subject matter eg the raising of Lazarus from the dead, or the blind getting back his sight. Thus nature can produce life in a foetus but not in a corpse; a baby is naturally given sight at birth but nature cannot restore instant sight to a blind person. (iii) In respect of the manner in which the miracle is produced: Thus eg; a person with a serious wound or ulcer can naturally recover with appropriate medication and treatment, but not in the same way and the same means as in the case of that Onitsha girl cited above or as in the sudden and instant healing of Peter's mother in-law. This type of healing is done without medical operation or proportionate remedy even as in the case of URUAN/EFIK "miraculous healings" cited above, but simply by a command or mere touch. It cannot be denied of course that there are many marvels that can be wrought by the power of the imagination and hypnotism in what many exaggeratedly and deceptively but not without foundation, extol as 'faith healing', but which is only a cure through auto-suggestion which is correctly termed psychotherapy. In fact, the imagination and hypnotic suggestion can produce extraordinary effects, particularly in women and sick people and even with some diseases arising from a disordered nervous system as often happens in the Pentecostal and Alladura churches, yet people attribute it to the 'faith that heals or Holy Ghost fire'. When it comes to judging cures such as these, we must be extremely cautious because we know that many diseases especially those involving serious lesion of the organs simply cannot be cured by the imagination alone or by hypnosis; or at least they cannot be cured instantaneously. We must therefore understand the obvious methods of healing even when they seem to be supported by the most accurate medical knowledge and scientific procedures; but it cannot be used for those illnesses which affect us mankind. Such ills as ulcers, lesions of muscular and nervous tissues, cancers, diseases caused by pathogenic microbes and other organic diseases are quite beyond the scope of psychotherapy.

(G) PURPOSE OF MIRACLES IN CHRISTIAN PERSPECTIVE

If an All-wise and All-powerful God cannot do anything in the order of nature without purpose, a fortiori, He cannot operate in a fashion completely beyond the order of nature or understanding without a definite purpose. But this special purpose of miracles is not to be found within the natural order, for if we were to admit that the order of nature requires the working of miracles for its preservation from time to time, then we would have to attribute the lack of foresight or even capacity for governing His world to God, since He would have to wait and see how things would work out, then He would suddenly put on His thinking cap to arrest the situation lest things fall apart; What type of God is that! URUAN would never regard or call such AKWA ABASI IBOM OBOT OFRI EKONDO! The fact of the matter is that miracles must belong to another and indeed a higher order of divine providence, namely an order that serves as the supernatural manifestation of God, which has to be a sort of divine guarantee and testimony. This type of testimony may well be that of God's special goodness and benevolence, or of recommendation of virtue, or in favour of a person's holiness or even as a guarantee of a special authentic religion, the claims of these Alladura and evangelical/Pentecostal churches notwithstanding. To discover which of these motives apply to miracles, one must have to examine the circumstances under which the miracles occur. That is why God, in order to demonstrate to the Hebrews that He was the One leading them and taking them out of Egypt through Moses and Aaron, promptly held back the waters of the Red Sea to let them cross over into the land of Promise. Again to show that He was the God of the three youths in the fiery furnace, He made them incombustible before Nebuchadnezzar by restraining in the flames their natural tendency and power to ignite, whereas those who threw Daniel and his companions into the furnace were roasted into ashes. Bur God does not operate in contradiction nor is He a violator of the laws of nature ie. His own laws even that of His immutability and wisdom; neither does He change the course of events at His whim and fancy, nor does He act to correct defects which seem to happen contrary to His Will eg; a foetus monster in a pregnant mother's womb. From all eternity, God foresaw and chose to do whatever He has done in time in the world. He therefore has established the course of nature in such wise that whoever miracles should occur in time, He would have previously already ordained them by His eternal Will. God cannot then afterwards come and make random exceptions through miracles in order to repair or correct something He had sort of fashioned inappropriately or poorly; or to correct some mistake He had made in His creation, or re-order what has gone wrong. To do so would be to contradict His providence and wisdom nay; His immutability and Omnipotence. Thomas Aquinas has commented on this important aspect concerning miracles thus:

> There is no better way of making it obvious that the whole gamut of nature is subject to the divine Will than for God from time to time to do somethingover and beyond the order of nature. By so doing He makes it clear that the order of creation flows from Himself not by any necessity of nature, but by His own free will. Nor should we deem it frivolous that God should perform something in corporeal nature in order to manifest Himself to the minds of men, since all corporeal creatures are directed towards an Intelligent Being whose nature is to know God. There is nothing strange, then in having an occurrence in corporeal nature serve as a means of bringing the knowledge about God to intelligent beings. (ST IIa IIae q3, I7)

It must be understood then, that miracles fully and coercively prove the point for which they are worked, for the All-wise and All-holy and Omnipotent God can never guarantee falsehood and an ASSERTION by His exclusive trade mark ie. miracles. If a religious doctrine is to be proved by the criterion of miracles, it should be definitely clear that the miracle was wrought either directly or indirectly for the purpose of vindicating His doctrine. In any case, URUAN miraculous types need not conform to what has been set down above because they share the same primordial purpose as with other non-pre-literate and non-Christian types. They are merely portents and the marvelous according to their raison d'être. No miracles in URUAN history has measured up to the Christian and even those of the Old Testament and the Oriental forms. Certainly the miracles of Moses, Elijah, Elisha and the prophets of Israel are not of the same category as those in the Gospels and these should confine our options namely, the hidden treasures of God, the gods - NDEM sometimes referred to as mme MBUKPO or "mme ABASI" including MMAMY-WATER (AFIA-AWAN IDEM MM? ?) ATAKPOR, EKPENYONG, ANANSAE EKPENYONG, IDEM USUK, etc. From the Latin mysterium and Greek musterion, the word mystery denotes something which often arouses curiosity and awe because it cannot be explained away, something secret which often can cause a certain amount of curiosity, even perplexity: a sort of conundrum, puzzle, riddle, or even an enigma. Events such as an eclipse of the sun, the starlights of okukubarakpa and whales in the depths, thunder and lightning, the birth of triplets/quadruplets, all come under the umbrella of mysteries. The python is a mystery, so also the elephant and the hippopotamus as well as mountains, valleys, rivulets, lakes etc. What of the rainbow – ORUK ABASI, the Atlantic Ocean, the cawing of ikurikut (the owl) at nightfall, the bleating of goats or of cocks crowing at midnight, anthills, etc? All these are aspects of the mysterious in URUAN religious perspective and vocabulary.

N O T E S

1.Uruan people are basically monotheists though their religious practices involve the use of mediums like Idiong, (prophecy, Ndomo (oracles) mbukpo (spirits) etc. They never regard them as supreme but only as through them, they can reach God, the Supreme Being. URUAN/EFIK therefore believe that God should be understood as having the same Attributes of the Supreme Being similar to those of the Christian God.
2. Ancestral spirits or Ancestors are misleading terms since they imply only those spirits who were once ancestors of the living. This is limiting the concept unnecessarily. There are also spirits of even children and of course spirits of outré brothers and sisters, our parents, our wives and other dead relations of the family who were also benevolent or malicious as the case may be. Ancestral spirits or 3Ancestirs are misleading terms since they imply only those spirits who were once ancestors of the living. This is limiting the concept unnecessarily. There are also spirits of even children and of course spirits of outré brothers and sisters, our parents, our wives and other dead relations of the family who were also benevolent or malicious as the case may be.
4. By reason here I mean the normal rationality of the people concerned. What may be a mystery to URUAN eg an eclipse of the sun may not necessarily be so for the Greeks and modern Europeans; but the mystery of the Resurrection encompasses all classes of humankind ancient and modern.
5An uka is a delicacy in URUAN usually prepared as stew from dried, strong fleshy fish like stock fish, crayfish and other types of big, fleshy strong fish on occasions of great festivity and merriment. Such fish like, ede , Akpan-ata, inaha, ukpan, akwe, anim, The delicacy can also be a requirement to complete certain ritual offerings and ceremonials eg. Initiation into Ekpe Cult; but in this case the uka is a simple one of crayfish for birds and children.

CHAPTER V

PART ONE

BACKGROUND SETTING TO SOCIO-MORAL & POLITICAL TRENDS

A. CULTURAL AWARENESS IN URUAN/EFIK

In order to situate in an ordered and succinct manner the present day patterns of social life, we have still to analyze some of the main cultural rites which are recognized among URUA/EFIK peoples as having a bearing on traditional Institutions and systems. This will also help in preparing the relevant background to the understanding of the most important socio-moral trends especially those which have a bearing on governance, politics, economy and the social order since in African traditional society all these aspects of community life are inter-related and inter-dependent and linked together. It will also benefit those who want to maintain those Institutions and Organizations mentioned above in Chapter III. Since there is so much an upsurge in culture awareness worldwide these days, even as the United Nations has acknowledged culture as an important world treasure, the renewal and revival of culture awareness in Nigeria nowadays in the rotatory Annual Festival of Arts and Culture throughout the States of the Federation as a guide, this revival and up-date should therefore not be lost to URUAN/EFIK again. Religion has always been part and parcel of culture that is why the early Missionaries could not imagine how they could implant the Christian Religion without imparting their culture which goes with it. Then they were ruthless under the guise of purging the so-called pagan and heathen fetish practices in African religion and uprooting whatever to them seemed incompatible with their European culture so that their new Christian counterpart might take root and be firmly implanted in Africa's newly reclaimed soil. In so doing, African cultural organizations like Ekpe, Ekpo Ny?h?, Ek? kemba were seen as pagan and heathen practices and the newly converted to Christianity were asked to renounce their age-old cultural and religious practices if they were to gain heaven by their conversion to Christianity. The momentum now was one Christian religion, one Christian culture and one Christian God in order to attain salvation and justification. Whereas Culture and religion in their absolute sense belong to the realm of consciousness in the mind of God, together religion and culture form part of the endowment of God to every nation and race which He created. There are therefore no different or particular endowments inherent in any culture which is so unique irrespective of race, colour, language or environment. Nations and tribes may differ and even manifest different aspects of culture but before God all are the same. That is why St Paul had often insisted, that all are now children of God through Faith in Jesus and have been "clothed in Christ", therefore, "there can be neither Jew nor Greek, neither slave nor free born,…neither male nor female- for you are one in Christ Jesus"; there is no room for distinction between Greek and Jew, between the uncircumcised (Gentile) and the circumcised (Jew) or between barbarian and Scythian, slave or free born" (Gal 3:28; Col:11). With Christ even the Christian culture and religion should be available to all, and that is why He commanded the Apostles to preach the Gospel everywhere and to all the nations of the earth, thus implying that every tribe and tongue was capable of receiving the Good news; no pre-conditions were to be attached.

In fact, the first confrontations and disagreements in the Church were over such matters as demanding the so-called Heathen peoples to forego their cultures and laws in order to embrace the new Christian Religion, and Paul had even told St Peter to the face, that it was unconstitutional for him being a Jew to demand that the Gentiles should conform to his Jewish traditions before Baptism. There was therefore no justification why the early European/American missionaries had to demand the abolishing of our African religious and cultural traditions whereas they (Missionaries) were not even bringing to us the original Judaeo-Christian Religion which Christ had established but their own Euro-Christian brands. Therefore, the condemnation and eventual abandoning of Ekpe and other socio-cultural and religious practices by our fore fathers before admission into the Christian Church and receiving Baptism was uncalled for. This study is therefore meant to correct this anomaly and confusion and to restore our culture and traditions before they completely die out from the face of the earth. Though our early Christian converts like my father accepted the condemnation of their religious and cultural practices and therefore sought to distance themselves from their African culture patterns in order to win back their souls en route Heaven, but we know those early Missionaries really and prejudicially tried hard to undermine any genuine effort by the Elders of the people to preserve their customs and traditions. Some Chiefs and traditional Rulers like my grandfather did not allow them and bluntly refused to grant the missionaries land and permission to settle in Idu which was the epicentre of trade and commerce for thousands of the then Southern Provinces of the Niger Protectorate. In the end the Missionaries had no choice but to settle for a small piece of land at Anua Offot near Uyo which was the colonial administrative Headquarters. But thanks to God, they at last settled and decided to build at the time, the first ever permanent Catholic Church in the whole of Nigeria in 1910 at Eman Uruan which still stands strong today in reminiscence of these events.

My father had a lot of praise for the Holy Ghost Missionaries and their message of the Gospel, and I do. In fact, I am a prime beneficiary of this in the Education they brought to us. But I have also learnt a little more skepticism about them than my father had had any need for. Yes, because I ask myself that centuries before the European Christians sailed down to us in ships to deliver the Gospel Message and save us from darkness, other European Christians also sailing in ships delivered us to the trans-Atlantic slave trade and unleashed darkness into the world of URUAN/EFIK and Africa of which IDU was one of their slave ports and headquarters of operation. From my vantage position now, I can see the enormous value judgment of my grandfather and his example of fidelity. I also salute the fidelity of my father and those before him on the other hand who embraced the Catholic Faith. As I am growing older, I can now quietly ponder and deeply question the absolutist teachings and interpretations of the Christian Religion. I have struggled to understand "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life", not in its entire accuracy but the acerbity of its meaning whether there are options for the outsider, and I know this question has deeply influenced this work. But this is not peculiar to me or particularly unique as many other writers of old like William Edward Burkhart Dubois, John Camus, Jean Paul Sartre, etc. had also struggled with this conundrum of the outsider in their respective locales. However, as the twentieth century which attended such condemnations has drawn to a close and are gradually dying down, the passion with the new spirit and euphoria of revival of African arts and culture coupled with the zeal of enlightened and educated Christians are currently breathing a new spirit of compromise between these ancient institutions and the foreign, between the exotic and the native, the modern and the old with an ecstatic re-awakening of renewed vigour in the spirit of the times.

To begin with, many definitions of culture have been offered especially by sociologists, educationists and theologians alike, all differing in wordings, content and emphasis, but it is generally agreed that the ways of thinking and acting which are directed after a certain pattern which safeguards the behaviour of any particular society from being haphazard and random, viz. in its systems of belief, art, morals, law, custom, pastimes. Culture therefore refers to the grand total of all the objects, ideas, knowledge, ways of doing things, including folklores, literature and recreations/pastimes like games, wrestling, dances, music, sports, as also habits, values and attitudes which each generation in society at a particular time and place translates and transmits whole and entire to their children, and in part to adult immigrants living among them and who also have decided become members of that society (Udoma E.U. 75). I have often referred to this point concerning settlers and aliens living in our midst to the effect that they should be law abiding, register and learn the language, build houses, generously contribute their quota towards URUAN/EFIK development and progress and be totally committed and assimilated without losing their tribal identities and loyalties thereto. They should be ready and willing to take part in local and kindred meetings and make themselves as comfortable as any other URUAN/EFIK citizen in the land. Culture therefore covers not only the arts and sciences, religions and philosophies, but also technology, political practices, even intimate habits of daily life like preparing and eating food; even sleeping. It then emphasizes specifically human elements of man's behaviour. Hence rather than attempt a precise definition of culture, we can simply say that it has to do with the way of life of the people ie. their traditional behaviour in their day to day activities and wellbeing. Culture is the total configuration of institutions which people in a society share in common (Bascom W.R.13). But when all these are standardized as to constitute an accepted pattern within a given group like URUAN/EFIK, Ibibio, Annang, the Igbos, Hausas, Yorubas, etc. they become the customs of that society.

The function of culture is to provide a design for living in a given society; in other words, it has to systematize the social behaviour of large numbers of people so that they have not to build their own culture one by one. That is why I have agonized in these pages telling my faithful people of URUAN/EFIK and ndit? emana that they cannot afford to do things in their own ways and just carry on in whatsoever manner they please with impunity. Everybody is doing his own thing and making his own decisions which run counter to traditional norms and laws of URUAN/ EFIK. People are either selling patrimonial land holdings or building their houses wherever they like without any qualms and making no reference to their elders and seeking no advice. They make no provision for new roads and streets, play grounds, markets or even allowing space for devices of erosion control. They fill every space where their so-called family land is situated with no idea that some parts and sectors in the town/village master-plan might have already been demarcated for developmental and communal projects. They build churches and kiosks everywhere without any conscience and respect for constituted authority or sensibilities of their elders and so on. These are certain neaveau riche and upstarts of URUAN/EFIK and even aliens without principles, without integrity and without conscience. They will just come in and mess up the government of the day or traditional society – village or clan. If the generations before them – their parents and grandparents - had behaved in this way and sold out patrimonial lands at will, how would they have come to find lands to sell or do they think of generations coming after them; ie. their children and children's children? Just any behaviour will do! They do not understand what the culture of a people is all about! Understanding culture therefore means that people and by implication URUAN/EFIK citizens of the 21st century do not have to manufacture their own ways and manner of doing things in the nation. They do not also need to relearn constantly or to invent their own ways and means of doing things all the time.

This is no cultural change that people talk about or any change at all. It is simply imbecility induced by ignorance and arrogance. Culture coordinates, relates and interprets values of the society such that the people born into that society can discover the meaning and purpose of both social and individual living or are they turning themselves into Utai or ebiong so that they can live alone and do whatever they like? (Cf. Fichte J. H., 295). It is my ardent prayer and candid desire that URUAN/EFIK and by implication and more eminently so ndit? emana, will try to learn and accept URUAN/EFIK culture and traditions which had existed in order to systematize the satisfaction of the social needs of every citizen of this land and the means of this satisfaction through the various major and subsidiary institutions which I have underlined in this book concerning ancient URUAN culture and traditions. Finally, it means that the 21st century URUAN/EFIK both now and in the future will not allow those age-old Cult organizations and societies like Ekpe, Idem Ikw?- Ek? kemba, ? b?n, Abre, Iban Is? etc. to die off. It also means that there will be enforcement of our laws and set-down traditions to inculcate and bring back discipline in the behavioral attitudes of URUAN/EFIK citizens by the recognized enforcement agencies listed above who must be encouraged, empowered and mandated to do their jobs. It equally means that the traditional Rulers including the OBONG/NSOMM will see to these and make sure the laws of the land are enforced no matter whose ox is gored. Then for sanity to reign in the land and impunity kept at bay, people who aspire to any high office or position whether political or traditional leadership must learn to accept that image is everything and money is nothing. It will also be a lesson to URUAN/EFIK and more so to ndit? emana that at a much younger age, it is better to develop a legacy of integrity and honesty. These are more enduring possessions than money and power.

B. URUAN TRADITIONS, INSTITUTIONS, CULTURE & HERITAGE

In traditional URUAN society, the administration of Law and Morality devolved primarily upon the administration of public order (URUAN GOVERNMENT) and Religion (mystical and supernatural forces and agencies). The aim was to effectively secure public order/harmony, crime detection, prevention and punishment by employing both human and supernatural agencies through oracles, MBIAM, UKANG, divination, ordeals, etc. Precisely because "the fear of mystical and supernatural forces was the beginning of wisdom" as the violation of laws, moral norms, customs and the committing of crimes and vices were promptly visited and punished by these hidden and unforeseen powerful forces thus making people to dread and recoil with fear at the mere mention even the threat of inveighing their wrath against law breakers and persons of immoral behaviours. Thus the deployment of Religion and mystical agencies became "the engine of the law" (Ekpo Israel, 33). It is a truism that African socio-political and cultural institutions are built on these metaphysical foundations, hence the fusion and constant interaction between the universe, our life forces and mystical /supernatural agencies. Every individual is seen to operate on three levels of existence – viz. his personal existence, as an individual, as a family member and as a member of his/her peculiar society (kindred, clan or tribe). There is therefore a tacit solidarity and fusion between these three dimensions with all the established and structured patterns of behaviour and social, communal, socio-political relationships such that every individual fundamentally has communal interest for each other and his/her society /community at heart. The result is that there is never going to be such a thing as I but only WE consciousness, and this has been the spirit of URUAN/EFIK people till today. For example, URUAN has only ONE LGA and may remain so for some time to come despite recriminations and demonstrations from the elites of the new generation, but the elders continue to say "NO". Why? URUAN believes in UNITY in DIVERSITY and in peaceful co-existence because "Unity is Strength – and divided we fall/fail, but united we stand strong"; modernism, Nigerian neo-politics, autonomous, individualism, narcissistic hedonism, materialism, religious relativism and amorality notwithstanding. It means that more or less Local Governments may not be the issue but our cohesiveness and planning to stay together and contribute our quota in skills, synergy and commitment towards the development of the kingdom of our ancient dreams. This should be the deciding factor, then we can address the need for a request for more LGAs as we please provided it is not about the politics of "divide and rule." We know that all these antithetical creeds against the kingdoms' communal existence are not unconnected with Euro-centric culture which has permeated and almost subsumed African culture and Weltanschauung today. This has made us to conclude with Bisong Kekong that: "If care is not taken African values, morality, and political administration will be completely obliterated due to individualism, exclusive personal achievements, profit maximization and steady progress in science and technology militating against moral integrity and societal harmony" (Kekong, 100).

C. URUAN TRADO-INSTITUTIONS IN CRIME DETECTION, PREVENTION AND POLICING

It has become obvious that there is often the desire in most traditional African societies even up to this to integrate and harmonize those age-old traditional customs and values and this is evident in URUAN/EFIK traditional Institutions which she shares with other African societies of which she is a part to wit: her methodology for crime detection and prevention, policing and societal controls. There are also various categories of them in respect of the different tribes, clans and communities owing to influences and interactions with those they share common borders. Invariably URUAN NORTH having affiliations with Itam/Itu, Ibiono, Ikono and ANNANG viz Ikot Ekpene borders tends to exhibit IBIBIO/ANNANG institutional values and controls; while URUAN CENTRAL in affinity with the core IBIBIO environs viz. Uyo, Iman, Abak/Ibekwe, and Ikot Abasi does get involved with some traditions of these neighbouring tribes; and by the same token URUAN SOUTH sharing borders with Okobo/Oron, Nsit, Ibesikpo/Asutan and Eket also imbibe similar fundamental customs, dispositions and cultural traits. Many African indigenous writers of ethnology, traditions and history have emphasized that the advent of the early European colonial administrators and missionaries did a lot to destroy and distort African institutions, customs and values. This is obvious because in the separation of roles of law and morality, government and religion were often considered together. While the colonial administrators entrusted crimes detection, prevention and their punishment to human persons, the African employed both human and supernatural agencies like ORACLES; MBIAM, UKANG etc. in detecting and preventing crimes. The fear of violating laws and customs or committing any crime at all became the beginning of wisdom and the moral imperative as people dreaded punishment by unseen and allegedly powerful metaphysical forces. This belief at least provided an effective prevention and punishment for criminals. Violations of customs and moral norms were therefore left in most cases to these supernatural agencies. Religion, law and government were so closely linked that religion became "the engine of the law". But here we can only analyze a few aspects of URUAN traditional institutions, customs and values that have been so seriously threatened, influenced, distorted and which are now almost eclipsed by modernism that they are now mostly obsolete. To achieve this, we shall examine some of these traditional institutions with emphasis on those age-old institutions which though most of them may not be native to URUAN/EFIK, yet have unwittingly impinged on certain aspects of ancient URUAN culture and life eg. IDI? and INAM and these are in fact some of those pious ascetical devotional institutions among the IBIBIO and ANNANG of Akwa Ibom State of Nigeria today.

HISTORICAL ANTECEDENTS IN INSTITUTIONS

African socio-political and cultural institutions as observed above were built on metaphysical foundations. This is because the average African believes in a universe of life-forces which are constant in their interactions (Israel Ekpo, 45). These interactions are centred on the self and the world. In other words, the self and the world are identical and inseparable. Every individual has three levels of existence viz. as an individual, as a member of the family and as a member of a given community. African culture fuses these three levels of existence together. Thus there is no solitary individual existence without the family and the community in the cultural scheme of things in Africa because the life of the individual is the life of the whole web of social, moral and ontological dimensions. Essentially in the pre-colonial era, societies were traditional with well-established and structural patterns of behavior, norms and relationships. It was fundamentally communal and everyone had the interest of each other at heart.

At his level, the "I" became the "WE". Behind this communal existence was the spirit which was the source of authority, law and integration and this constituted the basis without which personal and collective responsibilities disappeared? Communal spirit was the foundation of social and political interactions and the absence of this resulted in an atmosphere polluted by indiscipline, corruption and falsehood which manifested in the colonial and postcolonial eras. With the advent of colonial rule and the subsequent modernist world culture, the clash of cultures became pronounced. Colonial culture was Eurocentric and this was otherwise christened modern. Modern or Eurocentric culture implies that the African world view has to be seen and interpreted within the framework of European models and Weldtangschaaung. It means African institutions and values must be examined through the prism of European perceptions. It is worth noting that modernism or Eurocentric culture is characterized by autonomous individualism, narcissistic hedonism and moral relativism which have promoted materialism and rapid amorality in its wake (Kekong Ebiong; 100).

These creeds are however antithetical to African communal existence. Ekpo observes that it was when the early nationalists were faced with Eurocentric culture and fashion that they abandoned the imperatives of their cultural heritage – communal existence – and embraced the tenets of modernism that were alien to their culture (I. Ekpo 2). This has subsequently influenced the African, nay URUAN/EFIK mode of life. These African elites together with their Western mentors have now come to label everything African as unprogressive and primitive. It must be mentioned according to Kekong that the exclusive objective and achievements of modernity (individual rights, profit maximization, steady progress in science and technology) though obvious and admirable do not promote moral integrity and societal harmony. Thus Bisong has maintained that:

> … despite the obvious advances that modernity has made In area such as science, technology and democracy, Events such as slavery and colonialism suggest that the Legacy of modernity is an age of mass death. The rate of Suicide and drug addiction, the widespread of abortion and euthanasia, the deterioration in ecological system, The looming threat of nuclear holocaust and the present Day clamor for homosexual is not only antisocial but a Negation of natural order caused by Western civilization (K. E. Bisong 101).

4. METHODS OF DETECTING AND PREVENTING CRIMES
TRADITIONAL POLICING IN URUAN-EFIK

Most URUAN/EFIK communities had series of detectors of one form or another for detecting crimes like lying, falsehood, trickery, violence and brazen abominable behaviours. In other words, the methods of detecting crimes varied from place to place. Among the European Administrators and Missionaries, it was an established police force. The Police here designates the agency for the maintenance of public order and protection of persons and property from hazards and the commission of unlawful acts (N. Tamuno, 1777). The traditional British police and especially the police institution after the inauguration of the Metropolitan Police Force in 1929, emphasized the detection and prevention of crimes and possibly the punishment of criminals. However, in the territory, the traditional police force or town bailiffs were generally concerned with assisting the Elders and delivering messages. These had the mandate and force of summons from local authorities for guarding village rules and laws. While the European administrators entrusted the function of policing entirely to human agents, URUAN/EFIK policing took a further step by employing both the human and supernatural agencies including the divinities, ancestral spirits (personified in Ekpo and Ekpe Masquerades, etc. These ancestral spirits were believed to be actively involved and very effective in crime detection and prevention because of the mystical link between the dead and the living, both in the making and the enforcement of laws and customs and this became crucial in justifying or punishing any culprit. The situation brought about a great deal of self-policing due to the fast that moral norms and customs instilled the fear of punishment, if caught, in the individual and people very religiously tried to observe the laws and customs in order to forestall any calamity by unseen forces. It is necessary to mention too that there was a remarkable difference between the colonial and traditional police. While the traditional police were to assist in maintaining moral laws and customs, the colonial police were recruited to enforce the laws of the King whose interest they represented.

At another level, the extended family system was the keeper of the conscience of its members and provided checks against misdemeanor. Thus the extended family became the basis of an informal police whose activities could hold the kindred responsible for the wrong doings committed by any of its members.

It could punish any of its members whose behaviour was capable of jeopardizing the peace, order and security of the social unit as also the wellbeing of the community. It was therefore not very necessary for every community to have a formal and an organized police force, since inter alia*; the kindred policing served the needs of the people. Thus there was no special body of men and women responsible for detecting crimes and arresting culprits since the families of the criminal became responsible for the arrest and punishment of the culprits within them.

PART II

KINDRED POLICING & CRIME DETECTION

5. MBIAM, UKANG AND IDIONG AS METHODS OF DETECTING AND PREVENTING CRIMES IN URUAN

In pre-colonial URUAN/EFIK the function of crime detection and punishment was mainly determined by, and reserved for the society of diviners and oracle practitioners viz. Mbiam, Uka and Idi? who were highly reputed. Persons going to consult them were confident in them and were convinced that their findings were trustworthy and credible. The diviner is a human agent who receives and interprets them to his clients. According to the Oxford Advanced Learners Dictionary, divination is an endeavour to obtain information about future events or things removed from ordinary perception by consulting supernatural informants other than the human. It was through these mediums of diviners and divination that information and answers to the puzzles of life surrounding human conditions and the society itself were sought. These diviners became experts and their findings were paramount in detecting crimes and offences. However, the diviners themselves were very careful and honest in their forecasts and determination of events since they were mindful of the possibility of their client seeking other diviners outside their domain on the same issue thus rendering him worthless and irrelevant. Hence these diviners took pains in their investigations until they could arrive at a supernaturally verifiable decision.

A. MBIAM CUSTOMARY PUNISHMENT AND CRIME DETECTION & PREVENTION IN URUAN

MBIAM a form of cyanide was and is still one of the means of detecting crimes both in the pre-colonial traditional and modern URUAN/EFIK society. It was an instrument of justice. According to Ekanem, Mbiam abounds in all parts of Akwa Ibom and Cross River States especially in Annang land, but it is only in Ika Clan in the Northern part of Annang that we can find the best organized form of MBIAM (J.B Ekanem, 83). Mbiam or whatever name called depending on the particular African society, is a concoction of herbs and certain liquids known only to the traditional medicine adepts and practitioners. It is highly poisonous but its effects are believed to depend on metaphysical and supernatural forces. The mere mention of MBIAM strikes great intimidation and fear in the minds and hearts of every URUAN/EFIK citizen and in Africans as a whole. It is a potent institution all over the South Southern States of Nigeria and beyond. There is an aura of secrecy around MBIAM, not many people are conversant with its workings and regulations. All that people know about it is its effects and application and the fear of MBIAM is the beginning of wisdom among adults and children whether as indigenes or aliens wherever it holds sway. Different communities have various methods of administering MBIAM, but the general norms, beliefs and practices apply. It is still very much in vogue in these parts especially among traditional religionists. It serves not only as a means of enforcement of judgment but also as a method of settling disputes and detecting those who have committed immoral crimes like theft and adultery. In other words, an accusation brought before the institution by disputants is not necessarily concluded by the judgments of the judges, the MBIAM is the final arbiter and judge. The accused person can therefore challenge his/her accuser and vice versa, to take an oath of MBIAM as proof of his/her innocence in the accusation before he/she can accept the verdict. Generally, a period of time is given for the MBIAM to take effect. If the time elapses and the person who swore to the MBIAM oath does not come to some evil or die, then he/she is automatically vindicated and exonerated of the accusations. If on the other hand, the person gets sick or dies within the time specified by the MBIAM, then the relations are obliged to offer prescribed sacrifices as an atonement offering or in reparation for the offence committed and for swearing falsely before an MBIAM. Thus Tamuno has observed that among Efik-Ibibio people, MBIAM oath is believed to have power to destroy a person who had sworn falsely (Cf. N. Tamuno, 188). In consequence of this its efficacy is never doubted because MBIAM cannot be bribed by contestants or litigants.

THE MULTIFARIOUS PHASES & USES OF MBIAM IN URUAN - EFIK

MBIAM was and has continued to be one of those potent and important means of curbing wrong doing and detecting as also punishing culprits in the society whether in the areas of the underworld practices such as armed robbery, kidnapping, sorcery, witchcraft, cultic murders, child thefts or in such nefarious activities by lay abouts, liars and cheats, adulterers/fornicators, etc. The mere mention of MBIAM was enough to send shivers into the spines of these evil practitioners. As said earlier, no verdict on any matter is sacrosanct without recourse to verification through 'taking' or 'pouring' MBIAM as a way of vindication and authentication. This means that should a person be adjudged innocent or acquitted or even convicted by a competent traditional court of law, those affected whether as litigants or defendants must swear by 'taking' MBIAM to confirm the verdict or decision arrived at. In the case of a clear conviction, the accused or the one convicted can lawfully refuse to accept the verdict unless the accuser(s) take(s) the MBIAM oath. The reason is not far to seek. The African believes that the supernatural /metaphysical realm must be witness to what has been decided and concluded by human power and authority, and in this case nobody can be victimized or cheated; favoured or condemned in the verdict/bargain.

PROCEDURES WITH THE ADMINISTRATION OF MBIAM

Once a person is being demanded to take the MBIAM oath, those in charge of MBIAM, are notified and summoned. In most cases they are the kindred or village chiefs if the matter is local, and in cases of very serious forebodings, the MBIAM owners or devotees are usually from distant or foreign tribes mostly from ANNANG country or from far away Itsekeri, Andoni, and even Arochukwu etc, Arochukwu, yes on account of their long connection and association with URUAN as custodians and preservers of ancient IBRITAM of the Long Juju fame.

TRADITIONAL ADMINISTRATION OF MBIAM IN URUAN-EFIK

On arrival, the owners bring out and arrange the various pots and bottles of MBIAM most of which are decorated with weird and exotic awe-inspiring wrappings which are meant to strike awe, fear and intimidation in those on whom the oath is to be administered. MBIAM oath is generally administered in a large arena of the village or community square or market where many people can comfortably watch from a distance. After the MBIAM has been set in the centre, the MBIAM authorities, chiefs and elders sit round. When everything is set, the two parties, in the dispute or litigation or the person(s) involved in crimes or whoever is/are involved in the oath-taking are called out to stand before the MBIAM in full view of the crowd. The person(s) administering the MBIAM may address the swearers and the crowd concerning the terms and formulary before the event can take place. This is because MBIAM as the metaphysical and supernatural agent does not accept double speak, pretense, or ignorance of the consequences. Hence nobody can presume to be perjured in taking the MBIAM as the consequences are irreversible. If anyone dares to take MBIAM under duress, ignorance, trickery or in the Nigerian terminology, "by wuru-wuru", (1) he/she has only him/herself to blame. In fact, there is always a warning clearly and loudly declared to the hearing of all since 'to be forewarned is to the forearmed', as they say. After this, those who are to take the MBIAM can go ahead to vocalize in such formulary as was agreed upon, without adding or subtracting or re-ordering or revising the formulary expression since MBIAM will always take what is being said and sworn upon. Indeed, in such cases either the relations of the opposing side or even the crowd can object to the wordings of the formulary and refuse to accept it. It can even lead to fighting and war, and everybody leaves the venue in disarray, running for dear life.

MBIAM must be taken using the precise words, which must be unambiguous and intelligible, without twisting anything. When everybody is satisfied the person bends down and takes the spoon or 'stick' from the MBIAM pot or bottle and dips it on his/her tongue. Sometimes he/she can do this a second or third time as a mark or demonstration of his/her conviction of his/her innocence in what has just taken place. If a Christian, he/she may make the sign of the Cross as he/she returns to his/her/their seat(s). A pagan or other may also show some sign of self-acquittal and innocence in whatever manner. However, on the other hand a boaster or jester who prides him/herself as invincible can even on perjury do the same. The crowd ecstatically applauds or jeers him/her in approval or disapproval of the momentous event. In the case of the veracity and innocence with which the person(s) took the MBIAM, nothing might happen as nothing evil has befallen him/her. But in the case of occult or clear perjury, the person(s) may swell from the toes and feet up to the face with a high temperature and other symptoms, as evident signs that the MBIAM has 'caught' up with him/her. A typical mbiam oath taking happened some years ago in Calabar. This involved the daughter of the king, a princess of note. She had unwittingly recited a verse or two which depicted the "roaming and wondering chicken". It is a very popular poem in Efik land to the effect that the chicken so wondered till it got lost in the thickets. At the time she was reciting the poem, there was a very sad and heart-renting loss in the palace – the loss of her darling brother Nyong Ud?, who was sought everywhere without being found. This resulted in his being given up for dead. To exculpate herself from the accusation of her knowing or being the cause of his brother's disappearance, the king had to consent to her adorable daughter taking the MBIAM oath to prove her innocence, failing that she would be guilty of the crime. There was nothing the king could do. When everything was set for the oath-taking, he called her and spoke to her concerning the consequences:

> Adiaha eti owo! W?r? da mi! Nyom fi aka idem fo mi ke iso Obio idahaemi ke mbukpo ik? emi mme asua eti de edian fi ke idi?k-esit, mam esit mm? osuh? ndien. Edi nyomkle fi ada u w? ? emi ke nsu o! Kufre ete owo eke esitade MBIAM ke nsu isitreke ndikpa mbubiam mkpa. Idighe omokop ik? iba oro. MBIAM! MBUBIAM! (Cf. E. N. Amaku 5, 69).

As soon as the king had finished admonishing her daughter, the pots of MBIAM were set in the centre of the town arena and the princess took the oath by dipping the stick from the MBIAM pot and taking it to her tongue after pronouncing the appropriate wordings of the oath. Nothing untoward happened to her because she had no hands in her brother's disappearance from the palace.

REMEDIES FOR CONSEQUENCES OF MBIAM UNDER PERJURY

One saying goes thus 'Ekpedi mbiam nyeta, edi ama edi Edisana Nwed Abasi, nditaha-o'. (2) Thus this would imply that even the fear of the dreadful consequences of swearing on MBIAM may well be the beginning of wisdom because more often than not MBIAM may have a remedy and counter action, but not with regard to the Holy Bible. This is one seeming good point concerning MBIAM, and for which URUAN/EFIK and indeed African nations are happy with. Issues about MBIAM for which they never cease to be grateful to the ancestors are as a matter of fact treated with the finality they deserve since a whole kindred or nation could be wiped away by MBIAM. That there can always be recourse to a counter remedy of MBIAM and its after effects, one may be certain, but as for the BIBLE, nobody can tell. Should one come to an evil consequence and even should calamities, epidemics, and other disasters begin to befall a person, family, kindred clan or nation on account of MBIAM, once this can be ascertained, some remedies can be sought if acted upon in time. The most important thing is the time factor because MBIAM is known to have its own time-frame and limits beyond which 'there can be no repentance', as they say, ie. no remedy - just too late.

We cannot get on into all the intricacies about MBIAM even including MBIAM remedies, the dos and don'ts because of lack of space as that could take another treatise of its own. But suffice to say that depending on what and what MBIAM devotees determine as the precise remedies, once these are provided and on time, there is hope. It should be stressed too, that on this issue of time, the MBIAM can catch up with any person, family or kindred and may kill them leaving the culprit(s) or those attacked by the MBIAM eg. in the case of adultery, the, husband or the accomplice especially if they were told what happened or if the man had the slightest idea that the wife was unfaithful but didn't act immediately. If even through carelessness he had failed to understand the signs and consequences, but continued to sleep with her or eat her food for instance, this means "condonment"; and the man or his kindred has to suffer the consequences. When as sometimes happens the wife keeps on praising a particular man for being so kindly disposed to her, but the husband takes it for granted without investigating whether such kindness is without any strings attached, he should be ready for the consequences of not "seeing the hand writing on the wall". This is because sometimes if these measures are not taken urgently, the person can be killed by the 'ghost' of MBIAM and only he /she can see and cannot be seen by other free people around. MBIAM can suddenly cause incurable ailments or madness. The ghost or MBIAM can also manifest by forcefully pulling out the person's tongue, stiffening the neck and likely causing his/her death. When a confession has been made such a man whose wife was caught by MBIAM or EKPO NKA-OWO should stay away from the scene during the confession. He is also not allowed to taste or eat the items used to appease the gods because some have tried it and died instantly. Whenever there are signs of unhappy and bitter consequences of MBIAM, the authorities are approached and even other traditional medicine men and women versed in these things, provided the relations concerned have the wherewithal for executing the remedy. MBIAM itself may decide on the remedies and materials needed to assuage it. It can effect recovery and or restore things to normalcy and to their pristine position. MBIAM can be automatic and there is no more ado to it. But this is not as simple as it seems. It all depends on whether the MBIAM will accept alternatives or not. That is why in matters of great consequence like this, people can go to any length to get the most potent and powerful MBIAM which will brook no nonsense and that is it. At this juncture let us recount two important recent events on the effectiveness of MBIAM in Nigeria in the African traditional contexts and they are for real.

B. MBIAM: CONTEXT FROM THE EDO STATE KIDNAPPINGS

1. CONTEXT OF ARMED ROBBERY MENACE IN EDO V/S THE OBA OF BENIN

Between 2010/11 there were so many cases of armed robbery and kidnapping in Edo State to such an extent that life became almost impossible for the citizens. The Government became powerless as all the security outfits of the State could not match the evil machinations and menace of these men and women of the underworld. Even prayers in churches and mosques could avail nothing as broad day-light and high profile kidnappings were effectively carried out in these hallowed precincts. It was then left to the Edo State Royal Fathers and Traditional Rulers to do something. The Traditional Rulers and Chiefs in Council therefore swung into action and approached the Oba of Benin, His Royal Majesty, Oba Erediauwa Uko Akpolokpolo for a concerted action that must be taken and promptly so. With his traditional Chiefs and other traditional Rulers in Council they decided that only one thing needed to be done; namely, recourse to the ancestors and supernatural agencies. It was therefore announced and broadcast nationwide that MBIAM curse in the Edo equivalent would be placed on the entire Benin Kingdom and other kingdoms in the state to the effect that anybody, male or female, spirit or human who thenceforth was/were involved in armed robbery or kidnapping would be doomed to the consequences of MBIAM throughout Edo land and environs. True to tradition, there were many recorded mishaps and unexplainable deaths and other inexplicable calamities within Edo State with the result that kidnapping and armed robbery took the back stage in Edo land, thanks to the Oba and his Council of Elders.

2. EKPO NKA-OWO – a.k.a THE GHOST OF ADULTERY

The fear of EKPO NKA-OWO has always been the beginning of wisdom for the womenfolk here in URUAN/EFIK, nay in Africa at large. In fact, this tradition has affected and permeated nearly all the tribes of West and East African countries notably the Akan and Ashanti of Ghana, the people of Sierra Leone, the Kikuyis of Uganda etc. and here in Nigeria URUAN-EFIK, the Ibibios, the EDOS, and some tribes in Delta State, Rivers, etc. all of which are in the core YAM BELT of Africa as discussed in Chapter II. The saying is: 'Commit adultery and you swell and die'; in other words, dare any woman commit adultery and she will be unwittingly a debtor to EKPO NKA-OWO who is not afraid to visit her as a quest. The same also applies in certain cases to male adulterers. Adultery is sexual intercourse by any person other than the husband with a woman. In URUAN/EFIK any woman who has been traditionally 'given in marriage' and she commits such an ignoble and abominable act usually ends up with sad consequences to her including even her accomplices, relations and kindred. Therefore, whenever expressly or otherwise a given village, tribe, family, or kindred or even a husband has 'placed' the entire womenfolk or wives on MBIAM, then any married woman who happens to have openly or occult relations with her, has committed adultery and must therefore bear the consequences of her impropriety and importunity. This simply means that any woman married out or into such a community, town or clan is liable and dying let her die the death. There have been instances of inexplicable calamities and deaths occurring within a particular family or kindred such that in the end the people are constrained to resort to 'finding out especially through consulting IDI? ? '. (6). When these happen, the IDI? ? or MBIAM experts release to the consultants what and what may be required as necessary material offerings for appeasement/restitution and they must be provided in full, to 'remove the curse of MBIAM' from the woman, her family or community or accomplice(s) as the case may be. The Enugu Ezike event which follows is another case in point.

CONTEXT ON THE ENUGU EZIKE EPISODE

This is a classical episode of EKPO NKA- OWO version reported in the Sunday Sun of August 14, 2011 with the screaming Front Page Headlines captioned: TOP STORIES: COMMIT ADULTERY, GO MAD, with the Rider, a community where unfaithful women run amok (Aloysius Attah 5). In fact when I read this story it seemed to me like a Nollywood film location where the cast and crew were recording a scene to depict a young woman that suddenly ran mad at the market square. The only difference this time could be that no camera was rolling, and it was not a make-belief. It was happening live and the location was Nkwo Aji Village junction in what is now Enugu-Ezike Local Government Area comprising of 36 villages in Igbo-Eze North in the Nsukka Senatorial Zone of Enugu State. This town has common boundaries with Benue and Kogi States. On the north is Etteh, a non-Igbo-speaking community in Enugu State. On the North-East side is Ofante while on the North-West flank is Amaka and Akpanya communities in Benue State. On its boundary to the south is Ibagwa-Aka, the headquarters of Igbo-Eze South Local Government while on the South-West is Alor Agu, Unadu and Itchi. On the South-East lies Iheaka, Ovoko and Obollo Afor, the Headquarters of Udenu Local Government Area.

I have gone into all these because Enugu-Ezike village is named after the legendary founder Ezike an indigene from Idah in Kogi State of North Central Nigeria. Oral traditional legends as documented by the late John Arj in the book Enugu-Ezike in World History revealed that the name Enugu-Ezike originated from Idah in Kogi State. Ezike, according to this story, was the eldest of the three children of the then Attah of Igala, who migrated from his home in Idah to Elugwu (Hill top) where he settled. His two other relations were Eekpa (also a man) and Omoka, the only woman among them. According to the story, these three persons were born of the same mother as their father married many wives. The Attah of Igala was highly influential and respected then. One day, Eekpa was said to have committed adultery with one of his father's wives. As was the custom of the entire Igala Kingdom, such a heinous crime was punishable by outright sell-out, banishment or in most cases, death. Since the Attah represented the custodian of the people's culture and must set example, especially in the handling of a matter such as this. Ezike was said to have had compassion on this his blood relation, Eekpa, whom he believed would receive instant punishment as the matter had now become public. So he being a hunter was advised by his fellow hunters to device a means of saving the life of his brother, who was now practically in danger of death. Ezike, bent on saving Eekpa, took his brother and sister, Omoku, secretly to a far place called Ogugu, which is today the name of a Village with common boundaries with Etteh and Umuopu Village in Enugu-Ezike Local Government Area. Enugu-Ezike LGA is in Igbo-Eze North Local Government Area of Enugu State and lived there. That is why Enugu-Ezike has now become part of Enugu State and the people true to linguistic computations are now speaking the Igbo language. I have treated this point in the case of Arochukwu and others in Chapter II concerning URUAN/EFIK in the Diaspora.

What exactly happened was that on that fateful day, a woman in her late twenties whose name could not be easily ascertained was at the centre of the drama unfolding. She was alleged to be married to a businessman based in Nnewi, Anambra State. They were blessed with three children and things went on smoothly in the family until tongues started wagging that she was allegedly seen in compromising positions with some young men. It got to a climax one day when, after serving her husband dinner she started behaving funny. Before one could say Enugu- Ezike, she had started destroying valuable property inside their apartment. When the house became too "hot" for her, to the extent that the cloths she wore were like coals of fire on her body, she began to tear them into shreds. The husband summoned courage and with the help of his other Igbo brothers in Nnewi brought her home. Immediately she stepped her foot on their compound, she went berserk. As if possessed by an invisible force, she overran everybody and went to the local village deity known as Enokpa and began to roll on the ground confessing all she "did" with these other easy men of virtue. Meanwhile the family members, including her husband were searching for her throughout the day until the next morning when she was spotted at the village market junction acting like a mentally deranged person. From there, she was taken to the house of the eldest man in the village, their so-called Onyesihi. The stool for the eldest man in Enugu-Ezike is also known as Onyesihi and is non-contestable. It is here that the Chief presides at all the necessary rituals which must be done to enable affected persons of EKPO NKA-OWO (a.k.a Ghost of Adultery) and other victims of ancestral and metaphysical consequences regain their health or sanity.

ORIGIN OF THE TRADITION: This event can be traced back to Igala in Kogi State during the reign of the Attah, paramount Ruler of Igala. It is recounted that during the reign of the Attah of Igala, the guilt of adultery which caused Ezike and his relations to flee the town, normally attracted serious penalties. That was why his successors instituted the same traditional law in Enugu-Ezike and made it binding on all indigenes of the town. Till date, if one commits adultery, he or she must confess same publicly and only the eldest man, ONYEISHI in such a village has the right to handle the matter. A spirit of adultery or EKPO NKA-OWO called NDISHI or ENOKPA in other towns and villages within the L.G.A. was usually appeased by the eldest man otherwise NDISHI would cause either death or madness or any other metaphysical and incurable calamities to the violator(s). The stool of the eldest man in Enugu-Ezike known as ONYEISHI is non-contestable. It is widely believed that old men in each Village already knew who was older than the other even though they might not have had the exact recorded dates of births. They were expected to have interacted with each other during their youthful days and therefore they could know who the eldest was. The NDISHI is regarded as a spiritual being in Enugu-Ezike land and can be seen only by those that violate the laws of the land as regards infidelity. It has always been in existence. It is believed that by the 17th century and it was officially instituted by Ezike Oba, the progenitor of Enugu-Ezike people for this and many other reasons for the benefit of posterity in order to preserve sanity and morality in the community. These and other suchlike cultural heritage have it is believed, will remain forever binding on any child of Ezike-Oba. But the most serious of them all because it can even lead to death is this Ndishi tradition which involves extra-marital affairs with another man's wife or even an obvious attempt or intention to do that by kissing and even placing the hand across her waist, which equally attracts the same penalty as having sex itself. In fact, this tradition is also binding on all Ezike-Oba descendants even outside the shores of Enugu Ezike including those residents Overseas and on every woman married to an Enugu-Ezike indigene from any part of the world. This is because once a lady's bride price has been paid; she is no more available for any other man apart from the husband. But if another man rapes her, it will turn around and deal with the rapist. This one is called ADAKA ONYEORUKPO in the local dialect. Similarly, a widow in Enugu-Ezike cannot be in his late husband's house and befriend another man except she is living in a separate house, away from the compound and any overt or covert attempt to do this may result in the death of the woman's first son or and untoward calamity can befall her or her children. As already remarked EKPO NKA-OWO has far reaching consequences and can lead to so many calamities including madness, sores, spirit possession and skin diseases, but the saving grace is that it can be counteracted upon as noted above.

Some African communities see it as the machinations of ancestral spirits or supernatural and metaphysical forces at work. The Lessons are the same viz. Supernatural ways of detecting, punishing and curbing heinous crimes and in this case adultery in the land. Similarly, a widow in Enugu-Ezike cannot be in his late husband's house and befriend another man except she is living in a separate house, away from the compound and any overt or covert attempt to do this may result in the death of the woman's first son or and untoward calamity can befall her or her children. Such is the potency of EKPO NKA-OWO even in other climes besides URUAN/EFIK. As observed already, adultery is a crime against humanity because it violates the very intention and challenges the authority of the Creator of mankind and also vitiates the law of nature and Matrimony, hence it is always punished with the greatest penalties ever conceived. AIDS, HIV viruses, STDs are nature's punishment for the crime of adultery. That is why in many cultures the world over, it is punished with the most despicable calamities and metaphysical, invisible and dreadful consequences.

NSUK (COUNTER-ACTIONS) AGAINST EKPO NKA-OWO

It is necessary to have an insight into how the ghosts of EKPO NKA-OWO can be appeased and assuaged and how to counteract the effects and avert death, madness, and incurable skin ailments etc. of allegedly affected victims. In URUAN/EFIK these are seen as processes of reconciliation and restitution but these affect mostly the personalities of the people involved. The first step is for the woman/man to confess openly that he/she engaged in such and must also publicly pronounce the name(s) of the person(s) as accomplices who were involved in the act. The idea has always been: 'no confession of guilt, no forgiveness'. But as everybody knows, any single omission of names willfully or unintentionally renders the whole 'Confession' and 'NSUK Restitution exercise' null and void. To prove the completion of the 'Confession; some sand is normally raised from the ground and thrown into the air by the confessor(s) to signify that it is finished and this includes both names remembered and forgotten. Nevertheless, EKPO NKA-OWO is known to have suddenly "arrested" their husbands and afflicted them with some mysterious ailments, a development that usually takes them both to the village market squares for the necessary rituals. Then of course the Elders can afterwards decide what other penalties are appropriate for the accomplices. As has already been mentioned elsewhere, the items as demanded by the supernatural agencies whether from MBIAM or EKPO NKA-OWO or whichever must be procured. In addition to these, and after completing certain rituals, other items including palm wine, cows, goats, cocks, yams, kola nuts etc. will also be demanded this time, as stipulated by the people. The woman accused of adultery will also be expected to submit the clothes she wore as also the 'tray' or vessels with which she brought food or ate from on the day she committed the act. If these measures are taken urgently, once the signs or symptoms of EKPO NKA-OWO attack are noticed, otherwise as observed, the person(s) will be tormented and even killed by something only he/she can see but cannot be seen by other free people around. The EKPO NKA-OWO spirit normally manifests in the case of causing death sometimes by forcefully pulling out the person's tongue, stiffening his/her neck like somebody suffering from cerebral illness or other manifestations. I have recounted this story as a true-life encounter among hundreds of cases of other married women in Nigeria who have been allegedly accused of engaging in extra-marital affairs which however is taboo, Enugu-Ezike being a veritable example and case in point. This is an age-long tradition with terrible consequences for those who go against the unwritten rule. In some communities any attempt to kiss or touch a married woman's waist attracts the same consequences for both Christians and non- Christians alike.

CONTESTATIONS REGARDING ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION BY EKPO NKA-OWO AGAINST MEN-FOLK ADULTERESS

In recent times some educated URUAN/EFIK indigenes have complained that the EKPO NKA-OWO treatment of adulteress women is discriminatory. Why should the ancestors and metaphysical agents who are supposed to be just and equitable in their dealings with posterity succumb to selective manipulations in a matter as grave as adultery which is taboo in URUAN/EFIK and elsewhere? Another school of thought on this subject of discussion that has trailed the issue of EKPO NKA-OWO in URUAN/EFIK and other parts of Nigeria like in Enugu Ezike land where the ghosts of adultery hold sway, is the argument by some elite that the progenitors of the tradition made it to keep women in perpetual subjugation while the men are allowed to "sample" ladies other than their wives. And now another question arises: Are the men including bachelors only forbidden from sleeping with married women but are free to have a harem of girlfriends/concubines or mistresses? In other words, does EKPO NKA-OWO close his eyes on concubinage and fornication galore such as we are witnessing nowadays? It seems some clever women have also come out to challenge this anomaly as they feel free to go about experimenting only to be caught up with instant consequences. Those in this category have been alleged to have prepared charms to "blind" the spirits and ghosts of adultery so that they can also experiment. But where do we go from here? Even recent happenings have revealed that this set of people can only postpone the doomsday because even as they make their own public confessions and swearing on MBIAM, this alone is so weighty as it is the topic of discussion on every lip to contend with the shame of having to mention the names of up to 10 to 20 men with whom they had illicit affairs. The fact is that once such public confession has been made, the confessor(s)' dignity is gone forever and this has made many people to zip up. Then others have argued that the EKPO NKA-OWO phenomenon is a good omen for the society that has degenerated in morality because the loss of moral values and recourse to loose lifestyles has assumed a dangerous trend in the society; and if not for the known implications associated with such acts, some women could have gone to the extent of employing their husband's younger brothers, house boys, drivers etc. to "service" them as some have been known to do without batting an eyelid on what the society may say. But this many think is the natural antidote against marital infidelity though others have countered that such beliefs concerning faithfulness in marriage is a matter of personal decision and orientation irrespective of where one comes from and whether or not a Christian, Muslim or pagan is involved.

Again some others contend that it would seem the tradition from the outset was skewed to keep the womenfolk under perpetual domination while the men were allowed to philander. Some have even reasoned that although adultery or extra-marital affair is morally wrong, unmarried ladies seem to be allowed to flaunt it while their married female counter parts dare not try it. Some have gone a notch higher arguing that this should be taken as a challenge to involve all women as fellow prayer warriors, such that irrespective of the consequences of EKPO NKA OWO, all those who desecrate their marital vows and disgraced womanhood should be exposed and punished whether male or female. But Church Ministers, the Catholic Church in particular, women liberation movements, even the youths themselves have condemned EKPO NKA OWO and MBIAM as practices of subjecting people to ritual cleansing to be freed from the consequences of adultery. It is established that all religious creeds forbid adultery. The Bible, which is the holy book of Christians, has also made it clear in Exodus 20:14, Deuteronomy 5:18 and other relevant verses: 'YOU MUST NOT COMMIT ADULTERY'. However, should people fall into occasions of sin like this; there are ways of 'Reconciliation and Penance' at least in the Catholic Church instead of relying on public and market confession and fetish practices.

WHAT THE BIBLE SAYS: It has always been and it is my thesis here that URUAN/EFIK metaphysical agents are upright and do not discriminate. It is not like the Old Testament law and custom whereby any woman caught in adultery or alleged to have committed adultery was instantly stoned to death. Relying on this Mosaic Law even in the New Testament times, St. John the Apostle, has recorded a scene where a woman caught in adultery was brought before the Lord for public execution according to laid down laws. Of course instead, He confounded the Jews who had brought the culprit, but did He justify the crime? Rather than consign the culprit to stoning he condemned the act in toto by warning but paternally exhorting the culprit adulterer:' Go now but sin no more', thus implying that what she did was reprehensible and punishable, but that she should never do it any longer (Jn 8:3-11). In Hebrew dittography, the core of the Mosaic Law as handed down orally by those Hebrew groups who had had the experience of the Sinai event, and knew that it contained the words spoken by God Himself, upheld the Sinaitic Covenant as sacrosanct: 'Thou shalt not commit adultery'(Ex 20:14). This is an action command with serious forebodings to such an extent that Christ raised the Commandment to such a high point that even mere thinking of doing so tantamount to committing adultery with far reaching consequences. St Paul in his Epistle to the Corinthians warned unequivocally that any such act in thought, word or act excludes the culprit from the Kingdom of Heaven and from the Beatific Vision (1 Cor 6:9-10). What other punishment or consequence of sin could be greater than that? The core of the Mosaic Law and handed down orally both the Elohist and Deutoromic recessions have the all-important injunctions and sees adulterers as traitors (Jer 9:11; 23:10). Again Jeremiah prophesies that adulterers will sees disaster coming unto them (Jer 13:27). As seen already, St. Paul specifically predicts their punishment "for neither fornicators, nor adulterers…will enter the Kingdom of Heaven". St. James accuses adulteress as haters of God (Jas 4:4). Finally, the Book of Apocalypse - Revelation – warns that unless adulterers repent within the time frame the Lord in His mercy has given them, He will consign them to a bed of pain; and all partners in adultery to great hardship, and their children will die (Rev 2:22). This to prove that adultery is an abomination on all counts. It is reprehensible and carries with it weighty consequences whether in this world or that to come.

6. DETECTION OF CRIMES IN URUAN/EFIK THROUGH UKA? INSTITUTION

When translated the word UKA? means ORDEALS, is another institution in URUAN/EFIK for detecting and punishing crimes. UKA? seeks to punish criminal and defaulters who refuse to tell the truth. It is an institution that seeks to uncover hidden secrets and detect defaulters in the society and operates within the realm of metaphysical and supernatural agencies. The instruments employed are usually those of torture and are generally carried out in the open where a cross-section of the public is in attendance.[13] URUAN/EFIK people in particular trust in the efficacy of MBIAM and UKA? because both are believed to have been established by the ancestors for the dispensation of justice.

IDI? ? INSTITUTION IN URUAN/EFIK

IDI? ? is another crime detector among the Ibibio-Annang people. According to Okuku Asiak [(7)] Idi? belongs to the prophetic class in crime detection and for finding solutions to any impending disaster. In Idi? cult, divinities as mediators or spiritualized intercessors are a common phenomenon among the Africans. The idea of mediation in the African conceptual scheme as expressed by Shorter is more dynamic and vital. The point here is that divinities are not mere messengers or disinterested informants but essential intermediaries. It must be emphasized informants but essential intermediary does not mean a barrier to communication; rather the divinity is an essential channel of communication at solemn and important moments in life. When consulted, the diviner -Abia-idi? would state the outcome of these findings and proffer possible solutions. In other words, with the spiritual foresight, the diviner-Abia-idi? can reconnect the past, foretell the future and read both on earth and in the spiritual world. Thus on a wider context, Abia-idi? is notionally a means of discovering the things to come, but also used to uncover past secrets and to smell out witches and sorcerers (Njoku, F.O.C. ,28). In the case of detection of crimes, the Abia-idi? usually indulges in verdicts similar to the ambiguities often credited to the Delphic oracle. Such oracles especially when it concerns witchcraft, theft or murder, are upheld and the guilty is required to expose himself/herself less he/she would be visited by the wrath of the ancestral spirits who are the custodian of moral norms.

When the confessions are not made, the parties involved may apply such ordeals as esere bean especially in allegations involving witchcraft. Death usually follows when such ordeals are applied. It may be assumed here, rightly or wrongly, as Tamuno has pointed out that the effectiveness of such ordeal may depend on the speed with which the suspect with guilty conscience might swallow the ingredients slowly and die; an innocent person could dispose them quickly and so escape the disaster.[19] It must also be assumed that where mbiam, uka or idi? ordeals are employed, it was the guilty that paid the price. It is also to be noted that a great deal depended upon the dexterity of one who administered such trials by ordeals, such a person sometimes knew the identity of the suspect in advance and increased the potion of poison in his cup or gave him a more lethal kind [20]. The efficacy of such methods may be disputed by people unfamiliar with them, yet despite the imperfections, these methods of investigating crimes and settling disputes met the needs of the people. Tamuno has however given an eyewitness account of the Borgu Oath in Northern Nigeria which gave him no room for suspicion or doubt. According to him, the Borgu oath consists of drinking a small quantity of water into which a small handful of earth was mixed.

Death occurred, according to him, to the knowledge of many from this ordeal and in each case, the body swelled to a huge size before the person actually expired. In this case, there was no question of poison placed on ground before hand for three or more people drank from the same cup. In less than a week the suspect in question began to swell. He sent messengers admitting that he lied and begged for forgiveness and for something to counter the effect of the ordeal. Help was difficult to secure and the person died a shameful death [21]. Thus in traditional societies, detection and punishment of criminals were in most cases, left to the supernatural agencies. But since the advent of the Missionaries, a number of Christian zealots have looked down on these traditional institutions as idolatry with the result that people can commit crimes or all sorts of offences and lie or swear falsely in the Church without any immediate adverse consequence. One of the most treasured yet neglected traditional institutions among the Ibibio-Annang Antiquity is Inam devotion. It is a pious determination by an elderly person, to attain a religious and moral uprightness through self-renunciation and withdrawal from the normal human endeavours. It was the creed of the elders, in the community to attain a reputable status where one could be looked upon as a model who can arbitrate in community matters with fairness. To achieve this, one has to go through a process of self-purification. During the process, the Inam devotee does nothing harmful nor thinks anything considered evil. He does not even listen to quarrels nor hear anything evil that can be detrimental to anyone or to the society. That is why the punishment for violating any of the Inam norms is automatic death of the culprit. A successful candidate, who has undergone and completed the process, graduates into an Oku-Inam may continue in the devotion for seven years into seven times if he could be sure of sufficient food to keep him for the number of years. According to Okuku Asiak, Oku-Inam is a very highly exalted status, which no other can be conceived of or compared with. An Oku-Inam is exalted above mere mortals. He can arbitrate with fairness in all matters relating to the well-being of the community and his views are readily accepted. The belief if that after having undergone the process of self-purification, he has been purified by ancestral spirits. It is also believed that the long process of devotion, austere life and self-renunciation from sensual pleasures have immuned the Oku-Inam from any error either in thought or in behaviour.

7. DETECTION OF CRIMES IN URUAN/EFIK THROUGH IDI? ? INSTITUTION

A. IDI? ? AS DIVINATION AND AS A HEALING CULT

The name tag Idi? seems to be a later development in ancient URUAN tradition and usage. Originally Idi? was an institution aimed at dictating crimes and agents of crimes through sanctification and ceremonial as well as sanctions in order to purge the society of the contagion and machinations of evil men, women and defiants in society and to maintain the equilibrium between the living and the dead in the world of spirits and ancestors. From time immemorial mankind has frowned at misdemeanors committed by citizens since these, more often than not, brought about their displeasure and eventual punishment with calamities, sufferings and the breakdown of law and order in the society. To make sure these did not befall the community, the ancients tried to do all in their power to purge the society of wickedness and crime. The sanity and wellbeing of any community were known to depend eminently on the purity and cleanliness both of the very environment itself and the people living in it as also the behaviour of its citizens and that is how it should be and has remained so, Christian and heathen or pagan. It does not seem to tally well in the society that there is such a situation whereby people live as they like as if they were animals in the jungle where there are no laws and norms to guide the behaviour of men, women and children. It is both good sense and morality to expect so. Ancient URUAN was deputed to be a very organized and cultured society of disciplined gentlemen and women as also law abiding, diligent where children were docile, obedient and law abiding, but as everybody knows, owo if?nke ima and as the ancients say, ntuen/ntoken inanake ke ib?k thus implying that there is no place of which is crime free and where people are perfect. Nevertheless, crimes which are disobedient and malevolent actions of men and women always attract punishments and disasters and this has always been the case since the beginning of the world. Our First Parents, Adam and Eve committed the heinous crime of disobedience and affront against the laid down orders of lawful Authority ie. God Almighty and therefore had to face sanction and punishment which they vicariously transmitted unto the entire human race. People have simply to learn to live humanely, honourably and to be law abiding to avoid calamities and sufferings. Hence it was to checkmate iniquity and crime in society and maintain this state of wellbeing that the ancients instituted what they called NDOMO as a sort of measurement and in this case the instrument which the Oku Idi? priests used to enable them discover the truth in every manner and matter which has now become known as Idi? .

NDOMO was instituted as a powerful device for the detection of crimes as also their perpetrators and also help the priests in diagnosis and for healing. The term itself means trial or examination. It was an examination or trial carried on people alleged to have committed crimes and where the perpetrators were not easily detected or they would not come out to identify themselves when sought for, then NDOMO by itself was able to correctly and invariably determine what crimes were committed and also their perpetrators. But certain writers like Patrick Akpabio, Israel Ekpo and others opine that it was a cult which was reserved for certain selected people male and female who had exhibited some signs that he/she was destined to serve the community either as a priest or as a minister among the clerics of Idi? Cult (Cf. Akpabio Patrick, 8-12); Ekpo Israel, 40-47). According to Akpabio, it was only persons accepted by the ancestors or and the gods for this service which was rather a religious one, that became trained and initiated into the cult. After months, sometimes years of training and apprenticeship, such persons were passed out in a magnificent solemn ceremonial of sanctification and brought to their new Ekuk idi? abode adorned and equipped for their work. Obong Emmanuel Ekpoudom also seems to corroborate this belief, because according to him, even some parents were happy, ready and willing to sponsor their children who showed signs of this calling into the Cult. But as earlier clarified, this was a much later development since in modern times, Annang country seems to be the sole trusty and custodian centre of Idi? and URUAN/EFIK citizens in need are often heard to be saying: "We are going to Annang to consult Idi? ." NDOMO then was it which at it its apogee when it had developed into oracles and institutions for the cult of Divination, it was given the name tag IDI? ? as it is now known, but there are still other variants and practices including ordeals and NDOMO itself as another object in the practice. The reason is that in those ancient times, Religion and society were so knit together that everything was interpreted in terms of God, his agents/ intermediaries – gods and spirits of ancestors and other functionaries of NDEM, mammy water, Eka Abasi etc. These of course were meant to add colour, awe, respect and potency both to the person/s concerned and to whatever was being done in the name of Idi? . It even included Nemancracy and other esoteric performances.

THE PROCESS OF BECOMING AN OKU-IDI? ? IN URUAN - EFIK

Whatever will be said about the qualifications, procedures and other processes for becoming an Oku a.k.a ABIA IDI? ? also apply to the making of an Oku INAM except that where the neophyte of INAM undergoes mostly the period of quarantine, the Candidate for Idi? after fasting for seven days and seven nights undergoes ritual cleansing and renewal through what may be regarded as death, burial and resurrection. One exception to the qualifications for candidacy in Idi? which is different from those of INAM is the age factor. While the INAM devotee must be one past middle-age, once a man or woman has reached the age of thirty he/she is qualified as a candidate for Idi? provided the other requirements especially purity and chastity and the most important aspects are demanded because an Idi? designate can be a polygamist of sorts, but in the case of women, they should not have been married for the second time.

THE CALLING, THE INITIATION AND INSTALLATION OF AN ABIA IDI?

It is often said "nnan-enyin esin idap uweme-eyo" and kp? akanam obu o wune eku " or kp? akanam ik?t mfa adat" all of which imply that there must always be a reason why events happen and why people rise up to the occasion and most especially to solve the impending problems at hand. There must have been unusual happenings in the past which usually led the people to think up something to solve their societal problems and the evolution of Idi? Cult was certainly one of those occasions. Usually and according to my informants, there were certain mysterious happenings in the land usually in the lives of individuals, some serious inexplicable and mysterious occurrences like misfortunes, the loss of children and other beloved ones including property and domestic animals and these would make the people undergoing these kinds of misfortunes and suffering to rise up to find out the cause/s. It was things like this that must have led the ancients to look for ways and means of knowing such causes as also sources of these problems. The search for what should be done to discover the root causes of events and happening both good and bad or even evil led to the evolution of Idi? Cult in ancient URUAN society thousands of years ago. Idi? cult did not just crop up as a tea party especially regarding those who were to carry out this assignment for the society. Originally and this must have been the origin of the Cult, there were certain persons in the society who were known to have had recurrences of some or all of the misfortunes recounted above. On examination they were invariably informed that the gods were using these signs to alert them of their impending call to the vocation of Oku/Abia Idi? priesthood. Once these apparent candidates had accepted their seeming fate and calling, further happenings but this time the reversals of those happenings would be occurring to them in quick succession thus making the people automatically conclude that such men and women were being called to the candidacy of Abia Idi? . It therefore meant that such acceptance and willingness generally had concrete evidences to the fact of their impending mission. What generally used to happen at those early times was that the reversals of fortunes led those who experienced deaths in their families, eg. loss of children then began to be able to afford marrying many wives to beget many children. Similarly, those, in the case of women, would get new husbands and to be prolific and capable of getting pregnant again if they had not reached menopause. Regarding those who suddenly lost property, they began to be prosperous once more, just like that as the people must have evidently experienced or noticed. In some cases, it involved a good number of families. Where these would occur the potential candidates would immediately make preparations to go on quarantine for their cleansing, induction and training.

In ancient times the Idi? neophytes had to be ritually buried in a coffin after the quarantine and fasting for three days for women and seven days for men, because at the end of it all they would be deemed dead – they became weak, emaciated and almost immobile, but of course they were still breathing. They would then be carried away for ritual and symbolic burials to places prepared like graves in their respective EKUK IDI? ? temples which they would be using for their practices. Then they would be left there to remain there for three days ie. In between the first and third, just like the Lord Jesus was buried and then rose on the third day. This is true because most of the things carried out in URUAN/EFIK customs and traditions even today bear the same trademarks as those of the Israelites. eg 1st and 2nd cousins are called brothers and sisters just as SS Jude, James, Susanna, Mary of Cleopas, etc. who were relations of Jesus were called brothers and sisters of the Lord. This may also well explain the insistence of some EFIK and URUAN still regarding themselves as descendants of the Israelites (Cf Mk 6:1-6).

But of course should the candidates be feeling very weak, they could be fed with water and other liquid local potions to sustain them. The raison d'être of this practice was to enable the candidates enter the world of ancestors and the Divine in order to be instructed and filled with wisdom and understanding to enable them carry out the work of divination and prophesying without let or hindrance through the intervention of oracles employed as devices of divine or heavenly communications. On coming out from the grave they would be deemed to be accomplished and trained adepts ready to kick start their Idi? practices. It should be noticed here that the quarantine which normally lasted for at least six months was the period meant for their training by experienced Idi? practitioners and experts employed to supervise their training. After which there was always a celebration by which all the notable Mbia Idi? and INAM adepts and chieftains in the districts far and near and from other tribes and neighbouring kingdoms would be invited and these would join in procession first to the akwa anwa urua ie. the local town or village market stadium/square for their final consecration and sacrificial offerings, and then procession round the nearby villages and towns. All of them would appear in their colourful Idi? professional attire wearing their ? kp?n? Idi? head gears to match. Then they would be escorted to their homes for celebrations and festivities after which to their Ekuk Idi? temples for their official installation. These temples were usually well furnished with all the paraphernalia of Idi? viz. Ndomo apparatus, ? k?i ebi? , itam akpasa, Utigha, Ida , nt?kr?k, obodom, ikon, and ekput rattles for incantations, nsei, ekim powder, etc. of the Idi? trade. The temples were always the most exciting and interesting places to watch in any village or town that was blessed with an Idi? adept practitioner a.k.a Abia/Oku Idi? .

In 1964 while on my apostolate labours the Lord Jesus converted one of the greatest Abia Idi? chieftains in Ibibio land, a native of Ikot Ebito in IBESIKPO, the country of birth of the legendary Honourable EYO UYO. When I explained to him that the Lord of Heaven and Earth could make him greater than that, and I tried to explain. Do you know why he complained and remonstrated? He was certain he was soon to meet his ancestors and I am sure by now you must have known that Idi? was one of the greatest pagan institutions and artifacts the world has ever known – Remember also the magical LONG JUJU of ancient Arochukwu, a.k.a URUAN. After praying and convincing him that the ABASI ENY? ? , ABASI IS? ? was the Lord of Heaven and earth whom he used to invoke during his work had the power to do all things, he concurred. Therefore, that same God could make him greater not here below, but where he was hoping to go to meet his ancestors ie. those ancestors who had renounced everything to follow Jesus, the Son of God. He exclaimed: "ke eti – ezi okwu! And I said yes, and more than that, to even see Him face to face also. Then he recounted to me why he believed me, because his recent dreams and happenings as he was at the point of death – day-dreaming every time about the life to come. He said he could notice the difference between the appearances of his ancestors who became Catholics from those who died as pagans. To cut it short he repented, believed and was baptized and given the Blessed Eucharist for his Viaticum before his death. But to do that I told him he needed to accept that his Idi? paraphernalia be confiscated and handed over to the Mission not to his posterity as one of his sons – a Std. VI Certificate holder was pronto recruited as a teacher in the Catholic Mission Schools Education Board. Before this we had contacted His Lordship Bishop James Moynagh at Calabar for his advice and permission. He without hesitation gave the go ahead and his approval that instead of destroying the items in the Uf?k Idi? we could build a museum to store them. I headed home and collected money from my mother, a palm produce trader of repute and straight to Uyo to get carpenters to construct a gigantic glass cupboard for the storage of these things because the Parish Priest of St. Andrew's Ikot Okure then, the late Rt. Rev. Msgr. Godwin Akpan who became the founding Rector and Superior General of the Missionary Society of St. Paul (MSP) could not afford to readily produce the money. I should like to believe that the Museum is still there because FR.G.P. Akpan then had written in the Mission Log Book to the effect that the Museum was the property of the Diocese of Calabar then. To God be the Glory!

But the point about juju, Idi? , shrines, politics of exotic powers diabolical manipulations, cultic practices, etc. is that these can only be employed to good purpose to intimidate strike fear and awe the people so that they can believe that it is better to patronize juju in order to succeed or ward off harm and provide succour. People are generally afraid and easily believe in the power of patronizing the Dibias and juju potentates in order to counter those who are immersed in employing diabolical powers and politicians and those seeking power indulge in this. In most cases when they do that it becomes counterproductive because that is their evil way and they are likely to be stronger than God. Once people abandon Him and subscribe to the fake evil gods choosing the path of the devil, then the superior negative force is likely to prevail even against God as it were. That is why God will always abandon those who subscribe to devilry and juju thus allowing the devil to prevail over them despite their being Church goers and Christian worshippers. People like this old man should learn to trust in God absolutely, then no other weapon or power fashioned in the name of juju shall ever prosper and I know that many of our people do subscribe to these things but they never worked because God will always overrule them.

UF? K IDI? ? AND TEMPLES OF THE CULT FUNCTIONARIES

From the above as is always with functionaries both spiritual and traditional ministers to the Deity, spirits (NDEM) and ancestors are built certain dedicated or sacred places where the Sacred ministers, diviners priests are expected to use whether as offices, temples or consulting rooms. For Mbia Idi? practitioners and priests Ekuk Idi? were those designated places or temples where the Mbia Idiong were expected to sit to carry out their duties of divination for their clients. Some of these were rooms decked with woven eyei raffia palm fronds. Non-initiates were not allowed to go into or even behind the Uf?k Idi? temples called ekuk Idi? . They were not permitted to send anybody on any kind of errand to that place. Those things that were normally inside there were the paraphernalia of their trade consisting of special stones on which they always sat while performing their divinations or whatever were to be done, Ndom white chalk, nsei and other instruments mentioned above which were the very things they often used while carrying on their duties as diviners or as medicine men. There were also certain small sticks (akwa) which were pinned to the ground or placed around the room. Some diviners also used sleeping aya mats spread on the floor for clients to sit on while being attended to during their enquiries.

ne other institution which was used in ancient times that was very close to Idi? Cult was INAM institution, an institution reserved mostly for the elderly people in the community who had the vocation, still for the purpose of crime detection and for other purposes treated herein. This will be treated as another institution both for healing purposes and for revealing secrets, events and problems in the land. Some people have described it as the highest form of religious Orders in Africa and beyond. It was also serviced and performed by priests generally referred to as Oku INAM. But in this case it was left to the Mbia Idi? priests to determine those who were genuinely called to the Orders and they could be men and women of probity with unquestionable character. Seeing that it was the highest Institution of Religious Orders, only persons who were already initiated into other societies were deemed qualified to be admitted into this institution. Most of those would-be members of this institution would have already experienced that secret force moving and working in them to warrant them to consult the oracles also the services of an Abia Idi? who could tell them whether they had the vocation to be initiated into the institution or not. As mentioned elsewhere, in ancient URUAN the institution had various names depending on the type of practices and services undertaken or rendered to the public and to those in desperate situations of need. Some practices and devices were exotic while others would have been common place. Some of these practices included ordeals, prophecy, divination, Nemancracy, Ndomo and the main Idi? or foretelling of events and description of the requirements for sacrifices and healing including diagnosis of various illnesses.

At its apogee, very sophisticated aspects of human psychology, witchcraft, revelations of omens and dreams were also brought in, and Idi? was deputed to have been so powerful and potent enough to deal with all sorts of human emergencies. At the time it was used in the exalted LONG JUJU machinations which were simply representation and image figures instead of the human persons of Idi? adepts and experts, it was possible to detect and make revelations regarding identities of culprits, river dangers like ship wrecks and other calamities ostensibly masterminded for the capturing of slaves anywhere. A typical case of reaching to an (innocent) accused was to intimidate, deceive and black-mail or even extort from an innocent victim and hand-cuff him/her en route Calabar, IDU or Bonny. During the Long Juju era, it was simply to get the targeted victim pass through one of the circuitous bush tracts leading to the Long Juju shrine on one side and after accusation and condemnation pass him/her through the other side leading to and stretching into one of the branches of the Cross River from Arochukwu creek. The Annang counterpart was the capturing of these innocent men and women of the area mostly through Abak district of Ukanafun, Ibesit, Ekparakwa up to Ibekwe in ancient Opobo Division of Niger, then Oil Rivers Protectorate.

PRESENT-DAY IDI? ? PRACTICES v/s MODERNITY

Today Idi? graduates build Ekuk Idio and get it equipped for their work. Even because of this belief to the effect that Idi? Confraternity is a bourgeoisie association especial for children of the nobility, some parents are just too enthusiastic and do happily sponsor the initiation of their sons and daughters into the cult. Everybody knows that Idio cult has so many functions especially those aspects employed for healing and saving lives, for divination at moments when there were calamities facing either the community or individuals. The traditional religion of Akwa Ibom in particular has given a prominent place to these diviners and Oracle practitioners who through the invocation of spirits are able to foretell the future and also relate the past. The Abia Idiong or Oracle, who through the spirits are able to foretell the future and relate the past are the most sought for especially on occasions of serious unknown sicknesses afflicting the people as also for great un-explainable calamities and misfortunes both in families and among the people as a whole eg. Inexplicable fire disasters, floods etc. Even today the Abia Idio and Oracle practitioners are generally respected, sometimes dreaded particularly by members of the community and the society in general. The respect and reverence given them is because they are the revealers of most of the secrets and inexplicable occurrences in the land. According to Obong Etim Ekarika, since this cult groups perform their duties in connection with the Supernatural, members of the society viz. the Ancestors and dead members of the cult who are always guiding them to have clearer vision so as to be able to reveal divine secrets accurately.

THE MBIA IDIO? AS DIVINERS: For some authors Abia Idio can also be addressed as Abia mfa because according to Joseph Esema, these are diviners whom the people normally choose to refer to as Mbia Mfa. They are those who always carry out their services to the community through consulting the spirits who grant them knowledge of secrets which enable them accurately foretell the future and relate same to the people including their clients. The diviners use divination for their work. Divination is the method used for finding out the unknown, by means of pebbles, numbers, water, animal entrails, reading the palm, throwing dice, etc. (Mbiti, J. S. 156). Mbia Mfa diviners are consulted on daily basis concerning problems, especially those regarding sickness, robbery, wizardry or witchcraft especially their machinations through Umen who are usually called Ifot while the black diabolical witches and wizards are called If?t. It is this set of Idi? practitioners who among other practices use these divination artifacts to hypnotize charm and bamboozle people. They also use other different methods to achieve their arts by employing beads, Eyei etc. while others use dolls and other wooden images. With the combination of psychology and mind-reading techniques they can work out and proffer answers to problems brought before them. (Esema Joseph, 2002 page 104-105).

FUNCTIONS OF THE DIVINER (ABIA IDIONG

The Abia Idiong is the official priest for the community. His functions include offering sacrifices, blessing the people especially the ones chosen for war, sanitizing the society both physical and moral in ritual cleansing usually through offering sacrifices at the local shrines and waters, purifying the unclean, doing jobs of a diviner, foretelling the future, delivering messages from the ancestors spirits (NDEM) and the gods, and diagnosing illness and helping to treat the person or directing such a person to a suitable medicine man. His other duties also include providing answers to existing calamities whenever he was consulted, and in the case of large scale disaster like floods or epidemics, his first duty to society was to make sure he finds out the causes as well as the sources of the calamities. The priest will then prescribe what items will be needed for the sacrifices and oblations to appease the gods so as to solve the problem and ease suffering and pain. According to J. S. Mbiti the main function of diviners, mediums, oracles and seers is to find out hidden secrets or knowledge and pass them on to the people. Diviners normally work also as medicine men, physicians, nurses, pharmacists and other Para-medics. They deal with the question of finding out why something has gone wrong most especially sickness and calamites.

INAM INSTITUTION IN IBIBIO AND ANNANG

7. THE PROCESS OF BECOMING AN OKU-INAM

(a)Initiation: At a preliminary level, the candidate for Oku-Inam withdraws from his normal routine of daily life and isolates himself for at least three months. During this period, an Abia-Idio or a diviner (who is probably a graduate of Inam) may be consulted to determine the exact duration the candidate is to undergo his probation. This is a period of atonement for all wrong doings committed during his life time. If his offences are many and grave, he may be obliged to undergo a longer period of atonement. For those with minimal wrong doing the normal is three months, at the end of which the person may begin actual Inam devotion. During this period, he prays for the forgiveness of the offences of his past life and offer sacrifices of appeasement to the divinities and ancestors. It must be emphasized, according to Okuku Asiak that the sacrifices offered are never diabolical but meant for intercession for offences committed and for the wellbeing of the community.

DURATION AND ENVIRONMENT

A Candidates to undergo Inam devotion normally begin the process at the age of 49 years. This age is determined by the number of times certain plots of land are cleared for cultivation. It was the custom of pre-colonial Ibibio Annang, according to Okuku Asiak, that community land be cultivated after seven years fallowing the candidate for Oku-INAM would begin when particular community lands are cleared and cultivated the seventh time since his birth. Although Inam devotion was exclusively restricted to men, in few exceptional cases women of proven integrity who passed menopausal age were allowed to undergo Inam rites.

The INAM devotee is required to withdraw into a more conducive environment that is free from noise, quarrels, fighting or any other actions that may disturb solemn contemplation and to remain there in isolation for a period of time which can last for years. During these years of self-imposed seclusion, he is not supposed to hurt anybody, destroy life or even see a corpse. Precisely, the environment must be conducive for contemplative life otherwise he is obliged to change to a more serene environment that would induce meditation and make his devotion meaningful. The environment in which the INAM candidate confines himself is usually painted with white clay and adorned with white materials – a symbol of sanctity and purity.

PERSONAL CONDUCT OF INAM DEVOTEE

(b)Sexual Abstinence: For good effect, self-respect and integrity of the devotee, the avoidance of sexual activities is paramount. It is a conditio sine qua non and the most important element in ascetic life in general. Since sexual acts are often accorded as acts capable of desecrating the life of an INAM devotee and to avoid any temptation, the INAM devotee is restricted to complete seclusion and remains in quarantine until the period of purification is concluded.

(c) Feeding: The INAM devotee has a prescribed regimen of food items and the quantity is more often than not reduced to what he is normally used to take. Meat items from cows, goats, especially pork meat are forbidden. His food is mainly of vegetables. He is also forbidden to eat the food prepared by young women under menopausal age. In most cases the INAM prepares his meals otherwise elderly women over sixty years of age. The reason is that the INAM is deputed an ELDER and should normally not be put in a situation where young women come in and go out flaunting their cleavages and in so doing putting the devotee under pressure and temptation.

(d) Daily Prayer: As always, the daily activities begin with prayer which INAM devotee prays facing the sun as at sunset. The prayer consists of uttering some incantations to the ancestors and divinities. The main points of the prayer centre on intercessions for his sins, for guidance, protection and for the progress of his people. This prayer life is interspersed with Contemplation and Meditation. During the Meditation, he focuses his attention on the shell of a tortoise to aid his Contemplation. The tortoise is usually associated with purity which acts as a medium to aid the devotee to commune with the divine and ancestors. The tortoise in URUAN folklore is considered the epitome of wisdom and knowledge in the animal kingdom. Even the great Greek philosopher-king, Plato equates wisdom with virtue whereas the tortoise is seen as a virtuous and respectable lord in the animal world. By focusing his attention on the shell to aid his concentration, he now receives divine illumination which will enable him settle disputes, arbitrate and render equitable judgment as well as give wise counseling on matters related to persons in the society. Through prayer and meditation, the INAM devotee seeks an ever deeper communication with the ancestors from whom he requests their assistance to persevere in the path of purity, justice and self-emptying love for the people. By so doing he also attains a state of illumination and discernment of inner realities. Thus the INAM devotee becomes divinized as it were, since he now possesses the spirit of the divine to know the outcome of events, past, present and the future. He is the consultant to the people who come to him to enquire about the outcome of certain events in their lives. By his purification, he possesses cultic powers to probe the inner secretes of life and hidden knowledge concerning the ways and wishes of the ancestors and deities especially on issues far beyond human understanding. It is at this point in time that he receives revelations of such secrets concerning good health, medicinal roots and herbs and whatever can heal all manner of ailments as well as metaphysical problems of mankind.

Talk about the Masters of those ancient great Religions of the East like Brahmanism, Confucianism Taoism etc, the INAM devotee is their counterpart. But while in the Christian Religion the mystic may receive similar revelations being influenced by the Grace of the Holy Spirit, he cannot use his knowledge for these mundane exotic purposes but could indeed perform miracles as recorded in the lives of Saints. Thus the OKU INAM can now operate within the realm of the supernatural and can discern hidden secrets and metaphysical realities even the wishes of the ancestors and divinities. But a distinction must be made here between the principal and inferior divinities. The principal divinities are part of the order of things because according to Njoku, they are coeval with the coming into being of the cosmos (F.O.C. Njoku,26). Minor deities on the other hand are more or less the ancestors and the deceased tribal heroes like the Sango in Yoruba tradition who are considered to have become deified. These ancestors and spirits are those of the kindred and tribe believed to be good spirits who were known to have sought and won divine favours by virtuous and righteous living. Ancestorship is therefore ascribed to those persons who were seen to be morally upright, died a natural death devoid of accident, suicide, drowning and of ripe old age. There is need to emphasize here that in African conceptual scheme of things, ancestors, spirits etc. are equivalent to the Saints in Christian conception. This belief in ancestors and spirits stem from the common notion of most of the world religions to the effect that life continues after death, that communion and communication are still possible between the living and the dead ancestors who were believed to be the good spirits of dead relatives. Ancestors are therefore ascribed to those persons who before their death were seen to be morally upright, and who died a natural death devoid of accident, suicide, drowning and who also reached a ripe old age. Persons perceived to be wicked, deficient in wisdom and common sense and who died under the conditions of abominable diseases like leprosy; epilepsy, madness, small pox etc. are excluded from the rank and file of ancestors and cannot be admitted into the league of ancestors. They are banned for ever to an aimless and miserable life devoid of any fixed abode in the spirit world. (T.N Quarecoopome: 1987; 138)

In Africa, the perception then is that not every dead person can be exalted to the status of an ancestor. On the other hand, within Christendom especially in the Roman Catholic Church, a deceased person young or old becomes a candidate for Canonization as a Saint after a series of thorough documentation of authentic miracles worked through his/her intercession as proof of heavenly favours and admittance into Heaven and also he/she must have been seen to have lived an heroic holy life here on earth. But still, and though the candidate's earthly life might have been deemed morally upright, this may not be a sufficient criterion for Canonization since the Church Authorities ie. the body responsible for the Canonization of Saints viz. The Sacred Congregation for the Beatification and Canonization of Saints in the Catholic Church based at the Vatican, expects many other signs of approval through a series of authenticated miracles which have been subjected to detailed scrutiny by world experts and in most cases few candidates can pass the test. (J. L. Mckenzie: 283). But despite the variations in the process of judging who can be Saint or ancestor, the meriting point is that the candidate must be in communion with the divine. This is why an OKU-INAM by virtue of self-renunciation and withdrawal from the mundane to a life of commitment towards the welfare of his/her community is deemed to be in continuous communion with the divine in the life after. Ancestors and divinities are experienced mediators between the Supreme Deity and men. The Supreme Deity is the ultimate source of blessings whereas the ancestors and divinities role is to intervene in the affairs of the members of their communities. In Christianity, Saints and Angels are invoked as intercessors and prayers are channeled through Christ the Mediator to God the Father. In Judaism, God was only approached through the intercession of the prophets like Moses, Elijah, etc. since He was never to be seen. This goes to explain the absence of images and symbols of God and the divinities in most world religions. God's hidden nature may be explained as His divine disposition incumbent upon Him to remain unfettered and remain outside the manipulations of men. Thus in Africa the religious and cultural context of the Supreme Deity is not directly experienced except through the intervention of divinities and ancestors; God remains behind the veil while the intermediaries play major roles in the affairs of humankind.

ASCETIC LIFE & INAM DEVOTION IN URUAN - EFIK

Inam devotion has much to share both in principle and practice with the ascetical and mystical life of other world religions. An examination of the ascetic life in general shows that it shares the common goals of INAM devotion. In practice ascetic life entails self-denial and renunciation as also mortification and these have been looked upon as those practices that help in the cultivation and growth in virtue. Religious traditions the world over advocate the practice of the moral virtues based on self-denial and ascetic living. This attitude is common in all institutionalized religions especially Christianity among the monks and the Sufis in Islam. The main aim of such self-denial is to raise the individual from the desires and cravings of sensate life to a state of illumination and virtue in order to be in communion with the divine Transcendence. This differentiates mundane and commercial ascetics from religious ascetics. The mercenary ascetics practice ascetism to accumulate wealth and other worldly benefits and to expand their investments. Their main aim is to acquire economic sufficiency and power not heavenly salvation. But the religious ascetical practices by withdrawal from all mundane aggrandizements in his normal day to day living; his sort of mystical devotion which will enable him commune with the source of his being. The life of the religious ascetic is a complete contrast with normal human living which is orientated towards the religious and spiritual goal. That is why the religious ascetic adopts a special pattern of life in order to achieve this goal. Precisely, the essential element in every ascetical life is the withdrawal from normal human endeavours in pursuit religious aspirations. The life of the religious ascetic is marked by certain event viz. The initiation rites both for his self-consciousness and for public perception and this ritual marks the beginning of his determination to practice certain religious and social patterns of ascetic life in a life of poverty, chastity, self-renunciation and abandonment of comforts and luxuries which are enjoyed by the others in the society. This really requires self-discipline whereby food and sleep are more often than not regulated for him. He has also to maintain a certain amount of life of silence and solitude especially during the time of devotion.

Prayer life is another important aspect in the life of the ascetic and often goes with Contemplation. He contemplates mostly on spiritual matters. Ecstatic prayers also are often spontaneous but he has to practice a lot of Meditation towards the attainment of his religious, physical and mental transformation to really heighten his self-consciousness. By consciously acknowledging and reflecting on such common place activities like breathing, sitting down, and thinking or even resting, the ascetic attains a new perspective of the human phenomenon. Every detail of living is said to evoke an ever deeper awareness which ultimately leads to his spiritual illumination, knowledge and discernment. Another aspect in the life of the ascetic is avoidance all sexual activity even mere arousal. The ascetic though he remains a fully sexual person completely renounces all sexual activities and since genital activities are not given their normal expression there is likely to be a certain amount of built-up of sexual tension which can manifest in sexual attraction. But this offers no problem to the INAM ascetic because each time this happens he is always in the imagery of sexual renunciation and will be able to ward off any such untoward attractions through his self-mastery and self-discipline. This is exactly what happens in the life and practice of the Christian ascetic or monk. It therefore becomes for him an occasion to renew his life of commitment to self-discipline, to an authentic living out of a life of purity and living in chastity. According to Donald Dorr, if this renunciation of sexual activity is to be fully transformed into positive energy, the ascetic must be prepared to follow the way which is familiar to coaches who demand that players and athletes hold back from sexual activities whenever they are embarking on important matches and athletic events since this will enable them build up a reservoir of energy which they will easily harness during these events.(Dorr D. 140) In the same way, the INAM ascetic also gives up his genital activities and redirects his energies to a variety of activities such as commitment to the life of Meditation and prayer both for himself and the wellbeing of others especially those who wish to commune with the divine, the Holy and for a just, harmonious and sustainable society as a result. This INAM ascetical life has a dual advantage, positive and negative. The positive consists in the cultivation of virtues. This implies the cultivation of strength of character in order to attain moral pre-dispositions and to be able to do good and avoid evil. The negative on the other hand pertains to self-denial, purgation and mortification and this involves self-discipline and the effort to avoid wrong-doing and its effects as well as the control of evil inclinations. (Dorr D 141) This also implies the ability to ultimately renounce anything that could be an obstacle to spiritual growth and ascetical living. This practice of mortification and self-renunciation is to continue throughout the Iife-time of the INAM ascetic for him to continue to grow in the life of virtue and the attainment of spiritual illumination otherwise he relapses into his former mundane living. But most religions recommend ascetical life as a life of withdrawal from the passions of mundane nature to a life of blissful enlightenment and communion with the divine. Thus the Hindu religion advocates that:

> By eating little and by standing and sitting in solitude, let him restrain his sense, if they are attracted to sensual objects. By the restraints of his senses, by the destruction of love and hatred, and by the abstention from Injuring the creatures, he becomes fit for immortality. (Law of Manu 59 – 60).

Also in Buddhism it is the same and to awaken this message in one:

> Revile not, harm not, and live by rule restrained of food, take little, sleep and sit alone and keep the mind bent upon higher thought. (Danna Meghiya; 43*).

The Jainism religion also recommends:

> …..stay in the forest, eat but little, speak only measured words, put up with misery, conquer sleep, practice friendship with all. and non-attachment in any excellent manner. (Vattkera Malakara; 981).

In Judaism, the Old Testament figures especially Moses and Elijah who encountered God while fasting and praying. Inspired by such texts, Christian ascetics stress on poverty, austere practices as well as chastity. Jesus recommended voluntary poverty when he answered:

> Why do you ask me about what is good? Only one is good. If you want to enter eternal life keep the commandments. 'I have kept all these commandments, what is still lacking?' Jesus answered, 'If you want to be perfect, go and sell all that You possess and give to the poor and you will have all the Treasure in Heaven. Then come back and follow me.' (Mt 19:16-21; Mk 10:17-22).

Then Christ in His continuation on those who would really choose the following of Him had this also to say, and this concerned the issue of further leaving everything including the love of posterity ie. those who renounce marriage through practice of perfect continence …..some are born incapable of marriage. Others have been made that way by men. But there are others who have given up the possibility of marriage for the sake of the kingdom of Heaven. (cf Mt.19:12).

St. Paul also in his Epistle to his Christian converts at Corinth had this to say concerning the same teaching of Christ on the need to practice the virtue of chastity:

> I would like you to be free from anxieties. He who is not Married is concerned about the things of the Lord and how to please the Lord. While he who is married is taken up with the things of the world and how to please his wife and he is divided in his interests. (1 Cor. 7:32-33*)

It must be further stressed that in Christianity and in many other world religions, celibacy implies chastity which the INAM devotee is expected to embrace. Asceticism and self-discipline are therefore most recommended in most religions in order to curb the concupiscible passions of the flesh and enhance virtuous living through prayer and meditation. The practice of Chastity is also seen as the best way of enriching the spiritual life and attaining divine illumination. Ascetic life can therefore be seen as a rule as the direct method in various religions as a way of communing with the source of al life.

MODERNISM AND CIVILIZATION: INAM PRACTICE v/s MODERNITY

In practice, INAM devotion is not native to URUAN/EFIK. It is a borrowing from the IBIBIO and ANNANG and the practice is modeled after the customs of particular persons in the society. The ancestor had provided models for ongoing virtuous living of the citizens and INAM devotion was seen as the model of righteous living. But now the so-called modernity, civilization and progress have overtaken these practices. Modernity has evolved a new way of life whereby truth, sincerity, justice and honour have disappeared. In modernity, truth and honesty seem to be found only in the mind and this concerns how much a person can argue out and put forth his case. It need not concern facts and reality. Truth is now decided by what a person can argue out whether it corresponds to reality or not, as they say 'life is more than logic' hence one can commit an offense which can adversely affect even the life of the community but may be dismissed on grounds of lack of merit in a modern court of law. Similarly, the police whose main function is to detect and prevent the committing of crimes and protect the citizenry nowadays not only overlooks crimes but are fully involved in the committing of crimes and in particular cases may be accomplices in the crimes. They kill and claim 'accidental discharge' from the guns they are carrying! All these could never happen in URUAN/EFIK traditional society since criminals were always conscious of the repercussions of traditional crime detecting agencies like the INAM institution where the INAM devotee was the sole chief judge. Nowadays armed bandits can threaten, harass and even kill innocent persons and sack their homes and go away with their loot whereas they could never dare to penetrate into people's homes and villages where the traditional crimes prevention is still in vogue and functioning optimally. When considered in terms of modern trends and vitality, one of the outstanding most merits of this institution is its importance in all crucial matters concerning the community. Since the OKU INAM has been elevated to a status quite above all mortals, he is the one accorded the honour and duty of to open all proceedings in the community with prayers, invocations and the pouring of libations.

In African epistemology, where there is a relationship of co-existence between man and the world, where the world concerns everything visible and invisible; ie. the metaphysical realities including the divinities, life is impossible without the interplay of these realities. Even should the elders arrive at a certain conclusion or make a certain decision on any matter, the OKU INAM can immediately express his disproval and will not hesitate to call for the re-consideration of the verdict or issue in point. Such is the authority accorded him in society. It is his duty to administer oaths in any dispute that demands oath taking. In settling disputes of a significant nature he assumes a prominent role and his views are paramount and highly respected. Earlier we had stated that one of the most prominent aspects of INAM cult is the cultivation of virtue which is simply the moral disposition to do good and avoid evil at all times and places. But the paradox of OKU INAM is that he is separated from all yet he is in harmony with all. It involves a flight from the world yet he has responsibility for all just as Jesus told His disciples 'you are not of the world but in the world,' thus implying that the INAM has responsibility for all and the cult is to harness the transformation of the society and for harmonious living. This is a challenge to those whose advocacy is Inculturation unlimited. But there is a point here when we consider that Christ's advocacy was also equally revolutionary. He explicitly declared that He came 'not to abolish the Law and the prophets but to fulfill them (Mt 5:17). The whole idea of this project is for the transformation of URUAN/EFIK and indeed the larger society. There is the need to transform our mindsets and modernist ideas into our age-old and meaningful customs, norms and values, the abandoning in the name of modernity and globalizations of our treasured institutions, customs and values of antiquity notwithstanding. The revisiting of our traditional institutions, customs and values in these pages is not exactly an advocacy for a return to the old, primitive and crude ways of arriving at a certain utopia, but a clarion call to URUAN elites and rulers not to create an unnecessary gap in our cultural values and systems, for though we may indeed endeavour to think and act globally like the rest of mankind, but we should still aim at living and acting our culture which aims at living within the ambit of a good, moral and virtuous direction and avoid disorder and crime since URUAN/EFIK of yesteryears was orderly, buoyant and crime free.

8. URUAN/EFIK TRADITIONAL INSTITUTION HEALING METHODS

There is always that great anxiety and suspense as well as the desire to maintain good health in URUAN/EFIK, but experience has shown that these wishes and anxieties rarely come true in the history of mankind because there is often a setback in man's good health either in the physical, spiritual or psychological levels. However, when there is this threat to health people are never passive and resigned to it. There is always a positive response and action to seek for its restoration and this has always been so even down to the primitive eras. But the way and manner by which URUAN/EFIK people do this has more often than not been influenced by traditional concepts about the causes of sickness. Restorative health is sought through mystical and supernatural means because remedial advocacy is thought to come from the deities, divinities and ancestors rather than going to seek for immediate remedy through resort to and the application of herbal medicine with the use of barks of trees, roots juices from certain trees or seed oils that potently have medicinal values. Sometimes water from running streams can equally serve medicinal purposes. Powder and oils obtained from white ants are employed too in healing, for example in the cure of the dreaded shingles skin disease-Nkwa iy?, since customarily this disease is believed to kill immediately once it has encircled the victim's parts of the body. But often these healing or curative measures are not automatic approaches especially if the sickness is beyond the understanding of the patient's relations. In such a situation what comes first to mind is an inquiry through Idi? divination) so as to ascertain the sources and the circumstances surrounding the sickness, and perhaps the type of healing measures the patient will require.

PROCEDURES WITH TRADITIONAL PHYSICAL HEALING METHODS
DIVINATION AND TRADITIONAL MEDICINE IN URUAN/EFIK

Usually there are three elements necessary for the divination to take place. Often some parts of the patient's body like nails, hair, or a piece of his clothings are required for the divination. Sometimes an egg is added to these and a consultation fee. Physical healing in traditional URUAN/EFIK society refers to the restoration of health through the application of certain substances or materials that are believed to have medicinal values. These may be herbs, roots, juice, oil, insects, or powder as observed already. Parrinder, referring to this situation observes that, no doubt West African doctors ie. the so-called "native doctors or herbalists or traditional medicine practitioners", have a wide knowledge of the properties of a multiplicity of roots, barks, leaves, and herbs. They are called 'observers of plants' in Font and 'workers in roots' in Furl. Today these "native doctors "or herbalist doctors" quite unlike those former individualistic practitioners of yore now form unions and advertise their clinics. There is nothing mystical about it and nothing is wrapped up in mystery any more. Even they now openly accept apprentices who routinely attend their clinics to study the art of traditional medicine whereas as formerly, these practitioners often died with all their knowledge and expertise with nobody to trace even the sources, types of plants or concoctions they were employing in the trade. It became so frustrating and disheartening whenever a traditional practitioner was gathered to the ancestors and their Maker in those days. Thank God all that is history with the new enlightenment, direction and need for co-operation towards a holistic health-care delivery for now.

The training in those dark days usually took many years because nothing was written down, the neophytes had to learn by word of mouth as there were neither books, nor lecture notes nor retrieval systems to store the learning materials since most of these ancient practitioners were stark illiterates. It also it took a long time to master the art, and to be successful one needed some years of sustained experience. However, some native doctors are still conservative. They refuse still to transmit their knowledge of the traditional medicine to other people or even to members of their families under the pretext that they were seriously warned in a dream or by those from whom they had previously acquired the trade mark never to communicate it to anyone even their children. Any violation of this, they fear, might result in either severe sickness or sudden death. Nevertheless, it is generally claimed that a professional native doctor - Abia ib?k, generally receives his call to this profession through dreams or trances from either the ancestors or the divinities. Idowu, writing along similar lines states:

Among the Yoruba, the tutelary divinity of medicine is Osanyin, believed to be the younger brother of Orunmila, the oracle divinity, the divine consultant with regard to everything related to human destiny from the tutelary divinity the doctor receives his call to be a doctor, and therefore practices his sciences always with reference to the divine healer.

The native doctor does not depend only on his ability to dispense his medicine but also on the co-operation of the divinities and the ancestors. In URUAN-EFIK, the profession is not restricted to men alone, very many women; in fact, the majority in some Clans are women who also practice it. For one to be a recognized professional Abia ib?k one must be of good and reputable character, honest, trustworthy, morally upright, kind, sympathetic, sociable, amicable and willing, ever ready to preserve and prolong life by all means within one's capabilities and endowments, and not just to be too much money oriented. It is generally believed that those who charge their patients exorbitantly are not good medicine-men and women but exploiters and swindlers, they are often referred to as idi?k Abia ib?k ie. bad medicine practitioners. In URUAN, some of these healers play double roles both as healers-Mbia ib?k and as Oku-priests in which case they play the role of diviners are consultants. They diagnose and diseases and some can even cure and therefore are healers. However, traditionally the Abia ib?k, or oku idi? or simply the Abia idi? (diviner) has a different set of roles to play in traditional healing. We will now have a look at some specificity of these physical healers in traditional URUAN/EFIK society.

1.Bone Setter or Orthopedic Doctor (Abia ? kp?): This group of healers correspond to the orthopedic doctors the equivalent in Western medicine. They treat mainly cases of fractured and dislocated bones and general muscular pains. There are two classes of such healers: those whose gift is hereditary and those who acquired it through training. We can distinguish between these two classes through oral history. The URUAN/EFIK in general are good in this because of their limitation to literary documentation. They are forced by the situation to keep their history orally going and the same thing could be said of some of the medicine men and native doctors who can neither write nor read, yet they have the names of all their medicinal herbs and roots on their fingertips. Hereditary bone healing is really a family affair and is transmitted to its members through generations. The sign of the next person in the family to assume this role is usually recognized in that person's youth this interest in bone healing or through revelation to the one functioning to transmit the art to a particular person in the family. This prospective candidate of bone healing then acts as assistant to the elder ones and assumes full responsibility in his absence or death. It is commonly believed among the Annang that those who learn this trade ie. persons whom this gift is not given to their family) do not function effectively as those who have it from a natural transmission. Thus, patients or their relatives always prefer the latter. But where it is difficult to find one, the alternative is to accept treatment from a non-hereditary bone healer. In this case there is often skepticism as to whether the patient will receive good treatment or not. The people are equally skeptical about the capability of orthopedic hospitals to treat dislocations and fractures. There is always the anxiety and fear of the patient being deformed if treated in the hospital. Hence if one happens to have any dislocation or fracture, a good number of people in the community would say: "Ud? ? enye emi idighe kp? uf?k-ib?k:" thus implying that the hospital will not be able to treat such kind of malady because it is often not a hospital case.

Generally, in URUAN/EFIK, a fracture or dislocation is commonly treated by massaging in an effort to reset the bones in their proper places, besides the massage, hot baths with medications and lotions are applied to the affected area and bandaged with locally made raffia -like bandage. Some roots and herbs are also given to the patient for about three times daily; the meals are likewise prepared with some roots and herbs for the patient. If the person had already been treated by an unskilled bone healer in the hospital or elsewhere thus making him/her deformed, the skilled bone healer simply dislocates the bones again and affected part and starts the treatment anew. This is a very painful experience but often the result is encouraging and good. S. N. Ezeanya in a paper "Healing in Traditional African Society" attests to such a success. I can narrate one of such as an eyewitness; about 1952 a classmate of mine in the secondary school sustained a fracture of the ankle in the football field. He was immediately hurried to the general hospital. After one month of treatment he was discharged with the ankle bent. His people were dissatisfied and decided they would not see him carry a bow-leg. They then took the student to a bone-setter who broke the bone again and reset it. After a few weeks, the young-man returned to school with his normal leg, so well treated that it was not possible to know which of his legs was fractured.

2. Mid-Wifery (Abia Uman): The functions of midwives in Africa are multiple. Apart from the role of assisting expectant mothers at child delivery, they also operate some sort of clinics in their homes. In the clinics they attend to the pregnant women during the course of their pregnancy. The women go there once or twice a week. During these visits the position of the baby in the womb is checked and recommendations of special nutrition and medication made for the expectant mothers. The Abia Uman prescribes drugs for women who suffer from abnormal, painful and irregular menstruation. They also treat infertility in women and sub-normal ones too. In the event of bleeding outside or during child delivery, they arrest the situation by giving the patient juice prepared from herbs. In cases of delayed labour the midwives know what kind of herbal drugs to administer to check them. The danger here is that most of them do not seem to realize that the potency and quantity of these drugs can be a source of danger to the life of the unborn baby and the mother as well. In fact, they often feel that the more the quality and potency of the herbs, the better the result that can be achieved. If a baby or sometimes the mother die along with it as result of the wrong dispensation of the herbs, they always have a handy excuse to give, namely that the woman had committed adultery ie. Ekpo nka owo had killed her. The same ekpo nka owo is often attributed to prolonged labour. If a prolonged labour occurs during child's delivery, the woman will be forced to confess that she had an illicit sexual affair with another man even if she is innocent. The truth of such confession is difficult to judge because the woman is under constraint to say what she might or might not have done. Similarly, in an attempt to escape from the pains, she can do or say anything in the state of confusion to get relieved. Then like a drowning man, she can grasp anything in search of survival. The end result of the confusion would be to offer an unwarranted sacrifice of atonement.

3. Psychological and Spiritual Healing: Psychological and spiritual healings are inseparable. The former is by calming the emotional state of the sick while the latter is by the reactivation of the body or mind through an external spiritual power. An average villager believes that any type of herb can relieve his/her sickness. The only problem is getting the real native doctor who knows the correct therapy.

Psychological disturbances are usually ascribed to evil spirits and these are treated through fasting by the patients and incantations by the para-psychomedrics. Anyone who commits an abominable act detestable to the divinities, eg. incest, murder, adultery, etc. is generally expected to fall sick. To procure a cure, the patient needs the ministry of the Oku idi? priest who offers sacrifices of propitiation and reconciliation to the divinities to effect his cure. Such situations of psychological and spiritual healings are found everywhere.

4. HEALING METHODS AND TABOOS: ADIA ABASI

It is a taboo among the people to purposely harm a grandchild or in-law, or to take part in an evil plan or discussion concerning a grandchild or an in-law. Part of this taboo violates the will of the gods of the grandchild ie. Abasi eyeyen- god of grandchild and Abasi ukot - god of the in-law, as also Ikpa is? - the earth deity. Anybody who commits any of these detestable infractions is considered sick even though there may not be any physical sign of sickness in him. The community from the moment he is discovered to have violated the taboo of the land, looks on him closely and interprets every action of his. The person would be advised often to do the traditional reconciliation rite to avoid affliction by the gods. Besides this, some of his friends may avoid his company and if it had been a serious violation, the village gives an injunction that no one should enter his compound and if dies before this reconciliation is done, he will not receive a burial rite from the community. Thus to be integrated fully into the society once more one is to undergo a ritual healing. If anything happens to him (e.g. sickness, accident, death of his livestock) before this is done, the conclusion will be that it is the gods who have risen against him. The materials for this healing are a white Billy-goat, a bottle of illicit gin and nsei (pounded wood). These are provided by the defaulter. The officiating minister is the traditional village priest. The ceremony takes place in the village hall, which is normally located beside ISO IKPA ISONG – that is the shrine of the earth deity.

The procedure is as follows: first of all, the priest invokes the gods with the following words: Andidue kp? ekpeto ekpe Abasi ub?k, koro isidihe itum? itum?ke Abasi enye eketum? is? , this literally means that reconciliation originated from God, and no one ever attempted reconciling with human beings without first reconciling with God. He prays for the forgiveness of the offender; ask for blessing on him and all his undertakings. At the end of this he asks the patient to say that he is sorry for what he did and ask the pardon of the offender, for he himself has forgiven him etc. with this the priest pours libation calling on the gods to be appeased. He does the same to the ancestors. Finally, he slaughters the Billy-goat. The two parties drink from the same cup as a sign of peace and forgiveness. The meat of the sacrificial victim is cooked and eaten by all present.

5. Healing of Sickness from Water Spirits (Ndem Mm? or Ekpo Mm?): This is a type of sickness claimed to be caused by water mermaids a.k.a Mammy -Water. Cases of this sickness are common to people of the riverine areas. It has as its victims, beautiful and fair complexioned girls and boys. But girls are its greatest victims. The victim is believed to be either a son or daughter of this goddess of the sea or spiritually married to it. This belief often causes fear and anxiety among women if they give birth to very beautiful and fair complexioned babies even though parents may have the pigment. The attack of Ndem mm? occurs at adolescence to teenagers or in adulthood. It manifests itself in the form of psychosis. Thus, the person loses normal use of the senses, she rubs herself in white clay (ndom) or powder, sings songs which are known through history to be connected with Ndem mm? , combs her hair more often than usual and looks at herself much more often in the mirror. She detests any other colour than white. The victim may abstain from food for some days. If these symptoms last long an oracle is usually consulted and it is supposed to reveal that the attack is from the water goddess. The healing process is by setting up a white painted shrine in the victim's compound and sacrificing to the goddess. In the shrine is placed a little table covered with a piece of white cloth, and on it a mirror is also placed together with a white cup, plate and basin. The basin contains water, probably the symbol of river/sea, the abode of the goddess.

The officiating priest or priestess must be one who is also spirituality married to this Ndem mm? . It is not enough to set up the shrine; the neophyte must worship before it at certain hours of the day eg. early in the morning, at midday and or before going to bed. Today, some of the shrines have been turned into prayer houses or healing homes. The healing of Ndem mm? attack is an expensive one. Different kinds of foodstuffs, fruits, eggs, white cocks, white sheep, white basin and some money are offered to the goddess at the river side. Invocations are made to the goddess by way of prayer to accept the offerings and restore health to the victim. Returning to the victim's home there is another sacrifice. Interestingly enough, when all these rituals are performed, the victim claims to be relieved of the malady. There is no medication at all apart from the sacrificial aspects. We can say that this victim is psychologically healed. Every client believes that once this is done, he/she will be all right and get back to normal. The fear is now cast out; all is said to be well then. URUAN/EFIK in their conception of health and healing in the traditional society accepts that health is not just restricted to the proper functioning of the human body only but includes a healthy relationship between the individual and his God, gods, ancestors, community and the environment. It is also obvious that one's power to live integrally as a Christian, pagan or traditionalist is greatly influenced by his or her state of health. This in the long run takes a societal dimension by influencing personal and socio-cultural developments. Because of this broader concept of health, healing in the society is often approached by restoring any wounded spiritual and community life of the man/woman in question together with the physical environment. In the society, the "god" who cannot heal must be abandoned since it is not the will of God –Abasi that anyone who respects traditions and keeps to societal norms should be sick. The culture and traditions of URUAN/EFIK therefore, have no room for resignation of self to the state of illness and maladies. That is why everybody who does not feel well goes out to seek the restoration of his/her health by every means available. It is therefore necessary .in the society to seek genuine spiritual and communitarian relationship as necessary indices for good health.

6. MISCELLANEOUS HEALING METHODS IN URUAN/EFIK A-Z

(a)UTO-ENYIN-FEVER: There are so many practices employed in handling the ubiquitous malady that is no respecter of persons – from first day olds to elderly persons above eighty, there has always been complaints about ud? ? uto-enyin – fever, the most serious of which can lead to death being uto-enyin ekpo, perhaps because it often eventually leads to the underworld of ekpo-the kingdom of the dead. Scientists say the sickness comes from the attack of female mosquitoes which abound everywhere in the Africa especially in the tropics like URUAN/EFIK country. Healing is often through Ukebe – enema by using certain herbs, barks and roots especially neem tree, lemon grass, bitter leaf etc. These native medicines act as anti-biotics. Against Jaundice/Headache: Drink minerals containing calcium and iron for relief and eventual recovery. Also take a glass of fresh tomato juice mixed with a pinch of salt and pepper early in the morning. Either sniff or smoke Carom seeds for treatment of headache and stress. To dispel fatigue and general tiredness take a glass of grapefruit and lemon juice.

(b)Tooth-ache/tooth decay & mouth diseases: has various types of discomforts – shaking, pains around the gum, growing of wisdom teeth, milk teeth, biting hot pains accompanied by headache, etc. The rinsing of mouth several times a day with warm water mixed with salt OR in the case of babies rubbing around the area with Nsukakara leaves, sliced bark of coconut palms using sponge can assuage and even completely relieve the problems. It is also beneficial in case of delay in the coming out of the placenta especially of goats. Washing and gargling with slashed and boiled coconut bark or Obosi / (itum?). Equally also lemon juice can be mixed with equal amount of salt. With the help of a finger or brush the paste is rubbed over the teeth. This also helps to whiten the teeth. A more effective therapy is brushing or gargling with Ndodop juice OR using the paste mixture of baking soda and hydrogen peroxide to brush the teeth at least twice daily. Another most effective and sure relief for tooth-ache is placing a clove of garlic with little rock salt on the affected tooth/teeth OR using ground garlic mixed salt on the teeth. Relief comes after the hot pain. Against Gingivitis, either chew slowly or rub some clove oil (Eduek eyop) on the gums. A massage of lemon juice on gums prevents bleeding and other gum issues, also bad breath. To cure Pyorrhea use lime juice as it strengthens the gums and teeth. It is also beneficial to sprinkle dry Indian Lalic (Neem) leaves powder on tooth paste when brushing the teeth.

(c)Earache: For sure relief of earache, put two drops of ground basil leaves juice inside the ear.

(c)High Blood Pressure: For serious chronic BP especially with numbness and discomforts/ shaking, drink concentrated squeezed and filtered Utasi and or vinegar leaves. Also eat celery leaves to lower blood pressure. NB. In the cases of stress or headache smoking or sniffing perm peppermint Carom seeds are also beneficial, also dissolving jaggery palm/sugar in the mouth to cure acidity.

(d)Asthma/Cough: Drink at least thrice daily a mixture of 2 parts of carrot juice and 1 part of spinach. Another relief is applying lobelia extract. For cough drink ginger juice, or chew salted Efiari (bitter kola) or Efiari with alligator pepper, also shea-butter (Prednisol; Xabten; Aminopheline; Vitamin C).

(e)Nausea/Bronchitis: For healing of Nausea put a few drops of peppermint oil on a tissue/ handkerchief and sniff several times till it abates; and for bronchitis mix one teaspoon of ginger juice with honey OR raw onion juice and take thrice daily.

(f) Atatuak ud? ?/Child's hysteria, Slowness, frightfulness and babies not being able to walk when due: Two tiny leaves growing all over the place and most known by elderly women are squeezed into the baby's eyes OR giving the baby/child lettuce juice mixed with a teaspoon of Indian gooseberry juice (warm or cold) every morning.

(g) Pneumonia: To cure pneumonia add a bottle of water to a tea spoon of linseed 15 grams of sesame seeds, a pinch of salt and a desert spoon of honey.
(h) Dry cough/sore throat, burning and sore mouth or lips: Drink two teaspoons of squeeze Mkpri-sokoro lime OR squeeze 2 teaspoons of sokoro ntan-ntan - lemon mixed with two teaspoons of honey in a glass of boiled water, allowing it to cool a bit before drinking OR suck peppercorn to relieve the throat irritation caused by dry cough. Or just gargle lemon solution. Chewing one clove every morning after removing the flower is the best throat protection.

(i) Snake-bites: Tie a strong bandage or smooth rope around ndip-ukot (lower part of the thigh) to arrest the snake poison going up to the heart. Cut open with blade the point of bite and squeeze out the blood that flows out with the poison using iko-mba . Then wash the wound and rub grains of potassium permanganate or leaves. Drink brandy or kai-kai to warm up.

(j) Counteracting Poison: Wash the victim's mouth thoroughly and insert fingers into the throat to cause vomiting. Then give sufficient pure palm oil to patient to drink. Or Give water mixed with fresh eggs. Then give castor oil or warm water to purge away the poison. Then give hot coffee and make the victim walk about. Do not allow him/her to lie down or sleep.

(k) Colds/Influenza in children: rub with ndodop/awak-mm? –Aloe Vera. Give aran –Umon leaves. Eat raw radish with meals also for prevention.

(l) Minor Burns/Mfat or Skin Diseases/infections/Burns: Do first Aid by immersing the area in cool or running water for 10-15 minutes – never use ice, then place fresh potato peels on the affected area to fasten healing. For Mfat apply warm baths of boiled Neem leaves on the area. Also consume Soya products like soya beans, sorghum etc. to protect skin from harmful ultra violet rays. NB. Treat Baldness by applying ground licorice in milk on the bald patches.
(m)Malignant acute pains: ear-ache, sore throat, cough, eye troubles, tooth-ache, etc. Put drops of ndodop - Aloe Vera which is like an herbal cure-all for multifarious and malignant complaints into the ears, eyes, teeth, and etc. several times until the pain subsides.

(n) Prostrate: There are many native ways of shrinking and thereby treating this serious malady. Eating at least 80-100 grams of pumpkin leaves every day for a period of two months can dissolve the prostrate. For relief of sore throat, boil henna leaves in water and gargle.

(o) Tuberculosis/Skin Diseases: Drink a glass of pineapple juice daily till it subsides.

(p) Body odour: To prevent body odour, put a few Lilac a.k.a Neem leaves in bathing water. It is best to use warm foam bath water which acts as an effective deodorant or anti-perspirant.

(q) Back-ache/Shoulder pains, arthritis, Joints etc: Take a glass of lemon juice mixed with common salt for relief. Better in hot/warm mixture thrice daily. Consume glucose or honey in warm water in the mornings. Also massage with Indian Lalic (Neem) oil. Consume 1 cup of fresh pine apple juice every day to minimize swellings in arthritis.
Also make full use of body movement exercises to shake of the pain.

® Ubiak ?kp?: Loss of calcium & Bone weakness: Drink warm beetroot to strengthen bones by its preventing loss and drainage of calcium in urine. Also use Cauliflower to maintain cholesterol levels and keep bones healthy.

(s) Constipation/Gastritis: Eat guava with seeds as it contains fiber and helps in bowel movement. Also add 1 teaspoon of tripla powder to 1 cup of water to steep for ten minutes and drink after dinner. Drink coconut water against gastritis, burning urination and to also provide vitamins and minerals.

(t) Leucorrhoea: Apply one tea spoon paste of decorticated mango kernel inside the vagina for cure.

(u) Migraine: Treat with ripe grapes juice by consuming it in small doses several times a day.

(v) Cancer/Diabetes: For prevention and fighting against Cancer/Diabetes etc. strawberries, Karela juice is effective traditional medicine, also against aging.

(w) Abrasions/Burns/Inflammatory pains/Wounds: To treat abrasions prepare and use home-made ointment using tea tree with calendula and coffey. Eat bananas, potatoes and tomatoes against inflammatory pains. For sun-burn especially, cool the skin with yoghurt or calamine lotion. For fresh wounds apply hot drink eg. Gin.

(x) Flu Virus: Have about two servings of shellfish per week to clear flu virus.

(y) General Infections/Digestion: Eat barley also foods, fruits and vegetables with high multi-vitamin contents of Vitamin A, B6, B12, C and D like grapes, rice, maize, coconut, etc. To improve digestion, reduce water and acids to cool the intestine. Eat pro-biotic yoghurt which contains healthy bacteria, also Gooseberry.

(z) Diabetes/Cataracts: Take and increase intake of fenugreek or Cactus juice as it reduces and stabilizes blood glucose ad Insulin levels. Also consume flax seeds to reduce sugar. Almonds are good for age related eye diseases and cataracts. (Courtesy of Patricia & Philomena – Author's sisters).

8. URUAN TRADITIONAL INSTITUTION OF MOURNING & FUNERALS

PREAMBLE: It is presumed that no matter how primitive a society is, there should be a culture of mourning and funeral for the dead and this should be surrounded by ritual ceremonials. URUAN/EFIK cannot be the exception, though in our case it is deemed elaborate and always colourful. The reason is not far to seek because for the people the dead are simply not extinguished or annihilated. Their popular cultural proverb goes like this: "Ekpo, ie. the dead "akpa enyin ikpaha ut? " implying that only the eyes of the dead may have died but the hears don't. In other words, the dead is capable of hearing and he does, even though he does not seem to see again. For this reason, the dead is accorded the richest and most colourful "send of" possible to the world of ancestors in a ritual funeral. But the understanding is always that the dead has reached a reasonable ripe age and must have died under traditionally accepted circumstances to wit, normal sickness and old age which often precede death in the first place. For example, a suicide or an accident victim, whether through drowning, accident by car, or bicycle, plane crash or through presumed witchcraft, poison, snake bite, fire, etc. are not regarded as dying a normal death. By that very fact the victim may not be accorded a rich traditional burial. In fact, such a victim is buried if possible at the site of the accident or incident and without any rites at all, because the understanding is "Ekpo akpa ke ibak, ebuk ke ibak" implying that since the victim died in violence, he/she also must be buried in violence as such a death is deemed a violent death. Funeral rites therefore can rightly be said to belong to the most ancient ritual forms of mankind and they occur in every culture worldwide since they are meant to offer consolation to the deceased families as well as hope of re-union in the next world where they can never part again. For the dead themselves, the rituals are meant to avert revenge from ancestors or evil forces of the underworld as also dread in the world of the living. Authors like Van Gennep, John Luwata, and William Cieslak etc. in their views see funerals as "Rites de Passage" because they constitute those ceremonials and rituals which offer as it were, a passage and doorway for the dead to enter into the abode of ancestors for traditionalists and for Christians, the Kingdom of Heaven, which by implication is a new stage of life below. It is the luminal symbol and doorway into the great beyond (Cf. Van Gennep, Cieslak William, 27). Death separates the dead from the community and the society and death is not a respecter of persons save that it is better to die among relatives and descendants because they will have the onerous task of according him/her a befitting funeral. But this doesn't even end there, for the deceased the expectation is that generations of his survivors will continue to preserve his/her name. This is because as observed above, death is not the end of life but a passage leading to another and this eminently plays out in the funeral rites which are designated to prepare the dead for the journey to the next world.

THE TRADITION & RITUALS OF MOURNING THE DEAD

In recent times many people are beginning to point to the degeneration of URUAN/EFIK society and elsewhere regarding the lack of pity, sympathy or even heart-heartedness into a mindless people without paying a hoot to the sacredness of life, of death and the shedding of blood. This is very true, this is very terrible, but there is something much more terrible and pathetic, in the apparent lack of sentiments and apathy in the situation of death, accident or serious injuries and pain. I can recall those days when the news of the death of a kinsman or woman would paralyze the entire kindred or community. People would hardly move out; kinsmen, friends and neighbours would not go to the market or farm for days. If a coffin was being carried along the road, people would run inside and many would start weeping and wailing even for someone they never knew before, simply because they felt in their hearts the deep sense of loss and sorrow and because a life was going into the great beyond. Not anymore in many places in URUAN ditto EFIK. People hardly mourn any more for the dead. The so-called mourning houses set up a few days before the actual commission of the corpse to mother earth though, in some cases it may be just for week are merely to toe the line of fashion and custom of modernity and style. Most people even dress to kill at funerals and as for the entertainments that are going to follow the funeral obsequies that must be accorded a mouth watering celebration. Some have no shame or sense of decency and sympathy at all. They ask for rice, chicken, turkey, drinks, take-away souvenirs, etc. The funny thing is that while a family may be mourning, another family close by will be conveniently celebrating theirs, perhaps a birthday or wedding party, not paying a hoot about what is happening to the neighbour nearby. Nobody truly cares anymore. Nowadays obituaries are put up to declare someone's death as a 'celebration of death/life', and even the death of a kinsman/woman may be viewed as a blessing to others who want to take his/her place or the inheritance most urgently with immediate effect. This is an ugly trend and there is need to ponder about it and think of a way of reversing it. That is why this author has chosen to toe the path of sanity by referring all URUAN/EFIK citizens, men and women, young and old, even aliens living therein to get back to that age-old show of sentiments of sympathy, humaneness and feeling for one another especially at moments of great loss and distress like the death of a member. We may not necessarily have to go back to organizing expert mourning dirges and organizations as formerly, but at least to some extent we should restore some elements of commiseration, sympathy and goodwill.

Though modern culture attempts to telescope what used to take a reasonable amount of time before the actual burial of the dead and other aspects of traditional obsequies like morning and ritual ceremonies depending on the personalities who have died, eg. in the practice of combining in one ceremonial rite, mourning, funerals and memorial services/rites – second burials as they used to be called, there are still certain categories of the dead whose funerals may not be so highjackked. What has given the excuse for this seems to be economic rather than anything else. The same also applies to Matrimonial rites as observed elsewhere. Sometimes it looks rather ridiculous and unreasonable combining the period of setting up the mourning house, what should be the actual mourning, funeral ritual as also the so-called memorials at a go. These are distinct and they are supposed to be carried out in stages. The only saving grace is that people are not buried within a day or two nowadays as was the custom, hence a number of things can be presumed. First of all, the practice is very illogical and counter-cultural because it portrays that the deceased is sent away in a hurry with the main aim of saving costs. Also to jumble the celebration of the memorial with the actual funeral as there is hardly any reference to the deceased is disrespectful. It is sacrilege to the dead to say the least. In the case of Christian, it robs the dead of the Memorial Mass/Service which has been given the pride of place in the Liturgy. It does not look tidy but is an exhibition of greed and disrespect because it contradicts Christian theology and diminishes the beauty of Christian as also traditional Funeral Ceremonies and portrays vividly the package of financial convenience at the expense of Christian Faith vis-a-vis traditional customs and values and borders on a culture of selfishness towards and disrespect for the dead as it cuts the bond that should exist between the living and the dead.

In fact, the whole thing seems to militate against the very purpose of funerals to wit: (i) To reinforce the awareness and the sense of loss which sanctions as it were, the remembrance process thus enabling the bereaved to express their feelings, provide support as also guide the re-organization of life and affirm its meaning. (ii) To involve participants in the reality of pain and loss especially in the case of the departed on whom so much was dependent on them. The mourners then have the opportunity to be sufficiently motivated in the drama of the funeral Rites envisaged. It is a cognitive awareness of sorts, and then the emotional awareness can flow naturally in the penetration of loss to act out the visual contact and separation. (iii) The committal of the body to mother earth depicts the finality of death in terms of the final conclusion of the relationships of life and the funeral Rites are to offer additional reinforcement of consensual validation as people are now made to vividly respond to the sense of loss. (iv) The funeral Rites reinforce the memory faculty thus giving it the ritualized permission to mourn. People will always mourn at one point or the other during the course of the Obsequies and this is to be expected. This permissive attitude is important as it opens the way to profound feelings about death and the loss of a dear one. (v) The openness of funeral Rites also allows for the feelings of grief and loss to surface in the ambivalence that can be dealt with during and after the actual mourning process. (vi Finally we can also add although obvious, that funeral Rites are occasions of providing and channeling the support of others especially of family members, acquaintances, friends, associates and neighbours and this helps to mitigate the intensity of loss. The reaffirmation of kinship ties and other relationships come to the fore as it epitomizes the concern of the larger community in the burial effort. Friends other sympathizers feel a sense of duty to contribute towards the funeral expenses and whole heartedly and liberally exhibit their love and concern. In URUAN/EFIK traditional society other aspects of collaborative effort also come into play. Levies, dues and impositions play a large part here and as of custom, they contribute Nilly Willy whether as members of the cognatic or agnatic kin. Those of affinity in the in-law category, especially if they were not forth coming are coerced in a way and they must comply.

RITUAL MOURNING, BURIALS/MEMORIALS IN URUAN/EFIK

This aspect of Obsequies still holds sway in places at least for the bereaved families. Soon after the families must have come together and agreed on the venue and time of funeral, a special room is elaborately prepared with white buntings, and white cloths and blinds adorning the entire room, doors and windows for the opening ceremonies of the morning Ritual. In the case of Christians, the priest or pastor is expected to offer the ritual prayers, bless the house declare the mourning house opened without any other ado. But in the case of personalities like traditional, Royal and titled personages both male and female elaborate customary Rites are performed by special functionaries deputed for such task. What exactly happens varies according to the traditions of the tribes and clans, but basically incantations and the pouring of libations and the "aspersion or spreading/scattering of nsei" form the potential parts of the ceremonials. The women folk in their different mourning uniforms in the Organization of Ndit? Iban are expected to turn up at specific intervals in the day for the Ritual mourning and this takes place in the form of psalmodies because the actual mourning embodies the singing of eulogies and litanies ie. ASE in honour of the departed. The tone of wailing and the music of the lyrics also amplify the occasion and event. Music is symbolic because it identifies the occasion and interprets the language of the mood and emotions of mourners. In modern times motets, choruses and psalmodies are primed to initiate the form of dance that are suitable at such great events as funerals. The mourning period of course is dependent on the duration as determined by Elders and purse of the family or Association/s charged with the organization of the mourning Ritual. It is customary to organize a Vigil Mass/Service for Christians or simply a Wake-Keeping as it is called on the night preceding the funeral. From thence forward Church bells are tolled until the actual burial and communities, churches, association and other local groups and organizations are invited from far and near for the Vigil and this also can gulp a great deal of expenses and preparations. The tolling of bells apart from signallying for people to get prepared is beautifully aimed at accentuating the importance of the funeral event and happening in the community. Vigils and Wakes symbolize the last companionship with the deceased before burial as a demonstration of love and affection for the departed.

On the last day which is also the day of burial, all now appear in white except the others who in their various affiliations and groups may appear in their preferred uniforms for the final Obsequies. Christian Rites are already set forth in the Liturgy of Funerals but the Rites performed on the occasion of the categories mentioned above can be very elaborate and colourful with the Cult Organizations like Ekpe, Ekpo Ny?h?, Ek?mbi, and Abre in attendance. In most communities nowadays and since the majority of the people are Christians, Memorial Services as they are called often take place on the occurring Sunday, but some families depending on their purse make it an Octave ie. a week-long celebration. This means that should the Memorials not take place on the Sunday following the burial, it is further deferred to the following Sunday making it another full week and some days depending on the week-day of the funeral. The implication is to give time for members of the family, friends, associates, etc. who for one reason or the other especially distance or those who live far away or abroad but could not be present on the day of burial, to also participate somehow and also show their support and solidarity towards the expenses of the funeral. The actual preparations for burial are the same. Should the corpse be kept at home, early on the day of burial it is thoroughly washed dressed up in expensive attire preferably in the attire the deceased had indicated for his burial. Depending on the status of the deceased, the funeral hearse is accompanied in solemn and joyful procession to the Church or grave yard if the burial is not taking place in the home with prayers, singing and dancing as intimate ways of expression of farewell. The Funeral procession is meant to symbolize that death is actually a journey towards the end which is life after life. The quasi jubilation is a sure mark of joy and confidence that the dead is after all embarking on a journey with the firm hope of re-union someday. This must have been the reason why the Egyptians made sure the corpse was intact by embalming it. This has now come into vogue in recent times. For traditional Memorials, they can be quite elaborate, involving a great deal expenditure especially on account of the logistics and participants to be involved in the whole programme of events. For now, Memorials of Royal Fathers, Cult Leaders and Customary titled personages are normally weeklong ceremonials and programmes are set forth for each day of the "market week".

US? R? IKPO a.k.a SECOND BURIALS or MEMORIAL SERVICES

Until of recent, Funerals were not very significant in URUAN/EFIK traditional society and the reason is not far to seek. Funerals before the 1980s most often than not nearly always took place twenty-four hours after a person was pronounced dead and for traditional rulers and titled personages always at midnight of the day of death. These important persons were buried at midnight as a mark of honour and re-union with the souls of departed relations and ancestors because nightfall is the precious and sanctified time of the spirits ie. departed souls. The darkness of the night was also meant to cover up the proceedings from the prying eyes of commoners, ie. the rank and file of the citizenry. The wealth, sense of importance as also the status of both the departed and relations made the observance of Memorials popularly tagged second burials tick. Us?r? Ikpo also called second burials determined who was who in the society especially with regard to the bereaved families, associations, groups, clubs and communities to which the departed belonged. People especially those to be involved in the arrangements concerning the full ceremonies of the departed were not so much anxious, frightened or even exasperated about the actual burials of their dead as the second burials and Memorials to be conducted after the eventful funerals since they signified the Rites of resting the deceased in the final place of abode.

According to Patrick Chibuko, sending the departed to the place of rest after death implied the ceremony of induction for the full incorporation of the dead person. At this juncture the dead was ritually incorporated into the spirit land (Cf. Chibuko Patrick, 22). John Bosco Ekanem also corroborated by identifying the world of the spirits as the resting place of the dead (Ekanem J.B. 31). But for Christians according to Austin Echema, since the Church professes her belief in the communion of Saints, it means that the Faithful who have left this world have found their rest in Heaven. In celebrating the Paschal Mystery of Christ, those who die have become one with the dead and the risen Christ passing from death to life to be welcomed into the fellowship of the Saints in Heaven (Echema A.135). That was why in most cases, these Memorials and second burials had to be postponed until after a series of meetings and planning had been concluded with the positive agreement by all concerned that these celebrations would be feasible to enable the departed rest in peace in the heavenly abode. There were instances whereby Memorials were postponed indefinitely owing to the fact that arrangements could not be concluded towards the celebrations. This also brought unpalatable stigmas to the relations and communities of the departed who could not organize these Memorials as at and when due. The expenses to be incurred in organizing these events were enormous and breadth-taking. They were simply overwhelming to say the least. First of all, such celebrations could last for years on end once they were flagged off. People could turn up at any time of the day or night, any week, any month, any year to demand for the proceedings of the Memorials which might have taken place months or years before. Therein lay the fears and worries that accompanied second burials and Memorials without which Funeral Obsequies of the departed were never considered as successfully accomplished.

There is no need here to consider other logistical demands and requirements whether with regard to Christians, pagans, traditionalists, talkless of Royal personalities and other men and women of rank because these required another set of Rites and ceremonials as part and parcel of Memorials. That must have been the reason why Cardinal Ekanem when he came on board, placed a ban on these celebrations and even went on to pronounce excommunication on those who carried on these exercises except they were prepared to pay a fine of one hundred pounds (£100:0:0) up front to obtain the permit for such celebrations. This amount means millions in modern currency and some families who could afford it paid any way because they did not want to move about in ignominy for not being able to bury their dead with honour.

Us?r? Ikpo was ascertained when everything regarding the date and duration of the Memorials had been completed. At the flag off relations, groups, churches and organization would come to pay their last respects to the departed who might have been buried months or years before. These ceremonials have come to stay even in modern times in the form of Inculturation because to some people it simply means finding a meeting point between a given culture and its expression in Christian Faith ie. in worship and Catechetics. James F. Essiet seems to disagree with such a notion pointing out that such would raise a further problem in multicultural societies like Nigeria with over 3000 ethnic groups, each with its own distinctive language and cultural values. Others say since the Church and her Faith is universal, Inculturation should not be subjected to secularist or nationalistic movements. But others like Peter Sarpong etc. are content to define it as "Incarnation" in terms of the mystery and event in the person of Jesus of Nazareth who carried out this process on history till the end of time and this presupposes the two distinct realities of the Divine and human in the unique Person of Christ. Hence Inculturation properly understood is the incarnational union between Christ and the people in a given culture like URUAN/EFIK. It means according to Pp. John Paul II, the entry of Christ into the very nature of a nation's life and lifting up the nation to Christ. In our case therefore, it is URUAN/EFIK becoming the fertile soil in which the Good News of Christ is implanted, fertilized and draw into herself nourishments in this process of mutual enrichment so that URUAN/EFIK can also translate her mourning and burial/memorial Rites according to the Gospel.

That is why nowadays, URUAN/EFIK Wake-Keepings, Vigils, and those ceremonies pertaining to Us?r? Ikpo have met and everybody has agreed to do the same things together. For Christians the Ordo Exsequiarum is used and is marked by prayers for vigils, committals, memorials, etc. for the deceased with a wide range of options right from the transfer of the body from the home to the Church and back to the home or cemetery. During memorials it is also expected that the visitors and guests would be sumptuously entertained with souvenirs to boot while on their part, they would also come with gifts and donations in cash and kind as if to console the bereaved: Don't cry! In fact, this is the sort of attitude that lightens the burdens of relations of the deceased. The Lord Jesus himself exhibited such concern and sympathy when he visited the village of Naim which in Hebrew means "lovely" the significance of which coincided with the actions of the Messiah who showed so much love for suffering mankind loving us so abundantly; ditto his compassionate and condolence visit to mourn with the sisters of Lazarus (Cf Lk 7:11-12; Jn 10:10: Jn 11:33-34). It is good and noble to pray for the living and the dead (Cf. 2Macc 12:42-45). It is so sad that this ancient and noble URUAN/EFIK custom and tradition is gradually fading away .Second burials and Memorials entailed processions, celebration of Rituals, delivery of eulogies - ASE, and Wake-Keeping on the final night of the flag off which event usually was preceded by re-opening the grave to check whether everything was intact because of the fear of witches tampering with the coffins and carrying out sacrilegious practices of sorts with the corpse. The graves would be covered again with special clay and costly coloured pebbles over which tomb stones might be raised in honour of the departed. The whole day and night are spent in rejoicing and merry making with all grades of organizations, associations, churches, clubs, etc. from far and near in attendance. These noisy and mirthful Memorials are meant to accentuate the status and profile of those concerned and to prove to the gentry that a befitting and grand funeral of the departed had been accomplished. After this, it becomes the talk in town that the families, relations, associations, etc. of the deceased had fulfilled the customs and traditions of the kingdom, the community, clan or kindred of the departed. But everybody agrees that mankind is given to celebration irrespective of the occasion. It could be totally joyous as in the case of births, nuptials, exaltations like bestowal of titles, honours, promotions, and coronations or sorrowful in the case of deaths, disasters or accidents. Whatever is the case, as they say: "Man must wag" and this applies to all human and mundane celebrations, festivities and events imaginable. Hence from the beginning of birth, as they say, from the cradle to death, the decisive events of life are always regarded as an occasion for celebration. A celebration always implies the crowd, and the greater the concourse of people, he merrier and the more grandiose the event. The elements of celebration in order to be grand necessarily involve Rituals which in turn involve officiating of ministers of Church, community and State, sorrowing and consoling personages, family relations and associates, friends and club or professional departments and institutions, singers and dancers etc. All these add colour and gesture to the celebration and in the case of funerals, the climax of which are the Memorials. For Christians and even traditional groups these events are to further affirm and express the union of the Church in heaven including the abode of ancestors/spirits and departed souls and the society or community in the great communion of the saints and the departed. The point to make at this juncture is that it is anti-traditional to jumble funerals and memorials together, because as observed already, the theology of Memorials is to be located both in the tradition of Africans everywhere and for Christians in the mystery of Christ which shows the separation of these two events. Memorials are a celebration of the union of the dead with the spirits of those who had died and are now in glory, as it were and these always takes place weeks and months after the committals. Christ died and rose on the third day. Therefore, it cannot follow logically that funerals and memorial services be done within the same ceremony on the same day. Biblically it follows that funerals and memorials are not combinable and herein lies the whole understanding of Inculturation.

The responsibility of the ministry of consolation rests with the believing and mournful relations, friends, colleagues and acquaintances because they also are sharers and participants in this ministry of consolations. Although people are losing their sense of solidarity and liberality owing to selfishness, greed and as also the modern craze for individualism and self-adulation as people no longer assist, help or contribute generously and lovingly towards funerals and Memorials, the burden of these events were very mitigated in the past through this generous concerns. IT was one of those exhibitions of URUAN/EFIK culture and traditions to come to the aid of those charged with the responsibility of honouring the dead. This project is therefore a clarion call to URUAN/EFIK citizens to arise, not only for the momentous occasion of death but for the upliftment and development of the kingdoms and the Nigerian, nay African nation.

N O T E S

1. In URUAN in particular, accused persons whether convicted or acquitted usually prefer to swear on MBIAM rather than on the Bible because they believe 'MBIAM enyene Nsuk, edi Bible inyeneke = the MBIAM has a counter remedy, but the Bible doesn't have'.
2. It is therefore obvious that modernity may not lead anyone to the attainment of the desired goal of social integration and communal harmony as it was in the age-old traditional institutions. In this sense anything African, her traditional institutions and values, have become eclipsed in the lenses of modernity.
3. His royal Majesty, Okuku Asiak is the current paramount Ruler of Ikot Ekpene Local Government Area of Akwa Ibom State, Nigeria. He responded to the oral interview and he is the primary source of information on the rites of oku-inam.
4. Any form of trickery, buffoonery, chicanery, double-speak, rascality, dishonesty etc in words and deeds is often tagged in Nigeria as 'wuru-wuru) smartness, or even presumed invincibility and invisibility, even if the person is 'IFABOM'(…Glossary15).
5. People everywhere, Christian or pagan as observed above fear swearing on the Holy Bible. The simple reason is that, subconsciously, everybody believes in the sanctity of the word God contained therein, fearing that God who is invisible, invincible and omniscient will undoubtedly visit any perjurer with dire consequences, hence the dread of the holy Book.
6. This is another Institution for Crime detection and prevention in URUAN/EFIK which also will be discussed in this Article.

THE MARRIAGE INSTITUTION ANCIENT AND MODERN IN URUAN-EFIK

The Marriage Institution follows from the traditional and natural Institution known to mankind since creation. Recognized the world over, it is a universally and legally accepted relationship established both by tradition and religion through either a civil or kindred ceremony between a man and a woman in a monogamous ie. between a man and a woman or polygamous framework ie. between a man and two or several women who have publicly so expressed their intention to live together as husband and wife/wives under one roof or household and which has been recognized as such. Uruan generally believes that this institution was established by God Himself when he created the first man and woman. Over the ages people in various climes have adopted certain procedures for performing marriage rites and Uruan is no exception. One popular marriage custom known in Uruan has been the traditional ASKING – MBUP or Request made by the family or the representatives of the man intending to marry to the family and kindred of the woman who is to be given out in marriage. It is both a ceremonial and a rite and these require certain tokens to be brought to the family of the woman. These token differ from clan to clan in Uruan but the general symbols consist of wine and a bundle of snuff which in modern times devolves in outright cash payment.

A MARRIAGE INSTITUTION IN URUAN-EFIK

The Marriage Institution follows from the traditional and natural Institution known to mankind since creation. Recognized the world over, it is a universally and legally accepted relationship established both by tradition and religion through either a civil or kindred ceremony between a man and a woman in a monogamous ie. between a man and a woman or polygamous framework ie. between a man and two or several women who have publicly so expressed their intention to live together as husband and wife/wives under one roof or household and which has been recognized as such. URUAN/EFIK generally believes that this institution was established by God Himself when he created the first man and woman. Over the ages people in various climes have adopted certain procedures for performing marriage rites and URUANEFIK is no exception. One popular marriage custom known in URUAN/EFIK has been the traditional MBUP ND? which culminates in Courtship.

B. MBUP ND? & VALUES: COURTSHIP

Courtship consists in ASKING-MBUP NDO or Request made before the family or the representatives of the man intending to get married to the family and kindred of the woman who is to be given out in marriage. It is both a ceremonial and a rite and these require certain tokens to be brought to the family of the woman. These tokens differ from clan to clan in URUAN/EFIK but the general symbols consist of wine and a bundle of snuff which in modern times devolves in outright cash payments and wine offerings.

C. CHURCH/COURT OR REGISTRY MARRIAGE STRUCTURE & VALUES

Marriage is a legally recognized relationship established by God but in our climes sanctioned through Church or civil ceremonies between a man and woman who intend to live together as partners till death do them part. An institution established by God, it is as old as mankind. It dates back to the moment of creation when God created the woman Eve for Adam and they both became husband and wife in the Garden of Eden. Over the ages people in various climes have adopted procedures constituting marriage rites. In Nigeria, one of the recognized procedures of contracting marriage is through the Court. However, this process has been thoroughly abused. Investigations reveal that in most of the marriage registries across the country, a lot of oddities take place. For instance, someone can start and complete a marriage process in three days, provided he is willing to grease some palms. Inside findings also show that although statutorily a man who wants to marry in a registry is expected to at least spend 21 days in preparation, the operators of the system no longer abide by the rule. They have introduced what they call special considerations whereby instead of waiting for the legally stipulated 21 days before the Court wedding, people now cut corners and consummate the wedding within a few days. After telling your mission, a laminated one sheet page is handed to you to look at. The document contains the requirements. For undisclosed reasons you are not allowed to make a copy of the requirements or write them down. You are only allowed to peruse it, ask questions where necessary and then proceed to the next step, which is registration. In virtually all the registries the common requirements in the laminated sheet of paper are the intending couples will to provide four passport size photographs, two each for the man and woman. After filling the forms payments made, the whole deed is done and the counseling officer proceeds to join them. Some registries also arrange court marriage for intending couples who may turn up on the so-called "odd days" for a special fee which attracts a higher stipend. These are for couples who turn up to wed on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Saturdays and on public holidays. One of the issues emphasized is the implication that in such legal marriages the "inheritance clause" whereby a person's wife and children would inherit his property should be observed to the letter. In many parts of Igbo land, this is very objectionable and some men are said to have walked out of their marriage. A correspondent in Enugu, Mr. Osondu Anyalechi observed that he once noticed a putative husband storm out of the court in utter disgust because the man could not bring himself to understand why a total stranger, implying his wife, could be made to take possession of his things when he had parents and siblings! Another unfavorable experience noticed in court marriages is that a man can get registry marriage with as many women as he may choose. In fact, cases abound of how a man brought in a lady to the registry and both were being joined as husband and wife taking the oath of indissolubility. He then left and went to another Marriage Registry that same day with another lady and they were joined. Later the first lady having heard of it went to the Registry official to protest, but the man denied ever coming to the Registry to be joined with the lady and nobody seemed to know the purpose behind that action till today. The Officer could only recommend that many photographs should be taken at different places, recalling how some men even deny their photographs insisting that they were photo tricks.

CHASTITY BEFORE REGISYTRY/TRADITIONAL MARRIAGE

But one saving Grace concerning Registry marriages which accords with URUAN/EFIK marriage requirement is that Court Marriages also require chastity before marriage. In URUAN/EFIK no marriage can be entered into with a lady having a protruding stomach at the event of her traditional marriage with her putative husband. It is regarded as an abomination. Should the lady in question had put to bed or had children before the traditional marriage, the husband would be made to pay certain fines including Ebot ns? ibuot as a recompense for deflowering an URUAN/EFIK daughter and exposing her to public ridicule and opprobrium for that matter. URUAN/EFIK are very strict on this. A prospective lady for marriage is supposed to be a virgin at least ontologically at the point of being given out for marriage. This issue of sex before marriage is a novel idea in URUAN/EFIK and is condemned with the severest terms. That is why our new bred girls resort to family planning techniques when they are engaged but this is altogether another offensive case in URUAN/EFIK because more often than not such "girls" are regarded as dogs and likely to be barren having sterilized themselves already. The same seems to be the idea in many a Registry worldwide including URUAN. My informants also have argued to this requirement of complete chastity before marriage by most Registries in the country and abroad. A case in point is that this my informant was thoroughly surprised when he told me of how a certain Uncle and his newlywed were denied the U.S. visa because the visa forms they filled showed that they had a common residential address before their wedding. The U.S. Government expected that they should not have been living together before their wedding. One of the intending couples asked the officer what would happen if a marriage relationship developed between a son and a daughter of two families living in the same building. His response was that such a rare situation has to be stated when filling the form.

Is it not amazing therefore that some churches do not mind whether the lady is pregnant or not, but the U.S Government is interested in chastity? This will be one of the clouds of witnesses the Bible says will be against the church. It is unfortunate that because we have seen cases where babies were born just a few days before the church wedding and it meant nothing to the couples of these churches. Sometimes it is amazing even to the point of exasperation or is it desperation to hear a Minister after seeing the big protruding stomach of the bride still asking whether anybody had reason why he should not join the couples. What is that? Chastity may be old fashioned but it will not change God's position on it, and certainly not in URUAN. Some may think, after all, what is in the fine. Well, the fine may not worth anything and it could be so insignificant compared to the bride price or even dowry, but I think we should be rather circumspect here. What of the reputation that the lady carries into her marriage? The dynamic society of URUAN/EFIK abhors it, and certainly the Lord God Sabbaoth is not amused! In spite of our cyber age, some youth still refuse to be defiled and one of the tools of the Devil to promote promiscuity is indecent dressing the darling of some women and grandmas including some intending girls to mislead their fiances into bedding them before they even decide on the business of church or Registry wedding. There are some fiances who are known to have broken their relationships or engagements with their ladies after sleeping with them. Knowing their stand on chastity, the ladies rationalized that the only way they could trap their men to sleep with them was through indecent dressing; and many men have really fallen to this sort of game as they could not just resist the provocative posturing. Yes, they did and oftentimes it worked for them. But they lost the guys forever. Shame! The men were definitely angry and certainly so for this aberration and for being forced to sin!

NUDITY! INDECENT DRESSING MODES

Here perforce we are constrained to make a serious case on the issue of indecency to wit, indecent dressing mode. The Catholic Church includes this under sins against the 6th Commandment God gave to Moses on that mountain of holiness, Sinai, viz. sins against MODESTY and CHASITY as also mentioned by Apostle Paul in his Epistle to the Galatians the 5th Chapter wherein he captures those sins against the Holy Spirit which he includes as fruits/works of the flesh v/s works of the Spirit:

> The desires of self-indulgence are always in opposition to the Spirit, that is how you are prevented from doing the things you want to. When self- indulgence is at work the results are obvious: sexual vices, sensuality, indecency, orgies I tell you now as I have told you in the past, that people who behave in these ways will no enter the kingdom of God. On the other hand, the fruit of the Spirit are manifest: goodness, truthfulness, self-control… modesty, continence, chastity (Gal 5:17-23).

I have also read that in Imo state University for example, the V.C. is using the prayer warriors to fight the venom of indecency, orgies and self-indulgence. But according to the wife of the V.C of Nnamdi Azikiwe University, "mothers are to blame for their girls who dress indecently." Some mothers like her are known to have torn their daughters' dresses when they are not pleased with what they wear. But unfortunately some people do not see anything wrong in nudity because they are either victims or beneficiaries of this cancer. I can also recall that a woman Senator from Akwa Ibom State tried to promote a bill on the cancer of indecent dressing, what constituted indecent dressing and other related matters on the floor of the National Assembly, but after the first public reading a number of morally bankrupt senators were said to have stormed out and the Senate gallery became so unruly that the matter was killed right there on the floor of the house. My heart is filled with joy, and I am sure URUAN/EFIK citizens are happy that there is still hope especially for some of their daughters who do not only refuse to compromise their chastity as also dressing code but resist their fellow ladies that disgrace their womanhood and gender.

Still on this very issue, DR. James Okeudo, Professor of Animal Science at the Federal University of Technology (FUTO), Owerri has also condemned according to him 'this world's notorious penchant for progressive social disorder'. Writing to the Saturday Sun Magazine, he describes indecent dressing as a festering sore, which problem if not controlled, will continue 'until the kingdom comes'. The way nudity is shamelessly displayed on the streets especially on campuses is what Very Rev. DR. T. Ononyima, Catholic Chaplain of the University of Nigeria (UNN) Nsukka has describe as one which should make anyone with a modicum of decency cringe because it appears as if all self-control and family values have been cast into the deep blue sea, never to be recovered. Certainly the demons of Sodom and Gomorrah have been let loose into us. In Owerri in particular and this has been attested to in the write-ups in most our Dailies, some so-called 'the acadas', viz. University female students, are seen to be thoroughly confused as they shamelessly walk almost naked not only in the campuses but along the public thoroughfares in town. Sometimes they wear only one piece of material flowing from the neck clung tightly to their skin making it difficult to distinguish the garments from their brown skins – the fair ladies, if you won't mind. But all this looks like madness isn't it, because accordingly to the adage "you are addressed the way you dress" and this underscores the general agreement that these ladies are really off their senses and should be defined by what they are wearing, viz. 'shameless destitudes of morality and self-respect! This is nothing but disguised insanity and lunacy masquerading as the latest fashion. Some of these careless ladies indeed are known to wear dresses very often miniskirts and blouses with very low neckline which thoroughly expose the chests; some wear transparent trousers etc. topless and 'hot legs 'pulled far below the waist with body hugs so small that as they sit or bend they are completely exposed to vulgar gaze.

A significant number of young men and even in campuses also as copy-cats are not free from this obnoxious vogue. Such sights are too obscene to be described in detail as such would border on rank pornography. But the wonder of it all is that some churches and their preachers seem to teach their congregations that the way they dress is not important because 'God looks at only the heart'. This is nothing but a wrong interpretation of the scriptures to wit:

But the Lord said to Samuel, "Do not look on his appearance…because the Lord sees not as man sees; man looks on the outward appearance, but God looks on the heart." (1Sam 6-7).

And these people still call themselves Christians and attend one church or the other; they are only deceiving themselves because God has specific rules and statutes governing our outward appearances and inward dispositions. The truth of the matter is that while men and women may be deceived by outward appearances; God is not because He sees beyond the outward appearance into the heart. For while it is possible for these immoral, wicked and vengeful fellows who join religious groups and change their mode of dressing without any inward change in their lives, it is difficult to find a truly holy person who appears in public dressed as a ruffian or prostitute. Those who pose in indecent dressing while attending church regularly have already defined themselves for they cannot possibly be genuine Christians but as those planted in the church by Satan so as to give Christianity a bad name; for by their fruits you shall know them (Mt 7:20). Whereas there are so many passages in the scriptures in which God instructed the people about clothes and dresses and that nakedness must be covered as even God Himself made figs for Adam And Eve to properly cover themselves (Gen 3:7), these clothes are meant to be worn to adequately and completely cover our nakedness; the contrary is sinful and evil. Various kinds of people are depicted in the bible wearing distinctive modes of dressing: the womenfolk especially maidens wore long dresses and veils as depicted in the photographs of such holy women both in the Old and New Testaments. Kings and queens like Esther wore royal and flourishing apparels, the Jewish authorities wore long garments with broad phylacteries and women especially those who professed godliness and modesty with shame-facedness and sobriety were always elegant and modest (Cf. Exd. 20:26; Prov. 7:10; Mt 23:5; Mk 12:38; Acts 12:21; 1 Tim 2:9-10; Rev 3:18). On the other hand, God condemned females wearing male dresses and vice versa and St. Paul specifically condemned such foolish actions as men plaiting their hairs and wearing ear rings like women (Deut. 22:51 Cor. 6:9 etc).

The devil uses indecent dressing and pornography to evoke sexual desires and to increase fornication and other sexual aberrations in the world. People may give all sorts of reasons and excuses eg. women sitting on motor bicycles or traveling but at the root of all these it is due to the immoral desire to show off the enticing and seductive feminine/masculine body anatomy and mode in order to attract attention. Whereas our women in Northern Nigeria particularly the Muslims have rejected every kind of modern and foreign revealing dresses imported from the women from Europe and the Americas, our so-called Christian womenfolk as indulgent copy-cats are imbibing wholesale all these immoral modes of dressing from abroad to embarrass and obliterate the status of African womanhood and good sense. According to Dr. Olayinka Oladosu a Lagos based family physician, the era of this anomaly "will progress till the end of time, at least till the era of Antichrist's reign. Because come to talk of it, some Nollywood stars had some time ago in the 1970s warned that over the plan of Satan to dull people's consciences using this type of aberration of provocative dressings of females and nudity to harass humanity. That is why so many of these agents of Satan have agreed to carry out the satanic agenda and attain fame and make money. Since the Antichrist would not care about sexual immorality but rather encourage it, that is why some churches even encourage it through permitting this decay of conscience whereby the public dress lacks moral discrimination and the church has degenerated into theatres of profanity and worldliness where people come to display their wealth and affluence, gyration with the latest dancing style simply because the world has lost all sense of religion. We can only hope that people will be awake to these calamities committed especially by the daughters of Eve and take responsibility in respect of the morals of our communities, nay our nation.

Osondu also captures a very poignant point on this matter of inappropriate dressing and sexual relationships which I wish to make bold to use to conclude this article. He referred to David Petraeus, the United States 'four-star General and former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency 'in Insights Column of the Sun of January 2, 2013, concerning his extramarital affair with Paula Broadwell. In this brilliant and heart-searching article, he alleged how that great personality ended his enviable carrier because of a lady. It is unfortunate that some people hate sin and still practice it. Military might is feeble before sin. God's Word and Commandments are the Christian weapons to fight sin. Sampson in the Bible, as rugged as he was, collapsed under the laps of a prostitute lover and because of her he unwittingly revealed to her the secret s of his life. The Devil most often does not give up until he ruins his victim. So URUAN/EFIK beware! It is gratifying to stress that some people who are involved in inappropriate sexual relationships including dress modes hate what they do when they are alone. Keeping quiet over their conduct does not help them. What is needed is the Gospel which will convince and convict them of their evil deeds and then convert hem unto God. God then will give them the power and His enabling grace to resist Satan.

D. FAMILY STRUCTURE & VALUES v/s CHILD MARRIAGE INCULCATING MORAL VALUES TO CHILDREN & WARDS

Today more than ever before the number of religious/moral models as epitomized by and expected of parents, uncles even teachers who should serve as mentors and examples of good behaviour and morality for children and youths is dwindling fast to the extent that if the trend continues, the very existence of URUAN/EFIK, nay Nigeria and Africa as a community of civilized people will be irreparably compromised. The moral ecology of the society today is polluted and radioactive to the extent that if no concerted effort is made by meaningful citizens, the moral fabric and health of URUAN/EFIK as a people will be seriously impaired, because virtually all the social, economic, political, religious as well as infrastructural order of the society has failed especially now that contemporary religious practices due to the proliferation of religious sects invading URUAN/EFIK today. These churches have failed to serve as moral bacons for the populace this problem is further compounded by the general and steady breakdown of traditional family systems which hitherto served as the first socializing and moral instruction units for children.

First of all, parents, guardians, sponsors, family heads and kindred patriarchs - pater familias motivated by the quest for material wealth to satisfy their thirst for conspicuous consumption, self-glorification, aggrandizement, and display of wealth, the good life and affluence are not anymore willing and ready to devote their precious time and energy for inculcating good moral values to their children and protégées. The young are left to their own caprices, devices and options such that in the alienated society such as ours today, URUAN traditional, religious and communal life which encouraged duty and care even to the neighbours' children and wards has virtually disappeared with the disappearance also of family/kindred meetings and re-unions which were aimed at inculcating these societal/moral values, and this has been the price of the absence of moral engineering by parents in the first place. Every society is built around families and family structures. Family values define societal value, hence the collapse of any nation can be attributed to the collapse of the family institution such as is happening in URUAN/EFIK today. Children become honourable or become societal failures depending on what their parents pass on to them or fail to do. Whatever principles of life that children receive, that is what defines who they will actually become later on in life and in their society. Unfortunately, many parents teach their children to be lazy and they end up developing evil ways later on in life. Many parents do not teach their children the habit of studying their books.

Some begin to even question the rational and arguing with their parents. A good example is the practice by some parents who give their children money for bribery in school or during examinations so they could pass thinking they are helping them by doing so. They cut corners for their children to advance in life not realizing the harm they are doing both to their wards and the society at large. This is training them in the path of irresponsibility and dishonour. Two good example both in the Old and New Testaments have taught us about the consequences of parents not mentoring their wards and building them up as well as laying the attributes of leading honourable lives along the path of honesty, industry, hard work, resourcefulness, self-discipline, dignity and integrity. God ordained that parents be responsible for the task of giving their children a vision for their lives, but in the case of the High Priest, Eli and his two sons (1 Sam.2:12-21) Timaeus the father of blind Bartimaeus, (*Mk 10:46-51) both failed woefully in their responsibilities. How come that Eli allowed his two sons Hophni and Phinehas to be scoundrels? Or with Timaeus a man who by his very name was supposed to be an honourable citizen in town, how could he allow his blind son to become a beggar? And does being blind imply ending up on the streets? I think his father must be held fully responsible for failing to call Bartimaeus to order, ditto Eli; because that is what happens all the time when parents and superiors fail to call their children, subordinates and those under their authority to order when they see them go into ignoble actions. These are lessons for parents and those in positions of authority, leadership and affluence because it seems we have so many absent-minded parents and superiors all over the place who are too busy that they neglect their domestic responsibilities.

Another surprising cause is this vague collapse of values to the effect that such well-rehearsed and safe tracts are being abandoned and conducts initially taken for granted as definite patterns of URUAN/EFIK communities are being undermined with no substitution for a better, newer conduct in sight but rather a process of devaluation and erosion of its credibility. Good grammar yet there is a third dimension! But didn't the Holy Book say that "idleness is the devil's workshop?" It is. For when youths who live by the day, having no hope whatsoever; whose parents are even timidly lazy, ignorant and ashamed of standing up to their children, just because they (the parents) could not deliver on their own God-appointed function, what therefore follows is a topple over values which is exactly what is happening in URUAN today. Yet still a fourth reason: would you have a teenage youngster die of hunger or watch in shame when his sister is forced into prostitution just for the family to eke out a day's meal? Or would he be morose when the father, a once hardworking civil servant, a good citizen and pleasant neighbour to all and sundry but now denied his wages or pension for months together and is now only looking on us his grave/untimely death stares him in the face? Or still supposing such a youth's mother who once bubbled with cheers and love but now turns a ghost of her old-self, now bitter, cantankerous and a threat to possible longer days of the husband because every avenue of hope and the possibility of bringing out the meal to the dinner table has vanished! This is the situation in which our children find themselves today. Finally, even now, schools as genuine institutions for the training of children's minds and bodies as teachers were well respected by everyone and their authority and influence felt in the community are things of the past, and so their roles as surrogate parents are no more performed. The teaching profession has been so bastardized and endangered by misfits who should have no business in the first place in that noble profession of yore because very few teachers today are committed, their pittance as stipends if any and non-payments notwithstanding.

INDOLENCE AND CRIME IN FAMILIES

Yes, everywhere in URUAN/EFIK society people are complaining about the degree of indiscipline and the catastrophic drop in the morality and uncivilized conduct of the young in the degree of respect accorded teachers, but this should be left at the footsteps of the generality of Uruan/Efik citizens for their utter lack and degeneration of moral consciousness as also their anomy, apathy, tolerance and complacency. URUAN/EFIK is now at the cross roads, yet these people complaining are the very ones trooping to prisons to solidarities and socialize with ex-convicts, criminals, rape/cult addicts and cheats with their loot all the time. Today one sees Uruan/Efik people as a generation held by mutual antagonisms, with a multiplicity of church denominations engaging in loud and vociferous non-economic and nonsocial of immoral alleluia rantings which have brought no development or progress not to talk of industrialization and promotion of expertise in noble ventures and enterprises to create wealth and prosperity in URUAN/EFIK. Today except in those projects not beyond the level of outright sales of patrimonial farmlands, estates and the building of debased privately owned ramshackles and bungalows they call houses instead of building modern and beautiful architectural storeys with ever confusing and inadequate educational systems resulting in semi-illiterate denigrates and undisciplined amorally educated adults with the result that URUAN/EFIK youths have now turned into Area –boys and girls from their primary up to secondary school levels never heard of the 10 Commandments (of course many have not). One also sees a generation of cheats, of harlots and prostitutes, of thieves and armed mid-day rapists and murderers, gangsters, hostage takers and kidnap, of cultists of EKPO NYOHO which were alien to URUAN/EFIK traditions and heritage. Today one also sees Uruan/Efik men and women, children, youths who seem never to have heard of any moral code or traditional ethics; who cannot distinguish between right and wrong; those addicted to squandermania, never making savings and productive investments but claiming development and progress and deluding themselves like a child that rubs its belly with water and soap all morning thinking that it is taking a bath.

Today one sees many a youth in URUAN/EFIK who drink, smoke and drive like idiots on the highways, who abuse and beat up domestic staff and house helps, who sell fake products, offer sex for marks in Universities and other Higher Institutions, who go half-naked in the guise of fashion. The list goes on yet to this self-inflicted wounds, URUAN/EFIK citizens must each "begin from the person they see in the mirror" as someone has put it. The whole scenario in modern times has been further complicated because the whole of URUAN/EFIK territory has very little government presence but only the old colonial and dilapidated infrastructures and a population of failed educational systems as well as a high level of unemployment especially among the ever teeming youths as observed already and with little or poor authority for mobilization for self-help by the so-called village/kin heads and traditional rulers who because of patronage and hand-outs from the State Government coffers with salaries, allowances and even orderlies in tow cannot provide for such large hungry and angry populations and therefore inept and bankrupt leadership with little or almost complete absence of government control network and other factors of economic progress, educational and social harmony.

INCULCATING MORAL VALUES THROUGH CHRISTIAN SEX EDUCATION

Sex education is the means by which young people can be helped to protect themselves against sex abuses and exploitation, un-intended pregnancies, sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) HIV/AIDS as well as socially deviant sexual behaviours which can be injurious to their health and those of others with whom they may have come in contact. It is not about teaching young people to have or not to have sex. Sex education must therefore be taught to leave the youths with an understanding of God and his design as it is found in functional aspects of sex. It is not about feeling that sex is an evil part of life that must be repressed, or that it consists in a set of prohibitions. No, the sex education of the young must be directed towards the development of virtues especially the Virtue of Chastity, a virtue that will help them to see and use sex in accordance with the plan of the Creator. The Vatican Council II put it this way:

> Especially in the heart of their own families, young people should be aptly and seasonally instructed about the dignity, duty and expression of married love. Trained thus in the cultivation of Chastity, they will be able at a suitable age to enter marriage of their own after an honourable courtship (GS, 49).

Since youths are naturally curious about everything, they experience and long to know the "what" and the "why" of his/her own person. This wholesome desire must not be thwarted by discouraging them from asking about sex because what was then natural curiosity can be replaced by a morbid interest in bodily functions. Parents must come to terms with making constant emphasis on sexual sins and negative prohibitions; all instruction must be made to relate sex to and function in the communication of human love: "Don't pet, don't go steady with girls", "don't get pregnant" will not help a boy or girl to see sex as an integral part of God's plan for them. Such repressive and prohibitory rules on sex seem to aim at telling a youth that he/she will be all right only that they should develop a lot of hobbies to occupy themselves lest they become the devil's workshop. They should also pray hard and take good cold baths. Rather parents should make every attempt to supply them with useful reading material on sex as a necessary reading diet. For many not just Christians, the word sex has always been very controversial, just as sex education for the young has continued to elicit mixed feelings among parents, teacher's governments and religious Institutions. But no matter the amount of controversy, sex, sexuality and boy/girl relationships will always remain an integral part of us humans and humanity. At some point in the life of an individual, he/she will inevitably have to deal with sex, sexuality and all the other issues of sex. This is why sex education must be taught to the young. Contrary to general perception, sex education is the process of acquiring information and forming correct attitudes and beliefs about ex, sexual activities, relationships and intimacy between the sexes. It is also about developing young people.

Skills so that they can make informed choices about their behaviours and feel confident and competent to scrutinize their actions on these choices. When sex education is properly and thoroughly therefore taught it will enable young people to acquire knowledge and develop skills to help them protect and promote their sexual health through minimizing the risks they could face in the course of their sexual experiences. It will also help reduce to the barest minimum the risks of potentially negative outcomes from sexual behaviours such as unplanned pregnancies, infectious diseases as well as socially deviant behaviours such as homosexuality and lesbianism which have been banned by the Nigerian Government under pain of imprisonment. There will be no rape, incest, pedophilia ie. Sex with children and teenagers (minors), girl prostitution, nymphomania ie. insatiable desire for sex, bestiality ie. sex with animals or even necrophilia ie. committing sex with dead people. All these are very evil and negative practices which young people stand the risk of being attracted to them. God forbid! It therefore shows that sex education should cover all those aspects of sexuality like puberty changes and challenges of adolescence, human anatomy, reproduction, family planning menstruation, pregnancy, childbirth baby care, dating, relationships, sexual pleasures, birth control and contraceptives, abortion and safe delivery. Good sex education will equally prevent and protect the young from making wrong choices about sex, their sexuality, sexual activities, adult predators, bad relationships and also protect them from being taken advantage of by adult predators. When the boys and girls are taught to see sex in this way, and when they reach maturity, the strength in a boy or girl they love will not be a social ticket for a sexual meal, but rather the power of sexual love which God has given to both of them to use for the maturing of their marital love (Bier William, 67).

SOCIETAL DYSFUNCTIONS AND CHILD ABUSE

Societal Dysfunction in the Emergence of Street Children, Whither URUAN/EFIK: In a many cases because the fabric of the family is torn, children are displaced, and when they can no longer call their homes "home" they seek refuge and association in the streets. Although there are a number of Non-Government Organizations aside the establishments of Children's Welfare Institutions in the State and Local Governments, we still find a number of children in URUAN/EFIK roaming the streets instead of being in school. But in particular, parents can do a lot to stem the tide of street children including children hawkers which should be regarded as child abuse in some cases, because there can be some cogent reasons for parents to send their children hawking in the streets especially in cases of grave need for the survival of the family. This can be understandable since it does not conflict with school schedules and undue inconvenience to the children involved in hawking. But here we are dealing with cases the highlights of which constitute those drastic conditions which force children into the streets in the first place.

Unfavourable Conditions which permit the emergence of Street Children: First of all, some of URUAN/ EFIK communities are filled with broken homes, disempowered and vulnerable people as a result of divorce, domestic violence and others to be treated later in this Chapter. The major reasons some children run from home and prefer to reside with their peers instead of their parents and siblings are as interesting as bewildering. Because the fabric of the family is torn, children are inevitably displaced and when they can no longer call home 'home' they seek refuge and association on the streets. Many children also run away from homes where they are maltreated, bullied or neglected. Some parents don't really make serious efforts to cater for the welfare and happiness of their children and so make the home distasteful, banal and dull. In a number of cases the parents and relations may not exactly be the source of discontent, but the attitude of some neighbours towards them. Some neighbours can be jealous and transfer their annoyance to the children. Some can be simply wicked and unfriendly and children abhor and try to avoid them by running away without their parents knowing about the problems they are encountering.

Child abuse is also a common factor because they can be emotionally, sexually or physically abused. Some may just detest doing house chores or being sent out to hawk when this may be necessary or being sent to work in the farm, or shop. Some children are damn indolent and difficult to please and regard everything as exploitation and child labour while some are those who enjoy the easy life living on drugs, etc. To all these may be added stark poverty in the home because if they are constantly hungry and without food or proper dressing especially during festivities like Christmas and the new Year or Easter or school Functions, being made to walk long distances to market, farm or school without transport they may start to resent their parents and become so unhappy with what they are experiencing and envious of the freedom and goody-goodies of the other children they see on the streets. Being largely influenced by what they see and of course peer influences when they see other children play truant and spend days and nights on the streets, they will be influenced to tag along and this exposure will lead them sooner or later to make a choice and leave home for good. It can also happen that children from rich homes also run to the streets. Some want to run away to enjoy life in the cities but don/t want to do so alone and they coax other children to follow them. It can also be noted that it is not every broken or poor home that leads children to run into the streets, some from rich homes as earlier observed just prefer a life of independence, fun and pleasure and they cannot get that in disciplined homes, so they set themselves loose.

Some Recommended Remedies: Thank God nowadays there are a number of non-governmental organizations, Christian Centres as the say: “change begin with me” and associations NGOs which are concerned about this type of situation in our hands. Some of these Foundations help a lot to re-unite children with their families and also help those who are marginalized and abused due to poverty and ill-treatment. In spite of those badly behaved children, still they need guidance both from parents and the government to come back to the right path. Blaming the environment is taking a 'no-fault' stand ultimately, rather we find badly behaved children but not bad children as such, and so with proper attention, teaching and discipline, these children can learn how to make the right choices and function in their environment. Secondly we have street children everywhere, we may not have started the problem, but the decision we make today will determine if and how we can solve the problem since “change starts with the man in the mirror”. We must be ready to make the sacrifice. Someone has to lead otherwise there will always be chaos. So ultimately Local Council Authorities in URUAN/EFIK, Village Heads and Community leaders have to take the fault because they are duty-bound and show concern in tracking down the menace. Thirdly the parents themselves and where they are not there, surely should there must be uncles and aunts or other relations who must understand that the shame is theirs and take responsibility for the state of their homes. No respectable parent or leader will pass the buck to others. Fourthly we can see that this is not just about parents or the chiefs' responsibility alone.

When we accept that the world can be better because we all are living in it, then everyone will see the need to be concerned including those whom we vote for to take care of our affairs. This is one of those affairs and they can chip in something unless they have no feelings seeing these children roaming about in the streets and in places they are not expected to be found there. At least they can devote some portion of their earnings to help the NGOs taking care of these matters and they can equally establish some sort of Association in their communities and make some generous donations for the execution of this project. They can also empower their families to get started by encouraging them to take more responsibility because most of them are ill equipped to do so as some of the street children might have been out from school for several months or even years. It will help parents to get them back in school. We can even see that ultimately, finance is the major problem and challenge. It is therefore necessary to give them a chance back in school because it is invaluable.

Finally, can this situation be avoided because prevention is better than cure? Yes, it is possible because we have the capacity for change, and change we must whether or not it is realistic is not the issue. If we want things to change even if we do not have the tendency for it, we must take personal responsibility in our respective environments and neighbourhoods and help to correct and nip in the bud what we notice to be wrong with our children and also be concerned to find out what their problems are. There are not many people who are generous, but the Holy Book says we must be our brother's keeper, hence the need to show concern and help out in whatever way we can.

CHILD OR EARLY MARRIAGE: CHILD ABUSE, EXPLOITATION & CHILD RIGHTS' ABUSES

(i) LEGISLATION ON CHILD ABUSE & MARRIAGE

Specifically, section 29 (b) of the 1999 Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria has listed quite a number of issues on the above and quite interestingly that section and paragraph concerning Child Marriage Act to the effect that "any woman that is married in Nigeria is of full age". (1999 Const. of the Fed. Rep. of Nigeria Section 29 4b). This aspect of the Nigerian Constitution seems to contradict itself as also the Child Rights Act Section II: viz. "Every child is entitled to respect for the dignity of his/her person, and accordingly, no child shall be subjected to physical, mental or emotional injury, abuse, neglect or maltreatment, including sexual abuse… held in slavery or servitude, while in the care of a parent, legal guardian or school authority or any other person or authority having the care of the child." But paradoxically section 29 (1) of the Nigerian Constitution states among others: "Any citizen of Nigeria of full age, who wishes to renounce his /her Nigerian citizenship, shall make a declaration in the prescribed manner for the renunciation." While this is not our problem here but sub-section 4(a) of the said Constitution has gone further to define what is meant by full age to the effect that: "Full age means18 years and above" while sub-section 4(b) states: "Any woman who is married shall be deemed to be of full age". Is this not a contradiction? So whither Nigeria! It therefore means that a girl-child of the age of eg. 9-17, as in another Section of the same Constitution, as defined above, ie. " anybody below the age of 18", which by implication means that under this law although she is a child, being under the age of 18, but since she is now married, must automatically discard her toga of childhood status and become an adult in the Federal Republic of Nigeria. In other words, we are saying that in Nigeria any child that is married has suddenly become an adult based solely on the fact that she is married? What a shame, Nigeria! This certainly is child abuse and should be frowned at. It is a national embarrassment to say the least. It is wrong because a child is a child and in the 21st century any girl less than 18 years should be regarded as a child even though in Northern Nigeria especially where the majority practise Islam, there is no age factor in ISLAMIC Marriage. Therefore, age is not part of the conditions which must be met before marriage can be solemnized in Islam viz. (i) Proposal and acceptance: aI Ijaab wa agubuul; (ii)Approval by both parents: ridaa al-waalidayn; (iii) payment of dowry by the groom: al-mihr; and (iv) the presence of at least two male witnesses at the Nikah ceremony: shaahidayn 'aadilayn. This has now given rise to the so-called "The Yerima Doctrine of Marriage" in Nigeria because around AD 2002, Alhaji Ahmed Zani Yerima, then Governor of Zamfara State in Northern Nigeria but now a Senator of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, officially contracted marriage with a beautiful Egyptian 13-year old minor which caused such an unprecedented furor and uproar even in the National ASSEMBLY of Nigeria at that time with Women Rights including Anti-Child Abuse Organizations like the National Agency for the Prohibition in Traffic in Persons (NAPTIP) raising a great deal of dust in condemnation of the said Governor. All the time we see so many paedophiles like the Yerimas of Nigeria going about taking more wives from under-aged kids while their children are sent abroad to acquire higher education while others acquire VVF. What a shame? The whole world is watching and laughing at Nigeria and Nigerians! That Islamic injunction however phrased states among other things that "a girl shall be deemed mature to be married when she has seen her menstruation, develops some breasts and has pubic strands of hair".

But whatever that means the practice of child marriages in Islam presupposes the supremacy of Islamic Jurisprudence over the Nigerian Constitution or even Canon Law and by implication that Nigeria as a secular state is populated only by Muslims. Nigeria is neither a Muslin nor Christian state and so is governed by secular laws which are international and religious laws should not be allowed to precipitate chaos and anarchy in the land. It is a sad commentary and evil that educated elites and public figures such as Senator Yerima being conscious of their grave responsibilities to defend the indefensible and innocent and to prohibit harm, hardship and violence in the land and to promote and enjoin what is good, uplifting and reasonable should actually encourage the devaluing and belittling practice of early marriage for the public good, the protection of the vulnerable and the realization of social and moral order.

To enable our girls in particular and women in general attain their fullest development and potential, it should definitely be the preoccupation and target of the Yerimas and children/women abusers to be working passionately with all the good men and women of society in the land who yearn for a better future for the womenfolk to stem the tide of child trafficking, withdrawing the girl-child from school for the purpose of marriage, sending children of school age hawking about along high ways and fast moving vehicles, market and motor parks, as also exposing them to abuses, rape, prostitution, violence and other acts of shame and indignities to which these innocent Nigerians are exposed daily. They should rather and as a matter of grave urgency override the so-called objectives of the Shania law and work for the promotion of human dignity, justice, compassion, the removal of pain, suffering and hardship as also the prevention of harm for the realization of the lawful benefits of good education of the girl-child in particular and the inculcation in them a sense of self-discipline and honour. Yet this should be even so in Christianity and from the scriptural understanding that there is no age restriction in marriage but in practice no Christian church would ever think of putting a child into such a critical condition of child marriage where the best interests of the child are paramount.

The Qur'an above anything else provides that the predominant consideration in matters relating to children should depend on the point at which they can be said to not be mentally immature "sufaha" anymore in the context of their communities. Whereas the fact is that most children, more than 50% of the children below 10 years of age in the northern part of Nigeria do not go to school except the Qur'anic ones. They are malnourished especially those from the North East/North West zones of Bauchi, Adamawa, Borno, Jigawa, Kano Katsina, Yobe, Kebbi, Zamfara and Sokoto and Marriage should be for adults and not for children. In fact, in Christian Marriage the age issue is a factor as in the Catholic Church for example the Pre-Nuptial Marriage form carries the column for filling the age of the intending spouses. The Christian Bible would never support the act of subjecting a child into a business that is meant for adults which is guided by maturity and understanding. The fact that a ten-year-old girl can menstruate does not indicate that she is mature enough to handle marriage. Any girl of school age ie. under 21 and in some cases beyond, who is serious with her life would always prefer to further her studies rather than subject herself to such a ridiculous scenario, and even no reputable higher Institution would admit a child below 15 years and no girl below 18 would ever consider herself ready for marriage. Even where her parents are not financially buoyant to sponsor her for higher education, she would have received a particular training as this is in vogue all over Nigeria. This means that the girl would be mature both physically and intellectually to contemplate marriage. But this is amazing because not many people would have thought a time would come when Nigerians would be forced to accept paedophilia as now being celebrated in Northern Nigeria. Even though there was the custom and tradition as a way of life throughout URUAN/EFIK over the centuries and from ancient times, this had always been the custom of the girl-child fattening and circumcision not child marriage. This was the event whereby a juvenile girl of 10-14 years though while in school would be quarantined for two weeks for the first instance in "NKUH? or ERINIM MBOBI EYEN-? W? ? ", since this was even an August school-holiday event - the season of IDEM IKW? a.k.a. EK? ? ? KEMBA cult organization. The idea was to enable her learn and begin to practice women affairs in house-craft, housekeeping, child care etc. even though she was still a child. Again this of course was URUAN/EFIK wisdom and method of training their young especially the girl-child in keeping with the biblical injunction "Train up a child (girl) suitable to his/her character and even when old, he/she will not depart from it". (Prov. 22:6).

NKUH? -ERINIM MBOBI BEFORE MARRIAGE

Traditionally since a particular religion or culture in the African context in those days had its way of handing marriage it was simply a private issue and families were known to arrange for their children's betrothal from their childhood, but the children both boys and girls would stay with their families until they were mature to understand the implications and on the condition that they liked to get married within such families and also liked the partners chosen for them ie. they liked each other as the case may be. URUAN/EFIK practiced the custom whereby especially among noble families and kindreds of high rank, repute and affluence a very enterprising and beautiful promising girl after this her first induction would be earmarked for a particular young boy in certain outstanding royal family or kindred either as a mark of friendship or reward of some favour or simply because this is a family of great or beautiful or enterprising children, etc. One may begin to wonder why URUAN/EFIK of all peoples ever permitted such an arrangement which on the surface looks like child abuse if not exploitation which tantamount to rape and the perpetration of child trafficking, blue murder and another form of slavery and against all reason and practical wisdom. URUAN/EFIK adores good manners and morals including virginity, dignity, honour and royalty. This should not be too far to seek, and for this reason URUAN/EFIK understands that the juvenile girl after first MBOBI often appears very beautiful and alluring and in order to protect her virginity and good morals there is need to present to her that the fulfillment of every adult female is marriage as the goal. That is why she ever went into NKUH? seclusion in the first place, and then the arrangement for her eventual marriage is not misplaced. Secondly up till recent URUAN/EFIK girls were not given in marriage to every comer especially if she is of noble birth. It is unthinkable that everybody could just approach from nowhere to ask for a princess hand in marriage in URUAN/EFIK and this should confine whatever options to that effect.

Girl seclusion in URUAN/EFIK involves domestic science and sex Education and mother craft. An under-aged girl child who is not yet deemed a teenager would already have been exposed to every sort of woman mystery and adolescence in the boudoir house long before she reaches that age of self-awareness. To forestall curiosity and every sort of temptation, the girl juvenile is discreetly secured and protected from evil machinations of pedophiliac in the society and those who find fun in raping babies because this is a sin against God and humanity. The girls that some of these men, most of them old enough to be their fathers and grandfathers went to marry, know nothing about marriage in the practical sense. Is this the time to expect them to start learning all those things with their so-called husbands and how does an old man feel sleeping with a kid of below ten years of age? I think such men should be arrested, tried and jailed accordingly for committing blue murder because they are children predators. But of greater consequence is that some, mostly of the Islamic faith including even the Directorate of Muslim Rights Concern would come to the rescue and defense of this sort of marriage arrangement. They argue that since there is no age limitation for marriage in Islam and that there is prescription for protective solemnization of marriage without consummation which means the girl bride who is of tender age should be untouched by the man until she attains puberty. But this is begging the question because Islam already defines what puberty is deemed to imply. Yet still they are also quick to reason that there is another major condition for child marriage which is the stipulation for the girl bride herself "as of right to repudiate the marriage when she attains maturity if she does not like her spouse." But this would be medicine after death because everybody knows that in practice this is not the case at all as enough harm would already have been done to warrant the repudiation in the first place.

The Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria Section 42 forbids discrimination on the basis origin, belief, or sex and makes it difficult for an under-age married girl to retrieve her abrogated rights such that she is not eligible to vote being under 18, being unable to stand as guardian and sign documents for her children. In a situation like this, how would a nation of fistula-ravaged women who are divorced, abandoned and still in their teens raise new members for its population growth? This is simply a nation of deceit that has mounted defense for the abnegation of her future. It is not mandatory in Islam that girls who are still minors must be married off, so to insist that the practice is sacrosanct, given the background for the needs in Northern Nigeria is so incongruous because under Sharia laws, the practice is only permissible not mandatory and Islamic Jurisprudence determines that where it is harmful to individuals and to the community it should be discouraged. Islamic countries such as Yemen, Egypt, Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria Somalia and even Bangladesh with the majority of high Muslim populations set a minimum of 18 years for marriage in the acknowledgement that there are serious social, physical and mental health risks associated with child marriages. This progressive provision has become necessary given that these indisputable facts can place such a heavy burden on the accountable and god fearing leadership in a majority of Muslim countries to protect the vulnerable in their Muslim societies.

The overriding objectives of the Shania itself include the promotion of human dignity, justice, compassion, the removal of hardship, the prevention of harm, the realization of lawful benefits of all the people and the education of the individual by inculcating in him/her a sense of self-discipline and restraint. This would tantamount to playing games with the Child's Rights Act and contributing to a life of diminished opportunities for the girl child now given off for marriage. Unarguably, it is therefore not unreasonable to expect that the educated elite and public figures in Nigeria including the Yerimas should, conscious of their grave responsibilities, aim at prohibiting rather than encouraging harm and in this context, this devaluing and belittling practice of early marriages is in the public good for the protection of the vulnerable and the realization of social order and benefits so that all our girls can attain their fullest possible potentials.

(ii) RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL IMPLICATIONS OF EARLY CHILD MARRIAGES

There are many untoward implications regarding early marriage, which constitute child abuse and debasement of womanhood. These implications include religious, social and physical health. In the Christian sense, it is an affront bordering on sexual abuse of the girl, child which tantamount to sacrilege and violation of the temple of God. It is forced marriage because it hounds under-aged girls who are below 18 years into marriages they know nothing about and a contravention of international laws, protocols and ethics as well as the law of God. Most children especially of the rich are given the best opportunity to develop and go to school up to the university and very often to post graduate level before getting married. Whereas it is mostly children of the poor who suffer from early marriage having been withdrawn from school and given out in marriage to men old enough to be their fathers and grandfathers.

This is more so especially in the northern part of Nigeria where education seems to be of little value to the parents. This practice in particular infracts several international and regional human rights instruments and laws signed and ratified by the Nigerian nation. It even contradicts the Child Rights Act which is a domestic legislation that "no person below the age of 18 shall be married nor vote in an election in Nigeria." Thirdly, it denies the girl child given in marriage the opportunity to mature and make informed decisions and choices regarding her personal welfare and progress in life such that it robs her of decision making powers and the right to education to any level possible. I don't think any girl in her right senses would want to subject herself to early marriage which is another form of slavery. All early marriages have many untoward implications for the girl child in particular.

First of all, an underage child who is forced to marry: In the first place the girl child is not given the opportunity to mature and develop and make informed decisions and choices especially concerning issues that affect her, so she is automatically robbed of decision making powers. Secondly and most importantly, she is denied the right to education to the highest level she is capable of as she is in such a retrogressive and uncivilized manner withdrawn from school in order to be given out for marriage whereas the global and even national quest for the girl child is currently gathering momentum. Therefore, her right to development is thereby violated. The development of a child's personality, talents, mental and physical abilities to her highest potential is also denied. Both the United Nations Charter and the African Child Rights Act and Welfare have defined that "every child ie. 'Every human being male or female below the age of 18 years' shall have the right to education" while at the same time stipulating that the education of the child shall be directed to: "the development of the child's personality, talents mental and physical abilities to their fullest potential".

It also recommends the preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society in the spirit of understanding, tolerance, mutual respect, equality of sexes and friendship among all peoples, ethnic tribal and religious groups. So how does the Nigerian girl child fare in all this? The International World Conference of Women Societies had determined among others that the equality of access to and attainment of educational qualifications are necessary if more women are to become agents of change. So how does the Nigerian girl child fare in all this? Regrettably and notwithstanding, any move to perpetrate the marrying off of the girl child by that very act necessarily brings about discrimination against girls regarding access to education and jeopardizes their position among women in the civilized world owing to those barbaric, obnoxious and retrogressive customary attitudes of forced early marriage, pregnancies, sexual harassment and inadequate educational opportunities. Thirdly, truth is that ultimately however these young adolescents make efforts to try and acquire education sooner or later; they find it difficult to combine the onerous responsibility of being a wife and a mother with schooling at the same time. They drop out if they have not been removed already in the first place. Consequently, more than 70% of adolescent girls in the above northern states are unable to read or write and so being deprived so early of education including access to information technology and knowledge, they remain bereft of the purchasing power necessary for adequate diet, health skills and even support in the case of emergencies all of which could have enabled them ride above the circumstances of abject poverty. The literacy of women is key to improving health, nutrition and education in the family and empowering women to participate in societal decision-making.

It is paradoxical and an irony of fate and misplaced values that many elitist Muslims like the Yerimas of this world would rather want their wives and daughters get treated by female personnel – doctors and gynaecologists, when they fall ill or require such technical and elitist medical attention and yet they are by implication continuously advocating and perpetuating child marriages, deliberately closing avenues for girls in Northern Nigeria in particular to aspire to such professions. Fourthly such deprivations of formal and non-formal education translate at such a critical age into restrictions on mobility, domestic burdens, and the denial of sundry freedoms in respect of survival. Fifthly; such a girl-child faces severe health hazards as a result of early marriage and eventual pregnancy. Since her reproductive organs are not fully developed and ready for child birth, she could die in the process of course as usually happens on account of complications such as heavy bleeding fistula, infection, anemia and other ailments which contribute to high mortality rates of both mother and child. She also stands the risk of Vestico Vaginal Fistula - VVF attack most common among children having babies which leaves them abandoned with stench owing to urine and faeces coming out from their private, a situation very common in the Northern part of Nigeria as girl marriage has become the custom there. Sixthly, such a girl child also inevitably suffers from untold pain and anguish and other psychological problems. Seventhly, this forced marriage of the girl child breeds immorality, and promotes promiscuity and prostitution as men adults are beginning to behave irrationally to these under-age girls nowadays leaving these children socially emasculated, isolated and public rejects.

This factor alone also remains the main cause of under-five deaths in the country. It means our children are stunted and their future is short-changed because the health and nutritional needs of their mothers are linked with young under-age mothers ill-equipped to undertake adequate child-care responsibilities. Other multiple health risks arising from child marriage include sexual exploitation, rampant rape which under-age girls are subjected to as well as limited access to reproductive health services despite the inescapable dangers of contracting HIV/AIDS, STDs – sexually transmitted diseases, and the debilitating abhorrent ailment of VVF/RVF mentioned above. This is notable in the areas mentioned above whereby there is a tear in the flesh between the vagina and the urinary passage due to difficult and prolonged labour resulting in uncontrolled passing of urine and faeces by the victims in the case of recto-vaginal fistula – RVF with attendant abandoning by their so-called husbands that comes with such ailments as this goes on and on.

This VVF is a very abnormal condition and occurs when the fistulous tract extending between the bladder and the vagina allows the continuous involuntary discharge of urine into the vaginal vault. Medical experts say urine and faeces leak often inducing very painful infections of the bladder and the kidneys and if such leaks are not immediately and effectively tackled essentially through surgery, they could cause death. This condition which often has profound effects on the patient's emotional and physical wellness could be triggered by a variety of factors. It could result from coerced sex like the case in point ie. adults sleeping with kid wives, violent rape, badly treated or long-standing urinary tract infections, crudely procured abortion and obstetric fistula ie. childbirth. Obstetric fistula according to Wikipedia Encyclopaedia occurs when a prolonged labour presses the unborn baby tightly against the mother's pelvis, cutting off blood flow to the Vestico vaginal wall, the affected tissue thus may necrotize leaving a hole in the vagina. Some cases of course could be caused by problems in surgery such as Caesarian section of hysterectomy or as a result of mistakes in the practice of traditional circumcision. But in particular, most cases of VVF are caused by this unfortunate situation of child marriage through sex with husbands old enough to be the girl-children grandfathers. Apart from the horror of making them depend on catheters in order to discharge their fluid wastes, their smelling like rotten eggs most of the time gets some of these hapless under-teenage mothers' heartless husbands 'speak out with their legs' abandoning them to their fate.

These predatory husbands always abandon them because of their VVF affliction to go hunt for other under-teens who they will speedily deflower and marry as replacements. And this is the kind of fate the Yerimas and their clique inflict on the Nigerian girl child through their actions. In the 21st century and age of Information Technology, when most sensible people use the power of information and knowledge to control their destinies, it is unbelievable and indeed obscene and absurd to find the Yerimas who unlike those of other descent nations across the globe have outlawed child-marriage pegging the minimum age a girl could get married at 18. They have succeeded in slapping this unfortunate tag on Nigeria of all countries. It is a big shame indeed. With shining stars in Nigeria's political firmament, it is an irony of sorts to find amazons like Dr. Ngozi Okonjo-Iweala, former Vice-President of the World Bank and current Minister of Finance, Mrs. Oby Ezekwesili, former Vice President (Africa) of the World Bank, Professor Dora Akunjili, multiple award-winning former Director General of NAFDAC, also a former Minister of Information and National Orientation, Justice Mary Odili of the Supreme Court , Justice Fati Abubakar, Chief Judge of Niger State, Hon. Abike Dabiri-Arewa Chairman of the House of Representatives Committee on Diaspora Affairs, also one of the longest serving lawmakers in the country, Barrister Miriam Uwais and Dr. Mrs. Joe Okei-Odumakin both leading Rights Activists, etc shining all over the world like a million stars and adorning the Nigerian horizon. If these were married off while under teens how would Nigeria record such shining examples of great women of repute who defied all odds and went to school instead of getting married? Yes, education is it, Child marriage is not as one Sunday Sun columnist, DR. Shola Oshunkeye has commented. We should not forget also about the psycho-social and emotional consequences and torture including domestic violence, abandoned street children with the attendant deprivations of their rights and freedom, these under-aged mothers have to endure, their wellbeing and happiness thus severely compromised thereby.

E. MARRIAGE & DIVORCE/CRASHED MARRIAGES: WHITHER URUAN?

The divine and statutory natural Union of Marriage: Naturally, the joy of parents often knows no bounds when their children grow up and go into marriage to set up their own families and this then goes to broaden the base of the marriage institution. But now what we are seeing in URUAN/EFIK and almost everywhere we turn. We see that the marriage is coming under the increasing threat of break-ups and even the crashing of the institution itself. The worst hit in all this is the crashing in young marriages all over the place. Many concerned persons especially clerics and psychologists have come to the conclusion that the inability of both religious bodies as well as URUAN/EFIK Elders to live up to their responsibilities as also the false prophecies going round are largely responsible for this unsavory trend. As earlier observed, the issue of high courts which have assumed the divine authority of alpha and omega, of binding and loosing and taking over the divine right and authority of the Church and customary courts to adjudicate in matters so execrable and sublime as Matrimony or whatever name called by the civil society. The high courts are inundated with divorce cases and subsequent dissolutions of marriages, while the customary courts which are eminently deputed are ignored for such cases because of the preference, these same young couples have for statutory marriages otherwise called 'court marriages'. However, in the Catholic Church for example, no marriage agreement can be entered into by the putative couples unless they must have first concluded the requirements of customary traditional marriage within their tribe and kindred which nowadays has become a mere fashion and ceremonial. Even as I write, some churches carry on first with official “Sacramental marriage” in the church and then move on to the venue of “traditional marriage” that same day. What a misplacement of priorities! The understanding of the ancients has always been the 'acceptance and blessing' of the couples, first by the ancestors before the tribe and kindred and sanction by the instrument of the sanctifying power of the Sacrament of Matrimony in the Church, at least for believers and Christians. So whither is URUAN/EFIK in all this? This is the question we all have to answer before the tribe and clan. What is happening to our modern marriages and the youths?

A close examination and study have shown that the number of divorce cases has shot up in recent years owing to the fact that most youths in URUAN/EFIK, nay Nigeria have now come to prefer ordinance or statutory marriages to the traditional and Christian and some of them do not just know what they were going into when they consented to court marriage in the first place. They simply do not know what they are going into when they are coerced into getting married in court simply because it has now become fashionable; marriage is now just a picnic show. Many victims of distressed marriages of course have become totally heart – broken. As far as URUAN/EFIK of our forebears are concerned, marriage whether in the Church or court is a divine institution and a very serious one at that and young people should be admonished on this. It is an everlasting union 'till death do us part' between the couples with a view to building up the 'domestic church' ie. a God centred home'. It is also an institution that issues a 'Certificate of Commitment and Occupancy' to the parties at its commencement and does not have graduation time as it were like other institutions. It is manufactured on earth but to be consummated in Heaven, and couples should do well to note that.

1. DIVORCE/FAILED AND CRASHED MARRIAGES
SINGLE PARENTHOOD IN MARRIAGES AND RELATIONSHIPS

URUAN/EFIK nation is having in her hands and very weightily so in recent times, the scourge of failed marital relationships and divorce. There is also the scourge of single parenthood of both sexes, more so of the female sex. More and more men and women today are settling for what I may say, "Living happily apart" relationships. Today in URUAN/EFIK the rate at which relationships crash is becoming too alarming and worrisome and this calls for serious concern and urgent solutions. Our customary courts are awash with divorce suits on daily basis, often over minute and insignificant issues which if maturely and urgently handled could have saved the couples from heartbreaks and even murder if not suicide, simply because they understood little or nothing concerning what marriage is all about. Single ladies are the worst hit and some are beginning to live like hermits because they cannot manage seeming irreconcilable differences in their marriage. Many are not thinking again of the beautiful times and dreams of meeting prospective partners, getting married, having the desired number of children and living happily after; but the reality is far from that. Some have got "married" simply because the female partner or should I say, "consort" got pregnant along the line or rather, she had simply moved or lived in, and so the inevitable happened since the families would not approve of their getting children out of wedlock. But did they know that marriage is for life and that no child should be brought into this world a bastard? Now that they have discovered they are incompatible, or that certain things have happened below their expectations or merely that the marriage has become dull, they now want to "part amicably and get divorced sooner or later." Now that this has happened most URUAN/EFIK girls simply have made up their minds never to live again with a man, if they want romance they can have it as much as they need, but to now get back or go to another man, probably stay at home to look after the children, see to the cleaning of the house, warm the bed of the man Nilly Willy and hold down a full-time job, ba-ba, nsa mi-o; these can never be on their cards again. So now URUAN/EFIK is breeding a new set of men and women who can't live as husbands and wives anymore; any man or woman that comes into their lives does so on their own terms. They are fed up with rows about finance or silly little things that drive a wage between couples like not turning off the lights or air conditioners and always leaving them plugged on, having to breast-feed the baby or having to put hot meals on the table, having to wait for hours while the other is gossiping out her time at the salons instead of going out with friends to the club or somewhere; being caught or reported as sleeping around with a close friend and even with a housemaid or relation.

Our young people are now becoming more and more "happy and confident" with themselves regardless of who comes in or out in their lives because as they reason out, they are only behaving true to their human nature and know they came into the world alone and would one day go out of it alone and therefore there is no point tying themselves down to any partner and being reliant on anyone else to make them happy, hence they do not care. As for the single motherhood phenomenon, the argument is that the society lays all problems of the children at the women's door steps from those who become violent or emotionally or physically stunted to those who are under-achieving offsprings. They also claim that a child is happier with one loving parent because living with both parents isn't so important to a child as having one who loves unconditionally, protects and takes care of it rather than living with both parents who nag at each other, fight and wound or maim themselves, such that should one not show up when he/she should, or is no longer in contact, one can make up for the absence since it is such children who stay together with parents who are always in conflict that suffer the most damage. A mother going to work doesn't necessarily ruin the children's lives because research has shown that these children continue to do well at school because their mothers love and care for them. In terms of psychological wellbeing and behavior children of working mums, they do just as well as those whose mums stay at home. If both parents are together, the work load of the mum increases threefold and that means less time to spend with the kids. Even so, the man consumes a significant chunk of the wife's time and attention. Then single mothers are not tied to the man's demands, and so they can spend more time with the children. In fact, according to this sort of reasoning and justification of single mothers, a suitable male role model doesn't have to be the dad. And so whither URUAN/EFIK*; well, over to you URUAN/EFIK! The point in all these is that marriages are breaking up everywhere and every now and then simply people are placing their priorities wrongly. People nowadays are getting into marriage for quite the wrong reasons. They have not prepared before they jump into it, they end up jumping out faster than they jumped in!

Couples should forget the use of the "D" word (divorce) or even" S" (separation) even in their heated arguments, and they should avoid threatening to pack and baggage or heading to the lawyer' office because these words are downright hurtful and repeated warning. Using them can result in a spouse calling the other's bluff. Sometimes these partners act as if the intensity of their anger gives them the license to say or do anything. Threatening a break-up is never useful but only makes the probability of separation more likely. Bringing up past arguments and disagreements simply means they haven't resolved the problem in the first place. It is necessary for them to address issues as they occur and quickly come to some sort of resolution – agreeing to disagree. Leave it there and respect each other's opinion! They should always strive to tell each why it bothers him/her and that he/she likes to work on a solution. One important point is to log off when his/her attention seems to be focused somewhere because the other may feel unimportant since they haven't learnt to make quality time a top priority for each other.

2. INFIDELITY, TWO-TIMING & CHEATING ON MARRIED PARTNERS AS REASONS FOR DIVORCE

The Word of God puts it so succinctly:

> "The Creator from the beginning made them male and female, and He said: for this reason, a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one. So they are no longer two but one. What therefore God has joined together, let no man put asunder And I say to you: whoever divorces his wife except for unchastely (infidelity in adultery and fornication) and marries another, commits adultery"(Mt 19:3-7;Cf Deut. 24:1).

Unless people try to read and interprete what the Bible has not said, this passage of Sacred Scripture as presented before the whole of humanity is an uncompromising assertion concerning the indissolubility of marriage especially in view of the parallel passages viz: (Mk 10:11). "And he said to them (Disciples)";Whoever divorces his wife and marries another, commits adultery against her; and if she divorces her husband and marries another, she commits adultery"(Lk16:18)." Everyone who divorces his wife and marries another commits adultery, and he who marries a woman divorced from her husband commits adultery; "and (1Cor 7:10). "To the married I give charge, not I but the Lord, that the wife should not separate from her husband, but if she does, let her remain single or else be reconciled to her husband – and that the husband should not divorce his wife".

Though it is unlikely that all these three passages have omitted the acceptive clause by Jesus it is clear that owing to the Rabbinic problem that came later on, suggesting that the crime of adultery - porneia might warrant divorce, it seems by contrast that the Latin translation of nisi = 'even if' and not simply 'except' as the two meanings are renderings of Latin: nisi which could have concerned the Judaeo-Christian circles. Still another translation of the acceptive clause is freedom and that implies separation without re-marriage although such a solution was unknown in Judaism, but on occasion of the demands of Jesus, it must have led to a new situation and this is clearly presupposed by 1Cor 7:11 as seen already. It also means that URUAN/EFIK of yesteryears was also uncompromising with regard to indissolubility of marriage between her sons and daughters "except", again using the biblical acceptive clause, to the effect that the divorce / marriage between two URUAN/EFIK son and daughter had ended irretrievably should the wife carry away or the husband throw/put outside the family/household aba ukp? - water pot which is meant for drinking by all in the house, family/kindred and even visitors. But even at that, the kindred always tried to intervene and try to bring them back to bed and board except that in such a serious situation it would require the invocation of traditional rites before they can come together as husband and wife again. Still this implies that marriage in URUAN/EFIK tradition was not dissoluble after all as everybody in the kindred would be up and doing to appease the ancestors and the ekpo- ka-owo spirits/ghosts of adultery in order to resettle the parties and bring them back to their matrimonial homes. But recent studies especially from the reports from the World Health Organization –WHO – have shown that not on in URUAN/EFIK but all over about 35% of married women and 60% of married men are unfaithful at some time or another during their married life and can range from a one-night drunken stand or date to a long them planned affair.

Nevertheless, there are some common signs that a partner has started an affair or is thinking of starting one. These could include but not limited to changes in sexual desire or habits when a partner suddenly wants more or less sex and starts asking for something that has never been part of their sex life; or one of the partners suddenly starts taking a great deal of care over his/her appearance and dress code eg. going to the gym, wearing new make-ups or aftershave and smelling different or becoming more secretive, evasive, dismissive, and defensive regarding use of new pass words; or hiding mails and mobile phones and even becoming irritated and impatient by picking up quarrels even fights over the smallest things which were never so previously. In other words, there is a change in lifestyle in either of the partners who may have suddenly found new interests in or taken up new hobbies or pastimes, or suddenly showering you with gifts and perks of affection perhaps as a sign of guilt; or mentioning someone more frequently than usual as though they are on his/her mind a lot. One of these signs or reasons may or may not mean a partner is cheating or being unfaithful as a there are other reasons for these changes of attitude eg. Stress at work, a resolution by a partner to improve his/her or the relationship. Be that as it may, infidelity affects relationships deeply and it takes time to rebuild trust and decide whether a married partner has a basis they can both move forward. People are also unfaithful because of lack of fulfillment in the marriage; fear of commitment as or long-term issues eg. having children, need for more sex or sexual variety; need for excitement; building up self-esteem to feel desirable; lack of stable role-models relationships when growing up as an adult or even inability to resist the advances of others; sexual addiction to make a partner jealous; escape to a no strings less complicated relationships but unable to communicate that fact.

Nevertheless, infidelity has never meant the end of marriage in URUAN now and before, because there can always be life after infidelity as seen above. Some partners are unfaithful for the thrill and excitement of it. Anybody who has been following some pages of Chioma Gabriel, Aunty Julie, Bunmi Sofola, dear Rebecca, and Candida especially in Vanguard Week-ends and other Newspapers on relationships can testify to these types of thrills and excitements. Others have affairs simply because at best they want to prove a point and want to get even with the other partner who may be cheating or at worst they want to get out of the marriage but cannot communicate that fact. Still others may have extra-marital affairs as a cry for help, an indication that something is seriously wrong with the marriage though admittedly, this can never be the best way of telling a partner that he/she is unhappy. Sometimes the very fact that a married partner is unfaithful or two-timing with an ex- allows a couple to take an honest look at their marriage and work through their problems together to create a more stable, stronger and fun-living and open partnership. Hence it can be a wake-up call that some marriages need, because in many cases especially with the wives, they often complain they have not got any fulfillment in the marriage either because their husbands are stingy, or are drunkards and spendthrifts on drinks, and so do not appropriately care for them and the children's welfare including the payments of bills, school fees and buying uniforms. Some do not even talk about giving pocket money because most of them are simply nincompoops, irresponsible and never do-wells and are lacking in ambition for a brighter future. And such indeed do appear to be awful, weak and wishy-washy before their peers and neighbours.

3. NOTABLE INFRACTIONS & REMEDIES FOR THE FEMALES: WHAT TO AVOID
Precautionary Measures & Cases for Crashed Marriages and Divorce: Yes, it is all about marriage /relationships gone soar and it is either that the husband has set up a new flat with a young lover in tow or wants to bring her home, or that the wife just wants to move on. But whatever makes them to get fed up or start despising the love of his/her youth is not cheering at all, it is scary and sad! Nevertheless, one can always become the architect of her own problems, especially talking specifically to and about the females in marriage/relationships because no man can endure a troublesome wife for long, rather it is easier for women to do so. When a wife treats her husband like child, such conduct immediately puts her man feeling “less than” and nothing triggers a man's resentment faster than feelings of inadequacy. The wife may feel that her husband has not been doing enough to get a (new) job or that promotion the family desperately needs in the circum stances. Some prodding may be fine but it is certainly not right for her to scold him or talk down on him as if he was a child. Whatever the economic situation she must understand that he is her man and deserves the respect befitting of the man who paid her bride price, she should allow her feelings be far in-between. Very often many wives fret and storm even to the point of bringing down the roof over husbands “infidelities”. But they should understand this: 'it's still a man's world' because after all said and done, if her man catches her, she will go; if she catches him, she will equally have to go and this is not just condoning acts of infidelity by men. It is simply about making men resentful of their wives! Another area is about the wife withholding sex as a punishment. I think the Bible has ruled on this: Hear St. Paul;” The husband should give to his wife her conjugal rights, and the likewise the wife to her husband…Do not refuse one anther except by agreement for a reason” (1Cor 7:3-5). Although women generally need emotional intimacy to make love, men express theirs through sex; when a wife turns down sex, in her husband's mind she is turning him down as a person.

Therefore, using sex, a bargaining chip to get her needs met, is not negotiation but emotional blackmail which can easily alienate the husband because it makes him feel less love from her and he will resent by giving her less love, attention, care etc. in return.

A husband's resentment leading to divorce and break up in relationships may arise when the wife tries too hard to change her man. Nobody can change anyone except God. It is better for her to focus on her own change rather than her spouse's behaviours. Men often marry hoping their adorable wives would not change while on the contrary women marry hoping that they can change their men for the better. What an irony! O Yes, because some wives see marriage as he starting point for their husband's make-over. There may be some improvements, but problems will arise when her expectations are not met or when the man finds her expectations offensive. When the husband feels his home is no more his castle and he can't just continue to be a guy whether just walking around in his boxers or letting out burp, he will feel like he's been put in a box where he is to act proper all the time. So wives why not just let the little things slide and you make out the best for both of you! One wonders when wives or 'women come of age' begin to make important decisions without her man's input especially concerning use of money and this can be a top source of disagreements. As many marriage counselors have noted, the chief sources of friction are bed and board – ie. budgeting and keeping the bed warm. Whether considering buying a plot of land, a new car or even paying the children's fees or signing up the kids for extra lessons, the partner deserves a say. The same affects decisions about how and where to spend "your time", inviting family members or friends over for a meal, etc. Over time these can drive them apart. In any case, the wife should not involve other people in her marriage because complaining to friends and family can break the husband's trust and threaten the safety of their bubble as it is so humiliating and hurtful; rushing to other's with family problems.

It is better to seek the therapist's or counselor's advice in order to keep things confidential. The last but not the least not to cause the husband's resentment by not giving him the chance to prove himself or not helping/supporting him to do so. As a mother "parenting can be very different from the fathers", a husband's resentment can gallop if he notices that the kids are growing with gaps in their competency and independence because the wife doesn't trust her man to parent well. It sends the wrong signal that only she is right all the time. When our society is full of delinquents and miscreants, it is largely due to the lack of fatherly presence in their lives. Wives should rather reinforce their husbands and encourage them for providing positive developmental endowments and contributions in their children's lives.

4. WHAT COUPLES MUST DO & NOT DO DURING MARRIAGE A– Z MISTAKES TO AVOID DURING MARRIAGE/RELATIONSHIPS

Marriage especially Christian Marriage is never easy. Couples are to be always on their toes to be able to brace up to the vagaries and demands of two seemingly unknown persons having to agree to live together as one body and one soul till death do them part in the age-old Institution known as MARRIAGE which everybody accepts to be the first ever Institution of mankind. Vouchsafed by God Himself in the Garden of Eden at creation, Marriage involves people who must consider themselves imperfect, as nobody is perfect anyway, so it should not be surprising that mistakes crop up here and there along the line during Marriage. This is quite to be expected. There are therefore some common mistakes which couples often make on a daily basis as they live their married lives together, sometimes unintentionally though. These mistakes make it difficult to sustain a fulfilling relationship especially when children become part and parcel of that family unit. Some mistakes however spell doom in marriage and for relationships, and are best avoided altogether. Married couples and those involved in intimate Relations should as much as possible strive to keep their relationships on the right tract by avoiding these common pitfalls. The saving grace on the matter and good news are that many of these mistakes can be avoided if a couple takes time to evaluate how they relate to one another. Again, they should keep their relationship by avoiding these common mistakes in relationships:

A. JEALOUSY: Jealousy is a sign that there is insecurity within the marriage/relationship. That insecurity usually has little or nothing to do with one's partner but everything to do with a lack of self-esteem for one's partner. When a couple feels that his/her partner is lacking something or is not good enough, they are bound to feel jealous, one way or the other even to the point of imagining that his/her partner is looking for love with someone else outside. Jealousy is an ugly bit! It drives a person to engage in some unbecoming behaviours such a sulking, stalking, spying, manipulating and even accusing the other. There is no faster way to drive a wage between the partners and to send him/her into someone else' arms than through jealousy.

B. DISHONESTY: Lying to one's partner can lead to mistrust. And mistrust will surely kill the marriage/relationship. If it is found out that one partner is lying or cheating on the other, he/she should be bold enough to ask the other why? The reason may be very revealing. Perhaps there is another area of the relationship/marriage that needs to be worked on. Perhaps it will reveal something else more interesting. This cheating and lying can lead to the extent of actually stealing things from the other partner under the unreasonable understanding that everything a partner has belongs to the other. This is not true otherwise it questions the very idea of ownership of things. Surely we own things both in private and in public – personal or otherwise. We cannot just fix a problem if it never revealed something. Partners must strive at all times to be honest with each other and learn to deal with whatever results from that honesty.

C. DEBTS/INDEBTEDNESS: Financial matters as also the marriage Debt as it is called can make or mar relations and marriages. Money and donative love are the two things couples fight about. Let them fess up about their personal debts because for better or worse they must needs set up a financial game plan with the budget together. Regarding the other side of the coin, St Paul's admonition to the Corinthians will do the trick and solve their marital problems as they go about their daily concerns in harmony and happiness."

> The husband should give to his wife her conjugal rights, and likewise the wife to her husband. For the wife does not rule over her own body, but the husband does, likewise the husband does not rule over his own body, but the wife does. Do not refuse one another except perhaps by agreement for a reason, that you may devote yourselves to prayer; but then come together again, lest Satan tempt you through lack of self-control" (1Cor 7:3-5).

Intimacy issues of accepting the lack of intimacy or too much intimacy is not the normal thing to worry about. Let it flow naturally. Couples should not assume a lack of intimacy as just part of having young children and being in a long –term relationship. Many do not want to see their relationship as just romantic. Sex should not be a bargain tool as observed elsewhere here, such that men are seen to do the housework in exchange for sex. They should play along and carry on normally in Christian donative love. It also applies to paying actual debts owed to each other, including services, promises made, and finances, etc.

D. FIXATION ABOUT BABY- OBSESSION: It is easy to be come easily fixated on the next big step, but chill out in no time. As we are all aware, the average couples have kids within the next three years of marriage. This means there is the time, so why rush? Married couples should take it easy, co-operate with God and savour the moments now available to them when they won't have to be waking up for a brutal 4am baby feeding. But let them not extend their luck too much by doing abhorrent and abominable things called family planning techniques which tantamount to practising using abortifacients by euphonically saying "we are practicing contraception." It is immoral and contradicts God's plan to the effect that "every marital act shall be open to conception" (Cf. Humanae Vitae. Pp Paul VI, Citta Vaticana, 1968, 48). Many marriages have ended up in bareness on account of worrying about when the child will come next. Let them try to live their normal daily lives by not having an overdose of sex and taking bubble baths. Too much of anything is the evil thereof. Always remember: a pill a day – takes the child away. Fixation can also extend to decisions about mentoring and children's needs as well as the best ways and means of children's upbringing and kitting the. See also No. L.

E. FIGHTING ABOUT THE SAME ISSUES OVER AND OVER AGAIN: Couples usually live on the common belief that a relationship will improve if they have better communication and conflict resolution skills. This is often not so at all. The reality is that they can go around in circles trying to resolve their differences, but all the while they are finding even more differences and problems. And the problem remains a recurring decimal. The best thing is just to stop getting at each other's nerves. Period.

F. GETTING RE-CONNECTED THROUGH ESTRANEOUS COMMITMENTS: This mistake is concerned about being so busy and consumed by other commitments such that you don't have time for each other on daily basis, and instead only try to rekindle your romance by arranging 'date nights' at your personal disposition hoping your partner will fall into it. It doesn't work like that. Date nights are a fantastic idea, but problems arise when you rely solely on date nights to reconnect with each other. Due to the lack of daily connection you may find that your date nights actually become routine and uninteresting. One can easily feel exhausted from the hectic week and you struggle to find something new to do. Date nights then only end up becoming a mechanical and routine task and a waste of time.

G. SELFISHNESS: When a partner wants everything in the marriage to always go his/her way with little regard for what the other partner wants, this is nothing but selfishness because part of being married or being couples is sharing with the other partner. They should be ready and willing to share ideas, even their thoughts and dreams, their plans, their successes and failures if need be. To continue to act as if he/she is still single when it is evident there is another person to consider, will cause problems (Cf. Ekarika J. P. 182-5 & Saturday Sun www.sunnews on line.com14 /9/13, 27).

H. POSSESSIVENESS: When one or both partners in a relation/marriage becomes possessive of his/her partner, trouble is often bound to brew up. When a person becomes possessive to the extreme, that person to spend every waking moment with his/her partner; he inevitably becomes jealous of the time the other partner eg. spends with his/her family or friends, or even at his/her employment (should the other not be so employed). Very often then, the partner will have to spend time with his/her parents and family relations/friends if any. They end up being altogether intolerable of one another simply to avoid arguments, naggings and wranglings.

I. DISRESPECT: There should always be mutual respect between couples. Disrespect in a relationship is a sure fire and conflagration to let a partner know that he/she doesn't care a hoot about the other. It can be terrible because this is the hallmark of good relationship in marriage wherein St. Paul had admonished and warned: in his 5th Chapter Epistle to the Ephesians (Eph. 5:21-26). If a partner truly cares, he/she is not going to engage in name-calling or demeaning words. Rather he/she is going to look out for the best interest of his/her partner and is going to show appreciation for whatever the other partner does. He/he will listen to the partner when he/she is talking, and even if he/she disagrees, he/she will express that in a respectful manner.

J. HARBOURINING RESENTMENT AND BLAME: It is easy to lay all the blame at the other: "It's all my partners' fault", but it won't work-o! When things aren't going right in your `relationship/marriage, you should not resort to the blame game. eg. a wife who thinks the relationship would be happier if her husband communicated more effectively and expressed his feelings more appropriately, while the husband thinks their relationship would be happier if his wife would initiate more sex and be less nagging - each one ending up laying the blame at each other's doo. This cannot solve the problems of a loving and committed relationship. All this boils down to the fact that each partner thinks. 'It's your fault not mine.'

K. CRAZY FIGHTING: Getting hitched isn't a free pass to hit below the belt. When you are getting really heated, learn to walk away to cool down for a few minutes. Most men do this; the wives could also try it out. It works in most cases.

L. TURNING YOUR ATTENTION & ENERGY TO CHILDREN, WORK/OR HOBBIES: With children in tow, it's natural for either of the partners especially the wives to focus on their children's needs. It's actually the same instinct that you and your partner have when you devote more energy to developing your career so that you can provide financial security for your family. However, because of this shift in focus, relationships become a low priority item. Gradually, intimate conversations get replaced by discussions about childcare and chores. Without you even realizing it, your interactions can become more conflict-driven. In order to avoid these, you dodge getting into arguments with each other by working longer hours at your duty posts, focusing more and more attention on the kids, pursuing hobbies outside of home (in the case of husbands at times) only going out on dates or having boys/girls nights out with each other etc. Then surely over time, you start having more fun when you're apart, reinforcing the negative cycle that just ensues before you with your eyes wide open. Who cares? It is high time to have self-introspection before things get worse-o!

M. ALIENATING YOUR FRIENDS: Friends are key to a successful marriage, so tag along on those girls'/boys' nights out. Just because you're not guy-hunting doesn't mean you can't be a supportive wing woman/man. The only thing is to maintain the limits. Virtue stands in the middle. "Virtus in medio stat", says Seneca.

N. NOT OUTLAWING THE IN-LAWS: The crux of the matter lies in this and every old boy/girl understands it: shine your eyes! Fifty percent of couples have a problematic relationship with their in-laws. Married couples will do well by managing their expectations well. Even if your spouse is bitching about his/her family, resist the urge to chime in. It will bite you in the butt later. What I would add to this and to all the others above is your quiet reconnection with your Maker. Many couples seem to forget to pray and that "A family that prays (and I also ADD: that eats) together, stays together. Simply try it out, and you will be glad you do it and always often. Try to pray in season and out of season. A FAMILY THAT PRAYS TOGETHER STAYS AND LIVES TOGETHER IN PEACE WITH GOD, WITH OTHERS AND WITH THEMSELVES. AMEN.

O. NEVER AGREE TO OPEN RELATIONSHIPS: There are quite a lot of married couples who do not seem to care a hoot what the other does or carries on. This is dangerous. While partners are free to have their own space, they are not free to go out on their own and have fun while the other can do same. It is most unchristian and immoral. No, you cannot agree with your spouse to propagate evil. You are not your own; you belong to the Lord and to one another. Yes, the wife should in all sincerity help the husband, and the husband his wife in prayer and fasting to practise absolute fidelity to one another.

P. WHO SHOULD BE THE NEXT OF KIN TO YOUR SPOUSE? For Christians especially, it is begging the question and it should never be asked at all. But this falls under some of the mistakes couples make in their Marriage. To choose your next of kin after you have said "I do" and signed the dotted lines, should not be difficult to decide at all. But a careful observation has proved that people differ in decision making and are likely to make a lot of mistakes in their choices especially when it comes to deciding who will inherit their possessions when they are no more. It can be tragic. But the simple truth is that spouses remain the best option to take over the estate and belongings as the surviving spouses are expected to continue to take care of their families. For the sake of the children especially, the fathers and mothers remain the best parent-figure to take care of the children left behind by one of the spouses. Yes, some may prefer their grown-up children – Akpan or Adiaha or even their brothers or sisters – to do so especially for fear of the surviving spouse taking care of his/her biological family members instead of the children, but this is hardly correct. All that is required is that spouses should remain trusted and just to one another during their lifetime as no reasonable man or woman is expected to be delinquent with a lifetime inheritance and investment of his/her partner instead of building on them in order to pass on the torch of the family.

Q. ENDURING CHILDLESSNESS & HEALTH CARE DURING MARRIAGE: Quite remarkably, this happens to be the nightmare of every Marriage especially in Africa. When after at most two years it appears that the signs of the fruit of the womb from the marriage are not forthcoming, couples can go to all limits and to their wit's end and resources to have a child – even a blind or handicapped child. The trauma, the anxiety and the shame couples especially barren wives go through can only be better imagined than expressed. Some couples have been shamed and accused of using their bodies or their very couples to do juju or something else except getting a baby for once. People have gone before God and even to the Devil to have a baby from their Marriage. Bareness or infertility has provoked all kinds of worries and challenges for couples with no child of their own. Some couples, not just those who may be deceptive and damning all consequences have gone to the extent of and even mutually agreeing and preferring to accept surrogate fathers or mothers instead of child adoption. Yes, some couples have gone to the extent of surrendering and submitting that "they started with the Church thing; cried to God, fasted, gave their seeds for IVF. We did everything we knew to do. But the mistake couples make is that it doesn't matter how long an issue like this lasts, there is always an expiry date. Every problem will expire one day. Sometimes, and as often happens, the miracle will come with the coming of the baby of the marriage or and IVF or adopted baby. Be patient, pray and take courage.

R. MONEY ISSUES AND FINANCIAL INFIDELITY: One recurring decimal of marital disagreements and discomforts arises from financial recklessness and irresponsibility of couples. Cheating isn't always sexual; couples can often cheat on their spouses by misappropriation and misapplication of their partner's finances one way or the other. Women in most cases are known to hide their finances especially those who happen to do better than their men. Some never lift a finger to assist in the running of the home and these are the women screaming equality and feminism but are nowhere to be seen when it comes to practising the core values of these things. Their belief is that the money is their own while the husband's is for everyone: It is the man that marries the wife ant the other way round. There are many millennial women who want to eat their cake and have it. It should not be so. Women should manage their finances as a means of empowerment and not for intimidating their spouses. On the other hand, men who hide their financial status whether landed or immoveable property from their significant other and keeping such secrets perhaps for fear of the unknown by their partners are equally guilty. Even if they are in debt, they should not hide it because this type of cheating can destroy trust in a devastating manner. Yes, some spouses are spendthrifts and financially reckless, but after a while it can spin out of control and the couples involved begin lying to cover up leading to the destruction of the marriage/relationship. Spouses should always put heads together and not cheat or defraud the other through pickpocketing and other vices and bad money habits. Money can always create problems, arguments and resentment in marriages and couples should guard against checking the pockets and purses of partners without permission, spending or borrowing money without the other's knowledge, going over the budget, selfishness and irresponsibility, lack of self-control. Spouses should always and plan their finances and work together for harmony and not over-prioritize their career and business for a happy and enduring marriage.

S. SIMPLE WORDS THAT MATTER: To keep and be happy with the significant other, couples should do well to prioritize on these magic words viz. PLEASE, SORRY, FORGIVE ME AND THANK YOU. To fail to use these WORDS more often than not can spell doom because they are also ACTION WORDS in Marriage which can be equiperated to the Biblical Version namely, the Fruits of the Holy Spirit: MEEKNESS, FORGIVENESS LONGANIMITY, LOVE, KINDNESS AND PEACE (Cf. Gal

5:22). Some School teachers have even turned these words into a song to make them stick to the memory and become the integral part of the growing child and help change the narrative and shape of society, nay Marriage. Couples should not trifle on the use of these words in their daily living as part of their everyday dealing with each other and in any moment of mistake or misunderstanding instead or resorting to squabbles, disagreements and conflicts. Couples should us these words as a banner of comfort and togetherness because they are supernatural to heal, comfort and sooth frayed nerves and bring back smiles to their lives as also restore smiles peace and happiness in their homes offices, work places and the society. Every bickering, misunderstanding, insults, violence between spouses arise from the magic words not being applied in such situations to resolve issues. To be able to appreciate one another, couples should be armed with these WORDS and be ready and willing to say at the slightest refraction and moment: Thank you, I am sorry, I take responsibility etc. Try it daily, swallow your pride and don't be chicken –hearted to comply and try it out at all times and situations in your Marriage!

T. TAKE CARE OF YOURSELVES AND NEVER BE USED BY YOUR PARTNERS: There is nothing wrong if you can create happy moments for yourself otherwise you may become a victim of your partner and neglected by your very partner and children. Give a negative partner space and enjoy your life because you are also entitled to happy moments. There are so many cases of one partner not being in the same plane with his/her partner and trying with the children to short-change the other. Be a candle that lights up yourself and others and you will be happy you did. Be a chain that binds all at home and your business places and make sure your partner toes the same line. Do not fail to be the pillar that and policy maker of your families where your couples must in tow be stakeholders. Never allow your partner and children be interested only in your earnings and entitlements while they contribute nothing simply because you have made yourselves be used as the "bread winner". It is nothing but an abuse of Marriage and taking advantage of you and your happiness only to be seen as a man/woman "who washed his/her hands to crack nuts for the chickens." Beware and never allow your partners to sow discord and poison the minds of the children because of the soar relationship that has over time developed. Say no to that too and make sure you are on the right track with God. Spoil yourself and partner and let him/her reciprocate, so also the children. Get out, enjoy yourselves together with friends and grasp the happy moments your efforts and industry provide. Otherwise, you will most certainly develop hypertension on account of the headache from your partner, in-laws and children.

U. SECURITY AND PROTECTION OF OUR CHILDREN: One topmost issue which most couples take for granted and which should engage the attention of married couples all the time is the security and protection of their children from harm and from crime committed by themselves or against them. Some child crimes include bedwetting, pilfering, insolence to others, lying, indecent dressing, you name them. On the other hand, couples are known to also hide crimes and harm committed against their children like child abuse, child battering, sexual assaults, impregnations, abortions, etc. Sometimes, in order to shield their children, some parents aid and abate the committing of misdemeanors among their kids and wards instead of being outraged about such evil actions committed by or against their kids. Some even assume their kids are safe. The way forward should be that both parents and neighbours and the society at large ensure that they keep a close watch over their kids, watch what they wear, the company they keep, their homework and how they carry out their tasks and lawful impositions, and assignments. Children should always be supervised and guided along.

But from the other angle of their being abused and assaulted, parents as well as neighbours should shine their eyes because they cannot just excuse themselves from blame claiming that it is not their business to get concerned with what happens to children and wards not their own. We owe it a duty to think out of the box and be worried about the larger picture which is our society - our families, our neighbourhoods and kindreds, our towns and villages our Clans and LGAs, even our State and nation. We should not be passive on these matters because this is not the age and time to presume to be too busy to know what is going on with our children within our families and neighbourhoods. We should teach our children different ways to keep themselves save not only on the streets but in our very homes and neighbourhoods, teaching them about body safety, teaching them to watch the hot stove or electric cooker, to stay away from hot water and oil, to look both ways on the road before crossing to the other side. Parents should teach their children that their private parts are sacred and personal and should not be seen or touched by others except mummy and daddy when washing them up. Sexual abuse often begins with the perpetrators asking the child to touch them or someone else. Teach your child how to get out of scary and uncomfortable situations and do not protect those related to you who go beyond bounds.

V. NOT COMPLEMENTING THE SUCCESSES OF YOUR PARTNER: Men should learn to and make sure their wives' successes are their successes and vice versa. We should always strive to make a success of our Marriage knowing that whatever the husband has belongs to the wife and vice versa. Female success sometimes scares off their men and makes them uncomfortable, envious and sad. It should not be; it should not make any husband feel unsafe. While "behind the success of every man is the woman" the same should also apply and more so to the man. Financial stability and all that should be the mainstay of every Marriage. It is good that women be educated, get good jobs and be as successful in their careers as their husbands and vice versa. It is not like rubbing shoulders with their spouses. It is all about support and mutual respect, conviviality, geniality and cordiality. It is getting on together which should be kept and nurtured throughout their married life. That is why it is good that our wives be taught to aspire to be the best and reach the highest level they can ever attain without leaving their lives to be rescued by their husbands. They should aspire to make a name for themselves as well. The interest and mutual respect that brought them together is to be sustained. Staying together married should not take anything away. Marriage is good and desirable and nothing should be spared to save it: success even failure as each says "I do."

W. NOT HAVING TO UNDERGO SUFFERING TO SUSTAIN THEIR MARRIAGE: You don't have to suffer to find Love. This applies both ways because couples and couples- to-be need not have to undergo certain indignities or accept the mentality that they have to take all the humiliation and pain in dysfunctional relationships and get trapped so that he or she gets rewarded with the marriage narrative. Why should suffering emotionally and even mentally over a man or a woman who perhaps comes from a rich family be the pathway to marriage and happiness? It is sad that many Nigerians believe and feel that "Love has no hurt" and therefore we can suffer any trauma to get the man or woman of our dream. Parents should do a good job to raise their adolescent children to prepare them for marriage when the time comes. They should not be saying or doing anything that can belittle or reduce the self-worth of their partners just to make him/her continue in the Marriage/Relationship. They should avoid doing things which can run down their partner to force him/her get into the sheets. Love hasn't to put a partner through hell to make him/her responsible to step up the game.

X. NEVER ALLOW YOUR PARTNER TO REGRET EVER LOVING YOU: It is very sad to hear a loving wife or husband say" My partner does not love me anymore"? Very regrettable indeed! We should always remember that feelings are never permanent because people change, and that's the very way and nature of life. Never allow your partner to become cold and withdrawn and seemingly unavailable to you with your two eyes open. Never get desperate for love. For the guys, they should never expect that their partners will always be submissive all the time otherwise they will end up with demons of a wife who were pretending to be Angels because they (WOMEN) only wanted to get married. On the other hand, ladies should stop being desperate which makes high-flying ones go marry guys who are certainly beneath them mentally, morally, educationally and definitely financially below them. Wake up to the realities of life and laugh at the world otherwise one day your partner will definitely never feel anything for you anymore. It will be a calamity, God forbid! Life is unpredictable so live your best life today.

Y. NEVER BE DISLOYAL AND ALOOF BUT BE SUPPORTIVE TO ONE ANOTHER, LOVE IS RESCIPROCAL: Here we go again, but have you forgotten the Words of Sacred Scripture," Be subject to one another out of reverence for Christ. Wives be subject to husbands as to the Lord…Husbands love your wives as Christ loved the Church and gave Himself up for her [Cf. Eph. 5:21- 26]. Yes, in Marriage, husbands and wives should respect one another and treat one other with love, patience and caring, otherwise sooner or later they will most certainly shut themselves out of each other's heart and life. Spouses who keep reminding each other of their past failures and mistakes are by so doing disrespecting each other. They should stop resurrecting their spouses past mistakes and failures. This is digging the graves of their Marriage. They should learn that "everybody has a past", and strive to appreciate one another for what they are and learn to live in peace and stop name-calling, insults, sarcasms and useless comments and comprises. Try also to overlook the red flags and erratic behaviour of your spouses as typical ups and downs of life as you cannot be on the same page with each other all of the time. Strive also to support and prioritize on your spouses' dreams and see them soar even above you because Marriage is a very long journey.

Z. ZIP UP AND NEVER MAKE SEX THE IN-THING: Sex in sex out, is not the sign of a happy and fulfilled Marriage/Relationship. Nobody gets sick or dies for not having sex and plenty of it with their partners. Like every other thing in life, too much or too little of anything is evil, because "Virtue stands in the middle" says the Holy Book. Partners should be good enough to give one another their space and also agree and arrange when they need to be under the sheets together. We need value time to think and act every moment of our lives. To get bogged down to when how and even how much sex partners should have sex is not the ideal of married life. There are so many things loving partners should preoccupy themselves and not every time think of having sex and fun. Never allow yourselves to be used and abused in sex because some partners can never get satisfied with the sex profile of their partners no matter how the under-fulfilled tries. We just have to meet in the middle and get on to other more important things of our Marriage because life always goes on with or without sex. Partners should not frustrate one another for underperformance or is it over performance in bed? As loving partners, they should avoid making/thinking one another as unfit and give the Devil his chance because seemingly happy couples today could end up becoming bitter enemies who can't stand each other tomorrow on account of sex performance. Read this:

> "For everything there is a season, and a time for every matter under Heaven: … a time to embrace and a time to refrain from embracing. But the body is not meant for immorality but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body, … Do you not know that your body is the Temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God? You are not your own; you were bought with a price. See you use your body for the Glory of God. Yes, it is a good thing for a man not to touch a woman, but you must not refuse each other except perhaps by agreement for a season, that you may devote yourselves to Prayer. But then, come together again lest Satan tempt you through lack of self-control. To the married I give this charge: Are you bound to a wife (or husband) do not seek to be freed; the appointed time has grown very short, let those who have wives live as though they had none, and let those who have husbands live as though they had none. For the form of this world will pass away". [Cf. Eccles. 3:1, 5; 1Cor. 6: 19-20. 7: 1, 5,10, 27, 29,31].

There is nothing more to add to God's Words except that some time ago, there was a young student who agreed with his fiancée "till I finish my University Programme and till the day of our Marriage". But after about two years of staying apart the girl got pregnant for someone else and the shattered fiancé swore never to marry till death. Another incidence was that just as above, the two agreed "till our Matrimony day". But un the very "D DAY" as they were making frantic and last minute preparations, the young man was involved in a ghastly car accident as he was rushing to tidy up for the Church. The shattered and traumatized girl swore never to see the nakedness of any other man for life. These happened in Africa, nay our own dear 9ja. A word is sufficient for the wise. You too can stay clean with your spouse.

F. DOMESTIC VIOLENCE & INSTITUTIONAL COLLAPSES ETC. IN URUAN/EFIK

Preamble: Leave it or take it, the traditional laws and procedures regarding violence between the sexes in areas of rape, domestic violence and others of male/female relationships especially among the married in URUAN/EFIK has necessarily called for the attention of this author if a holistic treatment of this chapter on the Institution of marriage is to be complete. Come to think of it even in my childhood days, I personally was witness to the various forms of violence and in most cases of the husband against his wife/wives even to the point of picking up a matchet or a gun to settle it all. When in Annang country in the early 1950s, it was a daily phenomenon as I often noticed blood and wounds in the bodies of women being brought to the government Dispensary at Abak, one of the medical officers of which was Hon (Chief) A. U. Affiah who later became a member of the House of Representatives, Eastern Region at Enugu. Now listen to this case of a putative rape violence against a wife:" Nsekeyen mmi m? k'ub?k kama" and these were the forebodings of a nursing mother's predicament to the effect that she was presently at that instance breast-feeding a baby, whatever you would like to make out of the situation at hand! Hence I cannot deny that there have always been cases of wife-rape accompanied by battering on other occasions in URUAN/EFIK nation.

But it seems to me it's assuming epidemic proportions in modern times. Since we may not have sufficient space for much of this, why not just deal with a few relevant points at issue. First of all, the subject matter is very clear to everybody and it is concerned with the woes and pains from all categories of domestic violence of which we can only mention but a few because they are raging across URUAN/EFIK and Nigeria nation even now. Secondly it seems to me that even with the preachments from the Christian Churches many still forget that relationships or marriages are meant to bring out the best persons in spouses and to make them enjoy marriage not endure it, but the contrary is the case in the society. It is a paradox that a love-relationship being nurtured by spouses would suddenly turn into a theatre of absurdities leading to injuries and scattered homes and this is happening all the time and in most cases by men who resort to domestic violence against their spouses or domestic intimate partners because they think they are right to continually talk down on their life intimate partners. It is a sad commentary of love gone awry and bitter or is it the bitter sweet. Apart from physical batterings, once a spouse is physiologically or emotionally abused, he/she is no longer free, no longer valued, respected or safe. But why all this? Why should marriage which should produce love, enjoyment and charm become awry and bitter?

1. Possible Causes of Domestic abuses & Violence: Women battering: To begin with, since this treatise is on traditional and cultural matters and heritage, I think we can presume straight away that the main causes which often come to mind are due to religious, cultural and traditional beliefs which seem to encourage domestic violence and these affect women in all the ethnic and socio-economic strata. It is also related to poverty and socio-economic challenges. There is so much economic and financial hardship, unemployment as well as frustration and emotional stress for many young men and women who then visit their predicament and anger on their counterparts through battering, sexual assault and the like. For the women and spinsters especially, the fear of financial insecurity has made them to embrace the culture of silence even in the face of great dangers and death threats. Poverty and socio-economic challenges apart, domestic violence as indeed other forms of violence against women/ young girls is the situation of power relationship whereby most men and boys feel they have power and control on women and young girls, hence they physically and sexually assault them into submission. In fact, violent behaviour often originates from a "sense of entitlement "which according to some sociologists, psychologists and "Gender in Nigeria" NGOs, support this culture of sexist, racist homophobic and other discriminatory attitudes to subjugate the women folk. This "male privilege" seems to operate to a certain extent here in order to maintain a situation of male dominance where men have power over women and children (Cf. Saturday Vanguard, Vol17:No.856, June 15, 2013).

Domineering, pride and excessively possessive attitudes also with jealousy add to this situation of things thus making the females fear annoying their male partners. The age-old culture of polygamy even if not openly practiced as most men who are up there may prefer to get separate homes and estates for their consorts and their so-called mistresses so as to keep the official wives at ease, yet people hide under the mantra of "it's our culture" and "the African culture allows it" because the women should be submissive, to keep women in bondage and abusive relationships. There is also another cause of concern in domestic violence through a kind of – a typical weird relationship whereby a male or female is involved in an intimate affair with multiple lovers at the same time. It can be between married or single people, but usually by married women. It is common to hear some women without any sense of shame boasting and talking glibly concerning their "polyamory" marriage about offsprings they have given birth to with an Igbo, Tiv, Yoruba or whoever consort they had affairs with. The people even accord special status and privileges to those children born from such relationships. Polyamory, for instance is a time – honoured practice among the Ngwas of Abia State and is also practised among the Tivs of Benue State and Kabba in Kogi State. According to these lovers, this isn't swinging or wife/husband swapping. It is simply giving partners all the sexual freedom they need. They explain that human beings by nature are not programmed to be monogamous. It is inevitable that people will always meet those they fancy. But more often than not, polygamy or polyamory, the men always get on rage and battering their consorts becomes inevitable. Because of this, many women have come even now to accept the physical violence as the side effect of African marriage such that the more the men beat them the more they become sexually aroused and submissive.

On the part of religious culture, most Religions if not all, seem to encourage women and the young ones in relationships whether orthodox or not, to endure the atrocities of men in order to uphold the over-flogged mantra "to keep their homes as home-makers" at all cost even in the wake of violence and abuses against them. The Catholic Church Catechism of Christian Doctrine puts it this way: "Mm? ekpenyene ndikpe ub?k nyu ndahado nn? kiet eken", as a sort of plead-bargain as if we are advocating separation or at worse divorce here; and a typical URUAN cultural mantra is: "Ed?h? yak ebe akam anam se esinamde, mm? ema esuh?re enana kiet, kpukpru ut?k oro odobo; kam du?k odudu ufi?kke nte akasa ade-o, udunam ntre umen mfina uf?k owo ubiom! So when once the husband or the young man has settled her, they will enjoy their fun and the matter ends there? The reason is that with the attitude of our Nigerian police and even the Judiciary, should the victim take the matter to the police or court, invariably the only thing that will be done is to advise the victim to respect the tradition and keep the peace because it is a "domestic affair", despite the fact that the harm is barbaric. On the part of Government in these parts, there is so much politics shrouding the whole matter to the extent that young girls especially are very bitter and take seriously the issue of domestic and sexual violence and the resultant health implications because in most relations the male partners have gone to the exasperating extreme of assault with weapons such as knife, gun, matchet, burning, pushing, punching, kicking, grabbing, hitting, beating and even killing. There are also reported cases of restraining and confinement with intent to hurt, control where to or not to go, what to or not to do including limiting access to money, phone or car. Certain situations abound when a new relationship has been started owing to the failure of the first which in some cases are just unfortunate, such as, the demise of one of the first partners, divorce or something else of which no one is to blame. But supposing the new relationship starts with one or both partners bringing along children from the previous relationships what happens? This also can lead to a lot of conflict whereas the innocent children are made to bear the brunt of the cross-fire, and if they are of age, one can only gaze their avowal to avenge the pains and humiliations inflicted on their mother or father as the case may be.

There are also cases of the male partners forcing their female counterparts to participate in unwanted, unsafe and degrading sexual activities. The gender inequalities are so dramatized in these circumstances because they are still rooted in patriarchal traditions of URUAN/EFIK. There are cases when frustrated young men get drunk and sometimes indulge in the use of narcotics and other drug abuses and all these can lead to violent behaviours on the part of the male partners. A drunk or high person is less likely to control his violent impulses at the slightest provocation. But it should also be noticed here that in these parts domestic violence is not limited to the partners alone, others in the extended families often join in making matters worse than anticipated. There are cases of children of either parties and parents or even tenants/neighbours joining in the affrays especially when they take sides fueling the confusion instead of quelling the conflagration as it is so difficult for them to continue to live with these emotional and physiological attachments. Sometimes there is the threat to life also and this often happens especially in the case of the female partner who can hurt or even kill her partner and if one of them opts out of the relationship. This is very possible if the female partner discovered that all along she had been deceived, cheated, used, ignored, discarded, exploited or taken advantage of. It can be a situation that can cause even neighbours and well-wishers to avoid her whenever the partner is around. This is because initially she had given in to “too much love” but nothing to show for it since now her partner's brutality has become uncontrollable. This as often happens can lead to such scuffles and punches that can cause the loss of a pregnancy, or even loss of life as cases of the like abound.

2. Possible Causes of Domestic abuses - Husband battering: In URUAN/EFIK it is not unknown that men also can become victims of domestic violence caused by their wives. What is common is that many such cases go unreported simply because men are often thought to be stronger and domineering while the women who often are responsible and initiators of domestic violence are pitied and protected even though they are on the offensive. Besides, men more often than not resort to silence in the face of obvious persistent battering by their partners. The reality is that even if a husband is so physically abused by the wife, they will take the beatings rather than hit back to defend them and risk harming their attackers.

Most of these women quarrel over very trivial issues. And even if they do, they are aware that they will then risk being termed the abusers themselves. While the majority of domestic victims may be women, male-oriented abuses occur more often than many think. Men may claim to be stronger but that does not necessarily make it easier for them to have their way all the time. It is not that these abuses are always physical on the contrary a lot of men just like the women can face daily emotional, verbal and psychological abuses in silence for years while their self-esteem is being slowly eroded on a daily basis. An abused man faces a shortage of resources, skepticism from the Police and other serious obstacles especially when it comes to gaining custody of the children from an abusive wife-mother. Since men are often thought of as strong and macho – even boys at their young age are taught that it is unmanly to cry before a woman – the idea of a grown up man, married for that matter, being vulnerable or being frightened by a woman is regarded as taboo. In fact, the very idea of a man being battered is laughable to say the least. Hence to think that women are the only victims of domestic violence is equally ridiculous in URUAN/EFIK. The fact is that most men are ashamed to tell their stories as no husband is ready to come out in the open and admit that his wife dominates and abuses him.

But what can be the possible reasons for such abuses, we wonder! Everybody knows how women can be jealous. Many a time wives discourage their men from seeing old friends especially old female friends threatening to use violence against them but only to turn around and scream that their husbands are insanely jealous whereas they are the ones flirting with his men friends and denying that they were seducing them behind their husbands' back. Nothing could be more cruel, intimidating and traumatic than a splash of pepper sauce on the face of husband. Some women abusers even go to the extent of pouring petrol on their husbands and setting them ablaze for suspicion of their husbands having affairs outside. In fact, most abuses by women are murderous because they can pick up anything even a knife or a gun to finish it all and leaving themselves as widows. Some women apart from being physically violent, like attacking their husbands with knives or kitchen pestles, biting and wounding their husbands. They can do worse by smashing and destroying valuable property accumulated over the years. Some even destroy the wedding albums, cut off or tear clothings, refuse to prepare meals, resort to verbal abuses and insults by calling their husbands names and ridiculing them, etc. Some wives after initiating the fight and throwing punches they call in the police to report that their husbands are violent abusers.

3. A call for Restraint and Action: First of all, this matter goes beyond URUAN/EFIK and other communities. It is a global problem all over the world. While the society is undoubtedly biased against the males as is happening in Great Britain, I think it is high time State Governments take a cue from Lagos State and enact laws to curtail domestic violence. Whether men or women, this matter affects so many innocent people especially children who have to bear the brunt of being turned into orphans overnight in situations they know nothing about. Think of the situation of a nursing mother who has been punched and made useless such that she cannot tend the baby again. Think also of the husband who is the sole bread winner that has been soaked with acid or even knocked out. What happens to the wife attacker now that she has instantly made herself a widow and what of the children left behind by the bread winner father? Domestic violence should be condemned in all its ramifications whether it is from husband to wife, wife to husband or parents to children and vice versa because nowadays children are known to batter their parents to submission. All efforts geared there towards battling with the situation should be supported and the police in particular should not take sides arguing that "it is a domestic affair when women are involved. On this there ought to be a clear, effective and definitive response from Government including welfare, justice, health and social service sectors as a step towards curbing and even eliminating all forms of domestic violence not only in URUAN/EFIK but also in the larger society of the Nigerian nation.

4. Some Suggested Remedies: First, it should be possible for spouses and those in responsible relationships to have at the back of their minds from the very outset that: Eso iba idoreke ke ubiom k'unana mm? ndituaha ye kiet eken. It is certainly not possible for two human beings to live together all the time without any frictions. Therefore, they should always be wary about any signs of abusive relationships and that should be the first step, for prevention is better than cure. "It takes two to tangle" as the saying goes, but many a time the tangle becomes unpleasant and repeated, therefore there is need to take a break and get to the marriage counsel experts in time at the first intimation of hostilities in order to end the music and nip it in the bud. Nowadays most victims especially if they are young, prefer judicial separation at least to save themselves from further bodily harm, humiliation and frustration. But what of the children from the relationships? Because of this, many women in URUAN/EFIK quite unlike those in Western societies still prefer not to walk out on their marriages/relationships to save the union for the sake of their children because over the centuries wives are obliged to hold on to their marital vows to remain" till death do them part." Infidelity apart, every adult girl therefore knows that there is a death penalty to the bargain for anyone who commits adultery especially when these marriages have been contracted under native laws and customs under traditional marriages as they are called. The ghost of Adultery in Ekpo ? ka-owo and MBIAM are always the beginning of wisdom.

Specifically, the time is now ripe for URUAN/EFIK NATIONAL ASSEMBLY to institute the Domestic Violence Law with aggressive mass sensitization and awareness creation targeting at the public, the police and the judiciary because when these matters are brought to them everybody knows the inevitable outcome which leaves the matter worse than it ever was. Very few victims can even afford all the costs and attendant problems as the courts will indulge in frequent adjournments and the police officers will require provision for their transportation, bringing the victims to hospitals, paying for medical tests, telephone calls and all that. There is also the issue of stigmatization as victims embrace the culture of silence rather than cry out for help. Who bales the cat then? This is not a welfare issue which is a governmental agency; here we are talking about dealing with the matter on the spot before it reaches crisis point. There are also the issues of unemployment, economic and financial hardship mentioned above which must be tackled head-on by getting young men specially to wake up and organize themselves for self-help and gainful employment. Everywhere in URUAN/EFIK at present, it is the young women and girls even while still at school that have taken up the challenge and are making good money with their hands to assist their families and parents. On the part of Government, this is an area where the implementation of pro-people policies and programmes come in order to put a roof on people's head, food on their tables and safe movement from place to place and then violence will stop. Women NGOs also can come in handy here to ameliorate the situation.

In order to arrive at the solution of this malaise I think it is necessary to get to the root of the system and institutional collapses in URUAN/EFIK nation. Systems and institutional collapses occur because of various reasons and for one, our so-called traditional rulers, family/ kindred/village and Clan Heads including the Nsomm/Obong as father of the nation have failed in their responsibility to make URUAN/EFIK systems, customs and traditions operational as in yester years when everybody was concerned with peace and order in the nation, including the marriage institution. URUAN/EFIK of recent has lost touch of all those age-old systems and institutions like Iban Is? , ? ka ukp?ti?, ? ka Asian, ? ka Ukpak Is?n, ? ka Uyep-Vigilantes which among others put sanity in the land and dealt with issues including domestic violence and abuses. Most of them are simply lazy, nonchalant and incompetent; they simply lack the capacity and commitment. Of course everybody knows the reason why? The operation of the Presidential system adopted by the Federal Government of Nigeria in modern times concerning governance leaves so much to be desired owing to the monetization of almost all the institutions and systems in the country. I have lamented this on quite a number issues in this book, especially on our traditional and Chieftaincy Institutions. No so-called Chief or Royal father has the time to look into issues and problems affecting the people they are supposed to protect and rule any more. They are now Government paid servants because Government has supplied their daily needs and why agonize or bother about the citizenry? Are they paying me even if they were to bring the traditional goats, cocks, yams and wine? Readers should holistically and sincerely look at this point I have raised unless they have other better solutions to proffer. No traditional Ruler any longer has the time, charity or patriotism to feel concerned about people's domestic problems and predicaments or of the rank and file in his domain.

We are dealing with human nature here; for no one who has had his/her bread buttered will be bothered about what happens outside his own peculiar interests and comfort zone even if it his responsibility to do so, hence the collapse of these age-old institutions which people now come to blame it all on modernism and civilization. Surely civilization which the Lord Jesus came to foster on earth was to make mankind his brother's keeper; charity to all and malice to none "he came so that men (everybody) may have life and have it more abundantly"(Jn 1010). Therefore there are pertinent questions craving for answers from all those involved with governance and management at all levels and strata of our societies including URUAN. These authorities cannot just afford to give up like that without anybody raising questions, and then the failures become pervasive. The people deserve this national orientation and transformation to solve these problems, not just of a domestic nature but other societal ones. Therefore, URUAN/EFIK NATIONAL ASSEMBLY must rise up to these challenges by providing the necessary intervention to reassure the citizenry that the authorities concerned have taken the bull by the horns by setting up their technical instruments to restore these systems and institutional collapses in the nation.

G. THE SEX SCOURGE & PRE-MARITAL RELATIONSHIPS AT COURTSHIP

People need to do something and be shown what they have to do or at least be given the necessary assistance they need to do them. It is amazing how many of our brides are giving birth five to seven months after their wedding and the babies they give birth to are not born premature! What then are the real needs of our mature singles and what can be done for them to start having sincere courtships and relationships among Church members or even between ordinary citizens of URUAN/EFIK who need not be church goers? This is a situation where our young men in the church are continuing to tell lies to the girls even to the extent of duping many of them financially in addition to the "sex trip "bonuses because they believe they cannot be caught. The Church also seems to be hoodwinked into believing that she is making progress by having 20 or more couples get married in three months whereas there are 20,000 who are equally ready, but are not married in church at the time, simply because they seem not to have found their partners yet. When URUAN/EFIK people seem to be sleeping and do not feel the need to talk about the sex scourge in the polity, they are only trying to be condoning young people's making of babies without the blessings of either the Church or kindred. Then, we will sooner or later become powerless as we are becoming already. I think our children should be taught to promote and maintain true friendships between themselves when they become intending couples as in yester years. We should encourage such friendships that are not out to use their fellows even in intra or extra ethnic relationships that can add value to their lives. They should be encouraged to keep friendships that are out to make sacrifices and make others truly happy because friendships maintained over time though costly are really enduring and beneficial. They should not only make an effort just to keep up with someone when both of them are moving around with their careers. They also require even more effort to deal with personality quirks, misunderstandings and slights. Lacking the willingness to pay attention and invest on emotional energy, friends etc. can make them become mere acquaintances and eventually strangers to themselves all over again even when married.

Have we ever pondered to note why the Scriptures represent the Church as the family of God and why she pictures the members as brothers and sisters to one another in the Lord Jesus? The deeper such an association the better, for we all belong to one another in a significant way and so we are expected to look out for one another "in a pinch" and look up to one another when the neighbourhood ie. Satan's bullies come calling with the sinister intent of doing real harm to one of us. It is therefore necessary to remind couples never to forsake their highest ideals because the most intimate of human relationships is the one between husband and wife in marital covenants. With more than half of first marriages according to sociologists crumbling or failing, something must be done because we seem not to be thinking about these things as we are seen to forget about the "excellence" we should be building into our roles as mates and parents. Even the mantra "Till death do us part" is being laid aside as archaic convention in the wedding ceremonies as of late, whereas couples are now talking of "for as long as our love shall last, or until our time together is over", and all these are open-ended. The whole reason is that we are becoming so shallow in our faith, cartels in our character and weak in our commitments to one another. We betray our spiritual potential and so we are bound to abandon the ethical path as if the Church or URUAN/EFIK society has approved of pre-marital sex and illicit liaisons. URUAN/EFIK should get back to organizing true and decent social functions and ceremonies as formerly that will encourage true friendships leading to and ending in marriage.

H. THE MARRIAGE CATECUMENATE AND COUNSELLING

URUAN/EFIK custom and tradition had from time immemorial observed and kept the preparatory and official 'Catechumenate' so to speak, in order to usher in the signaling of bad preparations for Marriage through the age-old institution of NKUHO. The author has documented this in a well-researched book titled MAIDENHOOD. (Ekarika J.P. 86 ff). This institution is still going on but in low profile owing to the collapse of our value systems not only concerning marriage but also in many other systems of politics, social life, economics and education even past times and health care. In some churches especially the Catholic Church, the Marriage Catechumenate is a conditio sine qua non for all intending couples who want to solemnize their marriages in the Church. As is usual nowadays, a three-month programme of instruction and Retreat is demanded and the Church organizes this for both group and individual couples, the latter often arranged for single couples who are often not resident in the parish. It is a quasi-packaged and scheduled programme of study, instruction and practice. This is an approach through Catechesis, reorientation and integration – a missionary evangelization approach to meet the new synthesis of concrete possibilities for URUAN/EFIK and African insights and traditions in order to bring about authentic Christian living in the Church and the society. The course is anthropocentric and programmed to meet the great events and stages of human life including politics, maternal care, births (child care), puberty, sex education, fecundity (responsible parenthood/family planning techniques of the Church), sex in marriage, community of goods and finances, old age, death, life after death etching order to sacramentalize the moments of Christian context and living.

The programme presents a renewed Theology of community life and personal values on African consciousness and experience as an incubation of the Christian mystery in the genius of URUAN/EFIK African peoples so as to present 'a chorus of voices' in both the society and community of the Universal Church. In practice, when a man and woman have decided and have begun to embark on 'moving along the aisles', and the parents and kindred have agreed and concluded all the traditional formalities of betrothal and ritual, the parents and by implication the couples should bring themselves to the parish to be registered by the priest/pastor or Catechist where the celebration is to take place and be registered in the Catechumenate of Marriage. It is now that the couples have officially pledged themselves that if no obstacles intervene, they will come and have their marriage 'blessed' in the solemn ceremonies of the Church within the specific time agreed upon by all the parties concerned. As in many dioceses in the Catholic Church, marriage encounter and Guidance centres have been set up to organize and conduct these programmes. But should anything go wrong such that the engagement is broken, then the couples should do well to report such a false start before they are allowed to get engaged with another partner so as to enter into a new arrangement for a fresh Catechumenate.

(1) Managing Finances in Marriage Relationship: Many couples especially in URUAN/EFIK find it difficult to face the divisions and roles each should play in their relationships. Many of them when they go out into other climes like Europe and America, they cannot understand the seeming confusion because of the stark differences between their African culture they had left behind at home and the one which they now have to live with. This need not be so. In URUAN/EFIK the typical husband is the sole bread winner and need not share pay bills even if both of them go off to work even if at times the woman may earn more to the chagrin of the husband. Then love can fly out of the window as quickly as money problems enter through the doorway. Therefore, and for this reason the couples should sit down together and discuss these issues because they can lead to disaster if not tackled frontally before the husband and wife begin to settle down in their new home. Couples earnestly need to sit down and talk about topics like: how many children do we want to have? How are we going to pay for their University education later? Where and how do we buy land for our permanent abode etc? It is important to look at several themes on how their finances will be controlled because such topics will help them set the tone for dialogue for a better and healthy financial future. Though some may think in terms of their eventual retirement investments, but this can be a very serious false start unless they are lucky and pretty well off. Yes, working couples are expected to grow old and retire sometime, which means that they need to continue living well after their working years, but they would have to begin to save against retirement if they do not want a burden on their children and relatives to care for them at this point of their lives. They must therefore start talking early and often about the value of money and how they will save it as part of building up good money management habits that will assist their retirement years. It may also help couples to decide by asking themselves: What are our plans for retirement? Where do we intend to live and how close to our families? If either of us becomes ill, who would care for the other and how? Having this kind of conversation early can save couples from arguments later and certainly from high-pertension and worry.

As typical of Africans many URUAN/EFIK couples still hang on to the tradition that bestows authority and superiority on the man and therefore encouraging their women to stay at home and run the domestic front, while the man, the HOH (Head of Household) goes out there to work as king and master of the manor. The man based on these expectations might never allow his wife to work and sooner or later will experience difficulties that could quickly have been resolved if the home were blessed with two incomes instead of one. But unfortunately his ego and self-pride as instilled upon him by the culture, inhibit him from asking help from his wife. In the meantime, the wife who is unemployed begins to suffer due to financial constraints that often lead to hot arguments which can end in conflicts in the home. The wife may have a hard time trying to understand why she cannot work outside to augment the family income. Soon enough such arguments often turn into fights and love begins to wane. Couples should therefore discuss how they would sustain each other and the family income. In this way, they could decide that their saving might be for one parent caring for the children and the other for the house upkeep. Whatever is decided between them should be respected. Money arguments take different forms because some husbands can refuse to discuss with their spouses on how much food allowances should be given to their wives. Some would give just what is available" while some would give more or less than a certain fixed amount regardless of the fact that circumstances and needs might change the mathematics with the way the economy is going. When the husband acts in this way, the wife naturally feels marginalized and sidelined and soon she will react. Although some women who work outside will often subsidize food money, it is necessary to agree on their limits. All in all, it is important in the household to share whatever ideas can work out.

(II) THE CATECHUMENATE DIRECTIVES FOR THE FEMALE SPOUSES

Now that the woman who has been praying, fasting and waiting had got a man coming to ask her hand in marriage and she on her par had accepted to be with him come what may and to be named "Mrs. Somebody", it is necessary to warn her from the outset before the family relations, friends and well-wishers that a successful marriage entails a lot of hard work and even more prayers and fasting than before. She should also understand that the fun of wedding will be over and the hard reality of having to face living with each other every passing day, it should be a living together "with the one you love". No doubt she can be very enthusiastic about the future of her marriage, so how can she make this new marriage a success? By now she could have been given more advice than she could ever understand: from parents, friends and other well-meaning people and well-wishers on how best she can become the wife who is clearly loved by her husband. But then marriages do not usually fail for the dearth of advice, no; they often fail for the lack of good counsels and the failure to heed them where they are available, hence the following tit bits for the wives:

1. Sowing seeds of happiness and making the husbands and others happy: Most women enter marriage hoping that it will bring them the much desired happiness and peace, because they see "you only carry over whom you are when you marry"; it may well be. But as all know, marriage cannot change anybody even a sadist overnight unless he /she works very hard to make it work. The woman must first of all be honest with herself in order to bring happiness into her marriage since 'you cannot give what you do not have'. If you want a happy married life, try being a happy person throughout because 'happy wife – happy life'. When the wife is happy, everybody in the household will know. Some days you may not feel fine and smiling, fake it by putting on a plastic smile first and most likely, your natural beautiful smile will emerge shortly after because your smile communicates. Your husband will understand the language: "I am happy to be married to you and I thank my stars for such a great life with you." Try to keep at it all the time; you will be happy with yourself and with all in the household.

2. Achieving a successful marriage through selflessness: Since the wife should begin immediately to assume fully all her responsibilities as a wife, she cannot wait until her husband does all the things he is supposed to do. She cannot begin to complain about her husband's many shortcomings and arguing about why she should make her husband happy when he is not making her happy in the first place. It means she has even begun to break the first law on her personal happiness above. But if she is selfless the game changes when she makes up her mind to bring joy to the marriage for the glory of God. It is no longer about "what has he done for me today or yesterday, but what have I done for him lately?" It makes all the difference! Instead of being unhappy and frustrated for what the husband has or has not done to make her happy she tries to do everything she can to bring happiness to the home, then she can experience great peace of mind and satisfaction knowing that the good not evil she is doing him will continue to be remembered all the days of their married life. When the wife practices to make her husband happy he will turn around and pour that love right back to her.

3. Respect and kindness to in-laws: This is the key to a successful marriage, you cannot gainsay. One major problem young wives find it difficult to handle is dealing with their in-laws especially the mothers in-law and it has become so terrible that many unmarried ladies often pray that their mother's in-law should not be alive by the time they eventually get married. Getting married means taking on additional responsibilities and the very few weeks after marriage are spent on making impressions. First impressions are Lasting impressions and the new wife may not get another chance to rewrite a bad impression before her in-laws. It is therefore necessary to endeavour to be at her best as much as possible to endear themselves to and win the approval of her in-laws especially if they share the same compound or home. It is for her own interest to be in good terms always with her in-laws. She should start by getting up early in the morning and starting off with morning Devotion and by trying to complete her daily chores beginning with taking her bath and getting ready for the day's work whatever it is. She should be mentally alert and ready to do everything necessary to impress her in-laws by helping the mother in-law with respect and affection so that she can appreciate her presence in the household.

4. Keeping their Sex life in Place: Sex may not be a problem for many newlyweds but thereafter. Hence every woman should learn to understand at least intellectually that sexual fulfillment is a top need of men. Their actions should always demonstrate that they are ready and are really getting it. When a wife has to endure a heavy traffic back from work or wherever, think about the kids, cook a delicious dinner, the next thing she may be thinking about is not about warming the husband's bed but having a nice sleep. When she does that she may be discounting on her husband's need for a fulfilling sex life. The fact about it is that most husbands would rather have the dishes waiting in the sink till the next morning than the wife waiting in the bedroom. All the same, she should avoid using sex as bargaining price. She should not be apologetic on this though.

5. Allowing the Man as Leader & Head of the Family: Many married women in modern times do not seem to allow their husbands their rightful place in the home, but the holy books say they are the head and leader. The idea of submission has led many women up in arms, but that need not be the case. It does not mean the wife becomes a doormat either. What it does mean is that the husband should be given the respect he is due as also the recognition that the husband's role is the leader of the home, after weighing it all on a topic or issue, the final decision belongs to him. And when he does decide the wife should give him all the support and make it a success. It is unfortunate some wives would sit on the fence and wish the decision should fail so she could snap in satisfaction and tell her husband: 'But I told you' instead of doing her best and helping to make it at success. Even if the man may not take on the entire wife's suggestions, his failure to do so should be seen as also her failure. Though this may not be easy, still she should join hands and work at it to make it succeed whether she believes in his decision or not.

6. The Home should be a Haven for all: The woman should always strive to make her home a place where everybody and the husband feel welcome. The world can be a tough place, but when her husband walks in at the door, he needs to breathe a sigh of relief and joy. Think on how you can greet and welcome your man into the home. To achieve a clean and comfortable environment the wife needs to delegate appropriately because as a human being she cannot afford to carry the entire burden by herself. She doesn't have to take the whole and sole responsibility of the home. She should share out; to the husband, children, to the sister in-law, mother in-law etc where they are available.

7. Taking care of themselves and their appearance: Wives should remember to take care of their appearance all the time. It should be the rule of thumb it should not end after dating and wedding ceremonies when they made themselves attractive. Now that they are beset with house chores and care of the children, it is important they still make themselves attractive. They should take time and effort to watch their weight, dress and appearance because it communicates volumes as if to beckon to their husbands: “We still care and want your approach.” They should also endeavour to speak kindly of their husbands and not heaping on criticisms and sarcasms instead of praise and encouragement. They should treasure their husbands 'efforts to please and provide for the family. They must avoid trash either before or behind their husbands' back because their words and actions matter more to them than anyone else's.

N O T E S

1. The couples should be encouraged to get back to their homes and be reconciled with one another. It should not be the concern of others as they would soon get over it and go back to perform their marital duties.
2. Ed?h? yak ebe akam anam se esinamde, mm? ema esuh?re enana kiet, kpukpru ut?k oro odobo; kam du?k odudu ufi?kke nte akasa ade-o, udunam ntre umen mfina uf?k owo ubiom!

CHAPTER VII

URUAN CULTURE & CHIEFTAINCY INSTITUTIONS IN POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND TRADITIONAL DIMENSIONS THE ANTECEDENTS MASS ECONOMIC & SOCIAL DIMENSIONS

DREAMS OF LANDS FLOWING WITH MILK AND HONEY

URUAN/EFIK emigration as also many other nations and groups because of the specificity of their missions fall under those intimate and felt needs technically speaking arising either from considerations of politics, economic, social, family squabbles, or simply from adventure. Corroborating this assertion, A. M Rose opines that in their economic as well as love of adventure most European citizens have migrated from their city states to other parts of Europe with so many socio-political and political problems of adjustment (Rose A. M.43). The question now is: What are the antecedents to their departure, how did they leave and specifically, how did they fare on arrival at their present locations in general? It appears however that these related and other lines of thought to secure a sustainable life of ease, comfort, economic independence and a rich and stable existence as well as the pushed dreams and hopes to be realized in their sojourning for security and freedom motivated and prompted these great and hazardous migrations. Indeed, these two factors more than any other have eclipsed the accompanying social stress inherent in those places they finally found abode. But the good news was that with little luck part of their initial dreams were often realized. Yet the prelude to the anonymous liminality of URUAN/EFIK migrants in their present locations was the destruction of the preconceived flamboyant fantasies about life and opportunities thereto. Van Gennep and Victor Turner who respectively developed the concept of liminality in their study of the Rites of Passage opine that the liminal is that second stage of transition rites accompanying any change of state or social position or even from a certain point of age and in this case, it refers to the social passage from Uruan ancestral settlements to their new places in the Diaspora (Van Gennep and Turner Victor; 116; 231).

It has become obvious that most traditional African societies even up to this have always desired social integration and harmony and this is evident in URUAN/EFIK traditional Institutions which she shares with other African societies of which she is a part to wit: her methodology for crime detection, prevention, policing and controls and there are various of them according to the different URUAN/EFIK communities and clans owing to influences and interactions with which they share common borders. Invariably Uruan North having affiliations with Itam/Itu, Ibiono, Ikono and Annang/Ikot Ekpene borders tends to exhibit Ibibio/Annang institutional values and controls; while Uruan Central with affinities with core Ibibio environs viz Uyo, Iman, Abak/Ibekwe, and Ikot Abasi does get involved with some traditions of these neighbours; and by the same token Uruan South sharing borders with Okobo/Oron, Nsit, Ibesikpo/ Asutan and Eket also imbibe similar fundamental dispositions and cultural traits.

A COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS WITH OTHER TRIBES OF NIGERIA

Many people regard the Chieftaincy institution as not a serious institution, but this is speaking from a position of the ignoramus, speaking from outside the box as it were, but from my own position I can say with confidence and with all authority that it is the greatest institution ever. It is an institution that can be best used for the development of URUAN/EFIK traditional society or even any nation for that matter and more so our great nation, Nigeria, because despite the fact that URUAN/EFIK is now becoming a republican society, people are still cultural just like the Yorubas and more so the Hausa and most of the Northern Traditional Institutions in their organization of Obaship and Emirate Institutions. At least to a very large extent they believe and have utmost faith in their monarchs and Royal Fathers. Their lives revolve around the Kings whether the Oba or the Emir. The King represents the present, the past and the future of their communities. He is the representative God Almighty here below. The King represents the soul of the society even today because things revolve around the Monarch especially in terms of the development of the community as everybody can see in these parts of Nigeria. Indeed, it is also a moral institution that should be tapped for the development of Nigeria at large. In the Benin Kingdom today, His Royal Majesty, Oba (King) Omo N'Oba N'Edo, Uku Akpolokpolo, Oba Erediauwa, CFR, the Oba of Benin, son of the famous King Akenzua II (1933-78) one of the most powerful and highly revered and influential traditional rulers in Nigeria, stands aloft as a colossus, an epitome of traditional rulership and governance, a bastion of transformation, growth and renewal of a new Edo nation. Since his accession to the ancient throne of his ancestors. Today, his son, Oba Ewuari II is giving effective leadership to his subjects, always pledging to unite all Edo speaking peoples including those in the Diaspora.

Regarding the Hausa Fulani their royal fathers are often designated as Emirs excepting the Royal father of Sokoto who is also the supreme leader of the Muslim Community in Nigeria who is designated as the Sultan of Sokoto and the supreme leader of the Fulanis, designated as the El Kanemi who is also the Shehu of Borno. But as to the question, who are these Hausa/Fulanis, it is sufficient to pause here and have a brief overview of who they are, their evolution and what they stand for in modern Nigeria.

ORIGINS OF THE HAUSA/FULANIS OF NIGERIA
NOTABLE PERSONALITIES IN HAUSA-FULANI LAND

The Hausa-Fulanis, SANNU in URUAN/EFIK, derived ostensibly either from their greetings or from the sound of the bellowing of their cows "sannu-uu!", are one of the largest ethnic groups in Africa. They are a diverse but culturally homogeneous people based primarily in the Sahelian and Sudanian Daura area of Northern Nigeria and southeastern region of Niger Republic which forms the northern border of our country Nigeria. There are also significant numbers living in parts of Cameroun, Côte d'Ivoire, Chad, Togo, Ghana, Sudan, and Gabon. But the largest population of Hausas is concentrated in Nigeria and Niger Republic. These predominantly Hausa-speaking communities scattered throughout West Africa, are often seen going on the traditional Hajj en route around North and East traversing the Sahara Desert and in the town of Agadez. Other Hausas have also moved to large coastal cities in Nigeria such as Lagos, Port Harcourt, as also Accra, Abidjan, Banjul and Cotonou in the West African region, as well as to parts of North Africa such as Libya over the course of the last 500 years. Most of the Hausas, however, live in other small villages or towns in Africa, where they grow crops, raise livestock including cattle and engage in trade. They speak the Hausa language, an Afro-Asiatic language of the Chadic group. Hausa aristocracy has historically developed an equestrian based culture as a status symbol of the traditional nobility in Hausa society. The horse still features in their Eid day celebrations, known as Ranar Sallah, the Day of the Prayer. Daura city in Katsina in northern Nigeria is the origin of Hausawa ie. Hausa people. The town predates all the major Hausa towns in tradition and culture.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE HAUSA-FULANI IN NIGERIA

A Fulanis in particular: The Fulanis or Fula or Fulbe are an ethnic group of people spread over many countries, predominantly in West Africa, but can be found also in Central Africa and the Sudan viz. the Tutsis. The countries in Africa where they are presently located include Mauritania, Senegal, Guinea, the Gambia, Mali, Sierra Leone, Benin, Burkina Faso, Guinea Bissau, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire (Ivory Coast), Niger, Togo, the Central African Republic, Ghana, Liberia, and Nigeria, also as far as Sudan in the East. Fulas are not a majority in every country they live, but in Guinea they represent the largest single group – the Futa Jalon because it is from that ethnic stock that the Fulanis evolved and it is from there that they emigrated to other parts of West Africa. There are also many names and spellings of the names used in other languages to refer to the Fulbe which is Fulani in English and is borrowed from the Hausa term. A closely related group to the Fulani is the Tukolor ie. Toucouleur in French popularly used in the central Senegal River valley. Traditionally, the Fulanis are a racial mix of generations of nomadic, pastoralist people of North African Berbers/Tuaregs and the local indigenous blacks of Guinea in West Africa, which explains their beautiful light complexion and well refined visage, their height and slight frame. They are trading people, herding cattle, goats and sheep across the vast dry hinterlands of their domain, hence their designation as: "Fulani herdsmen" in Nigeria. About the 18th century most of them migrated to northern Nigeria and settled in Sokoto originally called "Sakkwato". They try to keep somewhat separate from the local agricultural populations eg in Plateau, Benue, Kwara, and Ondo States of Nigeria. If the truth be told, they are proud, physically attractive, and in terms of temperament, they are patient, calculating, subtle, and courageous. They have very long memories and are capable of making their thoughts and emotions very well and so they never forget slights done them. They easily recognize a common group cause and consequently, they are in a better position to further the political and economic interests of their people and their collective cause than anything else.

HAUSA-FULANI ORIGINS AND EVOLUTION

HISTORY: The early origin of Fulani People is most fascinating and the mystery deepens with widely divergent opinions. Many scholars believe that they are of Judaeo-Syrian origin. However, it is generally recognized that the Fulanis descended from nomads from both North Africa and from sub-Sahara Africa. They also came from the Middle-East and North Africa and settled in Central and West Africa. From the Senegal region they created the Tekruur Empire which was contemporary to the Ghana Empire. Then, they spread in all the countries in West-Africa, continuing to lead their nomadic life style. They created here and there mixed states where they sometimes were the dominant group. It was after their mass migration to Nigeria that they successfully infiltrated the Hausa kingdoms. Later, Sheik Uthman dan Fodio as their master mind unleashed his violent and bloody jihad, conquered and established various caliphates throughout northern Nigeria. But more often, they were absorbed by the indigenous populations whom they had dominated such as Sokoto, Zamfara, Kaduna, Katsina, Kano etc. Sometimes they tried to dominate and colonize the indigenous populations as they did in Kwara and Plateau States. While some have speculated over the origin of Fulani people, current linguistic and genetic evidence suggests an indigenous West African origin among the Futa Jalon. The vast majority of genetic lineages associated with them reflect those most commonly seen in other parts of West Africa. Their language is also of West African origin, most closely related to that of the Wolof and Serer ethnic groups but in Nigeria they speak Hausa. The Fulanis were the first group of people in West Africa to convert to Islam through Jihads, or holy wars. Thus they were able to take over much of West Africa and establish themselves not only as a religious group but also as a political and economic force. They are the missionaries of Islam and continue to conquer much of West Africa. In different places, small groups of Fulanis choose to follow the way of Christ and become Christians. However, the vast majority are Muslims, most of them practicing a version of folk Islam by integrating animistic practices into their Muslim religious duties including the use of charms and amulets as well as voodoo by their Muslim Malabout juju clerics. The Fulanis are primarily nomadic herders and traders. Through their nomadic lifestyle they established numerous trade routes in West Africa. Many times the Fulani go to local markets and interact with the people, getting news and spreading it through much of West Africa. As a child, I noticed that this is exactly what they used to do since they were living in my uncle's compound adjacent to ours. I have mentioned this elsewhere in this book.

The History of the Fulanis obviously seems to begin with the Berbers of North Africa around the 8th or 11th century AD. These Berbers are said to have migrated down from North Africa and mixed with the peoples in the Senegal region of West Africa. It is here that the Fulani people came into existence. Fulas are primarily known to be pastoralists, but are also traders in some areas. Most Fulas in the countryside spend long times alone on foot, moving their herds. They were the only major migrating people of West Africa, though most Fulas now live in towns and villages. Over a thousand-year period from AD 900 - 1900, they spread out over most of West Africa and even into some areas of Central Africa. Some groups of Fulanis have been found as far as the western borders of Ethiopia. As they migrated eastwards, they came into contact with different African tribes. As they encountered these other peoples, they conquered the less powerful tribes and colonized them as it were. Along the way, many Fulanis completely or partially abandoned their traditional nomadic life in favor of a sedentary existence in towns or on farms among the conquered peoples. The nomadic Fulanis continued eastward in search of the best grazing land for their cattle. Their lives revolved around their cattle as they were so dedicated to their herds. The more cattle a man owned, the more respect he was given. Today their population is estimated at about 18 million stretched across the countries of West Africa. They remain to be the largest group of nomadic people in the world.

FULANI RISE TO POLITICAL DOMINANCE

As early as the 17th and 18th centuries, but mainly in the 19th century, the Fulas and others took control of various states in West Africa. These included the Fulani Empire as well as other smaller states viz. Fouta Djallon, Massina and others founded by Usman dan Fodio. In 1804 Usman Dan Fodio, a studious and charismatic Muslim Fulani scholar, began to preach the reformist ideology in the Hausa kingdoms of Northern Nigeria. His movement became a revolution when in 1804, seeing himself as God's Vicerents and instrument, he began to preach a jihad against the Hausa kings whom he felt were not following the teachings of the holy Prophet. A great upheaval followed in which the Fulanis took control of most of the Hausa states of the North as also western Sudan. They later moved into and Islamized the Yoruba Empire through modern Kwara State of Nigeria. They moved to and developed a new kingdom based in the city of Sokoto, under Dan Fodio's son and brother. The Fulani expansion was driven not only by religious zeal but by political ambitions, as the attack on the well-established Muslim kingdom of Bornu has demonstrated. The result of this upheaval was the creation of a powerful Sokoto state under a caliph, whose authority was established over cities such as Kano and Zaria and whose rulers became Emirs of provinces within the Sokoto caliphate. The historian, M. Delafosse has suggested that with the expansion of the Fulani from Futa to Darfur, all these regions became known to the Arabs. Over 99% of Fulani are Muslims. It is said that to be a Fulani is to be a Muslim. Probably that is why we are having the problem of Boko Haram in our hands as they took over the entire North East of Nigeria with their capital territory of Borno State.

B. THE HAUSA-FULANI IN GENERAL: THE SOKOTO CALIPHATE SINCE THE 19TH CENTURY

Daura, in Katsina State in northern Nigeria is the oldest city of Hausa land; but it is the Hausa of Sokoto, also in northern Nigeria who speak the oldest surviving classical vernacular of the language. Historically Sokoto was the centre of Hausa Islamic scholarship. The Hausa are culturally and historically the closest to the other Chadic groups in Northern Nigeria, while the Fulani form the Zarma and Songhai groups in Tillabery, Tahoua and the Dosso in Republic. The Kanuri and Shuwa Arabs are found in Chad, Sudan and Northeastern Nigeria. The Tuaregs are to be found as observed above in Agadez, Maradi and Zinder while the Gur and Gonja live in Eastern Ghana, Northern Togo and Upper Benin Republics. There are also the Gwari in North Central Nigeria. The Mandinka and Soninke at the border are to be found in the traditional western areas of Mali, Senegal, Gambia, Ivory Coast and Guinea. Migrants from these areas introduced Islam to many of the Hausa speaking peoples by the 1300s, although Islam itself has had a presence in Hausa land as early as the 11th century AD. All the groups mentioned above live in the Sahel, Saharan and Sudanian regions, and as a result, have influenced each other's cultures to varying degrees. Today some Fulani people cannot be distinguished from Hausa people in many northern states of Nigeria due to inter-marriages and cultural assimilations. It is instructive to note that in Agadez and Saharan areas of central Niger the Tuaregs and Hausa groups are indistinguishable from each other in their traditional dressing codes since both wear the tagelmus and indigo Babban Riga/Gandora. But the two groups differ in language, lifestyles and preferred beasts of burden. The Tuaregs use camels, while Hausas ride on horses.

Some of the Hausas have mixed with some ethnic groups such as the Yoruba and Shuwa, incorporating their foods and styles of dress into local Hausa customs, as well as heavily influencing the cultures of these groups. Islamic Sharia law is loosely the law of the land in Hausa areas of Northern Nigeria and Hausa is well understood by any Islamic scholar or teacher viz. the M'allams. This pluralist attitude toward ethnic-identity and cultural affiliation has enabled the Hausas to inhabit Nigeria which is one of the largest geographic regions of non-Bantu ethnic groups in Africa. The Nok culture appeared in Northern Nigeria around 1000 BC and vanished under unknown circumstances around 300 AD in the region of West Africa. It is believed to be the product of an ancestral nation that branched to create the Hausa, Gwari, Birom, Kanuri, Nupe and Jukun peoples in the North Eastern and Plateau States. The Kwatarkwashi Culture of Sokoto located to the North West of Nok is thought to be the same as or an earlier ancestor of the Nok. Nok's social system is thought to have been highly advanced. The Nok culture is considered to be the earliest sub-Saharan producer of the life-sized Terracotta. The refinement of this culture is attested to by the image of a Nok dignitary at the Minneapolis Institute of Arts. The dignitary is portrayed wearing a "crooked baton". The dignitary is also portrayed as sitting with flared nostrils, and an open mouth suggesting performance. Other images show figures on horseback, indicating that the Nok culture possessed the horses that are so visible in these parts

By the 12th century AD, the Hausa were becoming one of Africa's major trading powers, competing with Kanem-Bornu and the Mali Empire. The primary exports were leather, , cloth, salt, kola nuts, , animal hides, and henna. Certainly trade has influenced religion. By the 14th century, Islam was becoming widespread in Hausa land as Wangara scholars and traders from Mali and scholars and traders from the Maghreb brought the Islamic religion with them. The architecture of the Hausa is perhaps one of the least known but most beautiful of the medieval age. Many of their early mosques and palaces are bright and colourful, including intricate engravings of elaborate symbols designed into the facade. This architectural style is known as Tubali. The ancient Kano city walls were built in order to provide security to the growing population. The foundation for the construction of the wall was laid by Sarki Gijimasu from 1095 - 1134 and was completed in the middle of 14th century. In the 16th century, the walls were further extended to their present position. The gates are as old as the walls and were used to control movement of people in and out of the city. By the early 15th century the Hausas were using a modified Arabic script known as Ajami to record their own language. They compiled several written histories, the most popular being the Kano Chronicle. Many medieval Hausa manuscripts similar to the Timbuktu Manuscripts written in the Ajami script have been discovered recently, some of them even describe constellations and calendars. The Gogbaru Minaret was built in the 15th century in Katsina. It is a 50-foot edifice located in the centre of the city of Katsina, the capital of Katsina State. The Gobarau minaret, a symbol of the state, is an early example of Islamic architecture in a city that prides itself as an important Islamic learning center. The minaret is believed to be one of West Africa's first multi-storey buildings and was once the tallest building in Katsina. The mosque's origin is attributed to the efforts of the influential Islamic scholar Sheikh Muhammad al-Maghili and Sultan Muhammadu Korau of Katsina. Al-Maghili was from the town of Tlemcen in present-day Algeria and taught for a while in Katsina, which had become the centre of learning at this time, when he visited the town in the late fifteenth century during the reign of Muhammadu Korau. He and Korau discussed the idea of building a mosque to serve as a centre for spiritual and intellectual activities.

The Gobarau Mosque was designed and built to reflect the Timbuktu-style of architecture. It became an important centre for learning, attracting scholars and students from far and wide, and later served as a kind of university. Muhammad Rumfa was the Sultan of the Sultanate of Kano, located in modern-day Kano State. He reigned from 1463 until 1499. Among Rumfa's accomplishments were extending the city walls, building a large palace, the Gidan Rumfa, promoting slaves to governmental positions and establishing the great , which is still in use today. Kurmi Market is among the oldest and largest local markets in Africa. It used to serve as an international market where North African goods were exchanged for domestic goods through trans-Saharan trade.

Muhammad Rumfa was also responsible for much of the Islamization of Kano, as he urged prominent residents to convert. The legendary Queen Amina or Aminatu is believed to have ruled Zazzau between the 15th century and the 16th century for a period of 34 years. Amina was 16 years old when her mother, Bakwa Turunku became queen and she was given the traditional title of Magajiya, an honorific borne by the daughters of monarchs. She honed her military skills and became famous for her bravery and military exploits, as she is celebrated in song as "Amina, daughter of Nikatau, a woman as capable as a man."

Amina is credited as the architectural overseer who created the strong earthen walls that surround her city, which were the prototype for the fortifications used in all Hausa states. She subsequently built many of these fortifications, which became known as Ganuwar Amina or Amina's walls, around various conquered cities. The objectives of her conquests were twofold: extension of her nation beyond its primary borders and reducing the conquered cities to a vassal status. Sultan Muhammad Bello of Sokoto stated that, She made war upon these countries and overcame them entirely so that the people of Katsina paid tribute to her and the men of Kano. She also made war on cities of Bauchi till her kingdom reached as far as the sea in the south and the west." Likewise, she led her armies as far as Kwararafa and Nupe and, according to the Kano Chronicle, "The Serkin Nupe sent her i.e. the princess, 40 eunuchs and 10,000 kola nuts."

From 1804-1808, the Fulanis, another Islamic African ethnic group that spanned West Africa and shared the area with the Hausa, invaded the Hausa states, starting with Gobir under the leadership of Sheikh Usman Dan Fodio. He declared a Jihad on the traditional Habe[1] dynasty kings for their alleged greed, paganism, injustices against the peasant class. He also accused the Hausa overlords of imposing heavy taxation on the citizens in violation of the standards of Sharia law. However, the Fulani and Hausa cultural similarities as a Sahelian people allowed for significant integration between the two groups. But when these Fulanis took over the Hausa city-state of Kano during the expansion of the Sokoto Caliphate, the new Emirs ended up speaking the Hausa language instead of their Fulfulde tongue over the years. Since the early 20th century, these peoples are often classified as "Hausa-Fulani" within Nigeria rather than as individual groups. In fact, a large number of Fulanis living in Hausa regions cannot speak Fulfulde at all. They speak Hausa as their first language. Many Fulanis in the region do not distinguish themselves from the Hausa, as they have long intermarried, thus sharing the Islamic religion with many being integrated into Hausa culture

CENTRAL ADMINISTRATION: ETHNIC RIVALRIES – KANO AND KADUNA

When the British General, Frederick Lugard came, he caused rivalries between many of the Emirs in the south and the central Sokoto ditto North and Southern Kaduna administration just to prevent any defense as he worked toward the then Capital of Calabar, later Lagos, which he masterminded in 1906 as discussed in Chapter one above.. Then as the British approached the city of Sokoto, the new Sultan Muhammadu Attahiru I organized a quick defense of the city and fought the advancing British-led forces. The British forces won, sending Attahiru I and thousands of his followers on exile ie. the Mahdist Hijra. On the 13th of March 1903 at the grand market square of Sokoto, the last Vizier of the Caliphate officially conceded to British Rule. The British appointed Muhammadu Attahiru II as the new Caliph. Lugard also went on to abolish the Caliphate, but retained the title Sultan as a symbolic position in the newly organized Northern Nigeria Protectorate. In June of the same year, 1903, the British defeated the remaining forces of Attahiru I and killed him. By 1906 resistance to British rule had ended. The area of the Sokoto Caliphate was divided among the control of the British, French, and Germans under the terms of their Berlin Conference of 1884/85 presided by Otto van Bismarck of Germany. The British established the Northern Nigeria Protectorate to govern the region, which included most of the ancient Sokoto Empire and its most important emirates. Under Lugard, the various Emirs were provided significant local autonomy under his contrived Indirect Rule, thus retaining much of the political organization of the Sokoto Caliphate.

The Sokoto area was treated as just another emirate within the Nigerian Protectorate. Because it was never connected with the railway network, it became economically and politically marginalized. But, the Sultan of Sokoto continued to be regarded as an important Muslim spiritual and religious leader; the lineage connection to dan Fodio has continued to be so recognized till today. One of the most significant Sultans was Siddiq Abubakar III, who held that position for 50 years ie. from 1938-1988. He was known to be the stabilizing force in Nigerian politics, particularly in 1966 after the assassination of Ahmadu Bello, the Premier of Northern Nigeria. This was the issue that led to the civil war. Some of the most notable Hausa People like Abubakar Rimi, Abubakar Sadiq, Adammu Ada, Ahmed Musa, Alhaji Ahmadu Bello, Alhaji Abubakar Tafawa Balewa, General Hassan Katsina, General (DR) Yakubu Gowon, General Rabat Muhammed, General Jeremiah Useni, General Theophilus Danjuma, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, Alhaji Abdulsamadu Rabiu, Alhaji Alhassan Dantata, Alhaji Aliko Dangote, Alhaji Isyaku Rabiu, Alhaji Mamman Shata Katsina, Alhaji Mohammed Indimi, Alhaji Sayyu Dantata, Alhaji Umaru Mutallab, Ali Nuhu, Amadou Moutari, Amina Sukhera, (Prof) Attahiru Jega, Baballe Hayyatu, Alhai Balaraba Musa, General Muritala Muhammed, Balaraba Ramat Yakubu, General Muhamadu Buhari, General Ibrahim Badamosi Babangida, General Sani Abacha, General Abubakar Abdulsalam, Carmen McCain, Maman Vatza, Dan Muren, Dan Maraya, Daouda Malam Wanké, Haruna Babangida, Ibrahim Baré Maïnassara, Ibrahim H. Umar, Jamila Umar, Mahamadou Issoufou, Mahamane Ousmane, Moussa Maâzou, Muhammad Rumfa, Musa Mai Sana'a, Namadi Sambo, Rabilu Musa, Sani Danja, Sani Kaita, Shamsuddeen Usman, Sheikh Ibrahim Al-Zakzaky, Tijani Babangida Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, Zainab Indomie, Zaynab Alkali, Alhaji Bayero, Alhaji Maitama Sule, Zaynab-Alkali Zaynab including the Sultans to-date, Alhaji Abubakar Saad III.

Following the construction of the Nigerian railway system, which extended from Lagos in 1896 to Ibadan in 1900 and Kano in 1911, the Hausas of northern Nigeria became major producers of groundnuts. They surprised the British, who had expected the Hausa to turn to simply cotton production. However, the Hausas had sufficient agricultural expertise to realize cotton required more labor and the European prices offered for groundnuts were of more economic advantage and attractive than those for cotton. "Within two years the peasant farmers of Hausaland were producing so many tonnes of groundnuts that the railway was unable to cope with the traffic. As a result, the European merchants in Kano had to stockpile sacks of groundnuts in the streets, known in Nigeria then as "the groundnut pyramids of Kano" (Shillington 338). Thereafter the British and French colonial forces imposed Boko script on the Hausas and made the official Hausa alphabet in 1930. Boko is a Latin alphabet used in the writing of the Hausa language. The first Boko was devised by Europeans in the early 19th century and developed in the early 20th century mostly by the British and French colonial authorities. Since the 1950s Boko has been the main alphabet for Hausa. The Arabic script Ajami, is now only used in Islamic schools and for Islamic literature. Today millions of Hausa-speaking people, who can read and write in Ajami only, the Talakawas - Almarijis who study in the so-called Islamic schools are considered illiterates by the Nigerian Government. Despite this, it is this Hausa Ajami that is put on Naira banknotes. But in 2014, the centenary (1914 - 2014) year of Nigeria amalgamation, a very controversial move, Ajami has was from the new 100 Naira banknotes.

Nevertheless the Hausas still remain the most preeminent in Niger and Northern Nigeria. Their influence in Nigeria is paramount, as the amalgamation has controlled Nigerian politics for much of its independent history since 1960. In terms of overall ancestry, an autosomal DNA study has found the Hausa (Tishkoff et al.2009) to be most closely related to the Nilotic populations from Nigeria, Cameroon, Central and South Sudan. This suggests that the Hausa and other modern Chadic-speaking populations originally spoke Nilo-Saharan languages, before adopting other languages from the Afro-Asiatic family after their immigration into that area thousands of years ago.

HAUSA CULTURE, RELIGION, CRAFTS AND SOCIO-POLITICAL LIFE

Iron used, in smelting and forging for tools, appeared in Nok culture in Africa at least by 550 BC and possibly earlier. Christopher Ehret has suggested that iron smelting was independently discovered in the region prior to 1000 BC. In the seventh century, the Dala Hill in Kano was the site of a Hausa community that migrated from Gaya and engaged in iron-works. The Hausas began to adopt Islam as early as the 11th century AD although in small numbers. The vast majority still practiced Hausa Animism – paganism at this time. The Hausa Bakwai kingdoms were established around the 7th to 11th centuries. Of these, the Kingdom of Daura was the first, according to the Legend. The Hausa Kingdoms were independent political entities in what is now Northern Nigeria. The Hausa city states emerged as southern terminals of the Trans-Saharan caravan trade. Like other cities such as Gao and Timbuktu in the Mali Empire, these city states became centers of long distance trade. Hausa merchants in each of these cities collected trade items from domestic areas and from the rain forest region to the south through trade or raiding. They then processed and taxed them and then sent them north to the cities along the Mediterranean. The trade influenced their political development as these ideas and people from the Middle East and made their way to the cities in the south. In fact, the Hausa city state creation myth suggests this northern influence. According to the Bayajidda Legend, the city states began when Bayajidda, a prince of Baghdad, arrived in Daura, the oldest of the Hausa city states as observed above, and married the queen of the town. Their seven sons founded the other states of Katsina, Zazzau, Gobir, Kano, Rano, and Biram. These seven cities are known as the Hausa Bakwai which means Hausa "7".

The Hausa language in the Ethno-linguistic territories of the Hausa people in Nigeria has more first-language speakers than any other . It has an estimated 35 million first-language speakers, and 20 million second-language speakers. The main Hausa-speaking area is northern Nigeria and Niger. Hausa is also widely spoken in northern Cameroon, Chad, Sudan and the Ivory Coast among Fulanis, Tuaregs, Kanuris, Gurs, Shuwa Arab and other Afro-Asiatic speaking groups. There are also large Hausa communities in every major West African city in neighbourhoods called mangos or bongos, meaning "camel-caravan camps" denoting the trading post origins of these communities. Most Hausa speakers, regardless of ethnic-affiliations, are Muslims. Hausa often serves as a lingua franca among Muslims in these non-Hausa areas. There is a large and growing printed literature in Hausa, which includes novels, poetry, plays, and instruction in Islamic practice. There are books on development issues, newspapers, news magazines, and technical academic works. Radio and television broadcasting in Hausa is ubiquitous in northern Nigeria and Niger, and radio stations in Cameroon have regular Hausa broadcasts, also international broadcasters such as the BBC, VOA, Deutsche Welle, Radio Moscow, Radio Beijing, RFI France, IRIB Iran, RAI - Italy and others.

Hausa is used as the language of instruction at the elementary level in schools in northern Nigeria, and Hausa is available as a Course of study in northern Nigerian universities. Besides, several higher degrees - (masters and PhD are offered in Hausa in various universities in the UK, US and Germany. Hausa is also being used in various social media networks around the globe. Hausa ranks as one of the world's major languages, and it has widespread use in a number of countries of West Africa. Hausa's rich poetry, prose, and musical literature, is increasingly available in print and in audio and video recordings. The study of Hausa provides an informative entry into the culture of Islamic West Africa. Throughout West Africa, there is a strong connection between Hausa and Islam.

The influence of the Hausa language on other languages of many non-Hausa Muslim peoples in West African is readily apparent. Likewise, many Hausa cultural practices, including such overt features as dress and food, are shared by other Muslim communities. Because of the dominant position which Hausa language and culture have long held sway, the study of Hausa provides a crucial background for other disciplines such as West African history, politics, particularly in Nigeria and Niger, where gender studies, commerce, and the arts are studied. Sunni Islam of the Maliki Madhhab is the predominant and historically established religion of the Hausa people. Sizable but visible minorities of Muslims belong to the Tijani, Mouride and Qadiri sufi tariqas, and more recently, Shia and Salafi groups. Islam has been present in Hausa land as early as the 11th century as noted above. The Islamic populations grew as the religion was brought by traders and Islamic preachers from North Africa, Borno, Mali and Guinea. Muslim scholars of the early 19th century disapproved of the hybrid religion practised in royal courts. The desire for reform contributed to the formation of the Sokoto Caliphate. The formation of this state strengthened Islam in rural areas. The Hausa people have been an important factor for the spread of Islam in West Africa. Today, the current Sultan of Sokoto is regarded as the traditional religious leader - Sarkin Musulmi of Sunni Hausa-Fulani in Nigeria and beyond. Maguzawa, the African Traditional Religion, was practiced extensively before Islam. In the more remote areas of Hausa land, the people have continued to practice Maguzawa. However, closer to urban areas, it is not as common but with elements still held among the beliefs of urban dwellers. Practices include the sacrifice of animals for personal ends, but it is not legitimate to practice Maguzawa magic to harm people. People in urbanized areas tend to retain the "cult of spirit possession," known as Bore. It incorporates the old religious elements of African Traditional Religion and magic.

HAUSA DRESS CODE AND FOOD

The Hausas have a restricted dress code related to their religious beliefs. The men are easily recognizable because of their elaborate dress which is a large flowing gown known as Babbariga and a robe called jalabia and juanni an equivalent of the Senegalese HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Senegalese_kaftan"Kaftan. These large flowing gowns usually feature some elaborate embroidery designs around the neck. Just like the Grand Boubou worn in French West African countries Senegal, Cote d'Ivoire, etc. Men also wear colorful embroidered caps known as Fula. Depending on their location and occupation, they may wear a Tuareg-style turban known as Alasho or Tagelmust around this to veil the face. The women can be identified by wrappers called Abaya, made with.

The Hausas were famous throughout the Middle Ages and were often characterized by their Indigo blue dressing and emblems. They traditionally rode on fine Saharan camels and Arabian horses. Hausa architecture known as Tubali is a distinct sub-style among the various Sudano-Sahelian architectural styles found throughout the Sahel-geographic region stretching from Senegal and Mauritania in the West to Sudan in the East. Hausa buildings are characterized by the use of dry mud bricks in cubic structures. Multi-storied buildings are for the social elite. They also use parapets which are related to their past military/fortress buildings and the traditional white stucco and plaster for their house fronts. At times they decorate the facades with various abstract relief designs, sometimes painted in vivid colours to convey some information about the occupants easily recognizable because of their elaborate dress which is a large flowing gown known as Babbariga and a robe called A jalabia and juanni an equivalent of the Senegalese. The most common food among the Hausa people consists of grains, such as sorghum, millet, rice, or maize, which are ground into flour for a variety of different kinds of dishes. This food is popularly known as Tuwo. Usually, breakfast consists of cakes made from Kosai ie. fried ground beans. Funkaso cakes for breakfast can also be prepared from wheat flour soaked for a day, fried and served with sugar. Both of these cakes can be served with Koko ie. porridge and sugar. Lunch or dinner usually features a heavy porridge with soup and stew known as Tuwo da Miya. The soup and stew are usually prepared with ground or chopped tomatoes, onions, and a local pepper sauce popularly called Daddawa or Dawadawa in URUAN/EFIK Spices and other vegetables, such as spinach, , or okra, are usually added to the soup during preparation. The stew is prepared with meat, which can include goat or cow meat, but not pork, due to Islamic food restrictions. Beans, peanuts, and milk are also served as a complementary protein diet for the Hausa people. The most famous of all the Hausa food is most likely the ubiquitous Suya, a spicy shish kebab like skewered meat which is a popular food item in various parts of Nigeria and is enjoyed as a delicacy in much of West Africa. The dried version of Suya is called Kilishi. Perhaps it would be profitable to conclude this account of Hausa culture by indicating the Hausa symbolism: The Hausas have an eternal knot, a traditional symbolic indicator of Hausa identity. It is the supposed Hausa Ethnic flag which is a banner with five horizontal coloured stripe - from top to bottom viz. red, yellow, indigo blue, green, and khaki beige. The older and traditionally established motif of Hausa identity, the Eternal Knot in a star shape, is used in historic architecture, design and embroidery.

In Nigeria whether they are the real Hausas, or Fulanis or whatever, for many Nigerians all these seeming Hausa speaking peoples in Northern Nigeria Viz. North East, North West and North Central, they are all Hausas as far as they are considered. That is why we have taken the trouble to make the distinctions between the Hausas and the Fulanis, it now left for us to make a further distinction especially regarding the seeming Hausa speaking peoples of the North East who are distinctly known as the Kanuri whose language is also known as Kanuri language. Our next article is therefore about the Kanuri speaking peoples of the old Kanem-Bornu Empire stretching across Northeastern Nigeria, the Republic of Chad ditto Niger and Cameroun.

CULTURE HISTORY AND EVOLUTION OF KANNURI PEOPLES

The mere mention of Kanuri conjures up in modern times the names of prominent politicians like the former H.E., Alhaji Ali Modu Sheriff, the seeming controversial predecessor of H.E. Alhaji Ali Modu Shettima, incumbent Governor, Prof. Babagana Umara Zulum, etc. The Kanuri peoples ie. "Kanouri" a.k.a "Kanowri" as also "Yerwa" and several other subgroup names are an African ethnic group living largely in the lands of the former Kanem and Bornu Empires in those countries immediately bordering Nigeria viz. Niger, Chad and Cameroon. Those ethnic groups generally termed "Kanuri" include several subgroups and dialect groups, some of whom feel themselves distinct from the Kanuri. Most of them trace their origins to the ruling lineages of the medieval "Kanem-Bornu Empire" together with its client states and provinces. In contrast to neighbouring "Toubou" or "Zaghawa" pastoralists, the Kanuri groups traditionally have been sedentary peoples, engaging themselves in farming and fishing in the Chad Basin. They are also engaged in trade and salt processing (Cf. Idrissa, Abdourahmane; Decalo, Samuel, 2012, 12-15; See also Kanuri. Encyclopaedia Britannica. 2009. (Encyclopaedia Britannica Online. Accessed 2 April 2009).

Another important land-mark for which the Kanuris are notorious as also famous is their knack for horse riding. The first picture that comes to mind of those who studied history and Geography in Primary and Secondary Schools of the 1930s - 1940s as also 1950s - 1960s somewhat, is the picture of Ceremonial bodyguards of their overlords and kings called the "Sheikh of Bornou" aka Shehu of Bornu in their full regalia together with the line-up of soldiers in battle array. Right in the 1820s when the British colonials came, these ubiquitous knights on their mounts were very visible and were central to the Bornu state, and many Kanuri people still value horsemanship and horses till this day. One recalls the history of the "almighty" Kanem-Bornu Empire, founded around 1000 AD.

Tradition has it that the Kanuris were one of many Nilo-Saharan groups indigenous to the Central South Sahara. About the late 7th century, they began their expansion around the area of Lake are Chad and absorbed both the indigenous Nilo-Saharan and Chadic and Afro-Asiatic speaking groups. Originally they were pastoral people who tended their camels and cows. They continued their nomadic pastoral life until one of them by name "Sef", the son of Yemen, arrived in Kanem in the ninth century and united all the populations into the. This tradition however seems to be a product of later Islamic influence of the 7th century AD during the reign of the holy prophet Muhammad. Evidence of indigenous state formation in the Lake Chad area dates back to about 800 AD at Zilum. But the Kanuri became Muslims in the 11th century. Thereafter Kanem became the centre of Muslim learning and the Kanuris soon controlled all the area surrounding Lake Chad and a powerful empire called Kanem Empire, which reached its height in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries emblossomed when they ruled much of Middle Africa right into what is now Northeastern Nigeria (Cf. Fuchs, Fachi Peter, 1989, 54-61).

KANURI PEOPLE AND SUBGROUP

Kanuri peoples include several subgroups. They are identified by different names in some regions viz. Kanembu, Zaghawa, and Baggara speaking peoples. The Kanuri language was the major language of the Bornu Empire and still remains a major language, northeastern Nigeria and northern Cameroun Republic but in the Chad Republic it is limited to a handful of those who speak Kanuri and mostly in urban centres (Cf. Idrissa, Abdourahmane and Decalo, Samuel, 2012, 12-17). The Kanuri peoples Inherited the religious cultural traditions of the Kanem-Bornu state and therefore are predominantly Sunni Muslims. In Chad, Kanembu speaking Kanuris seem to be different from the large Kanuri ethnic groups inhabiting Nigeria. They are centered in Lac Prefecture and southern Kanem Prefecture. Although Kanuri was the major language of the Bornu Empire, in Chad, Kanuri speakers are just a handful who are to be found mostly in urban centers. But the Kanuri tongue remains the major language in South Eastern Niger, North Eastern Nigeria and Northern Cameroon. In the early 19th century and even beyond the core ethnic group of the Kanem-Borno Empire covered all those territories which included North Eastern Nigeria and Southern Libya and the Kanembu region with ties beyond the borders of Chad. That is why there is such a close family and commercial ties binding them with the Kanuri of North Eastern Nigeria. Within Chad, many Kanembu of Lac and Kanem Prefectures identify with the Alifa of Mao who was the governor of the region in pre-colonial times (Fuchs, Fachi Peter, 1989, 54-53).

Today, the largest population of Kanuri reside in the North East corner of Nigeria in Borno and Adamawa States where the ceremonial Emirate of Bornu traces direct descent from the Kanem-Bornu Empire. There are about 3 million Kanuri speaking peoples living in Nigeria, not including the over 200,000 who speak the Manga and Mangari dialects. The Nga people in Bauchi State also trace their origins to a Kanuri in the Diaspora. In South-Eastern Niger, where they form the majority of the sedentary population, the Kanuris are commonly called Beri Beri in Hausa. The population of the Kanuris in Niger is about 400,000, but there are those who also speak the Kanuri language in the Manga and the Mangari sub-group and these number about 100,000 in the area east of Zinder. But these regard themselves as distinct from the Beri Beri. Around 40,000 members of the Tumari subgroup, sometimes called "Kanembu" in Niger, are a distinct Kanuri subgroup but they live in the "N'guigmi" area and are distinct from the Chadian Kanembu peoples (Cf. Ethnologue KRT, 12-13). Other Kanuri peoples speak varieties of Kanuri dialects and they are of the Nilo-Saharan languages. These divisions include the Manga, Tumari, and Bilma dialects of Central Kanuri and the more distinct Kanembu language group.

Following the collapse of the Bornu Empire and the Scramble for Africa of 1883/4 in the 19th century, the Kanuris were divided under the rule of the British, French and German Empires all depending on the countries partitioned for them according to the Papal Bull of Demarcation of Pope Martin V (1415 - 1423). The Bornu Empire flourished until the arrival on the scene of Sir Frederick Lugard which has been discussed at length above. The Kanuri tribes consist of the Yerwa Kanuri, the Manga Kanuri, and several other sub-tribes. The majority of the Kanuris live in the Borno State of North-Eastern Nigeria, where they are the dominant group. They are also located in the countries of Niger, Chad, and Cameroon, and areas around Lake Chad. This region was once the powerful Borno Empire, ruled by the ancestors of the Kanuris. Others can be found in Western Sudan. The Kanuris began losing power in this region when the British took control after the 1914 amalgamation. Nevertheless, they have remained politically active and still have much influence on the surrounding towns and villages. Despite the loss of the Kanuri-led Empire, the Shehu of Bornu has continued to reign as the spiritual and political head of the Bornu Emirate. This traditional Kanuri/Kanembu state has maintained a ceremonial rule of the Kanuri peoples based in Maiduguri the headquarters of Borno State of Nigeria today. He is also being acknowledged by the other four million Kanuris in the neighbouring countries of Niger, Chad and Cameroun. The Shehu a.k.a "Sheikh" of Bornu drew his authority from the state founded before 1000 AD in the Kanem-Bornu Empire (Cf. History: Ngas-Kanuri Link. "News Tower Nigeria" Vol. 1, No. 7 2006; See also The Guardian. Naija Pundit. March 6th, 2009).

The Kanuri tribes consist of the Yerwa Kanuri, the Manga Kanuri, and several other sub-tribes. The majority of the Kanuri live in the Borno State of North Eastern Nigeria, where they are the dominant group. They are also located in the countries of Niger, Chad, and Cameroon, and areas around Lake Chad. This region was once the powerful Borno Empire, ruled by the ancestors of the Kanuri. Others can be found in western Sudan. The Kanuri began losing power in this region when the British took control after the 1914 amalgamation. Nevertheless, they have remained politically active and still have much influence on the surrounding people groups. In fact, aspects of Kanuri culture, language, and religion have been adopted by many of the neighboring tribes. The Kanuri are tall, with a stately, dignified look. This signifies their pride and appreciation for their past as rulers, as well as their present position of leadership and influence. Many Kanuri speak Hausa, Arabic, or another area language in addition to Kanuri.

KANURI SOCIO-CULTURAL PATTERNS AND TRADITIONS

Most of the Kanuris are farmers; however, they usually practice some other occupation during the dry season. Those who farm raise millet as their staple crop, and supplement it with sorghum, corn, and peanuts. They raise sheep, goats, and some horses. Among the Kanuri, horses are a symbol of prestige. The Kanuris who live in cities are involved in government jobs, public service, construction, transportation, and commerce. The Kanuris who have occupations that are related to politics or religion have a very high social status; whereas, those who work as blacksmiths, well-diggers, or butchers have a low social status. The majority of the Kanuris, however, are farmers, craftsmen, and merchants. The Kanuris live in settlements which vary in size but most of their ancient compounds contain walled-in compounds surrounding several mud or grass houses with thatched, cone-shaped roofs. These houses are very cool during the hot months. Some of these are still kept till today for these obvious reasons. Their farmlands surround these settlements. Most towns serve as local markets and administrative centres. Some of thier settlements also contain the local schools and mosques. Attached to the mosque are smaller schools for religious teachings mostly Qur'anic schools for the almajeris.

For the Kanuris, the household not the family of course, is an important economic unit. The greater the number in a family, the greater the prestige the family head is given. For this reason, young men are often 'loaned' as it were to households to help with field work in order to provide support, and to help in defending the family in case of attacks. In return, the head of the household sees to clothings, feeding, paying the bride price, and possibly providing brides for the young men. At times they will leave to go start their own households (Cf. History: Ngas-Kanuri Link, 32-37). This type of relationship is widespread in Kanuri society. It is similar to the father-son relationship in that supreme loyalty and respect is given to the head of the household at all times. Kanuri men marry while they are in their early twenties. Polygamy is common and according to Islamic tradition, a man may have as many as four wives. Young girls marry while they are in their teens. Ideally, a man wants his first wife to be a young virgin. However, the bride price for a virgin is quite expensive, so men often take divorced women as their first wives. The divorce rate among the Kanuri is extremely high, with eight out of ten marriages ending in a divorce. The traditional Kanuri dress consists of large robe-type garments that are worn with turbans or brightly embroidered caps. The large robes provide protection from the consistent heat. This attire is never worn while working out in the fields, but rather at festivals and Islamic ceremonies.

KANURI RELIGION AND BELIEF SYSTEM

As commented above the Kanuris have been Muslims since the eleventh century. The Koran emphasizes the importance of the family and the supreme authority of the father. Women are considered inferior to men in the Islamic scriptures, and are treated as such in Kanuri society. Some traditional beliefs and practices are still carried on in conjunction with Islam. Charms and amulets are worn around the neck or in pockets for various reasons. There is a charm to ensure a good pregnancy for a mother. There is also another to keep the ghost of the dead from haunting its descendants and so on. Some of the Kanuri tribes have the Bible translations in their native language. Among the nearly five million Kanuris, there are several thousands of believers, mostly among the Ngizim (Cf. Kanuri. Encyclopaedia Britannica). In North Eastern Nigeria many Christians abound and there are still more materials and Christian labourers desperately needed. The Christian Congregations among them have promoted a number of prayer points requesting God to call people who are willing to go to Northeastern Nigeria and share the love of Jesus with the Kanuris. They also pray that God will use the small number of Kanuri believers to share the Gospel with their friends and families. Finally, they also pray to the Holy Spirit to soften the hearts of the Kanuris towards Christians so that they will be receptive to the Gospel and co-exist happily together in Kanuri land but most especially that the Lord will raise up strong local Christian Churches among the Kanuris.

The current ruling line, the al-Kanemi dynasty, dates to the accession of Muhammad al-Amin al-Kanemi in the early 19th century, displacing the Sayfawa dynasty which had ruled from around 1300 AD. The 19th Shehu, Mustafa Ibn Umar El-Kanemi, died in February 2009, and was succeeded by the reigning Abubakar Ibn Umar Garbai El-Kanemi (Cf. Dudley, Billy J.1968, 86-89). To-date some of the most famous post-independence Kanuri leaders include the politicians Kashim Ibrahim, Ibrahim Imam, Zannah Bukar Dipcharima, Shettima Ali Monguno, Baba Gana Kingibe, former GNPP leader Waziri Ibrahim, and the former military ruler, Sani Abacha, Alhaji Atiku Alhaji Ali Modu Sheriff H. E. Alhaji Shettima and the incumbent Prof. Babagana Umara Zulum. In the Niger Republic, Kanuri political leaders include the former Prime Minister of Niger Mamane Oumarou, and the former President of Niger, Mamadou Tandja.

ANALYSIS WITH THE YORUBA TRIBE IN PARTICULAR

In Yoruba land in particular Lagos, the Oba is seen both as the leader and ruler of his people. Everything revolves round the king. He is the life wire of the community. He must concentrate on his royal duties because he now represents all the culture, norms, traditions and values of his people. He must stay within the kingdom, listen and give counsel and advice to all and sundry once he has been chosen and sanctioned by the Ifa as the rightful one. Even if he was not seen as the probable successor to the throne by reason of age, influence or other qualifications, as long as he belongs to the accepted ruling house the elders who have consulted the Ifa have pronounced him as the rightful one, no other elder in the family is supposed to contest with him. He then has to go through the traditional procedure of electing a Kabiyesi and crowned accordingly assuming the title hither was to pronounced by the Ifa.

This is the type of traditional rulership and governance which obtained in ancient URUAN. This is the culture envisaged in the accession of every Traditional Ruler and Royal Father in URUAN/EFIK, nay the Nsomm and the Obong to the ancient URUAN/EFIK kingdoms. This is a culture and tradition in line with our ancient best practices but which norms are still current and acceptable to our modern societies. A leader and invariably an Obong, Nsomm, Village/Clan Head, Etubom, President, Governor, Chairman of LGA or whichever name called, is elected or selected/appointed to solve the problems of the people over whom he/she is elected. It doesn't matter whether the problems were created during his/her reign or not. A leader is elected to find and work out solutions, to organize and bring harmony, development and progress to his kingdom, village or clan or even country. There is a whole lot of difference between politics and governance because in politics the leader as often happens especially here in Nigeria merely tells the people about the problem and perhaps the gravity of the problem but hardly solves them; rather he tells them who to blame for it. But in governance on the other hand, he is expected to identify the problem and work hard in order to solve it. Unfortunately, or emphasis in our interesting country here the emphasis is on more politics than on governance. That is why we allow the politicians – the President, Governor, Council Chairman etc. to lord it over the Traditional Ruler who is the natural vicegerent of God Almighty to whom the people owe allegiance and from whom they expect their wellbeing and happiness. Governance should be a shared responsibility between the politicians and the natural Rulers and not overlordship or subservience simply because of paying them a pittance of allowances all of which go to expose the mighty weakness of our so called leaders. "Nte adia ke ?b?r? ?n?", and this explains why our Traditional Rulers cower and pander to the whims and caprices of political leaders and officials. With his Nsomm in Council/Etubom's Council, which system should also normally include the Head of Administration ie. President of UNEC, the organization of URUAN/EFIK Traditional Ruler should be able to execute all manner of administration worthy of the mandate handed to him by the people as their Sovereign.

Great kings and traditional rulers are known by their dynamism, and great heroic deeds and actions because as the Romans say:" servire est regnare", which when translated means: "to serve is to reign/rule". When these actions translate into the unity and development of their communities, the people enjoy unabridged peace, tranquility and upliftment, for

> "when the righteous are on the throne, the people rejoice; but when the wicked are in power, the people groan" (Prov. 29:2).

The antecedents of this history and heritage, nay political mentoring and promotion of political players in URUAN/EFIK, even Nigeria is that it may be very difficult to find those kind of genuine, natural, authentic and committed Traditional Rulers today except upstarts, men soaked in bloodshed and evil trying to struggle to become Royal Fathers and Traditional Rulers and Leaders or politicians or even the Obong/Nsomm or Group/Clan Heads and Etuboms, whereas such officials and leaders used to be sourced and when found, certain traditional rites or ceremonies would be performed on them for a proof that such and such are the ones the land has approved or sanctioned to assume office. The Nsomm of URUAN ditto the Obong of Calabar as every other Royal Father whether as Village or Clan Head is seen as God's Vicegerent on earth and the citizen's revere and honour him as such. It is drummed into the ears of every male child of royal descent and houses in the land and in fact every male child, that these supreme values of honour and integrity must adorn those who are to lead a decent society like URUAN/EFIK. He must learn to be seen and recognized as a gentleman whose virtues among others uphold him as a lover of peace, one who promotes justice, peace, harmony and reasonableness in his undertakings and dealings with the people. He must be a respecter of persons not an abuser of any sort whether verbal, emotional or physical. He is one who must seek to build up and not to disintegrate and to contribute as a moral pillar of the community. But more importantly, his word must be his bond such that he honours commitments as a man of honour.

POLITICS WITHOUT INTEGRITY, GOVERNANCE WITHOUT PRINCIPLE

People often remark and very poignantly too, that there is no integrity in politics. Similarly, our governance is often without principles. Some even agree that politics is a dirty game, but I find this very amusing and intriguing to say the least. Yet what we have nowadays in URUAN/ EFIK, nay Nigeria are a bunch of cheats, vagabonds, impostors, cultists and people full of every coloration of conceit, corruption, wickedness, debauchery and hedonism, whose certain behaviours whether charismatic or natural can never be found in them, those who want to be elected to political offices or to be crowned Traditional Rulers through litigation and law-suits and to be promoted by the courts. To build enduring Institutions whether in the political or traditional domains, there must be integrity and transparency. There must be will power, initiative and drive in would-be aspirants. The people vying for such positions and power must be ready to buy into these institutions, believe in them and also be able to appreciate what these institutions stand for and not just for their economic and self-aggrandizements. What we are having today is that people are just going into politics or as they say "government", and having got in there, they say "what can we do to help ourselves!"; and that is why we will never get it right. 99% of those going into government are not going in there for service, and this is the reason for our present political and economic nightmare and predicament in Nigeria today. Mark my words. One of the problems now cropping up in URUAN/EFIK is that most of these aspirants have neither integrity nor high moral probity and authority but are only those like jobbers looking for appointment or to be elected whereas we only need people who are not looking for these positions but just want to serve the common good. It should be only people who already have names, means, integrity and clout, people who won't mess up when in office because they know they have their integrity to protect and something to fall back to.

These are people who do not go into oblivion when they leave office or die because they were always known in the society even before they were crowned or elected into office. Our traditional stools and political positions and offices have been bastardized by cheats, upstarts and those "who are fake and smart" who mount the soap box to talk glibly of the positions they want to occupy in the land and what miracles they will be able to perform for her upliftment and progress. In fact, in most cases we see sons and daughters of slaves and even aliens whose parents went to school or had in time acquired some position especially wealth, also corrupt political elites whose delusion and bogus sense of entitlement to influence and royalty or political office. We see them coming to struggle and cause confusion and mayhem even bloodshed and litigations to win the stools of office and positions to which they are not even entitled to aspire in the first place.

We also are confronted with a bunch of ambitious and selfish upstarts and jingoistic charlatans, opportunists, greedy and ambitious humans, often desperately masquerading as future messiahs claiming eligibility and authentic qualifications to the throne or political offices purporting to uplift and save the people from the morass they find themselves. They promise to provide transformative, democratic and purposeful leadership in URUAN/ EFIK and Nigeria. They even begin to claim to be natural blue-blooded descendants of kings and leaders in URUAN/EFIK - positions and titles that are in anti-thesis to URUAN/EFIK culture, tradition and heritage. Whereas most of these impostors and nonentities were never born at, nor lived in the communities they claim to be bona fide indigenes, but because they have by nook or crook acquired money power and influence, they begin to claim relevance and hoodwink the people hinging their political élan and royal dynasty on money and wealth simply because the generality of citizens are too gullible, poor and powerless to challenge their bluff. Most of these our so-called leaders whether in the political or civil orders, particularly politicians, and those who aspire to be governors, Chairmen of Councils, Royal Fathers, etc. never lived in those domains they claim to belong. They live at Abuja or Lagos or wherever. But when it is time for elections or there is a vacancy in a royal stool, it is now time to come home and they are all over the place. They have never stayed with; neither are they known by the citizens. One of the worst mistakes anybody can make, consciously or unconsciously, is to allow a distance between himself/herself and the people; it does not matter how lowly those people may be in the hierarchy. All we have are only ambitious-driven politicians and so-called leaders who neither know nor care about the plight of their people they want to rule over.

The politicians of today have not been able to practise the politics that gives credence to good governance; instead, they go after their immediate interests and those of their parties. This has made the masses to be at the receiving end of their self-aggrandizing politics thereby denying them the promised dividends of democracy and good governance. These politicians can sacrifice good governance at the altar of their political interests and will not do a thing in the land except for political gains and what can promote their political future. According to His Lordship, Bishop Matthew H. Kukah, we depend so much on the so-called political class who to his mind, are such "ill-equipped and ill-prepared people who have stumbled and fumbled their ways to power". The problem here especially in Nigeria is that these same people who are caught up in primitive acquisition become so rich and enamoured that they have no brains anymore and as such require the psychiatrics for their mental health. Because the poor masses have no voice; there is no competition, thus allowing the politicians to hold sway. Yes, these people are holding power but they actually have neither the idea nor any skill acquisition – they have no brains, no strategic action plan of what to do with it because they always win power by accident and default of abracadabra. What examinations did they sit for and what qualifications did they have to make them the best suited to govern or hold political offices? None! That is the situation we have on our hands because these people who have this wonderful opportunity to govern us never have the benefit of requisite competence and savvy to assume such an exalted responsibilities and as such more often than not the goodwill and trust of the people always evaporate because of their lack of requisite knowledge in governance and human/economic managerial capabilities. There should be competition not just "academic exercise" of election debates. And even then, if we allow such public election debates, no aspirant should be allowed to use any written paper so that when they talk people will know whether they are speaking from their brains and heart or not and whether the person aspiring to be President, governor or whatever is fit to lead. However, the assumption has always been that every public office holder is there to look after himself/herself.

The political mantra or slogan in "politics is about who gets what"; nobody talks about legacies because there is so much cynicism between those who govern and the governed. Whereas all the renowned leaders like Chief Obafemi Awolowo, Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe, Alhaji Ahmadu Bello, Chief Nyong Essien, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Ahmadu Ahhijio, Mahatma Ghandi, etc. had dependence on and were themselves intellectuals who never separated themselves from their people. They lived with them, ate with them and tried to be like them. Chief Nyong Essien as an Ekpe Adept, never missed any local Ekpe festival or celebration in URUAN/EFIK. He would come down from Lagos when he was in the House of Representatives in the 1930s -1950s or in the House of Chiefs in the 1960s. But today nobody seems to know our political and chieftaincy aspirants from Adam, yet tomorrow they will come and vie to become URUAN/EFIK leaders and rulers overnight and the poor masses will jump at that as they are often sprayed with peanuts, rice and salt even though they have lots of these bags of rice and salt in their homes. These are our so-called big wigs with dirty money and acquired wealth of filthy lucre which sources nobody cares to find out. Governance is not about charity or stomach infrastructure, even if it is, those who want to govern must have the competence and vision-driven aptitude and sense of leadership with a good dose of good intentions to serve for the benefit, upliftment and progress of their suffering masses. Politicians, religious leaders and preachers of the Gospel of affluence and prosperity, especially our rich industrialists, business tycoons, money magnates, politician moguls, the military elites, the rich oil barons and the Bill Gates, the Dangotes, the Otedolas and the Adenugas of this world should know that inequality in the sharing, distribution and amassing of the goods of this world ARE THE ROOT CAUSE OF SOCIAL IllS AND THE BANE OF SOCIAL UNRESTS AND INJUSTICES. They should be ashamed and scandalized that there is quite enough food and means for everyone in this country but that they are the source and cause of the national shame in the poverty of Nigerian citizens.

In fact, our people have gone beyond the state of POVERTY to the state of DEPRIVATION. It is all that bad and is getting worse by the day because some Nigerians are still living in caves and coves especially in the core North and core southern Riverine fringes, called water fronts. They should also realize that the misery, poverty, hunger and want including drug abuse rampant in our society today, is as a result of the poor distribution of the goods, the incomes and services of our commonwealth such that only an infinitesimal proportion of the citizenry amass 99.99% of all the riches of Nigeria leaving the 0.1% of the goods and services for the masses to struggle for, thus making them go hungry on daily basis and in geometric progressions with some youths subjecting themselves to indescribable insecurities. A whole generation of young people are unable to find work or learn new skills, freezing them in economic and social stasis. Then these begin to drink and smoke in order to gain self-confidence and ending up in criminalities. These are Nigeria's present day, kidnaps, armed-robbers and bandits, most of their graduates, educated Almagivis and hendsmen. Our leaders must be reminded of the well-known nexus between joblessness and criminality; as the saying goes, "an idle man is the devil's workshop." It is just the very tiny elite of the political and military class that monopolize and control the Nigerian State and her resources with their surrogates and family/political members and rotating between civilian and military. Worse still is that, this posture inevitably constitutes the Government with the insidious and more profound consequence that the masses can neither know, hear nor see what Government is doing or whether there is anything called Government in the land in the first place. A situation where Government is of the urban elite, for the elite and by the elite cannot be said to be a DEMOCRACY, it is an aberration because goods and services are simply meant for the elite and nothing gets down to the rural populace including infrastructure. Roads, railways, airports etc. are provided simply for the benefit of the rich in the cities and the neglected majority of its citizens are virtually cut off from Government. All that Government knows and does is "self-talk" by way of information dissemination through its media agencies especially by the Minister/Commissioner of Information. The end term is "bad press" because Government is talking to itself while the populace look askance and bewildered at what the tested Government media professionals are doing by busying themselves and expending ample energy such that their information is hardly credible and nobody is ready to believe what Government is saying or doing in this nation. All these have paled in comparison to the magnitude of the social malaise threatening the posterity of our great nation. A situation where the entire wealth of a nation like Nigeria is in the hands of the privileged few, and they are all known by the generality of the citizenry is quite unacceptable to say the least. This is the politics of the winner takes all as practised in this country. It is praiseworthy and ennobling to have the "richest" man/woman in Nigeria. But I prefer rather that it would be better and nationally, socially, and economically more profitable to have thousands and millions of average rich people in Nigeria than to have only few of the "richest" men/women in a country, nay in the entire World.

Nevertheless, it should not be at the expense of inequality through monopoly and absolute autonomy. It is evil to have one or two or even few who practice autonomy and monopoly so that nobody else can get there. It is better to have thousands and millions of average rich people who are patriotic and nationally inclined who would be ready and willing to drive the economy better. They would readily and easily provide millions of jobs for our teaming youths by galvanizing thousands of industrial concerns especially by setting up millions of SMEs all over the place.

Privatization for the privileged few is evil. When only a few are allowed access to the wealth and resources of this country and allocate authority to themselves, then it makes it impossible for goods and services to trail round and down to the masses of the citizenry due to their "invidious greed", primitive acquisition and monopolistic mentality. Everyone is always afraid of the authorities and whoever is in authority that is regarded the right one. They become the angels and the nobility and everybody else becomes docile and acquiescent. Governors, political leaders, military politicians etc. are the only authorities wielding power, it is only those who can allot offices and positions such that nobody can win any election or be selected for anything even in his own family and ward. Nobody can get elected unless the AUTHORITIES ON HIGH prime it so. Nobody gets any appointment or job in any Ministry or Department or anywhere. Nobody collects any benefits of the state or whatever without the directives of the AUTHORITIES or from the TOP whether with or without adequate and requisite qualifications or expertise! That is the situation we are now in this country. Too bad! I recommend a situation where many citizens can be brought in such that doors are opened for many to be able to own oil blocks, establish cement factories, rice and fabric industries, etc. Then prices in goods and services will go round and down even to the masses so that nobody is essentially and actually poor (Cf. PP. Benedict XVI; Allocutio: Towards eliminating the Structural Cause of Global Economic Dysfunction, Brazil, Jan 8, 2007). The problem gets worse by the generalized practice of wastefulness, individualism and greed. There is therefore the need to radically resolve this structural cause of poverty in this country and it should not be delayed any longer, hence the call for RESTRUCTURING. Nigeria urgently needs to be cured of this "sickness unto death" which is weakening and frustrating and can only lead to crisis of unknown proportions and assume an unprecedented and frightening dimensions if not to anarchy and doom vis - a - vis revolution; God forbid! Nigeria of today has killed the middle class.

Unfortunately, they are the people who are not willing or ready to be part of the forces of this programme of change that will create results in the kingdoms. Everybody knows that the only Institution that somehow seems to proffer hope to the citizenry in this age of the so-called 'civilized, modern and of 'democratic dispensation' is the Traditional Institution. The so-called "DEMOCRACY" is a farce in Nigeria because there is a difference between participation and representation – between political power and governance. Our Democracy allows people who are not supposed to lead them to represent them whether as President or Governor, Senator and what have you. It is even more so worrisome and disheartening that soon after the civil war; people have become so extremely fixated to decipher this predicament. The Nigerian version of DEMOCRACY makes office seeking a way of life with the result that those who seek public office or rulership as chiefs and kings more often than not, run the risk of being disconnected from the people they are supposed to represent whether elected or appointed. They move from Commissioner to Governor and from Governor to Senator living in a glass house or ivory tower to feather their nest and by grandstanding with cosmetic edifice surround themselves with stupendous trappings of instant wealth to win accolades and adulation of the poor and deprived populace. The Nigerian version of politics is politics of the winner takes all and survival of the fittest. If you are not a politician, a Governor, a Senator, Chief of Staff or any of that stuff you cannot vie to be the President whereas so many have become Governors, Senators etc. without first of all being politicians and former office holders unlike Governor Peter Obi who held everybody spell bound with his adroitness at governance and Nigeria has millions of governorship/presidential materials like Obi. Governance is about managing people and scarce resources. No wander the recycling syndrome in Nigerian brand of politics!

ROYAL FATHER ONLY REMEMBERED AS LAST RESORT

Wherever and whenever matters get to crises point and the situation turns awry as the problems become so intractable and hopeless, then is the time to run to the so-called but humiliated and trivialized as also monetized "Royal Fathers" as the only beacon of hope and salvation, though very often things get cleared up by their divinely inspired and directed interventions. People fail to reckon they remain but the avowed representatives of God Almighty. Nevertheless, these new upstarts of the political class would not want to give them that recognition or let them be. Newspaper stories are rife with bickerings on whether the Royal Institutions - Chieftaincy affairs, the monarchy etc. should not be done away with by now. Yet this should be another reason why the position was and should never be contestable because of the general belief that anyone who ascended the throne as a result of fraudulence, greed or sharp practices normally died before or within months after installation.

But modernity, globalization and what have you have defaced all that giving way to cheats and nincompoops to assume importance as well as perjuring themselves to be the bona-fide inheritors of UBONG EKURIKU from the ancestors. URUAN/EFIK is becoming a laughing stock before respectable Royal fathers and traditional Rulers in the country as these imposters are now having a field day simply because most of the blue-blooded sons and daughters have either chickened out in fear of their lives or just have got neither the verve nor the nerve and stamina nor the wherewithal to fight it out or take on these impostors in a free and sane contestation. Edmund Burke, the 18th century Irish statesman and philosopher politician has said it all to the effect that "all it takes for evil men and nincompoops to seize society and corrupt it is for good people to sit back and do nothing". Nothing could be clearer and more apt to describe the situation of URUAN/EFIK as of now because the situation has allowed so much evil to triumph in Uruan society simply because the good people have either abdicated or surrendered their positions. Men and women, even though they may be few and far between, simply shut their mouths and eyes, doing nothing. With money and a little bit of 'brusai' (1) upstarts and fraudsters with rotten money and ill-gotten wealth have taken over the leadership and bona-fide blue-blooded citizens have become 'hostages and refugees' overnight such that anybody can now claim legitimacy and orthodoxy to get crowned or elected/appointed to political office in URUAN/EFIK, nay in Nigeria today. But the greatest philosopher of all times, the great Greek Philosopher Aristotle (+384 BC) articulated it this way "If the wise become too lazy and off guard to rule because they have allowed fools to capture power, be sure they (fools) will make laws which they (wise and men of nobility and dignity) must obey; and if they don't obey the upstarts will deal with them no matter how wise or powerful they claim to be". This is because our Elders are sitting tight looking askance, and they are allowing fools have a field day to do what they are doing. When citizens and the natural rulers/leaders allow incompetent and the wrong people to emerge as rulers/leaders invariably they have to suffer the rule of fools; it does not matter how powerful or influential they may be. Since they equally do not need to belong to any party, but they must know that whichever Political Party wins it is that Party that will provide the maximum Ruler – ie. the President or Governor or Chairman of LGA Council and as one to assume the mantle of Rulership. The moment power slips from the hands of the rightful leaders/rulers into unknown and lawless hands, the result is anarchy and doom if not disarray.

THE NIGERIAN VERSION OF GOVERNANCE & COUPS AGAINST THE MASSES

It is therefore to expedient not too warn and at the same time admonish and exhort the handlers of this country – the so-called representatives of the people; the President, Governors, Senators, Members of the Houses of Representatives and State Houses of Assembly, ditto Chairmen of LGAs and Councilors of this country who have put the gentry and the masses including even our revered age-old Traditional Rulers into their pockets, thus making themselves the owners of this blessed country of ours. This is because they are the people who offer peanuts or what they call "stomach infrastructure' to the people especially during elections in order to sweet-talk, hoodwink, fool, inveigle, persuade, cajole and even bamboozle the people to vote for them if not out rightly and openly buying their votes. Yes, these are men of timber and calibre of our political class and military ex-this and ex-that. There are just a handful of them, the cabal who subjugate the masses and keep them prostate for all you care by amassing all the wealth and good things belonging to this nation and the Commonwealth for themselves, their families, cronies and stooges for eternity because they have no conscience and don't care a damn for the masses. They are also the big wigs with dirty money and acquired wealth of filthy lucre which sources nobody cares to find out. As mentioned above most of them are our Politicians, Religious Leaders and Preachers of the Gospel of Affluence, Prosperity, and Breakthroughs. But most importantly these also include our rich industrialists, ex-military generals, business tycoons, money magnates, kingpins and moguls, to wit; entrepreneurs of commerce, the military elites, the rich oil barons of Nigeria. They have no conscience and political will to serve as it is said," SERVIRE EST REGNARE', which when translated means that those who want to rule must be prepared to serve as servant leaders of the people. Governance is not about charity neither is it stomach infrastructure; and even if it is, those who want to govern must have the conscience, the integrity, the morality, the competence and vision-driven aptitude and "sense of leadership with service and humanity". Rulers of the people should also be imbued with a good dose of good intentions to serve for the benefit, upliftment and progress of their suffering masses whom they have brought forth on their hands on account of the system they are operating.

They should know that inequality in the sharing, distribution and amassing of the goods of this world is evil. The suffering of the masses and the near-absence of morality in the distribution of wealth in this country is indicative that the Government is out of touch with the people. Whatever they have amassed, whatever comes forth from whatever name called system of Governance, belongs to the people and must be for the benefit of all who are the real owners of the Commonwealth and Nation. But we come to notice that the so-called RULERS/Leaders/Governors are mostly the military turned civilian, who after running their home States as Governors or Heads of Military Departments promote themselves to the Senate or even when as Senators and Hon MHRs and even whenever they age, return home to become Monarchs in their Communities to continue with their sons and cronies to lord it over the masses and keep them forever marginalized. This has been the situation ever since Independence. It is the same people, members of their family and cronies who hold sway as rulers and owners of the Nigerian state. They are barely .5% or in clear figures less that 500,000 out of the nearly 200Million estimated population of this country who exercise sovereignty in goods and services. In politics and the economy of Nigeria, it is this cabal who have become both the conscience and competitive venues in their primitive accumulation, who pocket the Nigerian treasury to the exclusion of their localities such that it is near impossible for the emergence of the genuine bourgeois class except theirs. The masses cannot access wealth independently apart from what may ever come from government finances and patronage with the elite class as god-fathers and benefactors. It's this regime of primitive acquisition that has killed the middle-class in this country to the detriment of the encouragement and emergence of both the horizontal and vertical development across the entire spectrum and the nooks and crannies of this country. Things cannot just go round including infrastructure on account of the ever diminishing potentials in the citizenry which has stalled communities to accumulate any surplus not to talk of developing their productive capacity in wealth and human resources, except making state power an attractive avenue for looters who have left the masses prostrate. As a paradigm to our above situation read this:

THE 'NMTC 1962' EXAMPLE WHO STILL RUN NIGERIA

They, (the Nigeria political cum ex-military cabals) joined the army as teenagers. They rose rapidly thanks to the Civil war and in their thirties were holding plum positions. As septuagenarians, these men are still calling the shots. All of them began life at the Nigeria Military Training College (NMTC) Kaduna in 1962. Members of Course Five include Muhammadu Buhari, Shehu Musa Yar'Adua, Muhammadu Jega, Chris Ugokwe, Juventus Ojukwu, Ola Oni, Paul Tarfa, Abdullahi Shelleng, Ibrahim Bako, Duro Ajayi, Alfred Adoloju and Tony Hananiya. There are also Course Six, made up of Ibrahim Babangida, Sani Abacha, Abdusalami Abubakar, Mamman Vatsa, Muhammadu Magoro, Sanni Bello, Paul Omu, Gado Nasko, Garba Duba, Sani Sami, Robert Akonobi, Ifeanyi Aniebo, Godfrey Nebo, Raphael Iluyomade and Ozoemena Igweze. Now let us not make any mistakes about this, Tunde Idiagbon, Sunday Ifere and Zamani Lekwot also joined the Army in 1962, two years after the NMTC was established to prepare soldiers for further training as officers abroad. From the July 29, 1966 Coup till date, Nigeria has virtually become the property of the above mentioned officers, dead or living. They have produced four Military Leaders: Buhari, Babangida, Abacha and Abdusalami. Buhari has also become President as a civilian. If we go through the books, you will discover that all the names mentioned above have enjoyed juicy positions as Governors, Ministers, or Heads of Agencies. Some are still on top now as Traditional Rulers. Yar'Adua and Idiagbon were Vice President equivalent. Bello, Sami, Omu, Jega, Shelleng, Ifere, Oni, Lekwot, Useni, Abacha Nasko, Duba, Akonobi, Aniebo, Tarfa were Governors. Buhari and Idiagbon also occupied same position in Borno. Vatsa, Kure, Yar'Adua, Buhari, Magoro, Useni, Abacha, Nasko were Ministers. Ugokwe Hananiya and Nebo headed Government Agencies. Hananiya was also an Ambassador. They also veered into Politics. It began with Ojukwu who represented Idemili in the House of Representatives of the Second Republic. Yar'Adua tried his best but was frustrated by Babangida and eventually died in the hands of Abacha.

Today, Useni is a Senator just like Magoro, and wants to go to the Plateau Government House soon even before Buhari plans to continue as President beyond 2019. Sami and Jega are Emirs. Omu's wife, Stella, was in the Senate. Bello's son, Abubakar, is the Governor of Niger State. His wife is the daughter of Abdusalami. And we note that at the time Governor Bello won election in 2015, his mother-in-law was the Chief Judge of Niger State. These NMTC '62 officers really worked their way into power and are not in any hurry to leave the scene. It all started in 1966 when the first coup consumed Prime Minister Tafawa Balewa and some military officers. The man who led the coup, Chukwuma Nzeogwu was Chief Instructor at the NMTC. The Commandant, Col. Raphael Sodeinde had moved to the newly established Nigeria Defence Academy [NDA] as Commandant leaving Nzeogwu as the de facto Commandant of the NMTC.

The counter coup of July 29, 1966 catapulted NMTC 1962 boys into power. And when war broke out in 1967, they fought on both sides. Akonobi, Ojukwu, Ugokwe and Aniebo joined Biafra and distinguished themselves as Brigade Commanders. Aniebo was detained by Ojukwu after his sector was lost. The 1962 Boys came into power in 1975 following the ouster of General Yakubu Gowon. Adoloju, Babangida and Yar'Adua were key figures in the plot and were rewarded as members of the Supreme Military Council [SMC]. Buhari, Omu, Bello and Lekwot became Governors and were later joined by Shelleng and Jega. Idiagbon, Nasko, Duba, Tarfa and Oni also became Governors a year to the Second Republic. Buhari struck on December 31, 1983 to herald the rise of the 1962 Boys. His Deputy was Idiagbon. Abacha announced the coup. Babangida turned out to be Army Chief of Staff. Bako died in the process. Useni, Jega, Sami and Duba were appointed Governors.

The new SMC comprised such officers as Omu, Vatsa, Magoro, Abacha Kure, Nasko, Babangida, Idiagbon and Buhari himself. They were fully in-charge. At the same time, they had issues among themselves. In August 1985, Babangida sacked Buhari. He formed an Armed Forces Revolutionary Council [AFRC] and retained Abacha, Kure, Nasko, Omu, Vatsa and Duba. Much later Abdusalami joined them. When Babangida stepped Aside, he paved way for Abacha to emerge as leader. Abacha took in Useni and Abdusalami. He dealt with Yar'Adua who was injected to death in Abakaliki prison. Abdusalami took over following Abacha's death in 1998. He would have been sacked by his Course mate the same day leadership felon him. What Abdusalami did was to arrange with Babangida to foist General Obasanjo on Nigerians. And that has been the trade mark of the 1962 Boys. Divide and Rule. It is the policy that has kept them in power. For 56 years they have had Nigeria in their pockets. Apart from Sanni Bello who passed out from Sandhurst on July 29, 1965, most of these officers did not attend elite British and American Military Schools. From Dehra Dun, India to Mons, Aldershot, they have been able to relegate others to the background. Take Babangida for instance. What He did was to favour officers of the Nigeria Defence Academy Course Three while in power. Tunde Ogbeha, Mike Akhigbe, Raji Rasaki and Chris Garba were appointed Governors. Buhari started it all when he made Lt. Col David Mark of NDA Three Governor of Babangida's State, Niger alongside Major Generals like Jega and Abubakar Waziri. Useni, a Brigadier was posted to Bendel State. Abacha was not fair to NDA Course One at all. He sacked Allison Madueke as Navy Chief and brought in Akhigbe of NDA Course Three. Another NDA Three Office, Alwal Kazir became Army Chief. The worst form of humiliation came from Abdusalami who Appointed Jubril Ayinla of NDA Course Two as Navy Chief after Akhigbe who was elevated to Chief of General Staff. During the hand-over, Ayinla had to salute his junior. The 1962 Boys made sure no NDA trained officer Ruled Nigeria. Today, their man Buhari is there. [Courtesy of Emeka Obasi: Saturday Vanguard]. Of course this has now changed hands with the civilian-military cum politicians taking over and pocketing the Nigerian gentry and masses as noted above. Alas Nigeria! Who will free her from this cabal? Time will tell.

TOWARDS TAMING THE AMBITIOUS-DRIVEN POLITICIANS AND THE SO-CALLED CIVILIAN RULERS VIS-À-VIS URUAN-EFIK

With the new URUAN-EFIK Constitution soon to come into force, let these nincompoops and charlatans go to Iso Atakpor/Efe Asabo whether for their crowning and adoption by the people as their representative: Natural Ruler, Governor, Senator Chairman etc. and we shall see. For royalty or even political office requires that aspirants be imbued with the virtues of humility, truthfulness, broadmindedness, sensitivity to little things and yearnings of the people and whatever upholds the dignity of the beneficiaries, particularly meritocracy and resourcefulness, justice, sacrifice and prudence. The road map should be to purge this kind of nonsense and situation in the Nigerian society and get back to what it used to be. Before anything else, everything should be done by the not too young to rule a.k.a the new generation to tame the cabals by stemming above all, violations of freedom of speech, unaddressed perception of nepotism and favouritism as entrenched in the NMTC '62 articulated above. Onslaught against the parliament and parliamentarians, religious bigotry and rise of ethnic nationalism, intimidation of the major opposition party and disorderliness of the ruling party through the use of the police and state agencies to terrorize and fight political enemies; must also be tamed: disobedience to court orders and resistance to the rule of law, public perception of credibility and moral problems of members of the parliament over corruption issues as also tyrannical and autocratic tendencies by heads of governments from the Presidency down to Chairmen of Council including of course the "revered" Traditional Rulers coupled with arbitrariness, hate-speech and increasing lawlessness of security agencies, compromised and subservient States Assemblies, and emperor Governors parading above law in the polity. To be added to and to stem all these must also be tamed contemptuous attitudes regarding democratic values by being surrounded by vicious cabals with the NMTC '62 as paradigm. Yes, it is all these that have threatened the Nigerian State and her adorable citizens such that people in in positions of power and authority are shielded while "ordinary Nigerians" are made targets to the rabid political and economic interests, primitive acquisitions and draining of State treasuries for the benefit of and assuaging the ambitions of the political elites over the peace, progress and unity of the Nation.

That is why we are having cases of some of these pretenders dying young or mysteriously or living in the world of amnesia and tyranny because they would never go through the traditional rites like being adorned with UDAK and going to be sanctified and anointed at EFE ASABO/ISO ATAKPO, (2) which we are advocating as from now before any other ceremonial and swearing in of whatever accepted designate/elect. They are always afraid, but why? There is nothing to be afraid about if their hands are clean! There is no juju or any metaphysical rites performed or contemplated, simply that this is the tradition and every aspirant must as from now on go through the institution by going thither and returning thence using the traditional canoe paddling if he is of the blue-blooded royalty ancestry, but will they even do this even if permitted to arrange his going thither? However, they now have an option of going there using any water craft at their personal disposition and convenience and with whoever sea/water craft captains to man their crafts if they care, provided two traditional appointees are on board with them and provided they can also arrange to be joined by the traditional regatta through the hallowed waters of AKWA AKPA URUAN. Every Obong/Nsomm designate wearing the IKPAYA as also those others mentioned in ARTICLE XVI paragraph 4 of the Constitution of URUAN/EFIK NATIONAL UNION must make make pilgrimage and on arrival at the threshold /precincts of AKWA AKPA URUAN – Atlantic be prepared to take a sip of the water from the water of the OCEAN with a glass or cup after the traditional delegate appointed has first done so and given the glass/cup to him. Then the convoy can either proceed to St. Peter's Catholic Church further down or back to EFE ASABO for the OBONG/NSOMM designate (and/or any other traditional Ruler designate, Etubom, Village/Clan Head etc.) to be decorated with the UDAK Ubong EFIK/URUAN. As in the Constitution, this requirement is also mandatory, a conditio sine qua non for all aspirants to any political office/position, whether as Chairman of a party, LGA Chairman, Councilor, Senator, or Member of the House of Representatives/State Assembly. This is a ceremony which should not be performed as a secret hush-hush event, but one carried out in full view of the people with pomp and grandeur after all the formalities of selection have been complied with. The use of the traditional means of transportation instead of the modern marine craft is just an aspect of the custom, why should a true URUAN INYANG ATAKPOR or EFIK EBURUTU citizen – a blue blood off-shoot of ancestral Royalty for that matter be afraid of water. URUAN/EFIK people in modern times are simply too timid, too docile and lazy such that they easily acquiesce to illegalities and abominations of which we now find ourselves like going to the courts to settle matters of customary laws and traditions. What an abomination and desecration of our ancient traditions and norms! It is simply anathema in URUAN/EFIK tradition.

In truth, money makes some people mad just as others madly pursue it. It is mostly the political class who are the forerunners of this madness such that others who have become highly placed persons either by birth or association with the politicians at the state or federal level come home to fight and institute lawsuits to claim relevance and rights to the throne of ancestors or whatever. To them politics or ascendancy to chieftaincy becomes essentially a game in which "the end justifies the means" and: "power is might." Unfortunately, these glaring inconsistencies and noisy posturing of the neaveau riche and cash and carry politicians will never have a rendezvous nor reckon with history in this treacherous terrain of power politics in our country today. Come to think of it, has anybody ever bothered to ask these simple questions: "Where does this man/woman come from?" What is his/her family tree"? "And from which clan or kindred is he/she standing for election whether in politics or for chieftaincy or Royal heritage and succession, etc."? Political offices, chieftaincy, nationality, citizenship and above all genealogy have now come to be articles of cash and carry and sold for filthy lucre to the highest bidder, now that titles and positions have become cartels for buying and selling - what a shame for URUAN/EFIK and Nigeria.

THE CONSECRATION OF ISO ATAKPOR THE SYMBOL OF URUAN NATION AND UNITY

Precisely in December 1962 when at Akwa Akpa Uruan the pre-Vatican II Solemnity and Feast of the Holy Family (represented by Jesus, Mary and Joseph of Bethlehem) which then always fell due on the second Sunday after Chrismas was being celebrated, the expatriate indefatigable erstwhile and legendary charismatic Bishop of Calabar, His Excellency Bishop James Moynagh announced the solemn consecration and dedication of St. Peter's Church Akani Obio Uruan which by implication is situated at the Iso Atakpor, the mystical symbol of URUAN/EFIK nation and unity immediately after the Holy Mass. Before the end of the Holy Mass attended by a mammoth crowd from all the Clans in URUAN including representatives from the twelve Clans of the EFIK, somebody behind tapped me on my shoes where I was kneeling and beckoned me outside. I rose tip-toed following behind him. He then whispered to me that the His Royal Highness, Etinnyin Okon U. Ndok, the Traditional Ruler of Uruan Central, had ordered some of the "pagan priests" to make several EKETE and wanted me to beckon to the Paramount ruler of Akwa Akpa Uruan to bring the eggs to be put into the EKETE for offerings at Iso Atakpor before the consecration by the Bishop. It was real pandemonium to say the least as unwittingly I had raised my voice questioning what the EKETE were meant for in the up-coming event already announced. What should have ended with the consecration at the venue of the Mass now had to be transferred to the mystical Iso Atakpor, as I had relayed and explained everything to the Very Rev Fr. H. Keough, the presiding Priest in-Charge of St Joseph's Parish, Uruan Central. He immediately communicated to the Bishop who having understood what all this meant in an African traditional setting, promptly ordered that the consecration should now take place at the so-called Iso Atakpor URUAN. Those ceremonies concluded, nobody has ever been in doubt about the fact that thenceforth Iso Atakpor is sacrosanct through the generations in URUAN/ EFIK.

Anybody now alive, from 40-50 years and above, even if not born at the time has come to accept that the traditional pilgrimage and visit as it were to the mystical ISO ATAKPO URUAN is for real. That is why with the publication of the Constitution as contained in this book, it will be a conditio sine qua non and mandatory for every Royal designate to whatever Chieftaincy stool or category of Royal Authority in URUAN/EFIK ie. from the Village Head, Clan Head, Etubom to the Nsomm/Obong. Such a Royal elect/designate is to make the solemn voyage to the St. Peter's Church at Akwa Akpa Uruan for his decoration with the UDAK UB? n URUAN INYANG ATAKPOR/ EFIK EBURUTU provided he has been previously elected/appointed to the office, and this has been ratified by the duly recognized Royal delegates on Chieftaincy Affairs in URUAN/EFIK, to wit, through the unanimous consent and ratification by the Royal Chiefs/Etuboms so designated as the case may be. Therefore, let any impostor, upstart, provided he has accumulated billions of blood money and tainted wealth which can buy whatever position, office or grade whichever of the Chieftaincy stool do his self-examination and be convinced first, that he has a title to the office in question. Then let him with impunity dare make this holy voyage without running the risk of incurring the wrath of the ATABRINYAn in shipwreck or crash whether on land or in the air and getting himself drowned/killed for desecrating the sanctified ancestral waters of the great River, Akwa Akpa Uruan/Cross River which traverses and confluences with all the rivers throughout the states of the Federal Republic of Nigeria and West Africa.

But what all this implies is that the Royal designate from head to toe as it were, must be above board and a man of integrity, honesty, honour and transparency before, during and after his coronation/swearing-in and/or investiture. If he hasn't been upright but now with the Grace of God tries to be law-abiding and humbled, forsaking all his former evil ways and actions, eg. taking bribes, aiding and abetting law-suits and litigations, corruption and nepotism, as also oppression, womanizing, witchcraft, 419, fraud, blood-letting, injustices etc. and is seen to be so doing, he should not be denied the stool of office in URUAN/EFIK since the Grace of God has caught up with and justified him. But if after his accession to office he begins to live and act in an untoward way indulging in all manner of evil as if to say "ebe mmi adaha uwat se mama nnam" (I am now acquitted and freed)…. let him presume to acquiesce the mandate and see. More often than not in human nature, once one's previous precarious position either by nook or by crook improves, eg. the person becomes wealthy, famous, gets elected to a political office, etc. and this popularity gets into his head and he /she now uses this to perpetrate all manner of evil: He/she will certainly see what URUAN/EFIK stands for even as most often happens such a person begins to go cultist and diabolical thinking that no evil can now happen to him/her. The same is the situation when a typical wife of an URUAN/EFIK fisherman says "my husband is away to the seaside, "Ebe mmi adaha uwat, se mmade nnam: I can do whatever I please; my husband has left for the sea-side.". She then begins to indulge in all manner of debauchery and making herself a sex maniac. "I am now in-charge, I am the Alfa and Omega; Ami nd?h? ik?t aka, ik?t aka; ami nyu nd?h? ik?t ?ny? , ik?t ?ny? ", let him know that the laws, customs and traditions of URUAN/EFIK are sacrosanct and therefore are both retroactive and proactive, then dying let him die, because the wrath of Atabrinya will visit and catch up with him/her wherever he may be, despite his becoming the neaveau riche with the peps and perks of office from the now governmental monetization of Chieftaincy Affairs and other institutions and other benefits appertaining including his initiation into demonical and diabolical cults, societies, Ekankar etc. to make him potent, invincible and invisible.

The Government of Nigeria has introduced the politics of monetization into everything now, and people have become tin-gods overnight through the benefits of office at Government expense. Nobody gets anywhere now. Kings and Royal fathers have become the Government party card carrying members. Once a person has ascended to the throne of his ancestors he doesn't need to work again, be he a farmer, fisherman or palm wine tapper. Government provides all his needs, housing, cars, security apparatus and what have you provided and because 'cujus regio ejus religio', (3) all the people with franchise in his domain will vote for the government party. That is Nigeria for you, and with this we cannot get anywhere as evil and abominations reign supreme. Such kinds of people abound everywhere nowadays, who play God by exhibiting their ill-gotten wealth, women, goods, landed property, etc. and all those who have become hopelessly lawless and routinely iniquitous. They are these new comers of royalty with political intent and lust for material acquisition, personal aggrandizement and others with flabby morality, political lasciviousness, elaborate living and lack of self-discipline. They suffer a disconnect with the people and keep the masses perpetually subjugated for their private primitive acquisition and political hegemony thus leaving their communities worse than they met because most of them lack this moral stamina of maintaining any respectable level of integrity. They are also those who now begin to behave like the political class, whereas they are supposed to be the fathers of their communities they aspire to govern. The Holy Book captures this very well as people turn into chameleons overnight because they presume to be so well endowed and settled:

> But if a man is upright, his actions law-abiding and upright, and he does not eat on the mountains or raise his eyes to the foul idols (of the nation) does not defile a neighbour's wife, oppresses no one, returns pledges on debt, does not rob, gives his own food to the hungry; his clothes to those who lack, does not lend on profits, abstains from evil, gives honest judgements, keeps God's laws and sincerely respects His judgements, living he will live, he shall not die... If the wicked however renounces all his sins he has committed, respect God's laws and is law-abiding and upright, he will most certainly live, and he will not die. None of the crimes he committed will be remembered against him from then on... But if the up-right abandons uprightness and does wrong by copying all the loathsome practices of the wicked; all his upright actions will be forgotten from then on, he will most certainly die. (Ezk. 18:5-25)

But the Lord similarly and by implication, the Atakpor URUAN and whatever it stands for, does not take pleasure in the death of anyone - so let anyone vying for the throne in URUAN/EFIK repent and live. Let them be purged and sanctified from now on. Let everyone be mindful of himself and be warned in his own interest to live uprightly as befitting the true sons and daughters of this great nation. A certain degree of devotion and singlemindedness is needed to bring about substantial change in URUAN/EFIK which is steeped in permissiveness, untampered arrogance, naivety and held bondage by elite pompousness, youth and area boys/girls restiveness, bitterness and schisms all of which impede socio-economic progress and transformation in our various communities today.

URUAN/EFIK CULTURE/INSTITUTIONS AND TRADITIONS

Many aspirants to URUAN/EFIK Chieftaincy or any titled positions for that matter simply get so involved in petty politics sometimes so much so that they do not make sufficient effort to be acquainted with the only functional organ of the society and this is true all over Nigeria. That is why we have problems everywhere. Everybody has certain ambitions, but essentially I believe that those ambitions are realizable if people know and want you. If they do not, I think it is a pipe dream because these positions are not necessarily political as they tend to turn and play politics with them now. Very importantly, anybody who has the intention really of running for political office may do so but not when he thinks he can just come from nowhere and start causing confusion and masterminding the age-old institutions as also the customs and traditions of the place simply because they have become some of these neaveau riche. Everybody should be reminded that they must be ready to fulfill the interests of the people in such a way that they can trust them enough to put their interest and future into their hands. That is why it is the view of this writer that there is urgent need for traditional rulers to be accorded a visible role in the proposed post-conciliar constitution of Nigeria Willy Nilly as this will enable the nation tap from the wealth of knowledge of the custodians of our culture. They should also be insulated from politics because on key matters in nation building they are those who in their charismatic way can help eminently to stabilize the polity especially in moderating crises. The advisory role of traditional rulers should also be properly recognized to ensure that both the polity and the civil society can benefit from their fountain of knowledge and their royal dignity preserved. In the absence of true and lasting political leadership as we now have, the Emirs, the Chiefs and Obis can easily be consulted on critical issues and their counsels can go a long way towards taking whatever decisions are necessary to restore order and sanity in the land. It is therefore fitting and wholesome that since they have impacted the lives of the people and the livelihood a reasonable recompense and security be accorded them. There should therefore be a new social order and constitution based on national ethos that guarantees stable social systems development and devolution of powers.

CONSTITUTIONAL STATUS, MONETIZATION & POLITICIZATION OF CHIEFTAINCY OFFICES

Heads or tails, it will always be the polarization of the chieftaincy office once the royal Fathers are assigned constitutional roles especially with the kind of politics practiced here in Nigeria. For sure, Traditional rulers will be messed up, it will be ridiculed and since they are fathers to all, they cannot be tied to any form of political gerrymandering. The fact of the matter is that the role of traditional institutions everywhere especially in civilized societies like Great Britain, Spain, etc. are always advisory so that the Royal personalities can command the respect which they deserve. We must come to terms that without them, there can never be peace and progress in the society. Here in Nigeria the Obas, the Emirs, the Obis and by implication the Obongs, Muris, Ntoes and Ezes play vital roles in stabilizing the polity. What is required is that those who govern beginning with the Head of State, Governors, Chairmen of Councils etc. exercise their democratic duties and try to operate in harmony with their Royal Fathers. In climes such as the Yoruba kingdoms, one can notice monumental projects and developmental programmes executed through the instrumentality and direction of the Royal overlords. I can remember the laudable programmes for the development and progress of URUAN when the Nsomm, His Royal Highness, Edidem Atakpor James U. Afia put forth as his blue print, which if they were followed, URUAN kingdom would have been a different society to emulate today. Why, because they reason and act with conscience and in total collaboration with the civil and political authorities. But today every one of them is on its own with the result that there is massive disconnect with and discontent of the people. In some kingdoms in Yoruba land there are gigantic projects aimed at bettering the lot of the citizens; some Royal fathers are known to be architects of prime projects like secretariats, post offices, asphalt plants, rice mills, macadamized thoroughfares, industrial estates in their kingdoms, just to mention a few. All these are not possible with thins present politicization and monetization of chieftaincy stools.

That is why URUANEFIK has put in her Constitution that nobody even from the class of royal apparent should presume to assume the lofty and sacred title of "Royal Father" if at any point in his career, he had even feigned political ambition not to talk of being a political party card carrier in his life. Such a person even if he is 90 years of age at the time of his promotion will never do well as a Royal Father without bringing politics to bear on the kingdom. Such should never nourish any chieftaincy position in URUAN/EFIK. A Royal Father must always exhibit and regard himself first and foremost as a servant-leader who among other things brings down himself to the level of the least member in his kingdom. His doors must always be open to all and sundry 24 hours of the day and seven days of the week to mix, relate and interact with his people because he must always be there for his people. The ideal situation should ensure that the traditional institutions are allowed to play their role, and let the civil authorities and politicians defer to them and find peace and harmony in so doing. The Royal Fathers will ever remain the stabilizers and pillars of society and our political leaders will always require their support and respect to succeed. That is why we need these traditional institutions as also visionary and traditional leaders who are imbued with values and zeal as the ideal to move our nation forward.

SUSTAINING AND UPDATING THE TRADITIONAL ROLES OF TRADITIONAL RULERS/KINGS IN THE CONSTITUTION

As to whether Traditional Rulers should have specific roles in the Constitution as obtained in the 1st Republic, ie. before the civil war or the 1989 Constitution, I think the answer is neither here nor there simply because it is simply not possible to outline the role/s of Royal Fathers and insert them in the Constitution. Traditional Rulers have been there from time immemorial as the traditional Head of their ethnic communities and people even the modern civil Authorities always look up to them to resolve a lot of issues. A traditional ruler is the natural Ruler whose exercise of power covers both political, social, cultural, economic and in some cases religious dimensions of his society. Tradition accords him absolute legitimacy such that it inculcates in the people a measure of respect, deference and obedience towards him on account of his Royal authority and influence. The role of Traditional Leaders in national development did not just start today; it has always been part and parcel of national existence globally, so every government in the world needs traditional leadership to survive. Refusal or negligence to do so is to the society's peril on account of the significant role in the enhancement of good governance and the rapid socio-economic development the institution engenders at the grassroots tier of governance, especially in the area of peace and security in the land. It is very pivotal to nation building. Supposing they are assigned Roles in the Constitution, what specifically will they be and what are the implications? Whatever can be their specific roles and authority since after all the Constitution covers the exercise of authority with the present 3-tier structure in place? I think the problem in all these stems from the refusal or to put it mildly, the failure of our modern politicians and political office holders beginning with the President, Governor, Senator, etc. to accept and to understand the place of traditional Institutions in the polity.

Civilized and developed nations who know this uphold and treasure the importance of Traditional Rulers in the polity. For one, a Royal father or whatever name called, Etubom, Obong, Oba, Ntufam, Eze, Emir, Obi, etc. is not like a person who accepts or buys or assumes a chieftaincy title from his community of settlement because he cannot. He cannot and will not automatically become a member in the class or Cabinet of the natural "Traditional Rulers". For example, Chief Emmanuel Ezenwenyi is not only a recognized holder of Chieftaincy title in Calabar, he holds the highest Traditional Chieftaincy title of ADA IDAHA KE "EFIK" EBURUTU, but Efik leaders accord him the position of only "Adviser" to the Obong of Calabar Supreme Council in civil matters concerning Efik citizens, because he is a bona fide citizen of Efik Eburutu having satisfied the conditions mentioned herein in our Constitution for alien settlers in our midst, Period. There is a very clear distinction between traditional Institution and Politics and politics is not the same thing as governance as already discussed above. Politics when defined can be the quest for power and to be at the helm of affairs of government in order to direct who gets what and how the material and human resources of the land should be managed, utilized and distributed. But this power should be known and accepted as belonging to God and given to the people, the electorate, who give the mandate to their preferred candidates that vie for the different posts whether as the president, governor, senator or councilor. Therefore, the proposition whether the Royal Fathers should officially have any role in the Constitution is antithetical to the principles of true democratic practices because democracy has its origin and legitimacy in the grassroots, the citadel of traditional Institutions which are usually led by Royal Fathers. They are closer to the people, they relate more to their communities than the government which has its raison d'être from politics and political party affiliations and organizations. The very stool of the Traditional Ruler is the symbol of power, leadership and authority, hence the respect it commands because the traditional authority is built upon the history, heritage, religion and culture of the people.

In civilized societies, these are the types of unwritten matters in the Constitution like that of Great Britain because they are universal and eternal. Traditional Institutions get their roles directly from God which are embedded in their customs and traditions and are set to be taken as no go areas – they are divine institutions because Royal Fathers are accepted as God's Vicerents on earth for the people. What situations, organizations or political/civil matters are there which do not involve the Royal Fathers? Is it elections, security, boundary disputes, titles or what? Why not re-introduce the age-old Council of Chiefs as they were in the three Regions of Nigeria as was the case in the first Republic such that now we can have both at the Federal level and the States the National Traditional Rulers' Councils or Parliaments/Assemblies? The latter can consist of Paramount Rulers in LGAs while Presidents of the Traditional Rulers' Councils in the States will constitute the former? Traditional Rulers are those who can effectively organize community policing to take the war effort against crimes like armed robbery, kidnapping, banditry, child trafficking, insurgencies etc. to the grassroots. Nobody is closer to the people than the Chiefs and Kings to such an extent that the peace and security of their communities, in this case villages and districts /LGAs which revolve around them. It is easier and quicker to use them to disseminate important state or national information and to maintain law and order. Grassroots mobilization for elections, census, tax/levies collection, even the distribution of Government of goods and services and other amenities, immunization of children, campaigns, war on sanitation and environmental issues, etc. is better handled by the chiefs and Elders of communities. Most cases and matters bordering on inheritance, land disputes, divorce/marriage issues, etc. are better and conscientiously handled by them quicker, with dispatch and better optimal effect rather than the High Court's including Customary Courts because they are adepts in handling restorative justice and peace making. All that is therefore needed is to assign them constitutional recognition and to be appropriately funded because they come in handy as the last bastion of hope to the point of giving mature, sincere and courageous direction and impetus to the government and the political class.

When the British colonial masters came calling, they discovered to their amazement and even to their utter admiration but bewilderment that the so-called “natives” were not living like wild lawless animals in the jungles; they were living in an organized civilized manner with their Chiefs and lieutenants in tow. They were sitting over very ordered and organized communities and peoples with “workable institutions and unwritten Constitutions” ie. Customs and traditions for the overall welfare of their people. The British discovered they could neither proffer a better arrangement of their own, nor find a better form of civil governance and native administration than what they saw, hence they shamefacedly imposed the INDIRECT RULE straight away and established the NATIVE AUTHORITIES everywhere to aid them in their administration of Nigeria, thus recognizing the “divine rule of kings”. The question could be put; since the non - recognition of Royal Institutions in our 1989/99 Constitutions, has Nigeria fared any better? Then, and mark you, these Constitutions were masterminded by the Military who used horse whips on Royal Fathers and drove them far away so that they could exert and exercise maximum power and authority over the people. Yet history has shown there is hardly any intractable problem like the ubiquitous “man leopard, the not to be forgotten Niger Delta Insurgency or the collection of taxes and other aspects concerning civil administration and good order which succeeded during those colonial days without the “royal touch” of these bastardized “useless and illiterate” Traditional Rulers and blooming “bloody civilians” then and now.

Yes, and no, Traditional Institutions should not be incorporated in any Constitution of the land but how, and why not? What is clear in all this matter is that "the Constitution is made for the people and not the other way round." If the non-insertion of the fact in the Constitution is the problem, then for goodness sake let it be inserted for its recognition so that politicians and Nigeria's office holders and Authorities will accept this glaring lacuna. For me and many Nigerians of like minds, it is a contradiction in terms that there is a third tier "grass root governance" ie. Local Government Authority/Area with political office holders" in terms of Chairmen, Councilors, Heads of Administrations or Supervisory Officers for Education, Works, Health etc. just as there are in the Federal Government viz. the President, Senators, Members of the National Assembly, Ministers etc. or as in the cased of States: Governors, Members of Houses of Assembly, Commissioners, etc. etc. Governance of the grassroots and its Administration thereof is the prerogative of Traditional Institutions. Any other set up is a duplication of functions and siphoning of resources; it is a fiasco that it has always been since the 1989/99 Constitutions. It can never and has never worked since 1979 Constitution; that is why men and women of wisdom and discernment have advocated that it be scrapped. It is a misnomer.

In Advanced countries like France, Israel for example, their Communes or Kibbutz, just to mention a few, do not require all these bottle necks. We want a situation whereby any citizen or resident thereof can easily go to his Local Government or District/Clan HQ or Divisional Headquarters and order or apply for or request whatever he/she wants and he/she will get it without any ado or boot-licking. The main authority on seat to attend to him/her could be any person/s of whatever status in the community or district, and working in synergy with the Traditional Ruler. He should be a seasoned career civil servant or an administrator with other assigns or subsidiaries not Chairmen or anything called. In the present set-up, he/she should be the Under Secretary or anyone next but lower in rank to the Permanent Secretary or Director General. Lagos State for example has done something like this by putting all the so-called LGAs of 20 LGAs and 37 Local Council Development Areas under five Administrative Divisions viz. Eko Atlantic Division, which constitutes exactly our overview on the history of Lagos above. Others are Ikeja, Ikorodu, Lagos Island, Lekki, Epe and Ojo, hopefully with an Administrator as Sub-Director General as Head of Administration with the Oba of Lagos in complete sync with him/her. It is my ardent exhortation and prayer that in URUAN/EFIK under the able-hand of Etuboms, Chiefs, Clan and Village Heads etc. with the Obong of Calabar as Supreme Head, the Administrative Divisions or Development Councils of Iboku Utan, Iboku Esit Edik, Akpabuyo, Ikoneto-Adiabo, Eniong for Calabar; and Uruan Edere/Iboku, Esin Ufot/Ibonda, Uruan Mbon-Inyang/Ikpa and Usuk Uruan/Mosongko will be so administered soonest. In 1962 for example and according to the evidence of His Grace, Archbishop Anthony Obinna of the Catholic Archdiocese of Owerri, a mere Standard IV pupil was said to have been able to write an application from an advert he read in the Regional Newspaper "OUTLOOK" to Enugu, the then HQ of Eastern Region, for cassava cuttings, pineapple suckers and oil palm seedlings. On receipt of the said application, the Authority on seat ordered a truck-load of these items to be promptly delivered to the school, the matter of which caused great consternation to the Headmaster and the admiration of the pupils. That is my prayer and hope for a new and restructured Nigeria before this 4th Republic ends. Amen.

ELECTION/SELECTION & CORONATION

The only Institution that somehow seems to proffer hope to the citizenry is the Traditional Chieftaincy Institution. Wherever and whenever matters get to crises point and the situation turns awry as the problems become so intractable and hopeless, then is the time to run to the so-called "Royal Fathers" as the only beacon of hope and salvation, and very often things get sometimes get cleared up. Another reason the position was never contestable was the general belief that anyone who ascended the throne as a result of greed or sharp practices normally died before or within months after installation. Let us consider here the case of Ali Nwa Adonu from Mkpoanute Ulo Village who is the reigning Onyeishi of Enugu Ezike. Several times his compound was visited and no appointment could be secured for an interview owing to the various Village matters pending on his table. But it is on record that this reigning Onyeishi of a Royal Father of sorts, is capable of turning the tides of whatever raging configuration and set things right and in time before any escalation. To this day too, the Yorubas across the Niger in Kwara State to wit, the people of Ilorin have been having the burden on how to reverse the situation which has endured for decades on end, viz. the issue of changing the traditional rulership of Ilorin and re-instating a Yoruba Oba on the throne instead of the Hausa-Fulani as the Emir of Ilorin so that the blue-blooded descendants of AFONJA of true Yoruba descent to whom belonged the traditional staff of office, can take back the hegemony and rule Ilorin again in perpetuity as formerly. History has it that it was the Commander, General Esubiyi of the ancient Oyo Empire at Ibadan who became the first Attah of Ayede Ekiti that led the military expedition that stopped the rampaging Hausa Fulani Alli – led warriors from encroaching into Yoruba land through Ekiti in the early 19th century. It is this same event in Yoruba history that gives the narrative of how Ibadan warriors led by General Esubiyi defeated the invading Fulanis who had almost taken over the old Yoruba-Ilorin Empire. According to Chief (Comrade) Olola Kasum, the President of the AFONJA DESCENDANTS UNION set up since the 1970's by the administration of Major General Agbazika George Inih, then Military Governor of Kwara State, his recommendation was that the Fulani "settlers" and Ilorin Yoruba "aborigines" should rotate the traditional rulership of Ilorin. But as everybody knows, till date, the Fulani settlers in Ilorin want to hold on to the position of installing their member as Emir of Ilorin at all costs. And that is the position of things almost everywhere because once "enyene ufok ama adaha, iny?ni esin ub?k ke aba ". (6) Specifically, unless and until the traditions and customs are respected and preserved, there always will be trouble because the apple cart has been upset and the situation of things bastardized. What this comes to is that the position portents deep rooted enmities, misgivings and mistrust as for example, the relationship of late between the Itsekeri and the Ijaw in Delta State; and here in URUAN backyard, the same situation is blowing between former Ifiayong Obot (now gazzetted Ifiayong Usuk) v/s Mbiakong, or even v/s Idu; whereas centuries ago these people had always lived in harmony with one another as brothers from the same URUAN tribe. But how do you protect the so-called indigenes constitutionally without neglecting these settlers? How can these 'settlers' partake in trade and commerce, economic opportunities and political power of the place without taking undue advantage of the 'indigenes'? Here in our country Nigeria, a country without any genuine national ethos and goodwill, is it possible to wish away indigeneity? If for example the Berom and other minorities in Plateau State as also Idu Uruan, Mbiakong, etc. are fighting to save themselves and posterity from being swamped by a rampaging army of Hausa-Fulani and by implication, Ifiayong supremacists, how far can this get us? Questions like these will continue to blow in the wind of insecurity, rancor and disharmony as long as justice is not the first condition of our humanity because as they say: "without justice, there can be no peace" The same point can also be made in the use of the state apparata before commoners vis –a – vis the so-called "Ruling Party" v/s the "Opposition or Opposition Parties", one way or the other. The solution to all these lies in the proper organization of Chieftaincy affairs in the country and in the following of laid down traditional norms for the election/appointment of Traditional Rulers otherwise we shall continue to end up with problems every time. But who are the Yorubas to be given such recognition and where is their domain in Nigeria? Before we answer that question, let us first treat the history and evolution of the Berom peoples who bear the brunt of this provocation and violence from the Hausa-Fulani. Also to be studied are the other ethnic Nationalities like the Igala of Kogi and the Tivs, the Idomas, etc. of Benue State, all in the ancient Benue /Plateau of Nigeria.

ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF BENUE/PLATEAU PEOPLES ORIGIN OF THE CAMEROUN vis-à-vis NIGERIAN REGION

In our primary and secondary school days of the 1940s and 1950s the entire Benue and Plateau States of modern Nigeria were a single entity. They were formerly one single administrative division of colonial Nigeria. But during the Military regime of now General (DR) Yakubu Gowon as the Military Head of State and Commander of the Federal Armed Forces as it was so tagged during the Nigeria – Biafra war and military era, the two states were created as a single State on May, 27 1967 from the so-called monolithic Northern Region of Nigeria and existed thus until 3rd February 1976, when it was divided into two states of Benue and Plateau by General Muritala Muhammed administration. He was killed in a military coup of that same year on February 13. The city of Jos was the capital of Benue-Plateau State. Only two military Governors governed the Benue-Plateau State namely, Joseph Gomwalk from 28th May 1967 – July 1975 and Abdullahi Mohammed from July 1975 – March 1976. The history of this region or territory with those name tags of BENUE and PLATEAU dates back to about 1000 AD but some historians give a much later date ie. about 1400 AD. What has given grounds to this anomaly is the fact that the two name-tags as also the name of the Cameroun Republic take their nomenclatures from an ancient of Scottish history after a clan there known as the "CLAN CAMERON" from which the term Cameroun is derived in the first place. Recorded history from the fifteenth century, although quite an unsubstantiated one, has its roots reaching back to the reign of the first Clanal Chief by name "ANGUS CAMERON" who lived about the year 1000 AD. He it was who gave the name of CAMERON CLAN to the clan he governed. In Scottish history, he was said to have resided in the "Cameron Country" of "Lochaber" and this domain of his covered roughly an area of 182 sq. miles ie. 292 Km and situated near the present day town of "Fort William" in Scotland's West Highlands. The history of the Cameroons as a Scottish clan captures an extensive land often of combative peoples, for that was how men learned to survive and live till another day in those days of wars upon wars we read about in World History books.

But that is for another day, whereas our point of departure is that it was factually this Scottish chieftain who during the age of the discoveries in the 15th Century, sailed far into the so-called the "DARK CONTINENT" of AFRICA.

He did and, precisely rounded up the West African Coast and further on sailed and climbed up the mountains which he discovered as what is now known as the Cameroun Highlands or Cameroun mountains. This region or territory which he sort of founded, he later named "CAMEROUN" after himself, hence the designation of the territory now known as the Cameroun Republic. History also has it that it was this same Scottish high chief or one of his descendants who later also toured that mountainous country until he arrived at the now northern Nigerian region highlands which he also named after the River Benue with the designation "BENUE – PLATEAU" till this day.

ORIGIN OF THE NUPE PEOPLES IN NIGER STATE OF NIGERIA NOMENCLATURE, EVOLUTION/ CULTURE HISTORY

The name tag "Nupe" has been a sort of recurring decimal in this book beginning with the piece on the evolution of Nigeria vis-a-vis the Royal Niger Company in Chapter ONE. The Nupe ethnic race traces its origin to one "Tsoede" who fled the court of Idah in Kogi State and established a loose confederation of towns along the Niger in the 15th century. The proximity of Nupe to the Yoruba "Igbomina" peoples in the South and to the Yoruba-Oyo people in the South West led to the cross-fertilization of cultural influences through trade and conflicts between these ethnic populations over the centuries. It is said that the famous Yoruba king, "Oba Shango" also known as "Oba Jakuta" who was once an "Alafin" of ancient Oyo empire before being deified following his death, was the son of a Nupe "Tapa" woman (Ibrahim Saidu, 1992, 17-28).

But with the coming of the Fulani king, the great and inimitable Uthman dan Fodio in conjunction with his jihadist campaigns, many Nupe citizens were converted to Islam by force of arms at the end of the 18th century AD (Cf. Blench, R.M. 1984, 32-45). In fact it was actually Mallam Dendo, a wandering Muslim cleric and preacher who incorporated Nupe kingdom into the Fulani Empire established by the Jihadist Usman dan Fodio in 1806 during his Muslim campaigns as noted above. Nevertheless, the traditions of Nupe were retained and the people continued to live their lives as they hitherto were living. That is why the king or paramount ruler of Nupe is still designated by the title of "the Etsu Nupe" rather than being called "Emir of Nupe" till this day. The city of Bida which is the Headquarters of Niger State fell to the colonialist British forces after the Muslims had struck in 1897 when the paramount ruler then, Etsu Abubakar was deposed by Lord Lugard and replaced by the more pliable and docile "king" and Muslim Alhaji Muhammadu (Cf. Vandeleur 1898, 34). As discussed earlier in this book, it was when this same Lord Frederick Lugard, then only a military officer of His Majesty, King George V's Army in Great Britain came in at George Goldie's orders that in January 1897, he employed the Niger Constabulary and captured Bida, the Capital of Nupe as also Ilorin. He then marched on to other territories in the heart of Sokoto Caliphate, viz. Gusau, Bermin Kebbi, Gwadabgwa, Raba, etc. In fact, this became an aspect in the history of Nigeria to the effect that the era of the West African potentates like King Jaja, the Etsu of Bida etc. was soon to come to an end and another was about to begin. During the reign of Muhammadu, a Prince named Jimada moved from Bida in the North East of Bida to Patigi. This is not to be confused with another nearly identically spelt town called "Pategi" which lies South West of Bida on the Southern part and opposite to the bank of the River Niger. Having settled there for some time, he then began to organize the protests against his people being ruled by a Fulani, ie. Alhaji Muhammadu (Cf. Ibid; Vandeleur 1898, 35-36, See also Forde, Darryll, 1955, 83-89).

Now Jimada's descendants are still fighting for the revalidation of the post of "Etsu Nupe" to the territory because as they claim and rightly so, they are the aboriginal sons and daughters of Nupe ethnic nationality and the only existing blue-blooded and pure Nupe ruling family. The present Etsu Nupe is Yahaya Abubakar.A more detailed exposé on the history of the Nupe kingdom can be found in the book written by Burdon the ethnographer Siegfried Nadel, whose book, "Black Byzantium", has remained a masterpiece and an anthropological classic (Cf. Nadel 1942, 18-29; See also Burdon 1909, 78-83; Hogben & Kirk-Greene 1966, 261-282 and Mason , 1981, 45-47). Today the population of Nupe aborigines is probably about 3.5 million and they are principally from Niger State, although there is also a small but growing number of Nupe citizens who can be found in "Knowles" in the West Midlands of England. The Nupe language is also spoken in Kwara and Kogi States and certainly so because as observed above, the progenitors of Nupe peoples originated from Ida in Kogi Yoruba-speaking peoples. They are primarily Muslims, with a few Christians and followers of African Traditional Religion a.k.a. ATR. The Nupe peoples have several local, Traditional Rulers. The Etsu Nupe of Bida is not really of Nupe ethnic extraction but is actually one of those who came from the part of the Fula in Futa Jalon tribe and settled in Sokoto area. Then during the Jihad wars of occupation and acquisition of territories which catapulted in the forceful conversion of these conquered aborigines, they moved further south and came to rule the Bida aborigines with force of arms in 1806 as discussed above. These at present have no capital, although they were those originally based at Rabah and only moved to Bida in the early 19th century.

SOCIO-CULTURAL AND TRADITIONAL WORLDVIEW OF NUPE PEOPLE

Traditionally and culturally the Nupe were great hunters and they were using "Burtu masks" made from wood during their hunting especially in bird hunting. The hunter would tie the mask around his head and imitate the bird's movement then shoot and kill them point blank with bows and arrows. Nupe culture and traditions are similar to the customs and practices of ancient Egypt. The Nupe people used to have various traditions, but much of these were diluted by the Usman Dan Fodio jihadist occupation reformers. Nevertheless, they still hold on to some of their ancient socio-cultural artefacts and ways. Many Nupe people often have tribal marks on their faces similar to the old Yoruba tradition, some to identify their prestige and the family to which they belong as well as for protection, while some do it as jewelry adornment. But these traditions are dying out in certain areas. Their art is often abstract (Cf. Perani, J.M. 1977, 46-52; See also Stevens, P. 1966, 88:21-35). They are well known for their wooden stools with patterns carved unto the surface. Our next port of call in that order will be the "Berom" ethnic peoples.

ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF BEROM PEOPLES OF PLATEAU STATE NOMENCLATURE AND CULTURE HISTORY OF BEROM PEOPLES

The recurring decimal of Hausa-Fulani rampaging army of occupation of several communities and their use of force to attack and decimate the populations of these communities especially in the Benue and Plateau States of Nigeria informs the writing of this piece to let Nigerians and the International Community rise and say "No" to this sort of violence, wickedness and impunity on our shores. If for example the Berom and other minorities in Plateau State have to suffer in silence because the Federal Government of Nigeria cannot rise to help them in their plight, then they cannot help but resort to self-help by fighting to save themselves and posterity from being swamped up and obliterated from the face of the earth by a rampaging army of Hausa-Fulani supremacists. But how far can this take us if we may venture to ask? Questions like these will continue to blow in the wind of insecurity, rancour and disharmony as long as justice is not the first condition of our humanity because as they say 'without justice, there can be no peace.' Who then are these peoples called the Beroms, the Jukuns etc. of Plateau the origin of which can be traced to the Chadic-Speaking Groups in the Central Nigerian Area?

The Berom peoples sometimes also spelt as Birom, are the largest autochthonous ethnic group in Plateau state of Nigeria. Plateau State has so many communities, cultural and also linguistic groups such that it has been joyously described as the "most notorious for its extreme diversity of linguistic groups" (Cf. Nengel, J. G. 2001, 14). It is like a mini Cross River /Akwa Ibom also similarly designated as "an atomistic society" of sorts by the inimitable Professor Emmanuel Ayandele, the erstwhile Vice Chancellor of the University of Calabar. Berom community covers about four Local Government Areas viz. Jos North, Jos South, Barkin Ladi a.k.a Gwol and Riyom. Berom speaking peoples are also found in some Southern Kaduna Local Government Areas in Kaduna State. Like the peoples of Western Cameroun and Cross River /Akwa Ibom of the Niger-Congo speaking family of Bantoid languages, the Berom also trace their origins and migrations to the sub/semi-Bantu tribe of the Cameroun Republic of Central Africa. The Berom language which widely spoken in Plateau does not belong nor is it related to the Hausa language which belongs to the Afro-Asiatic family. But most of the other Plateau languages are Chadic languages (Cf. Fwatshak, S.U. 2002 51-56). Interestingly, the Berom people, the Fulanis and Tarok, are linguistically more similar to each other than the other groups. But although the Fulanis and the Beroms see themselves as belonging to the furthest poles of Northern Nigeria's political and cultural divides, especially in light of the recent internecine ethnic conflicts mentioned above, they not only belong to the larger Niger-Congo language family to which many languages in Central and Southern Nigeria belong, nevertheless, they actually belong to the same Atlantic-Congo subfamily of the Niger-Congo language family (Cf. Farooq Kperogi, 2016, 21). That is why we have most of their words especially (name) words like Dalung, Dung, Chuwang, Gyang, Badung resemble names like Ekpenyong, Archibong, Ntambang, Bisong, Ubong, Atabong, etc. as in URUAN/EFIK and the Ekoi areas of Cross River State.

OTHER VERSIONS OF BEROM EVOLUTION AND IDENTITY

This brings us to yet a second affirmation on the evolution of the Bantoid Nigritic Peoples. As is often recounted in this Book, most of the communities trace their origins and evolution principally either from their languages or their food habits and cultural traits. It is simply not an overstatement to maintain that the introduction of the Malaysian complex led to the acculturation and migration of the Sudan - Nigritic Peoples. This is established from the fact that the cultivated crops of the complex hybrids could not have originated anywhere in Africa, for societies without agriculture cannot transmit cultivated plants (Murdock. 221-222). We are therefore led to look for an unbroken corridor of agricultural peoples living around the 3rd or 2nd millennia B.C. The specific features of Arabic, Negroid and Malayo-Polynesian stock clearly reflect this assumption (Grandidier, 192). Archaeological evidence has shown beyond question that most of East Africa from the Cape to Zambezi - Zambia and the whole of the Congo basin right into the Cameroun Highlands and the Plateau in Northern Nigeria and beyond, were occupied entirely by hunting and gathering peoples viz. Bushmanoids, Pygmoids, and Negroids until the time of the Polynesian diffusion as mentioned above, which also includes the Cameroun fringe we are talking about. There is a certain general history dealing with their evolution and migrations. In sum, the history and origin of the Berom peoples are that they most probably descended from the Cameroun Highlands to what is now the Nigeria Plateau. This overland transmission gives us a firm induction that the Malaysian complex of West Africa particularly Bananas, Breadfruit, Coconut Palm, cocoyams - Toro and Yams came from South East Asia to Northern Nigeria. The celebration of the Nzem Berom festival annually in March or April testifies in Berom land to the fact that this and other celebrations and festivals are primarily related to agriculture and hunting, which have been the main events revolving around Berom livelihood and cosmology.

In the past, the Beroms regarded "Mandyeng/Nshok" as the most important festival which ensured a good farming, harvest and the hunting period. Not all the Berom communities celebrate Mandyeng and Nshok. Those performing "Mandyeng" claim their roots from Riyom. These include Vwang, Kuru, Zawan, Gyel, Rim, Bachit, Bangai, Lwa, Sop, Jol, Wereng Kwi, Gwo, Kakuruk, Kuzeng, Kurak, Kuchin, Rahos and Tahoss communities. The "Nshok" festival is slightly different from "Mandiyeng" owing to the fact that it is also associated with hunting and the rainy season of farming which is held around April and May to usher in the new season. The Nshok festival on the other hand was usually celebrated together with the other hunting festivals viz. "Mado" and "Behwol". But these are not as important as "Nshok" (Cf. Nyam, S. D. 2005, 54). Some of the instruments used during such festivals among the Berom include "Yom Nshi" which is a two-string banjo made from calabash and skin as resonators, "Yom", a straw string instrument, "Kwag" or "Gwashak" and equivalent of URUA/EFIK "Nsak"; this is scraper made from dry cactus played with a stick slid across the sawed dry cactus to produce a scrapping sound; "Kundung" ie. a Xylophone made of cattle horns. In those days the Beroms regarded hunting both as an occupation and a sport. Although hunting was not necessarily an important economic venture as was farming, it was regarded as an exhibition of skill and bravery so much so that most of the Berom names are derived from game animals such as the "DUIKER". These species of animals are not only smart, fast and strong they are also very beautiful. That is why the Berom name their babies after them. They give names such as Pam, Dung, Chuwang, Gyang, Badung to boys while girls answer Kaneng, Lyop, Chundung, Nvou, Kangyang etc. All these are names of these smart looking and beautiful animals. These are names for the different species of DUIKER. Other names like those of non-domesticated animals such as Bot (frog), Tok (fish), Tsok (toad) etc. are not given to children because they are not game animals. All this goes to show how important hunting for game animals was regarded in pre-colonial Berom society.

SOCIO-CULTURAL AND RELIGIOUS WORLDVIEW OF BEROM

When the Missionaries brought Christianity and Western Education to Berom, it paved the way for a lot of socio-cultural changes in the Berom land. The changes devalued the rich culture and traditions of the people and brought about serious dislocation of Berom socio-cultural life and world view. In fact, it brought a serious predicament of a severe social and cultural crisis. In order to avoid the danger of losing the socio-cultural practices of the overall pre-colonial era, activities such as the Mandyeng, Nshok, Worom, Chun, Vwana ceremonies mentioned above were brought into a single umbrella festival called "Nzem Berom". This festival is also held within the first week of April to tally with the period when Mandyeng, Nshok and Badu Festival held sway. The NZEM is a period when different cultural displays are exhibited from different parts of Berom land. This is more so especially in the aspect of music, dance, arts and cultural displays and programmes. The Berom have a paramount ruler called the "GBONG GWOM" Jos. The traditional stool emerged from the realization by the colonial administration of the Northern Nigeria of the need to have a paramount Ruler to oversee the colonial creation called "Native Authority", NA. This had completely different linguistic and traditional features between the Bauchi Emirate groups and the ethnic systems of Plateau. This misconception initially encouraged the formation of vassal traditional heads which were alien to the culture and traditions of Plateau just as it did when this sort of administration and governance was forced down the throat of URIUAN/EFIK and other ethnic communities of South South Nigeria. As it happened, it was meant to highjack local leaders who need not be the choice of the people to oversee the created Native Authority Areas, a situation which proved tumultuous and precarious to the sensibilities of the native dwellers like the Berom peoples due to conflicting views and interests.

Between 1916 and 1927 when Lord Lugard regime held sway, the Resident or District Officer as he was addressed in Bauchi Province was instructed to send potential heads – the so-called "WARRANT CHIEFS" from various Native Authorities including District and Village Heads to be elevated as Chieftains. But the Resident wrote back to the Secretary of the Northern Provinces at Kaduna recommending a paramount ruler to superintend the Native Authority areas. That was how the situation was saved from escalating into tumultuous conflicts between the Warrant Chiefs and Paramount Rulers. Whereas in the pre-colonial times, the Berom were divided into autonomous political groups based on regions, but during the colonial period they were all merged under the Gbong Gwom to help coordinate the activities of the Natives. This was when the first Paramount Ruler, Chief Dachung Gyang, assumed leadership from 1935 to 1941. Under him the traditional institution was designated the "BEROM TRIBAL COUNCIL" which comprised of all the local Chiefs within the Jos Native Authority Area. Its authority then only included mainly the Berom but excluded the Chiefs of Buji, Naraguta, Jos and Bukuru. However, later on the Government modified the list to those communities. When Da Rwang Pam became the Paramount Ruler, (1947-1969) he was elevated the head of the Tribal Council and to the Stool of the Gbong Gwom Jos. Since that 1969, those who have sat on the stool included the following, Da Fom Bot 1970-2002, Da Victor Dung Pam 2004-2008 and Da Jacob Gyang Buba 2009 to the present. The immediate past Gov. David Jonah Jang (2007-2015), was of Berom origin (Cf. Jacobs, C.C & Nyam, S.D. 2004, 52-54). Having given the brief spotlight on the Berom of Plateau State, we shall now treat briefly the origins and evolution of the Tiv and Iduma/Idoma ethnic peoples.

ORIGINS AND EVOLUTION OF THE TIV OF BENUE

In the 1940s up to and until the 1960s especially during my Higher School/Higher Elementary Teacher Training studies at St. Thomas HETC Ogoja, my idea and notion of the Tiv aborigines were not different from what the other surrounding tribes of Ibibio, ditto URUAN/EFIK, Igbo, Ekoi, Ejagham, Ikom, Koki, Bekwarra of Southern Nigeria, not of course excluding their Northern Nigeria neighbours, but most especially in my case the Ishibori and Igoli ethnic peoples of Ogoja where I often noticed them. There and then they were officially regarded as and even called "MUNCHI". Yes, because as at that time there was a great deal of robust interchange of commercial activities as also movement of peoples in the land coupled with the fact of the seeming Omni-presence of these ubiquitous Munchi people of a kind who were to be found everywhere. Most of them appeared very huge, tall, stout and robust looking. They also looked very strong and energetic, such that the Igbos who also were all over the place used to joyously and jokingly nickname them as "onye bulus" meaning "yam and rice carriers". They could carry two mmami-wagon bags of rice which URUAN-EFIK called "EKPAT OFUNUMA" on their shoulders from the yam heaps where they were bought and sold to the "7-10 ton lorries/trucks" of those days without raising and eye brow or showing any signs of fatigue and weariness. They were very lovely and admirable to watch. Similarly, they could carry large "akpan" hampers of yams on their heads for the buyers and sellers to these Lorries to be loaded to all parts of Nigeria; North and South, East and West. Although this was practically the case, but they themselves use the word Tivi a.k.a "Tivs" as the name of their tribe, and "Dzua Tiv" = "Munshi ie. Mouth", as the name of their mother tongue or language. However, this very soubriquet is not derived from them but was given to them by the Hausa-Fulani. But why? Because oftentimes, the Hausa-Fulani cow owners used to lodge within Benue territory en route South South through Northern Cross River. On occasions they would keep their cows in the care of these Benue part time landlords but on coming back some the cows would have disappeared. Then they would ask: "Where are the cows?" The Benue landlords would reply "Mun - chi" = "We ate them". From this scenario the Hausa-Fulani would derogatorily call them MUNCHI = Those who eat cows. In fact, it was in the same way the Hausa-Fulani nicknamed their Capital city Makurdi which they derived from maa - kurdi = the land of the money bags. The ancient story has it that once there lived a powerful rich cow Tiv merchant. He was so rich that he was almost adored on account of his extreme wealth. "Kurdi" = money in Hausa. Since the Hausa-Fulani are fond of addressing people with regard to a peculiar situation or circumstance, they decided to name the city which hithertos had no name or designation at all before this time as “the land of the 'money man'” = “M AA - K U R D I”. Their numerous clans do not seem to show much difference in the language because there is very little dialectical difference in those various clans and communities. As a people, they consider themselves superior to the surrounding tribes, consequently they do not marry their Munshi women out from the tribe. It would lower their worth and prestige, they claimed. One interesting marriage tradition among Tivi peoples is that, they mostly prefer marriages from the village of grooms' mothers, but the girls must not be close relations. This makes it appear like the agnatic URUAN/EFIK custom of also marrying from “edem eka” ie. from the “mother's side/family”. Tivi women are very coquette to a fault. But their men, on the other hand could take wives from any other tribe outside Tiv country and by so doing they even raise the dignity, élan and importance of their women folks (Cf. Jude A.S. 1916, 31-23; See also Duggan, E. C. 1932, 5-9).”

NOMENCLATURE AND CULTURAL HISTORY OF TIV KINGDOM

Tiv ethnic nation as an ethno-linguistic group is what used to be known in the 1st. Republic of Nigerian Politics as the Middle Belt of Nigeria in West Africa. According to and Paul J. Bohannan the Tivs share common borders with the Chamba and the Jukun of Taraba State in the North-East; Alago in the North, with the Yala, Gakem and Obudu of Cross River State in the South; and the Idoma and Igede of Benue State to the West (J. Bohannan, 1967, 45 and Rubingh, 1969, 58). The international road which runs through the border between Nigeria and Republic of Cameroon passes within Tiv territory. The Tivs who are the most populous in Benue State are among the majority ethnic groups in Nigeria, ranking as the fourth most populous ethnic group. Tradition has it that ancient Tivi peoples lived an egalitarian mode of living with no central government or administration being headed by a local chief or paramount ruler as found in other ethnic groups like URUAN/EFIK, which means there was no central authority and no king. Nevertheless, they lived in compounds administered by the oldest man. Many compounds formed clans and districts that were variously divided and sub-divided. The elders of the various clans “Upyaven” and districts “Ityar” usually met to discuss issues at those levels until they could arrive at some democratic decisions that bound their sections. On the other hand, if there were issues involving the whole ethnic group, the elders of the various sections and districts would meet and take a decision. But when the British came calling with the “Indirect Rule” and “Native Authority” type of civil administration all that changed. By 1946 the British colonialists established a Tivi central authority by creating the office of a paramount ruler. The paramount ruler the “Tor Tiv” was to reside and administer the people at “Gboko” which they made to be the Headquarters of the whole Tiv region. But by tradition, ascendancy to the Tor Tiv throne was not hereditary till today.

The Tivs number approximately ten Million both in Nigeria and the Cameroon Republic. In Nigeria the Tivs are to be found as an indigenous ethnic group in Benue State. They are also to be found in Nasarawa, Plateau and Taraba States. There are also millions of Tiv speaking peoples in Cross-River State, Kaduna, Adamawa, Lagos, Oyo and Abuja Federal Capital Territory. As often times discussed in this Book, one of the factors as also methodologies of tracking the origins of these ethnic nationalities it linguistics. (1934: 6–7), For instance, has compiled such piece of evidence of linguistic evidence from a list of 67 Tivi words and juxtaposed them with the words of the “Bantu Nyanza_Province "YAZA” speaking peoples and this has shown a very remarkable and striking similarity in both phonetics and semantics of Tivi language. Based on that, he Abraham concluded that the Tivs were Bantu peoples. As already discussed in relation to the Berom and URUAN/EFIK peoples, ditto Akwa Ibom and the other Cross River peoples. From this, we can safely conclude that the Tivs must have actually emigrated from the “Congo" and came to live where they now find themselves.

Also in the 1950s and early 1960s when the Congo music and dance were rife and the in-thing, it was however noticed that most Tivs born in the early 1920s had a special dance routine which very probably was brought by their parents from their place of origin which was from no other place than the two Congos viz. Congo Brazzaville and the Belgian Congo. The Congo-dance-of-panama/"music and "dance Gramophone Records were to be found all over the place. Personally and from URUAN/EFIK perspective especially noticing the characteristics of Tivi peoples and their contiguous and other relationships with the Northern Cross Riverians, this bit of Tivi evolution history seems tenuous. A more respectable and generally acceptable Tivi culture history is that they descended from the southern Cameroun highland as cradle land and emigrated to Benue district as we are going to see. Hence to another version of Tivi evolution we must go.

SECOND VERSION OF TIVI EVOLUTION

Yes, there is also another version of the origin and evolution of the Tivi peoples. Oral tradition as also documentations by various scholars on Tiv migration stories notably Awai, G.K. and Rubingh testify that the Tivi original homeland was inside Southern Cameroun (Cf. Awai, G.K. and Rubingh R.1969:62). They are said to have begun their migration northwards until after about eleven generations ago they arrived at where they now find themselves. This really general migration event into the present tribal area began around 1800 until they arrived at the south of the Benue River by 1850.

The Tivs must have begun to move down from the Sankwala hills located a few miles southeast of Obudu in Cross River State. Then they moved to Akiga located on the "Swem Hills", a Tiv name for the hills which is so revered in their history. Then they moved from there to Ibinda hills as the next stage on their journey. Finally according to a recent study conducted by Akpenpuun Dzurgba about the Tiv nation, he identified it was at Swem actually where the Tiv migrated from to their present location in Benue State. Dzurgba even concluded that perhaps of the three Cameroun sub-divisions, Akwaya sub-division is probably the land to which the Tiv refer, calling it Swem which they also claim as their ancestral home land. Akwaya sub-division is also the Local Government of the South-west Province in Southern Cameroon. Many ethnologists also corroborate this view and in fact from my earlier account above, Tivi cradle land has been in southern Cameroun, a fact which also shows her as contiguous to the Cameroun territory. Most of the Government areas like Obudu, Bekwarra etc. in Northern Cross River have trade links and other affiliations with Tivi land. It was on this note that, the Tiv must have followed River Katsina Ala from Cameroon down to the Benue where they discovered sufficient agrarian land mass for their agriculture (Cf. Akpenpuun Dzurgba, 2007, 28ff). It is also significant to note that during this course of their emigration from the Cameroun to their final settlement in the Benue Valley of Central Nigeria, they had come in contact with different ethnic tribes like the Jukun, Etulo, the Chamba, the Idoma, the Igede etc. who had already occupied the present Benue Valley. It was also by the characteristic military might of the Tivs that they overcame these tribes, captured and shared the land amongst the sons and daughters of Tiv. It can also be noted from this moot point that the Tivs formed the largest contingents of the Federal troops that overran the strongholds of Biafran forces to liberate the entire Cross River and Akwa Ibom States under Brigadier Adekunle the "Scorpion "and from there they liberated Port Harcourt.

TIV SOCIO-ECONOMIC LIFE AND SYSTEM OF STORY-TELLING

The Tivs depend on agricultural produce for their commerce and economic base. The main occupation of the Tiv as was the case among their neighbouring tribes was subsistence farming. They regard yam cultivation as their birthright and commit themselves very energetically and conscientiously to its work with religious dedication. That is why they are to be found in almost all the states of Nigeria farming, hence my above preamble during my sojourn in Ogoja. The first contact of the Tivs with European culture was in November 1907 when Colonial Great Britain made an expedition of the Southern Nigeria Regiment led by Lieutenant-Colonel Hugh Trenchard into Tiv land. As was their custom not to topple the apple cart, Trenchard came surreptitiously with gifts for the tribal chiefs. Soon they opened and constructed roads and trade links were subsequently established between Europeans and the Tivs. But before the construction of roads began, came Mary Slessor, the Scottish Missionary, who was then residing in Calabar to explore the entire region as well as see to the needs of the people. One very interesting aspect of the Tivs is their story-telling expertise. According Leo Frobenius a German traveler and visitor to the area in 1979, he declared that the Tivs are the "best storytellers in Africa" (Cf. Frobenius Leo, Kiel 1979, 20). Laura Bohannan referred to above under the pseudonym "Elenore Smith Bowen", has also often referred deservedly to the Tivs for their admirable knack in story-telling in her autobiographical novel, "Return to Laughter". Then commenting on Bohannan's book, Frances Harding has also said that storytelling in Tiv life is not only in its performance the occasion of laughter but also that which gives healing as well as a binding force in the community (Cf. Elenore Smith Bowen: Return to Laughter; See also Frances Harding, 1992, 156). In fact, not only storytelling which can be a very dramatic event, the Tivs like the Igbos are very artistic in their dances. They are known experts for their crafts, poetic creativity and general aesthetic profundity. Their dancing outfits coupled with their curvatous dancing steps are something else. For example at the 1973 Festival of the Arts of former Benue-Plateau State which held in Jos "Nigeria, out of the 148 dances presented, the Tiv ethnic group alone accounted for fifty-four. Then of the over thirty ethnic nationalities in Benue-Plateau State which presented dancing troupes, the Tiv came fourth. This represents as it were, the statistical testimony to the dancing skills in Tiv land. Indeed, the ethnic group is generally artistically active. This artistic activity also exhibits itself in the avenue of nuptial poetry.

TIV RELIGIOUS GROUPS vis-a-vis THE N.K.S.T. AND CATHOLIC CHURCH

Let us close this odyssey of the Tivs traditional and socio-cultural life and customs by saying a word or two about their religious beliefs and artefacts. As in all cases of ancient African traditional life, the Tivs were considered as they pagans by the Europeans. But actually they also knew and believed in the Supreme Being, ie. they believed in one God whom they called "Aondo u Abaver", "Aondo u Yorkov" which when translated means "God of Abraham", "God of Jacob". Some ancients Tivs referred to God as "Aondo u Abaver jua" meaning God of circumcision or "AONDO U AKUM A SHA" ie. "God of the heavens". God was believed to be the creator of all and could be consulted by old men especially during excess rainfall and apparent disasters and dangers. They also believed in ancestral spirits and sometimes offered sacrifices to them. They did not pray to them or regard them as either good or evil because "Tsav" or "Evil" was to be found in the hearts of men. It is TSAv that is set in motion by evil men using forces that called "akombo" which causes misfortune and disasters.

With the advent of Christianity, many Tivs became converted and joined the various Christian sects especially the Roman Catholic Faith and the "Nongu u Kristu u i Ser u Sha Tar" meaning the "Universal Reformed Christian Church", N.K.S.T. This Christian Reformed church which has its based in Nigeria with Headquarters in Benue state but which has now spread all over Nigeria. It had its foundation from the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa. In 1911 it was introduced for the first time in Sai, a village in Katsina Ala. The members are predominantly the Tiv speaking tribe. The Headquarters has now been transferred to Mkar.

The Roman Catholic Mission first came to Makurdi Diocese which was part of the newly formed Catholic Mission of the Lower Niger between 1889 and 1920. The lower Niger Mission covered the populations within the river Niger down to the south of River Benue. The first Missionary priests to evangelize in this area were mostly French in the 1880s and were later joined by Irish priests who made direct contact with the Tivs also in 1911. Bishop Joseph Shanahan was the Vicar Apostolic for the Tiv project. He visited Pope Benedict XV in September 1920 and presented Pere Douvry who's blessing from the Holy Father posted him to Makurdi as a special blessing for the Tiv Mission. He became the first

Father in-Charge of the Tiv mission and was later succeeded by Father Eugene Goetz. By 1934 the areas of the civil territory of Benue province, Northern Nigeria was made into the Prefecture Apostolic of Benue with its centre first at Makurdi and later at Otukpo. The German priests and brothers of the Congregation of the Holy Spirit, the Holy Ghost Fathers (CSSp) made tremendous efforts and covered the whole area from Idah on the River Niger to Wukari near the boundary of Benue and Adamawa provinces. In 1945 the German fathers were replaced by those from the English province and Bishop Heerey who described the Benue as the most promising Mission in all of Nigeria after Onitsha-Owerri took over from Bishop Joseph Shanahan. In 1959 Monsignor James Hagan, the Prefect Apostolic of Otukpo was made a Bishop and in 1960 he transferred his Cathedral seat to Makurdi, thus becoming the first Bishop of Makurdi. The Tiv Mission project had metamorphosed into the Catholic Diocese of Makurdi. His Ill-health however, obliged him to resign in 1966.

This led to the emergence in January, 1968 of Bishop Murray who succeeded him as the second Bishop of Makurdi. After 21 years of Bishop Murray's administration, the Diocese was blessed with an indigenous Bishop in the person of Bishop Athanasius Usuh who was ordained the first Co-adjutor Bishop of the Diocese. With the phenomenal growth of the Diocese owing to the evident work of Bishop Usuh and his predecessor, today Makurdi Diocese has grown into four autonomous dioceses with creation of the Otukpo Catholic Diocese in 1995 and Lafia Catholic Diocese in the year 2001. Then on November 28th, 2008, Pope Benedict XVI appointed Msgr. William Avenya as the Auxiliary Bishop of Makurdi Diocese, and on December 29th, 2013 Pope Benedict XVI created Gboko and Katsina-Ala Dioceses out of Makurdi with Bishop William Avenya and Monsignor Peter Adoboh as the new Bishops. Small wonder that both at the National Universal Congress which took place at Jos in 1981 and Pope St. John Paul II visit to Nigeria in 1982, the contingents and Catholic delegation from the territory alone brought breath taking mammoth crowds of worshipers to the greater Glory of God, thanks to the motivation and dedicated work of the Tiv Catholic members.

Some notable Tivi personalities include Jerome Tilley-Gyado (PHIILTHP.) ,Joseph S. Tarkaa, Lt. Col. Gideon Orkar (WAR LORD), Abraham I. Akpeh (P.COMPTRL), Senator Barnabas Gemade, James Ayatse (TOR TIV), Justice Michael Aondoakaa, Justice A. I. Katsina-Alu, DIGP Farida Mzamber Waziri (EFCC), Footballer Barnabas Imenger Jr., Paul O. Orhii (NAFDAC), Gen. Victor Malu (COAS), Senator Gen. John Mark Inienger (ECOMOG), Hon Moses Adasu, Hon Aper Aku, Hon Iyorcha Ayu, Hon George Akume, Hon Gabriel Suswam, Hon James Ortom. etc. the last five including Chief Joseph Tarkaa and Chief Aper Aku being Benue State political fathers and leaders as also the executive Governors of the State; most of them Catholics. Some beautiful Tivi Proverbs can be found in the Appendix. With this odyssey of a piece on the Tivs concluded, let us also consider their neighbours and rivals, the Idomas of this God-blessed ethnic nationalities in Benue State of Nigeria.

ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF IDOMA OF BENUE STATE NOMENCLATURE AND CULTURE HISTORY OF IDOMA

The IDOMA ethnic nationality just like their rival neighbours, the Tivi, are an ethno-linguistic group that primarily inhabit the lower western areas while the Tivi settle on the upper eastern areas of Benue State in Nigeria. Their kindred groups just like the Tivs can also be found in Cross Rivers State as also Enugu State and Nasarawa State in Nigeria where they share common borders. I first came in contact with the Idoma people in the 1950s at Ogoja where I sojourned and later during the war, this time with their Catholic women groups "THE ZOUGH U NGÔ MBA CHRISTU" These women were very visible and vocal and were no push-overs. When one imagines the war situation and then these Idoma women also "struggling for space" among the other women ethnic groups in the army barracks at the Brigade Headquarters, Calabar Cross River and Odot Nsit as also Ikot Usekong - Eket all in Akwa Ibom State, then in South Eastern State of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, one can begin to understand where I am coming from and what I am talking about. I was then the Calabar Diocesan Local Army Chaplain, and went in turns to serve the military Catholics around their different military formations where they were quartered. Then I later stayed put permanently serving at the Calabar Brigade Headquarters until 1971 after the war had ended and the khaki boys had also returned to their barracks in the various twelve States in Nigeria then. As their husbands were put in the war fronts, their women were left in the barracks and it was they who formed the main congregation whenever I went to minister to them in their barracks. Sometimes a group of soldiers would drop in from the war fronts and would without fail attend the morning devotions and Holy Mass. They were ever full of piety then but their women especially the "Idoma Military Wives' Association" were a different thing altogether. They were very punctual and regular at their spiritual exercises and devotions. That was why I promptly appointed one of their own without qualms to be the Woman Leader straight away. She really proved her worth and mettle to the point everybody accepted her authority and clout. They were generally in admiration and acquiescence among all her fellows.

ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF THE IDOMA PEOPLES

Now to the origin and evolution of the Idoma peoples. As would be expected, the evolution and history of the Idoma peoples precede that of Benue State which was created by General Muritala Muhammed with the other 18 States including Cross River in 1976 as also the history of the Federal Republic of Nigeria which event occurred at her Independence in 1960 popularly tagged "the Nigeria Independence". Oral tradition and dance rather than linguistics form the primary methods of which the history of Idoma ethnic nationality is built and will be considered a central cultural institution here. At their tender age the young Idoma children usually learnt stories about how they (elders) of old were brought up around extended families from their elders. This made a multiples of historical resources available. When prodded the young Idomas in general would proudly recount where they came from, and it was not uncommon for the Idomas to be able to recite at least four generations of their progenitors. "Kpo -kpo kuhure/berede usu nn? mmi" was the age-old similar method of doing these things in URUAN/EFIK which regrettably are dying out among the young generations of today. Historically, these were being organized to the effect that, the youngster would be able to promptly and correctly be able to answer the question put to him/her by an elder: "who is your father? Who is your grandfather" Who is your great-grand father ...up to the seventh generation" Thereafter being unable to answer the emblematic question "Who is your father...grandfather, great great grandfathers etc. he/she would logically be disqualified from important roles and titles in Idoma land. Quite naturally, a number of villages were able to trace their origins to single ancestors and further. Several Idoma groups could trace their heritage to one common progenitor or ancestor considering the "father" of the different groups. According to certain oral traditional the history and evolution of Idoma was traced in this way. History has it that "Iduh" had several children and as time went on one of his sons who also became a father begot a son and during this game he correctly traced his great grandfather to "Iduh" hence the expression: "Iduh the father of Idoma." Iduh who had several children who each established different kindreds became the progenitor and father of the Idomas, and consequently is regarded as the father who begot all the Idoma. Some of the children he also fathered were Ananawoogeno who begot the children of Igwumale. Similarly, Olinaogwu begot the people of Ugboju. Then Idum begot the people of Adoka; Agabi begot the people of Otukpo; Eje begot the people of Oglewu; Ebeibi begot the people of Umogidi in Adoka. Edeh begot the people of Edumoga and Ode begot the people of Yala (Bennett, Patrick R. & Sterk, Jan P. 1977, 241-273). While there may be some truth to the above, the Idoma cannot be said to have a unitary origin.

OTHER VERSIONS OF IDOMA EVOLUTION AND IDENTITY

Many Idoma groups and villages have also traced their own histories complete with stories about how their people arrived at their present permanent settlement in Benue State. All these are the different Clanal Headquarters we have in the Idoma land today. It means that through time, and with the ever-changing, generations and history makers, it seems difficult to have a unified Idoma cultural history.

Still some scholars like Professor E.O. Erim an Idoma and very close friend, who spent a long time in Gabon during the war and only came back around the 1980s is among those scholars who have combined oral history with genealogical data and analysis of kinship totems to trace the roots of the Idoma people as a whole. According to Erim genealogical data collected from most modern groups in Idoma have suggested that the Idomas are from several ethnic groups, each with different historical origin, hence there is in existence some diverse ethnic groups who descended from ancestors other than IDUM, the deputed progenitor of the Idomas. In most of these cases the claim of common descent is backed by both extensive genealogical connections and possession of common kinship totems. Erim has therefore come to the conclusion that while IDUM must have certainly been a migration leader, he was not the "father" of the Idoma in the same sense as implied in the above traditions (Cf. Erim E.O. 1987, 12-16). These two considerations make it difficult to simply accept the view that every group in Idoma land is descended from IDUM. Many Idoma kindreds have also claimed their ancestral homeland to be the town called Apa, which is located North-East of present-day Idoma land claiming that it was due to pressures from Northern invaders that they moved to present day Iduma land around the 1800s AD. The historical Apa was thought to be the ancient Kwararafa Kingdom or Okolofa Kingdom. This is a confederacy of several kindreds. The Jukuns have corroborated the existence of this kingdom or confederacy called Kwararafa. The Hausa book "Kano Chronicle" has mentioned that Zaria under Queen Amina conquered all towns as far as Kwarafara in the 15th century. At present there is a Local Government Area in Benue State called Apa and this is said to be the home of those who made the first migration from this historic kingdom. For many Idoma nationalists today, the name Apa elicits sentiments of a past glory and some political heavy weights have even gone to the extent of suggesting that it should become the name of a new Idoma state. There are still other scholars who have pointed to the historical and linguistic evidence that suggests that Idoma have ties with the Igala to the west. They conclude that the two ethnic nations came from a common ancestor suggesting that they must have fled from the same kingdom at some point in history.
It is interesting to note that during traditional ceremonies, the performers use certain spiritual chants, and "secret" tongues which are actually Igala dialects and there are also some Idoma citizens who assert they are of Igala ancestry. There are yet other Idoma groups notably in the southern regions, which claim their ancestors arrived at their present location from the Northern fringes of Igbo land as a result of land disputes. There are some scholars who believe these people had most probably fled Apa too and resettled where they now find themselves. Sufficient for now for these seeming confusing counter points, but let it be said that despite their heterogeneous origins viz. their trading, marriage, language and other interactions etc. The Idoma have cultivated certain traditions that have shaped the rich cultural identity as well as the distinct personality of the Idoma. A number of factors may have made it difficult to study Idoma historical origins of the Idoma people as a whole.

Other scholars point to historical and linguistic evidence that suggests that Idoma have ties with the Igala people to the west, concluding that the two nations came from a common ancestor. Among this group, there are those who believe both ethnic groups fled the same kingdom at some point in history. It is interesting to note that many traditional Idoma spiritual chants and "secret" tongues spoken during traditional ceremonies are actually Igala dialects and there are some Idoma themselves who assert their Igala ancestry.

There are yet other Idoma groups notably in the southern regions, which claim their ancestors arrived at their present location from Northern fringes of Igboland as a result of land disputes. Some scholars believe these people had most likely fled Apa too, settled and resettled. As suggested, a number of factors make it difficult to study Idoma historical origins of the Idoma people as a whole. In any event, it could be said that despite their heterogeneous origins, trading, marriage, language and other interactions among the Idoma have cultivated traditions and shaped a rich cultural identity distinctly their own. The popular idea is that the Idoma are an ethno-linguistic group, primarily found in the western areas of Benue State, Nigeria. This is because they are the second largest group in the state and occupy nine Local Government Areas (L.G.A.'s) which include: Ado, Agatu, Apa, Obi, Ohimini, Ogbadibo, Oju, Okpokwu and Otukpo. Besides, from the western parts of Benue, this tribe has settlements in other parts of the country including Nassarawa, Kogi, Enugu and Cross River States. The men are obliged by tradition to pound yam for their wives, unlike other cultures where the woman is expected to perform all culinary chores. The Idoma men are not always exempted from carrying out these chores in collaboration with their women.

The traditional colours of the Idoma people are red and black stripes. They can be noticed anywhere from the crowd and nobody can mistake their identity in the popular red and black loin cloths.

ETHNO-LINGUISTIC GROUPS IN NORTHERN AND SOUTH EASTERN NIGERIA

The Idoma people are not only to be found in the western areas of Benue State of Nigeria but as an ethno-linguistic group, they are primarily found in Benue. This is because they are the second largest group in the state and occupy 9 local government areas (L.G.A.'s) which include Ado, Agatu, Apa, Obi, Ohimini, Ogbadibo, Oju, Okpokwu and Otukpo. Aside from the western parts of Benue, this tribe has settlements in other parts of the country, including Nasarawa, Kogi, and Cross River States. The men are obliged by tradition to pound yam for their wives, unlike other cultures where the woman is expected to perform all culinary chores, the Idoma men are not always exempted. Through linguistic analysis the Idoma language is classified in the Akweya subgroup of the Idoma Idomoid languages of the Volta–Niger family, which include Alago, Agate, Etulo and Yala languages of Benue, Nasarawa and Northern Cross River States as discussed above (Armstrong, Robert G. 1983. 54-58). The Akweya subgroup is closely related to the Yatye-Akpa sub-group. The bulk of Iduma territory is in the south of River Benue about 72 Km east of the confluence with River Niger. The Idoma are known to be great warriors and hunters. They are also very hospitable and peace-loving. The greater part of Idoma land was largely unknown to the West until the 1920s but the British who came later with intent of acquisition and colonization did not touch the culture of the people so they left much of the people's colourful traditional culture and artifacts intact. The population of the Idoma is estimated at about 4 million.

IDOMA TRADITIONS, DANCES AND ARTEFACTS

The most famous traditional dance of the Idoma is known "Ogirinya" dance. It is a highly energetic dance that requires jumping at regular intervals on the toes in short period of time. The Idomas love food and they have an annual food festival ostensibly to celebrate women and their various traditional cuisines. The most popular among their delicacies is the "Okoho" soup which is prepared from the peculiar Okoho plant, bush meat and many other ingredients. The Idoma Deity is "Alekwu". But their traditional belief systems have been completely eroded with the advent of Christianity, Islam and other foreign religions and by western practices and by other foreign influences. Most ethnic groups in the ethnic kingdom have been affected. However the majority of the Idoma people still believe in the "" the link between the living and the dead. The adherents organize annual 'Aje Alekwu' festivals whereby the traditional religious practitioners commune and make sacrifices in honour of their ancestors. The Idomas have a strong belief that "Alekwu" stands as an invisible watchdog of their families and communities and that he too checkmates the committing of vices like adultery, theft and murder in the land. In Idoma land the marriage tradition is considered as a lifelong institution hence divorce is not permissible except on the possible grounds of adultery or other concrete reasons.

The marriage customs in Idoma land is similar to that of the Tivs. That was why it was not discussed, but referred thither. An Idoma Adult male at twenty-five years of age who also has the financial and physical capacity to maintain a wife and children can look for a woman of his choice for marriage. She must be at least eighteen years old. When he finds one, he then reports his findings to his family which will then choose a go-between who is familiar with the girl's family to investigate the family of the prospective bride to ascertain whether that family has any history of mental disease, epilepsy, stealing traits etc. If the result of this investigation is negative, the prospective groom's family then visits the woman's family with gifts of kola nuts and hot drinks to request for "the hand "of the prospective girl/woman. After this first visit, another visit is scheduled for the woman to meet her future husband, after which a final visit is scheduled for the future groom and his family to pay the bride-price and offer other gifts. This is the tradition common to all semi-Bantu tribes of Nigeria including the Tivi and URUAN/EFIK. If the woman refuses to marry the man after these gifts have been provided, the groom's family nevertheless retains them without any ado.

With regard to the Bride price they are in many forms but the groom must pay a dowry first to the bride's mother and then another dowry to the father. This involves a significant amount of bargaining. Every member of the bride's mother's family is usually given money, with the groom's family determining the amount. The bride's age group including her distant relatives also get some amount of money. The amount paid varies according to bride's level of education and productivity. Thereafter the groom's family presents the bride a rooster and some money. The marriage rites and customs of the Idoma people are quite different from those of the Igbos and some other South-Eastern cultures. There are specific aspects that clearly distinguish their tradition and one of them is the fact that the groom and his family have to present the bride with a rooster and some money on the Wedding day after the dowry has already been paid. If she accepts, it is a sign of approval but it is a sign indicating disapproval and disinterest if she rejects the gift. While there are no specific reasons to justify the need for a rooster, it remains an interesting part of Idoma marriage ceremony. If she accepts these gifts and in turn hands them over to her mother this automatically indicates her acceptance of the groom, but if she refuses this signifies her refusal (Cf. http://amarachia.blogspot.co.za/2015/08/traditional-wedding-made-in-idoma-land.htm). If there is acceptance, both families arrange a date when the bride will be showered with gifts and money and a great festivity involving the two families, acquaintances and neighbours are invited to what is usually termed "The Traditional Marriage/Wedding" where there will be merriment and plenty to eat and drink together. Before the bride is finally handed over to her husband, however, her age group will pose as a "mock barrier" to those who want to take her and extort money from the anxious groom's family.

Sometimes it is also the tradition for the bride's family – usually her mother to present house-hold items like food items, cooking utensils etc. in what is called "Housing Ceremony" to the bride to bring to her matrimonial home because she is not expected to go to the market for the first five market days after her marriage. At the end of the eating and drinking, the wife is finally handed over to her husband's family (Cf. Omokhodion 1998, 23-27). Virginity is highly valued in most cultures in Nigeria, it a thing of pride and joy to the girl's family. Wherever a bride is found not to be a virgin, she is taken to the husband's family' ancestral shrine for cleansing. After this the Ije is put on her to invoke fertility on her thus marking the beginning of married life among the Idoma. To conclude, in 1951, R.C. Abraham who had put to writing the Idoma Language as also Idoma Wordlists and Chrestomathy also published "Iduma Proverbs" on behalf of the then Idoma Native Administration, Government of Nigeria. But some beautiful Idoma Proverbs which I also gathered from other sources can be found after Chapter XII of this book. It is time we also treat at least briefly, the Idoma's close neighbours, namely the Igalas of Kogi State of Nigeria, and to Igala we must now turn.

ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF THE IGALA OF KOGI STATE NOTIONS ON NOMENCLATURE AND IGALA CULTURE HISTORY

The first mention of Igala land takes us back to the coming of the early Holy Ghost Missionaries CSSp. from France to Nigeria, namely Rev. Fr. Joseph Emile Lutz, Fr. Leon Horne Bro P. Hermas and Bro Joan Grotto who first arrived the shores of this great country in 1885 AD to plant the Catholic Faith in South Eastern Nigeria, which at the time was referred to as the Lower Niger or more appropriately "NIGERIA Meridienale a.k.a Southern Nigeria". Already Lagos Colony had been annexed to Southern Nigeria with Sir Ralph Moore as High Commissioner and Northern Nigeria was under Sir Fredrick Lugard as High Commisioner but both under Sir Walter Egerton as Governor General of Nigeria then residing at Calabar as discussed on "Nigeria in the Making" above. With the impetus given by Lord Lugard in the modification of his stand on the invitation of Missionaries to evangelize in Northern Nigeria which by then was the stronghold of Islam already in the firm control of Dr. Edward Wilmot Blyden, Msgr. Alexandre Leon Lejeune, CSSp. acting on the opportunity given him by Sir Ralph Moore the High Commissioner at the Headquarters at Calabar, he Msgr. Lejeune with Lugard's willing cooperation saw to the establishment of a "Freed Slave Home" as a sort of "Christian Village". Sir Lugard therefore promptly sent letters to the Holy Fathers to kick start the venture in the North. Msgr. Lejeune, the then Apostolic Prefect of the Nigerian Mission authorized by Pope Benedict XV to superintend the new mission then got work and started the building of the Freed Slave Home first at Dekina where the Holy Ghost Missionaries had hitherto opened up a new mission station in 1903. In fact, Lugard himself had promised to send a large number of freed slaves there to kick start the Christian Village. Later he wrote a letter to the Colonial Office in London praising the work of the Missionaries at Dekina in Northern Nigeria, now in Kogi State. To succeed, Msgr. Lejeune adopted the Muslim method of making converts through evangelization from the top, ie. a method of concentrating attention on the upper classes and the notables in society. He had reasoned that focusing attention on freed slaves alone would make it impossible to reach out to the natives who were mostly pagans. Evangelization from the top downwards proved a better method of reaching every fibre of the society. Consequently, this method proved more successful than the "Christian Village Experiment" which was first championed by Fr. Joseph Lutz. (Cf. Obi Celestine A. 1985, 83-84). That was my knowledge about the Igala peoples of Dekina. The second was my contact with some of Igala soldiers during the war, this time at Anua where I stayed on coming back from the war territory at Owerri Nkuorgi, Orlu, in Imo State. The third of course was when I visited late Bishop Ephraim S. Obot, Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Ida in Kogi State. The last was through my informant who supplied the Igala Proverbs for the Index of this Book. Who then are the Igalas of Kogi State of Nigeria? First and foremost, Igala is the autonomous ethnic group in Kogi State of Nigeria which has two other main ethnic groups viz the Yoruba and Hausa speaking Kogians.

IGALA ORIGINS, EVOLUTION AND CULTURE HISTORY

Geographically, Igala Kingdom a.k.a the "Kingdom of Idah" is a pre-colonial West African state of what is now Nigeria. The kingdom was founded by the Igala, a people living north of the Igbo country specifically Nsukka region of Enugu State bordered on the south by Enugu Ezike//Obolo Affor in Nsukka East; on the North and East by Idoma and on the West by the Etsako of Edo. Its capital is Idah. The territory was greatly influenced by the , Yoruba, Bini and Jukun kingdoms. The first "Atta", the title later given to the ruler of the kingdom, was "Ebule – Jonu". This Paramount Ruler of sorts curiously happened to be a woman. Of course traditional history is rife with stories about women being originally those who culturally were calling the shots. As time went on she was succeeded by her brother "Agana-Poje" who fathered "Idoko". Idoko who succeed his father later also became the king and he took the title of "Atta". The king had two children "Atiyele" and "Ayegba om'Idoko" meaning "Ayegba son of Idoko". Atiyele the first son of Idoko migrated eastward of the kingdom to establish Ankpa kingdom while Ayegba the second son succeeded his father with the new title of "Ata'Gala" ie. the Atta of Igala. He led a war against the Jukun which resulted in the victory for Igala. Today Atta Idakwo Michael who was appointed as the new king in December 2012 is the reigning Atta of Igala (Cf. Information Nigeria: "Igala Kingdom Gets New Attah"17 December 2012). The Atta-ship of Igala is rotatory and it is said that since the 7th century AD it has rotated among four branches of the Royal Clans. Igala kingdom was founded by "Abutu- Eje" in the 7th century. The kingdom was ruled by nine high officials called the "Igala Mela" who were said to be the custodians of the sacred Earth shrine. The ancient kingdom of Igala survived well into the 19th century when it became a British protectorate in 1901(Cf. Isichei, Elizabeth 1997, 67-72).

Igala is a Volta–Niger language. It is spoken by the Igala ethnic group of Nigeria. An estimated 800,000 spoke Igala mostly in Kogi State, Delta and Edo States of Nigeria. The Igala dialects include Ebu, Idah, Ankpa, Dekina, Ogugu, Ibaji and Ife. The Igala language is the official lingua franca and language of teaching used in primary schools in Agatu, Idoma, and Bassa. The Igala language as well as Igala culture and tradition have influenced other languages and cultures around the confluence of the River Niger and River Benue respectively.(Cf. ORIGINS OF THE YORUBA (Yorùbá) PEOPLE IN PARTICULAR TURE, E S & YORUBA CULTURE HISTORY

ORIGINS OF THE YORUBA (Yorùbá) PEOPLE IN PARTICULAR NOMENCLATURE, EVOLUTIONS & YORUBA CULTURE HISTORY

Just as the d GERI France, Ibibio, Ekoi, Efik, Ibom, Annang, Igbo, Oruk Anam, Anambra State, O e lexicon of the world, because there was a time when they were not, so also the term and people, the Yoruba. Even the term YORUBA a.k.a OKUSSA/EKUSSA in URUAN/EFIK derived from their greetings ? kú àár? = good morning; ? kú àle = good evening! did not always designate an ethnicity but was often used merely to describe speakers of the Yoruba language. The ethnic connotation of "Yoruba" both as a people and a geographical entity spread across West Africa and was institutionalized in ethnographies written in Arabic and Ajami. Yoruba or Yariba as an ethnic terminology did not come into use until the nineteenth century, and was originally confined to what was generally known as the "almighty" OYO EMPIRE in our primary school days. Prior to the standardization of the term, the Yoruba had been known by a variety of labels across the globe. Among Europeans the Yoruba were often known as Akú, a name derived from the first words of Yoruba greetings such as ? kú àár?! ie. 'Good morning' and ? kú al?! ie. 'Good evening;' "Okun," being a slight variation of the Yoruba word Akú as also seen in Europe. In Cuba and Spanish-speaking America, the Yoruba were called "Lucumi," after the phrase "O luku mi," meaning "my friend" in some dialects. It is important to note, however, that not all these terms are derived from the Yoruba language as noted in Chapter I with reference to the Ibibio. In Spanish and Portuguese documents the Yoruba were described as "Nago," "Anago," and "Ana," names which derived from the name of a coastal Yoruba sub-group in present-day Republic of Benin; but the use of this label has continued to be in use into the present day Nigeria to describe the Yorubas of Francophone West Africa.

The Yorubas who number about 90 million people in Nigeria and the Diaspora viz the Sudan, Togo, Ghana, the Republic of Benin, USA, Brazil and other Caribbean countries form one of the largest ethno-linguistic groups in sub-Saharan Africa and constitute more than 20% of the total population of Nigeria, Most of the Yorubas live in the North West region of Nigeria comprising Ekiti, Lagos, Ogun, Ondo, Osun, and Oyo states, making these political areas decidedly in the control of the numerically superior Yoruba. There are also many Yoruba communities scattered throughout the entire region of West Africa reaching as far as the Benin, Ghana, and Togo Republics but the greatest concentration of Yoruba is found in Yoruba land in Western Nigeria. Many people of African descent in the Americas also claim a degree of Yoruba ancestry, due to the slave trade of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The first documented mention of the term Yoruba as an ethnic group was written by the Singhalese scholar, Ahmed Baba in the 16th century. It is likely that the term Yoruba became widely popularized as an ethnic label due to its use as an ethnic connotation in the Hausa language since Hausa was widely used in West Africa at the time. Considered the nexus of the Yoruba cultural identity, Yoruba land is bordered in the West by the Borgu region variously called Bariba and Borgawa; in the North West by the Nupe and Ebira; in the South by the ? san and Edo kingdoms of Edo State and in the East by the Igala and other related States of North Eastern Nigeria.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE YORUBAS YORUBA EVOLUTION, CULTURE & RELIGION

The culture and ethnographic history of the Yoruba race and their evolution are built on a certain mythology. There are two varying views on Yoruba evolution which revolves around the man named Oduduwa who lived within the region now known as Ile-Ife and according to the legend; this was the site of the creation of the whole of humankind. The other creation mythology also regarding Oduduwa was that he had an extensive family which caused the population to spread out from Ile-Ife into the whole world. It is the more popular of the two versions based on Oduduwa's children whose version of creation is supported by historical facts. Subscribers to this version hold that Oduduwa sent his descendants out of Ile-Ife to conquer other existing people and that many of his children gained leadership positions in other cities of what is now Yoruba land. Eventually the flow of these descendants out of Ile-Ife region into other Yoruba areas brought about the unification and way of life of the race and tied together their different cultural practices. That first main creation myth of the Yoruba which focuses on the religious significance of Ile-Ife as the cradle of humankind describes Oduduwa as being sent by Olodumare, the Creator, in order to form humankind out of the clay of Ile-Ife. While this version endows Oduduwa with a religious role as a major player in the evolution of the Yoruba stock, some scholars argue that this version of creation is tied to the earth goddess Odudua/Ododuwa on account of the connection between the earth goddess and Oduduwa based primarily on the shared use of the "odu," meaning knowledge. According to this myth, when Oduduwa was sent to create humankind he was given only a chicken and a sack of sand which was to be used primarily as a preventive measure, because at that time of Oduduwa's existence, the earth was covered with water. While Oduduwa was climbing down from the heavens, his grip on the chicken weakened and it began to spiral towards the ground. In a desperate attempt to catch the free falling chicken, Oduduwa let loose his sack of sand, which indeed plummeted unto the earth. Then after climbing up to the heavens he realized that his sack of sand had formed a small hill in the waters covering the earth while the chicken was safely seated on top of the sandy mound. From this spot, later named ILE-IFE, the land began extending in all directions, thus was created the town of Ile-Ife.

From all accounts, pre-Colonial Yoruba History dates back to the Stone Age. Evidence abounds that the early inhabitants in the area had practised their metalwork and fine art techniques on baked clay that possibly relate to Nok Culture. But as often happens people are still wondering whether to ask the question regarding the identity of the new writers of Yoruba history, viz. the Arabs from Arabia, those of North Africa and the early European explorers into Yoruba land who have opined that linguistic history has proven a pivotal point in unraveling mystery of the first movement which brought about a population boom of the Yorubas to Ekiti, Ife, and Ijebu soon after 700 BC. This movement was followed by a similar increase of population in Oyo to the north. Yoruba legends have also claimed that the newcomers hailed from Arabia, an idea substantiated by the high percentage of Yoruba customs and traditions comparable to those found along the Middle Nile valley, particularly in the ancient kingdom of Kush as it seems. Both creation myths of the Yoruba culture articulate the same basic idea: that newcomers (personified by Oduduwa) settled in Yoruba land and had a significant effect on the pre-existing populations of the area. Archaeological evidence has also demonstrated that Yoruba land was already populated by the time of these newcomers, came, and that the area had probably been populated since. These two waves have also brought a flood of new political ideas and methods into Yoruba land, which began to take root because by 1000 BC, the Yoruba had developed a high political system dominated by town governments. These same towns were indeed a product of the new ways of thinking which grew out of increased interdependence among the Yorubas as there was certainly a rising need to rely on one's neighbors for survival. Where once was primarily a forest land, a farming area was developed under the influence of these Arab newcomers. Soon it became a highly urbanized society which multiplied from place to place. Thus evolved throughout West Africa the growth of towns in Yoruba land which have become the glory and crown of capital towns. These capital towns in Yoruba land were linked together in ancient times, forming loose confederacies under a senior Yoruba leader regarded as the Oni of Ife. Primarily serving as a mechanism for peace keeping, the confederacy that united Yoruba land left the states to govern themselves and served to minimize conflict among confederacy members. These chief Yoruba cities include Ibadan, Lagos, Abeokuta (Ab?okuta), Akure (Akur?), Ilorin (Il?rin), Ijebu Ode (Ij?bu Ode), Ijebu-Igbo (Ij?bu-Igbo), Ogbomoso (Ogbom???), Ondo, Ota (? ta), Ìlá ? ràngún, Ado-Ekiti, Shagamu (Sagamu), Ikenne (Ik?nn?), Osogbo (Osogbo), Ilesa (Ilesa), Oyo (? y?), Ife (Ilé-If?), Saki, and Ago-Iwoye. Political thought at this time focused on the idea of a kingdom as a large family with the ONI as the head and mutual respect among the sibling nations. Each city state was left to govern itself in most matters and was controlled by a monarch known as OBA and his council of nobles, guild leaders, and merchants, commonly known as ? GBE in Yoruba.

More often than not, the throne was hereditary and passed on through the generations. Royal bloodlines alone, however, were not enough to secure a position of power ascendancy, as an eligible contender for the throne would not be allowed to ascend to power if any family member, servant, or slave belonging to the family was known to have committed a serious crime such as theft, fraud, murder, or rape. Some city states abolished the use of royal lineages altogether, preferring to keep the monarchy open for the election of any free-born male citizen. The kings were almost always polygamous, some boasting of up to 20 wives. Political power was often increased through marriage, and kings often sought women of royal families as their wives. A few female Obas rose to power in Ilesha and Ondo, but these were comparatively rare. There was no set power balance between the monarch and the council throughout the confederacy, and cities were left to decide for themselves whether to weigh the two opinions equally or to cast more weight to one. For the Egba of Yoruba land, the leadership and council exercised extreme control over the Monarch and carefully guarded against any excesses of royal authority. While the extreme level of control that the council could exercise over the king was not the mode across all of Yoruba land, many other cities fostered a political sense of unity between the monarch and the council. For example, even in ? y?, the most centralized of the pre-colonial kingdoms, the ALAAFIN consulted on all political decisions with a prime minister (the Bas?run) and the council of leading nobles known as the ? Y? MESI. When not exercising a political voice in the council of nobles, Yoruba could join in many of the other peer organizations in the region. One of these organizations was ? GB? ARO, a militia group formed in the eighteenth century by Lisbi in opposition to OYO'S AJELES who were the appointed administrators. Other covert military resistance leagues such as the EKITIPARAP? and the OGIDI alliance were organized in the nineteenth century for the diametrically opposite reasons. These groups wanted to secure the dominance of the Yoruba and resist advances from Ibadan, Nupe, and the Sokoto Caliphate.

The political and urban development in Ife reached their apogee around 1300 AD. By this time the Yoruba language had spread across an extensive portion of West Africa and the amount of Yoruba settlements had dramatically increased. The most notable among the new settlements was OYO, a town in the Northern part of Yoruba territory. Oyo was later to become a kingdom in its own right and one of the greatest empires of yore, the great OYO EMPIRE, following the decline of Yoruba hegemony in sixteenth century. In 1914, Nigeria became an official colony of Great Britain, a move which legitimized the continual British presence in Southern Nigeria since the nineteenth century. The British colony of Nigeria politically united many of the various factions within Yoruba land and other nearby ethnic and linguistic groups. British colonization brought an influx of Christianity into Nigeria, a practice which led to a slow dissolution of many traditional Yoruba religious practices. Following World War II, public sentiment in Nigeria turned against the British colonizers and began to rally for an independent state. On October 1, 1960 Nigeria was declared independent of British rule. Greater Yoruba land was subsumed into the Federal Republic of Nigeria. It is important to note that there are also Yorubas in the Diaspora. During the decline of the great Oyo Empire, Yoruba land degenerated into a theatre of civil wars, in which military captives were sold into the slave trade. Most of the slaves that were exported as a result of the civil war were sent to Haiti, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Brazil, and Trinidad, bringing with them Yoruba religious beliefs. The Yoruba are one of the ethnic groups in AFRICA whose cultural heritage and legacy are recognizable in the Americas, despite the diasporic effects of slavery. Orisha religion, and various musical art forms popularized in Latin America, especially Haiti, Cuba, and Puerto Rico are rooted in Yoruba music.

The power of the Yoruba confederacy began a slow decline in the sixteenth century, primarily caused by conflicts with the Sokoto Caliphate in the savanna region between the River Niger and the forest. The Sokoto Caliphate was a militant Muslim empire founded by the Fulani Koranic scholar Uthman Dan Fodio who seized control of the northern Yoruba town of Ilorin and ravaged the Yoruba capital OYO-ILE. The early victories of the Caliphate caused the Yoruba to retreat to the northern latitudes, a move which dramatically harmed the remaining Yoruba population as tsetse flies in the area killed many of the remaining horses. The Caliphate continued to pursue the Yoruba. However, this advance was only stopped when they were decisively defeated by the armies of Ibadan in 1840. For pushing back the advances of the Sokoto Caliphate Ibadan he was named the "Saviour of Yoruba land."

YORUBA CULTURE ARTIFACTS AND RELIGION

The Yoruba are known for their excellent craftsmanship, considered to be the most skilled and productive in all of Africa. Traditionally, they work at such trades as blacksmithing, leatherworking, weaving, glassmaking, and ivory and wood carving. The many densely populated urban areas of Yoruba land allow for a centralization of wealth and the development of a complex market economy which encourages extensive patronage of the arts. Statues & bracelets used by the Yoruba, from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century known as Smithsonian collection. This Yoruba performance repertoire includes various masquerade plays, folk operas, and a vibrant cinematic scene. Perhaps the most famous among Yoruba masquerade pieces, G?l?d? from the Ketu region of the modern Republic of Benin. This received the honor of being recognized as a Masterpiece of the Oral and Intangible Heritage of Humanity by the UNESCO. Other Yoruba cultural productions that have gained international recognition include the Ifa corpus, a collection of hundreds of poems used in divination ceremonies and the Osun-Osogbo Sacred Grove, one of the few remaining functional sites for traditional religious ceremonies in Nigeria and a magnet for visitors from all over the world. Recently, scholarly attention has focused on the performances of Egungun (representative of ancestral spirits visiting the living), Epa (symbolic performances variously promoting valor and fertility), and ? y?, a procession of masked dancers.

The term ITAN is the sum total of all Yoruba myths, songs, histories, and other cultural components. Traditional Yoruba religious beliefs recognize a wide variety of deities, with ? l?run or Olodumare venerated as the creator and other spirits serving as intermediates to help with the concerns of humans. Yoruba deities include "? YA" (wind goddess), "IFA" (divination or fate), "? L? DA" (destiny), "IBEJI" (twins), "? SANYIN" (medicines and healing) and "? SUN" (goddess of fertility, protector of children and mothers), and ? ANGO (God of thunder). Each human being is also assumed to have his or her individual deity, called and "Ori," who is responsible for controlling destiny. In order to placate the Ori into providing a beneficial future, cowrie shells are often used to bedeck a sculpture of the personal deity. When not seeking guidance from an ORI, Yorubas may also turn to deceased parents and ancestors, who are believed to possess the ability to protect their living relatives. In order to receive protection from deceased family members, many Yoruba worshiped or offered sacrifices such as libations and kola nuts on the graves of their relatives, hoping that a suitable sacrifice would guarantee protection. Traditional Yoruba polytheism, however, was challenged throughout history, particularly by the contact with Islam through trade with the ancient Mali Empire. The Islamic establishment of the Mali Empire often used the military to spread religion, a movement illustrated through the jihads that plagued Yoruba land. Most Yoruba who converted to Islam found solace and community in urban centers such as Ibadan, that allowed Muslims to connect with one another and form political ties.

The second significant challenge to traditional Yoruba religious beliefs was Christianity, which was introduced to Nigeria by colonial powers roughly 400 years after contact with Islam. Conversion to Christianity was often brought about through the use of religious schools, set up by Christian missionaries to draw people away from traditional beliefs. Yoruba religion and mythology is a major influence in West Africa, chiefly in Nigeria, and has given origin to several New World religions such as Santería in Cuba, Puerto Rico and Candomblé in Brazil. Another permutation of traditional Yoruba religious beliefs, the religion popularly known as VODUN in Haiti combines the beliefs of the many different African ethnic nationalities taken to the island with the structure and liturgy from the FON-EWE of present-day Benin and the Congo-Angolan culture area, but Yoruba-derived religious ideology and deities also play an important role. The majority of contemporary Yoruba are Christians and Muslims, with indigenous Congregations having the largest membership among Christians.

Yoruba people have maintained a widely acclaimed system of traditions and manners. For example, when greeting an elder, a man is expected to bow and a woman has to curtsey. Sometimes, when greeting someone of high reputation, like an Oba or other monarchs and royal fathers but lower in rank eg, Aare, Balogun, etc. often designated as KABIYESI and even a member of a royal house, a woman or girl is to kneel and then get up quickly while a. man has to prostrate on the ground before the VIP and then get up. Yorood morninguba traditional popular sports include wrestling, called GIDIGBO or IJAKADI, foot races, swimming and the reggatta or canoe races in riverine areas, horse riding in the savannah region, and other various forms of combative performances. Combative performances like wrestling are particularly popular during festivals and religious ceremonies as is common throughout the West African region, soccer is the most popular contemporary sport, followed by track and field events, boxing, and table tennis. Yoruba athletic events take place in either the National Stadium, Lagos with a capacity for 55,000 spectators, the Liberty Stadium, Ibadan, the first ever stadium in Africa constructed by the legendary Yoruba, Leader Chief Jeremiah Obafemi Oyeniyi Awolowo in the early 1950s, as also the Lekan Salami Stadium, Ibadan with 25,000 capacity. Many Yoruba also play "Eyò", a popular board game called MANCALA elsewhere in Africa. Then with the last culture history, origins and evolution of some ethnic nationalities explored, let us return to our URUAN/EFIK patterns regarding Chieftaincy affairs and procedures.

URUAN/EFIK IN PARTICULAR: CHIEFTAINCY AFFAIRS AND PROCEDURES A COMPARISON BETWEEN EFIK AND URUAN CHIEFTAINCY AFFAIRS

Since the last inter-regnum in EFIK, when the controversy cropped regarding who should or should not be crowned the next Obong of Calabar in the late 1950s which led to the setting up of the Hart's Commission, in 1963/64, the EFIK ditto URUAN tried to follow laid down traditional norms bordering on a sort of Constitutional Review for the emergence and coronation of the OBONG/NSOMM, and this has still held sway until recently when the IFUM UB? n EFIK became a matter of controversy first following the election of His Late Eminence, Edidem Elijah Henshaw which was contested with the counter swearing in of Etubom Bassey Ekpo Bassey led by the Akpanika group who ganged up at the Efe Asabo and with impunity disrupted the hallowed stool of the OBONGSHIP of Calabar. This brought about such an outcry because it was nothing short of an abomination which had never been witnessed in the chequered history and annals of Ub? n EFIK EBURUTU. Nobody has ever attempted to discredit and bring IFUM UBONG EFIK into such disrepute and ignominy without incurring the vengeance of Atabrinya and the spirits of the ancestors. The tradition has always been that the throne of Ub? n EFIK EBURUTU is not for cash and carry, but this time around matters became so muddled up and the kingdom became so heated up which really brought the king makers to their wits ends as to what and how the problems were to cleared up. Thanks to goodness, they were equal to the task and things had come to pass as often happened. Wasn't it so and where are those imposters and nincompoops today? Even with the resolution of matters, after the official acceptance, nomination and election of this current Obong, His Eminence Edidem Ekpo Okon Abasi Otu V of Adiabo kingdom, there was a counter election of HRH Etubom Anthony A. Ani of Ikon Eto kingdom which led to the intractable court litigations only recently resolved in favour of the incumbent Obong. Then it had always been the tradition in ancient URUAN that once the monarch has been duly appointed/elected and accepted by the traditional Rulers and announced to the general acceptance of the citizens in the kingdom, no matter what happens, the nomination is irreversible as no other contender can be countenanced. The ancestors have accepted because "vox populi vox Dei". Who then can now come to oppose it?

What follows next is the setting up of committees to kick start preparations for the official coronation and matters appertaining. What usually happens, since there is to be no occasion to cause a situation for inter regnum to happen, once a king is known to have been gathered to his ancestors – a matter that must never be made public - the king makers in council have first to agree on who must be the successor to the vacant throne, then inform the traditional rulers ie. the Etuboms or Heads of royal houses who in turn seek the acceptance and final blessing of the Village/Clan Heads in consonance with the requirements in EFIK/URUAN kingdoms respectively. After this the "Obodom Eny? "is caused to sound signallying the departure of the monarch to his ancestors. Thereafter, the public announcement can be made using the media. Enough time between six months or a year's interval is usually allowed during which time, the royal father is said to "have fallen ill and taken to the "hospital or healing home abroad". This period is usually announced as the "king's travel abroad – "? b? aka isa " followed by "Eda ? b? ew?r? emen eka itie us?b?", when adequate arrangements are almost concluded for the official announcement to be made. The rational is to make the citizens get ready in case the king travelled to a place of no return, since a king cannot just suddenly fall sick like that and die. It is unthinkable in URUAN/EFIK.

Then all is now set for his official Obsequies after which the announcement of the successor to the throne. Then a date is fixed for the coronation. This also applies in respect of Village/Clan Heads. As observed already, coronation in URUAN/EFIK is a two-part function viz. eriyara Ntinya at AKWA AnWA and eriyara Anyanya either at URUA AnWA or Church. The Ntinya rite which is the traditional ceremony involves the ceremonial which takes place at the AKWA AnWA using the traditional crown. This crown consists of the "Bidak" or beret – a round velvet woven cap encircled with netting rope or Uruk iyire/Ibibio, after which, it is further embellished with Ekpe brass, Ekpe (lion) teeth, Ekpe whiskers and Ekpe skin The entire superstructure is further overlaid with dazzling beads and Mbamba (cowry). The Obong crown in URUA/EFIK is a sacred symbol of royal authority and nobody no matter however highly placed in the two kingdoms is allowed to touch, let alone wear this royal crown under pain of death by Ekpe NSIBIDI; but in modern times a heavy fine is imposed instead in case of such an anathema being committed. The crown "dies" with the demise of the royal Father.

On the D day, the royal kpoto throne is set on a raised ground (with steps) where people can watch from every corner of the coronation grounds. In modern times it can take place on the dais at the town stadium where such a football stadium exists. The throne is adorned with all the paraphernalia of royalty including the Akata – royal stool, Ntu , usually two for the king to rest his feet; Akpakaha ub? , royal chairs for other royal fathers; etc. Then behind the throne, a small and well decorated hut is built behind the throne for the use of Ekpe MB? k? and nobody except the authorized Ekpe officials may go near this hut. From a special mat, usually ikpa Ekpe woven from Eke skins or purple carpet is laid to the grounds /spot where the royal procession is to take off since the king cannot march on bare ground/floor. Nobody is expected to get near or march on this royal carpet. Throughout the eve of the D Day, all sorts of activities in drumming and dancing take place to intimate the citizenry of the impeding royal function. The ceremony as observed above begins quite early with the women's train who sing and recite the ASE or litany of the profile of the new king. Then all the different groups with their banners join in the procession towards the throne. Then follows the royal train preceded by those carrying the Mm?ny?, the king's sceptre which must never touch the ground under pain of NSIBIDI death or great fine; the ISIM players, etc. followed by the different groups of royal fathers far and near. The king with his royal train carries the rear to the dais. When all are seated, then comes the sound of MB? K? from the hut and Ekpe MB? K? appears to give the traditional IK? n Ekpe to the King. The king then rises from the Akata and descends under the roof of the throne. The Oku Ndem pours water on the roof of the throne which drops fall on the head of the king as a sign of sanctification. The Oku Ndem now gives a knock on the head of the king signallying the last insult that could ever be given to him. Thereafter, it is expected that nobody, no matter however highly placed can do or say anything that tantamount to an insult to the king after this ceremony. It signifies total obeisance and respect to the king throughout his reign. Then follows the swearing in and oath of Office with the official putting of the crown on the king's head. After this there is merriment galore into the night and offering of gifts to the royal father. The second coronation as observed already is the bestowal of the golden crown and staff of office which in modern times is the one given after government recognition and takes place usually in the Church.

Up to this, it has always been that the seat of the Obong rotates between the Royal houses and this has never been questioned. The only problem arises when there are two contenders within the same Royal house that should produce the next Obong. Whereas in URUAN kingdom the matter is clear-cut, the traditional norm for the emergence of an Nsomm is absolutely rotatory, one following upon another in turns between the North, Central and Southern Kingdoms in URUAN. Once the Nsomm from the North dies, it is the prerogative of the Central Uruan Kingdom to produce the next Nsomm from among the traditional Royal families within the Kingdom. Then, when that Nsomm dies the next Nsomm would have to be elected from the South such that once his nomination /election has been accepted by all the Traditional Rulers and Village/Clan Heads, the Candidate is ipso facto declared the Nsomm designate without any further ado. Yes, but it is not as simple and clear-cut as that. What makes it a straight forward and easy affair lies in the fact that the next Nsomm designate to the stool is always known beforehand. Once a new Nsomm has been crowned the kingdom to produce his successor sets about scouting for and grooming the likely king to-be among the possible royal families which have the EKURIKU in that kingdom. Long before anything happens, he is being instructed to set his house in order and prepare himself as a possible successor to the NSOMM/OBONG URUAN/EFIK throne. Even if he knows he would have to be selected as the choice of and crowned by all the citizens of URUAN/EFIK, nevertheless, such a candidate must have complied with the traditional formalities of selection/election. He must be the most senior agnate of the founding ancestor from whose house the selection is being made, provided he is not incompetent or incapacitated by reason of physical or mental disabilities. The patrilineal descent is generally preferred but there could be situations where a candidate by virtue of his maternal connections is chosen in preference to the paternal lineage eg. my late step-grandfather HRM Ekarika Ekpo, who was a cousin of my grandfather HRM Edidem Edet I. Akpa-Inyang whom he Ekarika succeeded. The most important factor is GENEALOGY. But this is not the same kind of rotatory designation in EFIK land. What obtains is that he must in the case a prospective candidate in accession to the OBONG throne in EFIK kingdom, be an ETUBOM from a royal house of a lineage duly appointed as such and whose turn in the line of royal houses of that lineage falls due (Cf. Constitution of the Efik Eburutu Kingdom, Calabar, 2008). What follows next as observed already in the case of an Obong is the traditional anointing at the Afe Asabo at 19 Bocco Street – Marina, Calabar or more preferably as from now for both the NSOMM and OBONG designates, the investiture of and decoration with UDAK/ISANDA ie. palm fronds or Raffia Necklace at the Iso Atakpo at AKWA AKPA URUAN. This is a traditional ceremony signifying URUAN/EFIK belief in the protective influence of the palm against evil powers and influences. It is after that that the coronation takes place which in recent times consists of first the UYARA NTINYA ie. traditional coronation at the market or town square and second the UYARA ANYANYA which has to be in the Church, stadium or some designated AKWA AnWA. Then in general whether as an NSOMM or OBONG candidate, he should be a holder of an Ekpe Title at least of MBOKO in the case of URUAN kingdom or of any of the established EFE EKPE EFIK IBOKU in the case of EFIK kingdom ie. before his election as an OBONG/NSOMM designate. In extreme cases such a person may have the title conferred upon him, but usually a cosmetic one, provided he has fulfilled all the conditions appertaining to the initiation and conferment of any EKPE GLOBE/TITLE in URUAN/EFIK. Nobody can presume to present himself for enthronement without complying with all these customary formalities. For as Mbiti has put it so succinctly, this is a requirement from the corporate society, and it is a duty and rhythm of life in which anyone who is vying for such an exalted office must participate both as an actor and participant. Therefore, the aspirant, and this applies also even to every designate for the office of ETUBOM, Village /Clan Heads, including other titled MBONG IKPA-ISONG who disregards or fails to comply with the Constitution is a curse to the Kingdom. He is a rebel, a law breaker and a deviant; he is not fit to hold the office because he is not only abnormal but 'under-human'. The failure to get initiated into EKPE URUAN/EFIK including the fulfillment of other requirements under normal circumstances means that the designate has "rejected society and society rejects him in turn (Cf. Mbiti J.S., 133).

In any case, the observance of traditional rites and customs does not in any way imply fetishism. No true African traditional rite which has come from the ancestors and founding fathers of a region or tribe has ever been known to be tainted with fetish and unwholesome really heathen and diabolical overtones. In most cases it is the subsequent inheritors and elders who perhaps to astound and overawe the people add their own novel fetish exotic symbols and ceremonials mostly weird and grotesque to compound issues and make the rites appear more solemn, impressive and awe inspiring. This is nothing but what the Lord Jesus castigated and condemned the Pharisees for ingeniously getting round the divine positive customary laws and pristine commands which came from God through Moses in order to forge their own added traditions known as the "Tradition of the Elders" on the people (Cf. Mtt 15:1-9; Lk 11:38-44). Traditional rulers who want to go with novel fetish traditions and rituals and who do not want to know and serve God and promote good morals; justice and peace, "ke emi Mbakara ema eked?k obot bringing the Good News of Salvation", by going into cultism are doing so at their own peril. They will neither be able to reign and rule the citizens of their respective kingdoms in justice and freedom nor know peace because there will be confusion and problems in their palaces for having divided kingdoms and being affiliated to groups, viz. cult groups. They will Willy Nilly be forced to perform pagan sacrifices with, and demanding for cows, goats, tortoises etc. They will also be involved in idol worship, obscenities and other profanities.

As URUAN/EFIK is getting more developed and civilized such accretions to ancient URUAN traditions should be done away with. Traditional rulers who go into cultism and fetish practices do not progress being weighed down by the spirit of limitation. They are bugged down with unnecessary observances to the detriment of practising good morals of generosity, patience, mercy, and other benevolent practices like looking for ways and means of providing for the widows, orphans and the handicapped in their domains as also securing and maintaining good and clean environments and moral/educational standards which of course are essentially Christian virtues and practices. God-fearing rulers can never be afraid of blood pressure because they sincerely believe God has taken over and is in control of their problems and those of their communities and will always take care of their needs. This is not like the case of some communities in URUAN; eg. to make sure that the royal stool has really and fully passed to their kingdoms, the royal fathers will after all the customary rites have been duly performed get in touch with the families and elders of their deceased predecessors, make an appointment and go "collect sand" (earth) from their compounds and in ceremonial procession bring and "pour it" in their compounds to signify that the reign of their predecessors has come to an end and has definitively passed on to them. I do not fathom anything fetish or cultic in this practice because sand, air and water are prime elements, without which nothing can live or be manufactured or constructed eg. house, motor car, radio, etc. Everything on earth requires at least these three elements which are divine gifts to humankind.

ROYAL HOUSES IN URUAN KINGDOM
IDU URUAN vis - a - vis AKPAINYANG ROYAL HOUSE/FAMILY TREE

The issue yet to be appropriately addressed in URUAN Kingdom is the "understanding" or "misunderstanding" of the Democratic process vis-à-vis Chieftaincy/Royalty affairs. When one considers the arrangement of the Royal Houses in Efik Kingdom in contra-distinction with that of URUAN, one notices that it is near impossible to locate and count the number of Royal dynasties in URUAN considering the era in question, to wit, over 8000 years ago of ancient URUAN dynasty and evolution. The Nigerian democratic experiment does not attempt to reckon with the fact that here we are dealing with thousands of generations and by implication of Royal Houses in URUAN. What is regarded as EFIK kingdom today was made up of just a handful of original URUAN persons from Atai Iboku and Efiom Ekpo kindreds – the deputed EFIK founding progenitors who on navigating and exploring the depths beyond the Cross River discovered this expanse of water they called ATA AKPA in AKWA AKPA URUAN of the Atlantic over three or four thousand years ago as seen already. Now EFIK Kingdom has grown to nearly one million citizens scattered into more than 500 communities/Villages of ethnic nationalities in Akpabuyo, Odukpani, Calabar, and Enyong etc. Then one can imagine what they could be in terms of URUAN which is the parent stock. Another scenario which is altogether not really unconnected with Royalty or Chieftaincy affairs, but which also goes to explain our point of view is that what is now the Metropolitan Archdiocese of Calabar was only a zone or in Catholic terminology, a deanery/Zone/Circuit out of the six Deaneries in old Calabar Diocese before the creation of Akwa Ibom State by the Ibrahim Babangida Military Administration in 1987. Today that zone of which the EFIK Kingdom is only a fraction is what has become the Archdiocese of Calabar from only four Parishes to now almost forty. This has come as it were to confirm the biblical mustard seed, the smallest of the seeds on earth, but which on germinating sprouts becoming a tree, such that it now becomes "the greatest of shrubs which becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air come and make nests in its branches." (Mtt 13:31-32). Yes, this is the "Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes" (Mk 12:11).

One can also digress further with another scenario which is altogether unconnected with but relevant to the issue at hand. It is about the issue of incompetence and nincompoops, upstarts and impostors who parade themselves as citizens of URUAN/EFIK and members of the Royal Houses which is dramatized as it were here. Sometime ago the Comrade Governor Adams Aliyu Oshiomhole of Edo State, Nigeria presented a ridiculous but very poignant situation about us Nigerians when he was trying to find out what was wrong with his Education Programme in spite of the massive investment in education and expenditure in terms of infrastructure, personnel and his state-of-the art school buildings and furniture for Edo State Education programmes. On a tour round the schools, he discovered to his embarrassment as also amazement that certain school children were wearing uniforms different from those expected to be worn by pupils/students attending "Government schools". He alighted and accosted some the children and parents about which schools they were attending while wearing different uniforms. Some replied: "My mummy /daddy said no, I should attend this one." The parents also in tow answered: "We are happy about the way you build the public schools, but we are not sure of their teachers." But why? Because on probing further during his physical encounter with some of the teachers, he, Governor Adams Oshiomhole discovered that most of the so-called Government teachers could not read even an Affidavit of "I solemnly declare" but saying instead: 'I Solomon declare' or saying 'Onitsha Prophet' instead of the correct rendering of "Judicial Province" thus exhibiting stark illiteracy and crass ignorance for the worst part. (Cf. Nanna Occherreome, 33).

To underscore the point at issue vis-à-vis this scenario concerning quacks/inconsequentials and nincompoops especially incompetent persons masquerading as teachers vis-à-vis Chiefs and Etuboms of Royal Houses in URUAN/EFIK, we can understand the problem of mass acceptance of Royal houses/families/kindreds in URUAN Kingdom. Some State Governments as was customary in the past often conduct competency examinations to Grades "C/D", "B" and "C" teachers either for the purpose of promotion or for weeding out incompetent ones. Cases have been known whereby the Examinations being set were as low as Standards III and IV Primary School Annual Promotions and most teachers were known to have woefully failed these examinations. In a number of cases less than 50% passed the examinations.

In the case of URUAN/EFIK while adhering to and insisting on competency requirements nowadays, quite a number of Royal Families do not seem to follow the ancient custom of strict possession of the Ekuriku spiritual endowment and other Ekpe in-built qualifications, because it is this that determines the true genealogy of every Royal Family/Kindred in URUAN/EFIK. This also seems to be the conditio sine qua non for the election/selection of an ETUBOM or Chief. A good example can be garnered from IDU Royalty and Chieftaincy tradition. In Idu URUAN, whereas there are just three designated Kindreds/Houses/Villages which have been known to be the possessors of UBONG-EKURIIKU viz. Ikot Osurua, Ikot Enam and Ikot Ewuk, and only from these can the Traditional Ruler – Obong Ikpa Isong Idu who can vie for the stool of Village Head/Clan Head and/or the NSOMM of URUAN emerge. There are also certain kindreds in Idu, which although they have the prerogative of possessing the EKURIKU as in the case of the above mentioned kindreds, but are nevertheless designated as the traditional "King makers" in Idu from time immemorial, viz. Nting Village and Ekim Kindreds in terms of the actual coronation of the King designate. The former are the designated authority to crown ie. put the crown on the head of – the King/Ruler designate, while the latter are those with authority to invest and decorate the "King elect" with the UDAK UBONG and the NTINYA as also the instruments of Royalty viz. Ikpaya - raffia robes, Nnuk Enin-ivory, Oti - Gong for Ase recitation, Mmonyo sacred scepter – to be held by an Ekpe Adept in confirmation of the King's coronation, Aya -broom Ubong, Isanda - and even sitting him on the Akata stool and Ntung/Ndang –foot rest which signify weight-balance, authority and stability of Office. It therefore means that Idu right from the time of their founding ancestors and from time immemorial can only authorize two grades of Houses, five in all, and grant them the prerogative of access regarding the stool of Office of the Royal Fathers in URUAN with the specific stool to the Royal titles appertaining.

But it does not end there because the matter is not as clear-cut as in EFIK kingdom as we have seen. There are also from time immemorial certain designated kindreds/Houses or Families which have the prerogative of producing the ETUBOMS of the Royal Houses. In IDU, there are at least fifty such Royal Houses. eg. Ikot Osurua Kindred which as observed already has the Ekuriku, but it does not mean that a Royal Father with the rank of Village/Clan Head and/or the NSOMM of URUAN can be produced/come from all of the Royal Families in Ikot Osurua. It means for example that in Ikot Osurua ethnic Kindred/ Village, Mbat Eso Enang Ubong House can produce an Etubom like late Etubom (Kgt) J.J. Mbat, but if at any point in time there is nobody in the kindred/House with all the qualifications of an ETUBOM appertaining to fill the vacancy for the House, then ipso facto, the Head of the House viz. Nnu Enang House for the time being, can only be elected to the Chieftaincy rank and not to the ETUBOM status. Period. That is why certain Chiefs can be elected to the office of Traditional Rulers like Village Heads, Clan Heads etc. without the qualification of an ETUBOM as obtains in EFIK Kingom, because an ETUBOM is both born and/or made and there are people that cannot measure up to that material and rank (Cf. Ancient ETUBOM in URUAN structure, designation/qualification in Chapter I). Similarly, and still on Ikot Osurua Kindred: Ufok Nung Edung Royal House elected ETUBOM Bede E. Nya and Etubom Michael Edem U. Essien as their Royal Heads in the last three but one dynasties, till date even the present occupier of that position/rank as Head of the Royal House (which is still in contention perhaps due to the fact that they have one of the largest number of households/families in IDU) has not been deemed fit to be saddled with the office and dignity of an Etubom Uf?k Nung Edung. The same also applies to Nkpingyehe House where Etubom Magnus Udo Eka and Etubom David Efiong were respectively elected Village Heads of Ikot Osurua Town, whereas the son of the latter, Chief Cletus David Efiong was also elected Village Head of Ikot Osurua Town without meriting the title of ETUBOM. Even as at now, the de facto Village Head of Ikot Osurua, His Highness, (Elder) Jerome E. Ekarika whose father Etubom (Prince) Anselm A. Ekarika was the last in Akpa-Inyang but adopted "Nung Ikpuk" House, is not being decorated with the ETUBOM rank. URUAN believes in maintaining tradition and standards. Laid down custom and tradition must be strictly adhered to in these matters viz. genealogy and Ekpe Rank and other qualifications as discussed in Chapter III; "koro owo isika ake ada a eset".

Some Houses may or may not produce even an ETUBOM within their kindreds. They can only produce perhaps one who may be invested with only the Chieftaincy status/rank. But in certain cases such a person can be so recognized and accredited by both the Village/Clan Head even to be elected to the exalted office of the NSOMM of URUAN. The last Nsomm but one for example, Edidem Atakpor Titus Williams, alias Okon Udo Ekpe, on account of his personal endowments was previously elevated to the rank of "Esukwa"; "koro kp? ama odot owo eyak en?". It is such a title holder who can be made an Adviser to the Village/Clan Head in Council or even the Prime Minister - Esukwa. He may in turn be authorized/permitted to attend the Village Council of Kindred Heads' and/or Etuboms' Council. It sounds somehow complicated, but that is why the Nigerian Constitution or any other African Constitution for that matter has inserted the "Chieftaincy Clauses" in their Constitutions. In Nigeria, every State Government also has among others, a Ministry of Chieftaincy Affairs. This may well explain the place of Constitutional Lawyers in the polity who are vested with the authority and competency of dealing with such matters in Chieftaincy cases in Courts. That may well also explain why more often than not, such cases are either "dismissed", "thrown out" etc. as lacking merit, locus standi and/or Court jurisdiction. I have gone into all this because this is exactly the raison d'être viz. to give guidance, direction and force to URUAN/EFIK in the administration and governance of the kingdoms so that people will abide by the time-tested and age-old customs and traditions of our forebears and save URUAN/EFIK nation from confusion, rancour and impunity.

COMPARISON BETWEEN EFIK AND URUAN CHIEFTAINCY AFFAIRS

In EFIK Kingdom, due to their long association with the Europeans but most especially with imperial Britain for over five hundred years, Chieftaincy/Royalty Affairs seem to be clear-cut following what the multi-nationals and the Supercargoes and later, the colonial British N/A Administration adopted as a sort of compromise and conventional governance. Either a person belongs to a Royal House and therefore is entitled to become an ETUBOM with all the qualifications appertaining, or a person is simply accorded the Chieftaincy title and it ends there. Then he may be afterwards presented before the Obong of Calabar in Council for recognition and ratification. But URUAN Kingdom has a completely different set of regulations and conditions for any title whatever. In the first place nobody can be accorded or rewarded with a Chieftaincy title/rank, because the raison d'être is simply that a person by reason of his birth, kindred, position, etc. is accorded the Chieftaincy/ETUBOM title from such and such a Kindred/House. He/she becomes so and so for life except where he/she has committed crime/s against the kingdom or makes himself or herself despicable and abominable before the law and gentry and has to be deprived of the title or honour. Therefore, nobody can become a King, paramount Ruler, Chief or Etubom nullius, to use the Catholic Church Canon law terminology. URUAN has no honourable titles to dispense without fulfilling laid down conditions and customs, so nobody should go there for one, since Chieftaincy and Royal titles are not for cash and carry. But as with every law there must be exceptions. In living memory there was this case of Etinnyin, Obong Effiong U. U. Okon of Itiam Etoi now in Uyo Local Government Area. He was a detribalized philanthropist and followed all the customs and norms laid down in URUAN Constitution. He was not only accorded the Chieftaincy title of Honour but given the most conspicuous piece of land to build at ESUK MBEHE IDU of the Slave Trade fame around 1892. His mansions still stand strong at Anwa Mbakara along the Marina, IDU till this day. As youngsters we used to go there after picking balls at the Golf Course which is still where the Five-Star Meridien is located today. His children and grandchildren used to treat us to the releasing of pigeons while we would try to feed them with garri, tinapa and ekpum? ny? delicacies. IDU children of this generation should do well to fortify and maintain at least one of the historic mansions for posterity viz. the iconic "Uf?k Eny? Udo Udo Okon".

ORIGINS OF ITIAM AND MBIABONG ETOI IN UYO LGA

The issue of Etinnyin Effiong U. U. Okon brings one to the nostalgia of the exploits and the lives and times of personages of Itiam Etoi and Mbiabong groups of villages now in Etoi Clan of Uyo L. G. A. logically driving us to include the origins of these groups of villages as part of our discourse on ANWA MBAKARA and ESUK MBEHE IDU. Originally those two groups of villages are said to be a scion from the great Nung Abin dynasty of Ibiaku Uruan some kindred of which also can be found in Idu Uruan grace Ü la ESUK IKOT ETUONG from which all these groups originated. A great bulk of the kindred groups as can be surmised especially from oral history, moved en mass to Ibiaku Uruan while some of the remnants as always happens" koro ek? isimaha udim", were said to have stayed put at the main ESUK IKOT ETUONG – IDU. It is this group which as they multiplied in their generations moved on for more space and greener pastures until they found themselves in ETOI CLAN in UYO country, viz. Mbiabong and Itiam groups of villages. While of course as often happens, some of the families continued to reside at and populate ESUK IKOT ETUONG till this day. One still recalls the great dynasty of Etinnyin Efiong U. U. Okon whose exploits especially in his mercurial adroitness and tenacity in merchandise during the Great Trade a.k.a Slave Trade, led to the establishment of A? WA MBAKARA with the two-storeyed buildings to boot and still standing strong today. Another notable personality in their line was the charismatic Obong Otor Umo Okon Inyang who bought a BSA motor cycle ever to be seen in the entire ancient UYO Province. A story which still goes round indicated that on a certain sunny day while returning from his business empire, he was said to have single-handed built estates with state of the art mansions both at Uyo and ESUK IKOT ETUONG now gazzetted Ifiayong Beach or Esuk Ifiayong. He is said to have stopped to refill at the Daily Idu market a.k.a URUA UFET, a market which holds principally in the mornings and evenings on daily basis except on the great market days of OBO and EDEMETAHA which hold at the MAIN IDU MARKET. While noticing appetizing eel fish being sold there, he called for and bought some and even proceeded to eat it sitting on his motor cycle. This action attracted many who noticed it and one gentleman was said to have slowly and respectfully gone up to him to enquire why a great Chief like himself would do that sort of thing. But in his jovial but princely manner had replied: "the small / little ones also are important. According to his explanation when further plodded, he said that little things also matter in life. That saying has stuck to the people's sensibilities till this day. His junior son, Effiong Otor also became a charismatic merchant leader of sorts, but resided not at the Marina ESUK IKOT ETUONG at his father's estate but at Idu at a very strategic location opposite the Colonial Barracks and Idu Customary Court along Uyo Nwaniba Road. He was a great merchant leader, very generous and philanthropic. His mansions still stand strong till this day.

On all counts it is evident that most of these kindreds which trace their progenitor from the founder of continue to exhibit a certain aristocratic class, splendour and good breeding. They have always made it in life through their generations. One needs to go to their new abode in Mbiabong and Itiam country home along Uyo – Oron road to verify the veracity of this observation anywhere, any time – a testimony to URUAN dynasty of the high and lowly. Check up including Afaha groups of villages all over Ibibio land and throughout Annang country today. URUAN still continues to respect and uphold the ancient order of giving honour to whom honour is due especially regarding those belonging to the class and institutions of EYEYEN – EDEMEKA Grandchild, the class of UKOT - In-law and most importantly IMAN, KITH and KIN in the kindred groupings and ethnic institutions till today.

Continuing on the situation of granting honourary awards we also discover another award of an Honourary Chieftaincy title never to be forgotten in URUAN history, whose awardee was no other than my master, Very Rev. Father Daniel Dolan SPS, an expatriate priest who arrived on the coast of AKWA AKPA, Nigeria in the early 1940s. While being appointed to the "mother Church", St. Joseph's Anua, he made URUAN zones comprising Uruan Northern zone with Eman URUAN as HQ, Southern with Ndon Ebom as HQ and Central with IDU as HQ the primary sectors of his ministry. But when Ndom Ebom was officially created an autonomous parish he capitalized on this and worked marvelously in URUAN by opening schools, health centres and giving scholarships to both qualified boys and girls to study in Schools of Nursing and the Teacher Training Colleges notably Holy Child Afikpo for Girls and St. Augustine's Urua Inyang for boys. Rev. Fr. Dolan's activities in URUAN kingdom did not stop at that. As one of the most senior expatriate priests in the land and having performed the best part of his ministry in URUAN, he used to organize Retreats for which many stations had applied. His principle and methodology were that everybody in the town/village should be formally given an invitation card to attend any Retreat he was to moderate. Thousands of people from all works of life and church denominations used to flock to these Retreat centres. Before long the name "Dolan" had become a household word. He was known all over the place; children, men and women, youths, Royal Fathers, Protestants, etc. all knew him. During the war he was said to have indicated that if anything happened and the other Rev. Fathers and Rev. Sisters were asked to go back to their country in Europe, he would not budge. As the war progressed and reached the climax point with those bombardments of the Federal troops close by, he was persuaded to leave as many others had in fact found their way back to their countries of origin, being ferried across in canoes and other native water crafts or locally constructed engine boats through AKWA AKPA URUAN to the Cameroons. But he chose to stay with some of the Holy Child Rev. Mothers at CCC Afaha Oku who also had vowed to stay and die with "our people." All these were not lost to URUAN Authorities. As soon as Uyo Province was "liberated by the Federal troops", the Authorities in URUAN while he was still lodging there at CCC rolled out drums and crowned him with the Honorary Chieftaincy title of" AKPAN URUAN" ie. the 1st born of URUAN denoting "one who looks after and never abandons his brethren."

THE LEGENDARY FICTION AT ABANA - BAKASSI

Another example of this issue which played out could also be seen in the legendary fiction at Abana - Bakassi, now ceded to Cameroun. But this time, the story concerned the EFIK kingdom though the majority of residents there were of direct URUAN stock many of them from Idu Uruan town and environs. What exactly happened was that there was this slave boy, Ekpe Ekpenyong Abasi, of the Abasi Ekpenyong dynasty fame. He had graduated from being a slave boy to becoming a famous Chieftain in the kingdom, because at that point in time there was practically nobody in the kingdom except perhaps the king himself and his peers who ever knew that Ekpe was in indeed a slave boy turned an indispensable ally to the king to the extent of being appointed the ESUQWA – the Prime Minister and Adviser at the Palace. When matters developed to this extent, the king placed his kinsmen and nobles on oath to vouch that Ekpe was a bona fide citizen and heir apparent, rising from the ranks. But what happened? Along the line and in the course of time, the king saw himself childless with no true blood heir-apparent to the throne. Before all this, his first two children – a boy and a girl "had died at childhood" under inexplicable circumstances which of course only Ekpe had known being the schemer as we will soon discover: "Koro odudung/ifun esin ntime, enye anam asari onyu ebi ubi, kpa enye ko esisin udi ye ntime ye afanek? …! Everything was being done including the king marrying countless wives and concubines yet still without fathering any issue male or female.

In URUAN/EFIK ancient tradition and custom, an heir apparent could come from the agnatic line and be crowned/ recognized in lieu of Regency pending when a true blue-blooded son became of age. As this moot story must come to an end, and to cut matters short, one fine day the king summoned Ekpe, his Special Adviser and heir apparent and went into a long confidential and heart to heart discussion with him. He requested Ekpe to search for and purchase two slave children who would by then be of the same age as his "two dead offsprings" no matter the amount put on their heads. But the game was up, his heart beating with remorse. Ekpe the imposter could not hide his tricks any longer; he was beaten on his tracks. He knew that revelation time had dawned. True to his innate good nature, he decided to lay matters bare. He indeed set sail for many months and returned with two smart and handsome adolescents who as events revealed were really the "two dead children" of the king whom the king, Abasi Ekpenyong Abasi and everybody had given up for dead. The king received the "slaves" with unutterable joy and fondness, and gratitude to his heir apparent, Ekpe. But since the cat had been let out of the bag and nothing could be hidden anymore; as the king had been watching the "slaves" closely. Then on a certain occasion "after having made his personal discovery from his observations", he summoned Ekpe to his side:"Have you noticed 'these two slaves children?" he asked him. "They resemble my dead son Nyong Abasi and my adorable daughter Ekenwe Abasi Ekpenyong Abasi". Pause! Being the crafty, but sagacious, intelligent, docile and good-natured servant he had always been, yet now turned 'Prince', Ekpe had to kneel down before his perplexed lord and master and confess the whole truth, from beginning to the end and why he master-minded all this by kidnapping the two kids and selling them off and giving them for dead, though he actually was visiting and taking care of them while in bondage. Yes, as always happens, it is all a matter of greed, self aggrandizement, ambition and the ways of "strangers, aliens and slaves within and in our midst". Ekpe could no longer pretend because he never wanted his master to have posterity except himself. So beware, because ancient URUAN might indeed have become URUANG, but they will still retain their wits. No cash and carry Chieftaincy titles and no Ministers and Commissioners without portfolios in URUAN even if the 1999 Constitution has found a place for the so-called "Minister of State" and other redundant titles and portfolios for siphoning and stealing the Nigerian State blind. So URUAN/EFIK beware of aliens in your midst: "Ama okut Ibibio/odudu kun? ika / kp?: koro idem ama asat Ibibio adahada, eyewot owo!

In IDU in 1896 or thereabouts, there was this not-to-be-forgotten scenario whereby a son of URUAN was duly elected King because he seemed to have had all the qualifications and fulfilled almost all the required conditions, but whose election was said to have been annulled and himself promptly deposed in favour of another who happened to be Edidem Efiong Eno. The said impostor was Etubom Benjamin Efiong Anwa alias, Udofia Anwa of Ikot Ntiaidem Kindred – a seeming impostor and upstart because he was said to be a descendant from a Royal House connected by marriage to the aforementioned Ekuriku Kindreds. But the question was which Royal House? Was his kindred ever known to have produced the King of Idu URUAN from yore? Nobody seemed to have been able to answer the question satisfactorily because money and "kola" came in between, and there was plenty of horse-trading along the line."Udari onwum nsek eny? : Ik? etebe enyene okuk". Is it not so? However, to cut the long story short, the matter snow-balled into a series of litigations and sundry problems in the town and people from both sides tried to “find out” especially as the impostor mysteriously took ill with an unknown malady. Some chiefs were said to have gone to Annang country some went to Ekoi ie. Ejagham land in present Cross River/Akwa Ibom States respectively in search of dibias and expert diviners. At the height of it all, there was no place where his people did not go to find a cure and solution for the imposter who lay a dying with an inexplicable disease from head to toe. In the long run and on all counts, trust the wisdom of the Elders; the unmistakable declaration from the oracles all came to this: “The Royalty/Chieftaincy imbroglio in your kingdom is the cause. Go back and observe your tradition and keep the peace”. Yes this was the inevitable verdict from the ancestors and the metaphysical powers of Mbia Idi? diviners. When the right things were done, the man “rose as it were from the dead” and lived till he clocked 107. My mother told me about this even at the time my Grandfather HRM Ekarika Ekpo died in 1945, and by the time I grew up I was able to identify and recognize this very impostor king one on one, because his house was close to my maternal uncle's in Ikot Enam kingdom. That is the story till today. Here we can only conclude that while there may be hundreds of Royal Kindreds/Houses in URUAN, what obtains is that in modern times and with the politization of Chieftaincy Honours and the 'cash and carry syndrome' the ancient Royal House System has been unwittingly bastardadized and seriously eroded, and this leads to our next issue.

URUAN CLANAL KINGS B/4 THE FOUNDING OF IBOM COUNTRY

Ancient URUAN as observed already pre-dates the Christian era and dates back to at the latest 8000 BC which means that it existed before the introduction of Egyptian Hieroglyphs (4000 - 3000 BC) into formal education of reading and writing. It was the first orthography ever known to mankind. It would therefore be unthinkable that oral history could have managed to subsist all these years such that people could still remember most of the names of URUAN/EFIK progenitors vis-à-vis the founding fathers and traditional rulers up-to-date beginning with names of their ancestors in their cradle settlement from URUAN-AKPE to IBOM and to AKWA AKPA URUAN before their dispersal to the towns and villages on the large coastline now bordering AKWA IBOM STATE. Nevertheless, some names of ancient Paramount Rulers and Kings are still extant including and beginning with those who migrated from URUAN AKPE to IBOM and from IBOM to AKWA AKPA but most especially those who became kings and Traditional Rulers after the dispersal to the mainland in what is now known as Akwa Ibom State of Nigeria between 1300 – 2016 AD. Whereas the EFIK were able to conserve the names of most of these paramount Rulers as outlined above because they became an autonomous entity shortly before the coming of the early European Explorers namely, the Portuguese and Spaniards around 1400 AD, URUAN could not as explained above. Below are some of the founding fathers and paramount Rulers of URUAN in particular starting from those who reigned from their migration from URUAN-AKPE, IDOMBI. Four phases of Clanal kindreds are treated below covering movement from Uruan Akpe to Ibom, then to Akwa Akpa. The core Uruan must have moved to their present day location on the mainland when their founding Fathers discovered ATA-AKPA and made it their permanent settlement in what thereafter became the Efik properly so called.

SOME PERSONALITIES ANCIENT & MODERN IN THE I

This article is a continuation about indigenous peoples of Niger Delta peoples which began with the Opobo peoples as also those of Rivers ethnic groups in Chapter One. Here we begin with Ika ethnic peoples.

IKA, NOMENCLATURE, LOCATION AND CULTURE HISTORY

The "Ika" OR "Ika Igbo" ethnic peoples are a sub-Igbo group to be found in Delta and Edo States of Southern Nigeria. The Ika people speak Igbo language. They linguistically share borders in the West with Edolites in the North ie. the Edo "Ishan" speaking peoples, in the East with the "Aniocha" language speakers and in the south with the "Ukwuani" ethnic speaking peoples (Cf. Delta State TV Series). But the Ika people are specifically located in the North-West of Delta State except those communities like ": Igbanke", "Inyelen" and "Ekpon" which spill over into Edo State. Ika communities mostly comprise the following in Delta State viz. Agbor, Owa, Umunede, Mbiri, Abavo, Orogodo, Otolokpo, Igbodo, Ute-Okpu, Ute-Ogbeje, Idumuesah, Akumazi, Igbanke, as also Ekpon, Inyelen, Owanikeke, Owa-Riuzo Idu and Igbogili in Edo State. Geographically the Ika speaking peoples settle and share borders linguistically in the west with the Edo speakers, in the North with the Ishan speakers, in the East with the Aniocha language speakers and in the south with the Ukwuani speakers. G.T. Basden has written three Volumes on the evolution, culture history and patterns of life of Ika Igbos (Cf. Basden G.T Vol III, 79-86). The Ika people do not trace their ancestry to common origin; their various clans have heterogeneous origins. Similarities of the language with Igbo suggests they might have had Igbo connections but oral accounts and cultures as well as ancient Ika names suggest the "Bini" origin as noted elsewhere. Ethnologists and historians have always politically argued that changes in language can occur due to large migrations, trade, communications and other factors as in the case of URUAN/EFIK today.

Politically they are mainly found in the two local government areas of Ika North East and Ika South both of which were created in 1991 from a single Ika Local Government Authority in Delta State. Ika North and South occupy a land area of 117.45 Km² with a total population of about 240,000 persons. There are other Ika speaking people that are politically outside the Ika North East and Ika South local government areas. The exact population of speakers of the Ika language or those with Ika as mother tongue is only a guess as this was not included in the 1991 census (Cf. Delta State Government Website, 1999). The Ikas do not have any shared physical characteristics distinguishing them from other ethnic and language groups in Delta State. Their language has both elements of Benin and Igbo and this makes the language unique. To keep the language alive there is now news in Ika language as a different language on Delta radio. The Ikas have commenced writing the Bible in Ika language and have already published SS Mathew, Mark, Luke and St. John's Gospels in Ika language as well. The Ikas are predominantly Christians although traditional religion is still much in practice because they too like the Igbos, ditto URUAN/EFIK and other Niger Delta nationalities progresses are recorded to have kicked against the white Early Europeans and colonials. In Ika the religionists refer to God as "Oselobue" a.k.a "Osebuluwa" in Igbo. To date some of their VIPs include Jim Ovia of Zenith Bank, Godwin Emefiele - Governor of the Central Bank of Nigeria, Nduka Obaigbena - Nigerian media mogul, Nduka Irabor - Chairman Nigeria Professional Football League, DR. Arthur Okowa Ifeanyi - Governor of Delta state, Godson Echiegile-Nigerian Ambassador to , Godwin Obimah, President of "Umunede National Association" USA, Inc. Professor Jim Ijenwa Unah, Vice Chancellor and of Philosophy of Premier University - São Tomé and Principe and Dr. Ngozi Iwuola, the Finance.

A BRIEF PROFILE OF DELTA STATE OF NIGERIA

Tagged most probably by Nigerian Journalists " the Big Heart of the Nation", the Nigerian Delta State is one of the oil and agricultural producing states in Nigeria. Delta State is situated in the region known as the South-South geo-political zone with a population of 4,098,291 made up of 2,674,306 males and 2,674,306 females 2,024,085. The capital city is Asaba, located at the northern end of the state with a land mass estimated @ 762 Km² ie. 294 sq. miles. Warri mostly of Itsekeri ethnic tribe, is the economic nerve centre of the state and also the most populated. It is located in the southern end of the state. Delta State is located on coordinates 530' N 600 and has a total land area of 16,842 Km² ie. 6,503 sq. miles (Cf. Website www. http://www.deltastate.gov.ng/") and has a total land area of 16,842 Km ie.6,503 sq. miles. The state was created on 27th August, 1991 by the Babangida Military Government. Since then the following have served both as Military Governors/Administrators: HE. Denis Osadebe, Lt Col David Ejoor, Brg. Gen. Samuel Ogbemudia, Chief James Ibori, Dr. Emmanuel Uduagham, Dr. Arthur Ifeanyi Okowa as PDP Executive Governors since the 4th Republic in 1999. The present Deputy Governor of the State is Barr. Kingsley Otuaro. Geographically, the State is bounded in the north and west by Edo State on the east by Anambra, Imo, and Rivers States on the southeast by Bayelsa State and on the southern flank is the Bight of Benin which covers about 160 kilometres of the state's coastline. Delta State is generally low-lying without any remarkable hills except that at the border with Edo State. The state has a wide coastal belt inter-laced with rivulets and streams, which form part of the Niger Delta region in question.

As noted above, the State was carved out of the former Bendel State on August 27, 1991. It was created following agitations for the creation of a separate distinct state by the peoples of the old Delta Province viz. the Urhobos, Itsekiri, Isoko, Ijaw (Izon) and Ukwuani ethnic peoples who later joined Anioma. There was yet another state creation movement designated as "Niger State" comprising the old mid-western Igbo-speaking of Asaba divisions and Ukwuani-speaking Aboh division of the old Midwest region. This was transformed into what became tagged as "Anioma" following the creation of Niger State from the old North-Western State by the Muritala Muhammed Administration in 1976. The then Military President, Gen Ibrahim Babangida created the state with the new name "Delta" advanced by Niger Delta region and "Asaba" which is a prominent town within the "Anioma" axis as Capital. Asaba was previously designated as capital of the proposed Anioma State. The proposed capital was a virgin land ie. "Anioma city" which in the heart of the two constituent divisions that had evolved to become the "Anioma" area. Originally Delta state was once part of the defunct Mid-Western State of Nigeria - 1963 to 1976 and later named Bendel State - 1976 to 1991 by the Gowon Armed Forces of Nigeria Administration. The name "Bendel" was coined from the old Benin and Delta Provinces of Western Region to reflect the integration of Benin and Delta provinces

Delta State has seven major languages and dialects with ethnically diverse peoples. The first is the "ANIOMA" Igbo speaking group which consists of Aniocha/Oshimili, Ndokwa/Ukwuani ethnic nationalities and Ika. They occupy Delta North senatorial district of the State. The second comprises Urhobo/Isoko Edo speaking groups. The Itsekiri Yoruba speaking group, and lastly the seventh, which is the Izon/Ijaw ethnic group. These ethnic groups occupy the Central and South Senatorial districts of the state. The Urhobo and Isoko speak very similar dialects unlike the Izon and Itsekiri people but have a loosely related culture as they traded and intermarried for centuries before colonization. The Itsekiri are linguistically and culturally related to the Yoruba and Edo ethnic groups of Western Nigeria as noted already in our discourse on the Yoruba, Edo and Itsekeri above. The Izon/Ijaw are a branch of their kith and kin in neighbouring Bayelsa state. Most inhabitants of the area are Christian HYPERLINK but a very few still practice ATR though the "Ukwuanis" also have many cultural affiliation with these groups most especially in their cosmic sphere. Some most recent VIPS mostly politicians in the State include: Dr. Arthur Okowa Ifeanyi – Governor, his deputy Barr. Kingsley Otuaro, Senators James Manager, Emmanuel Aguariavwodo, late Pius Ewherido, Chief Ighoyeta Amori whose election was annulled, Senator Ovie Omo-Agege and Chief Peter Nwaoboshi. The Executive, Legislative and Judicial Chambers are housed in Asaba with a government house Annex in Warri, the second most important city in the State. Some beautiful Proverbs denoting Igbo, Itsekeri, Ika and Urhobo can be found in the Appendix at the end of Chapter XII of this Book. We can now also go on to make brief profiles of other ethnic nationalities in the Niger Delta viz. Ogoja, Boki, Yakurr, Urhobos etc. since the Ijaw and Itsekeri have already been covered. But meanwhile let us close the State profile with the Chart below showing the present 26 Local Government Areas since the 1999 Constitution viz:

ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF URHOBO ETHNIC PEOPLES

URHOBO: NOMENCLATURE, LOCATION & CULTURE HISTORY

Today, when people are talking about the Urhobos, invariably their minds run straight to the great wonder son of Urhobo, who strut on the Niger Delta region like a colossus, and the sure bet is no other than the inimitable high flier politician and strategist who also lived at Chief Osadebe's mansion and Government house, ditto Col. David Ejoor of Biafra War fame. He is James Onanefe Ibori, who went to the gates of hell and came back unruffled. Another Niger Deltan in like garb was the great Governor General, D.S.P. Alamieyeseigha who was the 1st Civilian Governor of Bayelsa. But we may venture to ask are these Urhobos of a people so "fantastically" corrupt and depraved? Who are they? Indeed the Urhobos like the other Niger Deltans are people of South Southern Nigeria, North West of River Niger. The Urhobos are the major ethnic group in Delta State of the Federal Republic of Nigeria. The Urhobos speak the Urhobo language. As usual, Urhobo culture is related to the other several cultures in the Niger-Delta. The Isokos are very closely related to the Urhobos in language and culture. In fact, this is what had led the early Missionaries coming to the area to erroneously label the Urhobo and the Isoko cultural groups as "Sobo" people, not being able to pronounce the U-H-R. But that nomenclature was vehemently objected to and therefore strongly rejected by both tribes. However, there are those of the opinion that Isoko is a dialect of Urhobo. The largest of all Urhobo sub-groups is "Okpe". Isoko used to be regarded as a part of Urhobo nation until the late 1950s when they were granted autonomy. The Urhobos have social and cultural affinity with the Edo speaking peoples of Nigeria (Cf. Northcote Thomas, 1910, 13-17). The Urhobos are physically located in the Atlantic forest belt that stretches from Senegal in West Africa to Angola in central Africa. This forest belt in West Africa was traversed neither by the early Christian Missionaries which had a field day in URUAN/EFIK, specifically Calabar nor in North Africa where they had a large foothold and stretched its tentacles as far south as Hausaland by the eleventh century. According to Professor Peter Palmer Ekeh, Founder of Urhobo Historical Society in his book: "Studies in Urhobo Culture", neither Christianity nor any other Western influence affected Urhobo because while East Africa and even Central Africa were touched by Asian and Arab influences from across the Indian Ocean, as the amalgam of Swahili language bears out, no similar trans-Atlantic influences breached the forest belt until the Portuguese arrival in the late fifteenth century. Historically, this region was the most pristine and untouched of all the territories in Africa with its thick forest lands and natural habitats until the arrival of Portuguese navigators into the territories of West Africa in the late fifteenth century as discussed above. These Urhobo forest peoples therefore cultivated their own forms of civilization, untouched by outside influences. There are about two million Urhobos. The word Urhobo refers to a group of people and not the geographical territory. The Urhobo nation is made up of twenty-four sub-groups, including Okpe (Cf. Ekeh Prof Peter Palmer, 34-39).

Historically the Urhobos belong to the group of people who like the other preliterate groups have unwritten and undocumented history. Most of what we read comes from oral tradition and eye-witnesses who are still alive especially those who are old enough to tell us what they know and have experienced all along. There is almost an absence of records on the Urhobo as the early European arrivals were preoccupied with their economic interests on these coastal communities as discussed already. However, about the 1500 AD, some of the early Portuguese explorers had navigated the West Coast of Africa. Then in 1938, Pereira, one grandson of those who explored this area observed that in the hinterland beyond the Forcados River the "Subou" or "Sobo" name for which the inhabitants of this area was known was corrected to Urhobo. But there is no tradition of origin of the various Urhobo groups which contains any specific reference to the ancestors of the Urhobos except what the people used to claim that "we are or we know we are Urhobo". All that is certain is that generally the Urhobos trace their history of origin to an Edo territory supposedly around where the ancient town of "Udo" and Benin City are currently located. This is so because at the end of the Ogiso dynasty recounted already, many Urhobo and Edo-groups departed Udo in different directions, each group on its own and at its own pace in search of more habitable land masses and peaceful territories. It was natural that in those compelling circumstances, peace-loving and less powerful groups had to leave the territory to seek for fortunes in less populated but more expansive and economically resourceful territories. The Urhobos in tow were said to have left under separate leaders in different directions to found separate settlements and communities to continue their living and governmental organizations (Bradbury R. E. 1957: 129). When some of these emigrants left Benin, they discovered with profound dismay that on arrival at their destinations some Edo-speaking settlers were already there in their different clans. The word "URHOBO" is used to describe these Urhobo emigrants. There are 22 socio-political Urhobo units or "clans" were designated by the earlier writers, especially the British Colonial Officers in their various Intelligence/Assessment reports. But traditions among the Urhobos are replete with assertions of original dwellers and owners of Urhobo territory. These autonomous people were believed to be Urhobo with no known history of migration from elsewhere. That is why in 1948 R.E. Bradbury had referred to these traditions as without documentary or archaeological evidence (Cf. Bradbury R. E. 1957: 129).

But the suggestion that the distinctive characteristics of the various Urhobo and Isoko tribes are a result of the super imposition of Ijaw, Ibo and later Edo immigration upon an aboriginal stratum of already speaking Edo-type dialects cannot be sustained. While allowing for the absorption of immigrants and their languages as well as for the impact of routes and group sojourns on the history of the Urhobos, linguistic evidence provides a strong principle for integrating and validating other traditions of the Urhobo origin (Thomas V.T. 1910, 45-47). The absence of archaeological prehistoric evidence gives credibility to the above traditions of Urhobo origin. The structure of Urhobo ideas and language as well as their culture and other institutional forms imply historical links between them and their neighbours, particularly the Edo-speaking peoples, It also implies Urhobo links with other socio-linguistic groups and areas in the Sudan/Egypt (Cf. Talbot P.A.1926 Vol IV:80 See also Bradbury R. E. 1957: 136).
Geographically, the Urhobo territory is bounded by latitudes 6°and 5°, 15° North and Longitudes 5°, 40° and 6°, 25° East. They are to be found in both Delta and Bayelsa States of Nigeria. Urhobo territory is bounded on the South-east by their neighbours, the Isoko; to the West by the Itsekiri; to the North by the Bini and to the South by the Ijaw and to North-east by Ukwuani peoples. Urhobo land has a large evergreen forest with numerous oil palm trees which provide the lucrative palm produce and booming palm produce industry for which the Urhobo have the technological preserve. The territory is also covered by a network of streams and rivulets whose volumes of water and flow are directly concerned with the climatic conditions of the region viz. the wet season - April–October and the dry season - November–March. A bulk of the Urhobo people reside in the South South-western States of Delta and Bayelsa as the part and parcel of Niger Delta. "Ofoni" is an Urhobo community in Sagbama Local Government Area in Bayelsa State. Ofoni is about 40 kilometres by water to Sagbama. Many live in small and major cities in regions or Local Government Areas in Ughelli, Warri, Abraka, Okpe and Sapele. Some Urhobo major cities and towns include: Okparabe, Arhavwarien, Warri, Sapele, Abraka, Ughelli, Effurun, Aladja, Ovwian, Orerokpe, Amuekpe, Eku, Oghara, Evwreni, Agbarha-Otor, Agbarho, , Egini, Kokori, Olomu, Kiagbodo, Isiokoro, Mosogar, Akpobome, Orhokpokpor, Jesse, Ogharaefe, Effurun-Otor, Ewu, Jeremi, Emadadja, Okwagbe, Ovu, Orogun, Owahwa, Otogor, Edjekota-Ogor, Ofone, Otor-Udu, Ekpan, Jeddo, Uwheru, Urhowhorun, etc.

SOCIO-CULTURAL PATTERNS, POLITICS AND DEVELOPMENT

The Urhobos are currently organized as political kingdoms. They seem to practise a type of gerontocracy ie. a government by elders based on the age grade-system in the community while some of the affluent and important personalities, mostly the oil barons and money magnets practise a government of the rich and for the rich and affluent in evolutionary plutocracies and also retaining some elements of gerontocracy. Small wonder why people like James Ibori, the former State governor, the oil magnet Kokori, etc. are seen as lords of the manor, and Ibori in particular is held in high honour as the Sheik of Urhobo kingdom. Although it is not clear which kingship is older among the kingdoms, these kingship developments reached their climax in the 1940s and 1950s. Urhobo politics and government are at two levels namely the kingdom level and town level. An outline of Urhobo indigenous government and politics has such titles as "Ovie" for their king and Paramount Ruler. This is the highest political figure in the kingdom. He is the symbol of his kingdoms', culture and also of his royal predecessors. His Councilors are called "Otota"- Speaker; "Ohoveworen" or "Okakoro", who are addressed collectively as "Ilorogun" and singularly as "Olorogun". Other title holders are the executioners "Ikoikpokpo" and warriors called "Ogbu". Although there are other political titles peculiar to the different kingdoms, the judicial aspect of government among the Urhobo places a clear distinction between civil and criminal offences which ensure justice to the parties concerned. The Urhobos live very close to and sometimes on the surface of the River Niger. Thus most of their histories, mythologies, and philosophies are water-related. Annual fishing festivals that includes masquerades, fishing, swimming contests, and dancing, are part of the Urhobo heritage. There is an annual, two-day, "Ohworu" festival in Evwreni, the southern part of the Urhobo area when the Ohworhu water spirit and the Eravwe Oganga are displayed. The king in an Urhobo clan or kingdom is called the Ovie. His wife of the queen is called "Ovieya" and his children "? m? Ovie" namely, child of the king also known as Prince or Princess. The Urhobos also give these designations to certain children without royal heritage. A number of Urhobo cultural divisions, have other titles other than Ovie eg. the Okpe call their traditional ruler "Orodje" whereas those Urhobos in Olomu Kingdom call their King "Ohworode" while the Urhobos in Okere-Urhobo call theirs "Orosuen".

Historically, the Urhobos belong to the group of people who like the other preliterate groups have unwritten and undocumented history. Most of what we have come from oral tradition and eye-witnesses who are still alive especially those who are old enough to tell us what they know and have experienced all along. The Urhobos in tow were said to have left under separate leaders in different directions to found separate settlements and communities to continue their living and governmental organizations (Bradbury R. E. 1957: 129).

In Urhobo tradition there is the belief that no marriage is properly contracted unless prayers are first offered to the ancestors ie. Erivwin and God "Oghene". The marriage ritual known as "Udi Arhovwaje" takes place in the ancestral home of the bride or a patrilineal relation of the bride as agreed by the family. For the marriage ceremony proper, on the agreed day, the fiancé goes with his relatives and friends to the fiancée's father's home with gifts of drinks, salt, kola nut and sometimes food as requested decided by the bride's family. Formal approval for marriage is given by the bride's parents or whoever is representing the bride's family and traditional libation rites of pouring the "gin" brought by the fiancé to the father's ancestors to bless them with health, children and wealth. This is because the ancestors are believed to be witnesses to the marriage. It is only after this marriage ritual that the husband can claim a refund of the bride price if the marriage breaks down irretrievably. Urhobos believe that it is only the physical body of the wife that is given to her husband in the marriage not her Erhi/spirit which always remains in her family home. This explains why in Urhobo culture; a woman is brought back to be buried in her family home when she dies. In the ancestral home of the man, the wife is welcomed into the family by the eldest member of the family. Thereafter she is expected to confess all her love affairs during and after her betrothal to her husband (if any) and she can now be absolved from all her wrongdoings to chart off a new and chaste marital way of life. But one may ask why the wife's family has not got the same right to demand this confession from the intending son in-law. That is African culture and pattern for you! After these rites she is presumed protected by the supernatural Erivwin. This rite symbolizes an agreement between the wife and the Erivwin. But should the wife later become unfaithful, it is believed that she will be punished by the Erivwin – this is believed to be the reason why married Urhobo women are very faithful to their husbands.

Ancient Urhobo traditional religion was the worship and adoration of "? gh?n?" whom they designated as Almighty God, the supreme deity. They also recognized other divinities of "Edjo" and "Erhan". Some of these divinities could be regarded as personified attributes of ? gh?n? himself. In their worship the Urhobos used "Orhen" ie. white chalk in their rituals. Whenever an Urhobo man/woman felt oppressed by someone he/she would appeal to ? gh?n? to adjudicate between him and his opponent because he/she believed that God is an impartial judge and would take neither bribes nor sides. Urhobo divinities can be classified into four main categories and these probably coincide with their historical development through the ages. They equally also believe in guardian divinities like war divinities, prosperity divinities, fertility and ethical divinities. It should be noted that the fundamental factor and manifestation of all these divinities in Urhobo religion and culture is ? gh?n? himself. Urhobos believe in the cult of ancestors and predecessors viz "Erivwin" and "Esemo". Another important element in the Urhobo belief system is the cult of the dead "Iniemo". The Urhobos like many other ATR worshippers believe the dead akaka ancestor to be living and looking upon the active members of the family. They are said to watch over the affairs of the living members of their family. Urhobos also believe in the duality of man, namely, that man consists of two beings viz. The physical body – "Ugboma" and the spiritual body – "Erhi". It is this Erhi 'spirit man' that declares man's destiny and controls the self-realization of man's destiny before he incarnates into this physical world of men. Erhi also has the responsibility of controlling the total wellbeing "Ufuoma" of individuals. ? gh?n? (God) is seen in Urhobo Weldtangschaaung/world-view as the constitutional Monarch who sets his seal on the path of destiny set by a man's spirit. Urhobos also practise "Epha" ie. divination, similar to the Yoruba "Ifá" and practiced by many West African communities using strings of cowries.

Urhobos also believe that in the spirit world Erivwin man's destiny is ratified and sealed in a person's final journey after his/her transition. While the physical body Ugboma decays the spirit in man ie. his/her Erhi remains indestructible and goes back to join the ancestors in the spirit realm. That is why the Urhobos perform such expensive, elaborate and symbolic burial rites in order to prepare the departed Erhi for a happy re-union with the ancestors in the spirit world. However, the influence of Western civilization and Christianity is fast catching up with all that is becoming the acceptable religion in most Urhobo communities (Tonukari Ochuko J. 2003, 5-20). Urhobos also practice Christianity, with many belonging to the Catholic and new Pentecostal and Evangelical denominations. There are about 1,261 deities ie. "Ejo" including the one-handed, one-legged mirror-holding whirlwind-god Aziza in Urhobo land.

Another important socio-cultural Urhobo pattern and specialty of is their food. In Nigeria certain foods are associated with a particular tribes and even considered to belong to or originate from them , for example, pounded yam and egusi soup from the Igbos, Eba to the Yorubas and Ogbono soup made from "Irvingia gabonensis" ie. Ogbolo soup" as Esan or Etsako specialty and descent. This may well be, but most of these foods are also specialties in URUAN/EFIK, ditto Akwa Ibom and Cross River, only the dialectical names differ. However, there are certain foods and manner of preparations which belong to the Urhobos, similarly the Igbos, Yorubas, Binis and Hausas etc. and this should not detain us. For the Urhobos there are two main foods considered Urhobo in nature. They are "Ukhodo" prepared from yam and unripe plantain with either beef, poultry or fish and spiced with lemon grass and potash and "Oghwevwri" ie. emulsified palm oil soup "Oghwo" and starch ie. "Usi". This indeed is Urhobo specialty and staple food. The starch is made from cassava plant and is heated and stirred into a thick mound with palm oil added to give the starch its unique orange-yellow colour. Oghwevwri is composed of Smoked or dried fish, bush meat, etc. with other unique spices, potash and oil palm juice go with Oghwevwri. Other Urhobo delicacies include palm nut oil soup "Amiedi" or "Banga soup", often eaten with "Usi" garri. Banga is prepared from palm kernel. Urhobos' other culinary delicacies include Iriboto, Iriberhare, and Okpariku.

Let us conclude this interesting culture history of this Niger Delta ethnic nation with their contributions to the upliftment of Nigeria in terms of their man-power personalities including personalities like the 1st Governor, Lt. Col. David Ejoor, other Governors are Felix, James Onanefe Ibori; then Alibaba Akporobome, Grand and Father of Comedy, Blessing Okagbare, IAAC and Olympic medalist, Michael Ibru, Money magnet and businessman, Mudiaga Odje OFR, SAN, Stephen Oru Federal Minister, Fred Aghogho Brume, Senator and Industrialist, Justus Esiri, Veteran OON, veteran Actor, Richard Mofe Damijo actor, politician and Federal Minister, Gamalieliel Onosode, Nigerian administrator and politician, M. G. Ejaife 1st Republic Senator and 1st Principal of Urhobo College, Isidore Okpewho scholar and novelist, Ben Okri poet and novelist, Harris Eghagha career soldier, Tanure Ojaide poet and writer,1st Republic Senator, Bruce Onobrakpeya, visual artist, sculptor, poet and painter, etc.

ORIGINS OF CROSS RI ATIONALITIES

OGOJA: NOMENCLATURE, LOCATION & CULTURE HISTORY

Ogoja as such is not a linguistic ethnic and cultural group but actually a Local Government Area in Cross River State of Nigeria. Its headquarters is also Ogoja town in the northeast of the area at 6°39'17?N 8°47'51?E with an area of 972 Km² and a population of 171,901 - 2006 Census. I have often mentioned Ogoja in this book hence it would be superfluous to bring it up here. Suffice to say that it was one of the pre-colonial provinces before Independence. It consists of many tribes, which include Ishibori with a number of different clans viz. Uhmuria, Ikaptang, Ikajor, Ishinyema, Ikariku, Imerakorm and Igoli as the central town. Mbube is also one of the major tribes comprising different villages, including: Odajie, Adagum, Ekumtak, Idum, Ojerim, Egbe, Nkim, Ogberia Ogang & Ogberia Ochoro, Oboso, Benkpe, Edide, Bansan, Aragban, etc. The major source of livelihood is subsistence agriculture, basically farming in cassava, yams, oil palm, wine palm etc. Ekajuk is one of the major clan in Ogoja Local government area and is also the major and central dialect for all the clans. Ogoja is divided into Ward I and Ward II, and includes major communities such as Nwang, Ekpogrinya, Esham, Egbong, Nnang, Ewinimba, and Bansara which also are a collection of a group of villages.

The current administration has three arms namely, executive, legislature and judiciary. The executive arm is made up of an elected Chairman and a deputy chairman and supervisors appointed by the chairman and confirmed by the legislature. The current Chairman is Madam Rita Agbo Ayim, while the Vice Chairman is Mr. John Orim. The legislative arm comprises ten Councillors who represent the ten wards in Ogoja. The leader of the legislature is Mr Austin Ayungbe - Ekajuk ward II, while the deputy leader is Mr Thomas Ori - Mbube East Ward II. Others are Ms Sarah Amu - Mbube East Ward I, Mr Tom Egbang - Mbube West Ward I, Mr Peter Odu - Mbube West Ward II, Mr Vincent Uga - Nkum-Irede ward, Mr Iyang Nnang - Nkum-Iborr ward, Mr Paul Aganyi - Ekajuk ward I, Mr Anthony Ntaji - Urban ward I, Mr Wogor Umari - Urban Ward II. All the officials in the executive and legislative arms are members of the People's Democratic Party (PDP). Their tenure expired in December 2016. The judiciary is headed by the Chief Judge of Ogoja. There is a mini Airport, an airstrip at Bebi quite close to Ogoja. Since the pre-colonial era Ogoja has been the deputed and accepted Headquarters of ancient Northern Cross River a.k.a ATAM PROVINCE as it was called. The principal lingua franca has been "Bekwarra" which is actually another important Local Government Area in Northern Cross River State, Nigeria. "Abuochiche" or "Abuo Chiche" is the Headquarters on the A4 highway. There are other languages spoken in Ogoja including Efik, Ejagham and Boki. The Efik language is very widely spoken in Cross River State, even as far as Arochukwu in neighbouring Abia state. Other towns in the LGA are Nyanya-Ulim, Nyanya-Idigwe, Gakem, Itekpa, Ugboro, Ibiragidi, Utukwe, Afrike and Ukpah, ijibor, Beten and others. Ogoja has an area of 306 Km² ie.118 sq miles and a population of 105,822 - 2006 Census. "Gagem" is worthy of historical note and importance in the annals of the chequered Nigerian history specifically as the town where the first war gun-shot was fired in the Nigeria-Biafra war. The URUAN/EFIK speaking people live mainly in the Calabar Municipality, and in parts of Akamkpa and Odukpani LGAs. There is also the Qua communities in Calabar, who speak Ejagham a.k.a. "EKOI" But the Ejagham group occupies mostly the northern sections of the State. The other groups north of Calabar are known as the Ekoi. The Ekoi group are the people of Biase in Biase LGA and the Bahumono in Abi LGA. Other colonial big time Divisions with many LGAs in former Ogoja province are Ikom, Obudu and Obubra. They were the main administrative districts of colonial era (Cf. Archives of 7th October, 2009 Retrieved, 10-20).

THE ETHNIC PROFILE AND EVOLUTION OF EJAGHAM NOMENCLATURE, LOCATION AND CULTURE HISTORY

Whenever and wherever the word Ejagham is mentioned the inexorable re-action would evoke people to hold up their two hands above the ears and swirl them away sideways in utter trepidation and awe as if one should never mention such a place. Then what one utters with real dread and apprehension if not dismay is: "aka mkpa" = "do you want to go there and die?" But why if one may ask? Because to the URUAN/EFIK the unmitigated antonym C-a-l-a-b-a-r which is the acronym for: "Come and live and be at rest" is the raison d'être for the reaction. The alternative name for "Ejagham" is "Ekoi" which as noted in connection with the "QUAs" means in URUAN/EFIK a people with a different "tongue"/ language since in their first contact, they could not understand each other, and so regarded them as people living far away from the city hence "Ekoi and which also connotates, the land of thick forests. Ejagham region is a massive territory in the Equatorial rain belt with thick forest, the habitat for snakes, lions and "Okukubarakpa" such that should anyone venture to go there or miss his/her way, or wander into this terrain, he surely would not come back alive. He/she would be swallowed up either by the forest itself or the wild inhabitants. Calabar was by implication the land of the living, while Ejagham a.k.a Akamkpa which happens to be the Headquarters of the region means land of the dead. Go East it is Aka mkpa; go West it is inevitably "Aka nso ko?" = why are you going there to die? Heads or Tails: that is Ejagham for you- either Aka mkpa OR aka nso ko! Ejagham language as also the language family is "Niger-Congo" or "semi-Bantu". But, there are different dialects of the language listed by Ethnologists viz. Southern Ejagham: Ekin, Qua, Kwa, Aqua, Abakpa and Western Ejagham, and Eastern Ejagham languages. Ejagham peoples are spread over.

Latitude/longitude Latitude: 5 9' 37" Longitude 8 3' 36". But according to my informants including Rev. Fr. Paul Offiong, his mother and also Ejagham tradition and folklore, the history of the Ejagham nomenclature "AKAMKPA = (akãm kpã)" in their dialect does not actually mean "aka mkpa?" as inteprpreted by URUAN-EFIK people who first came in contact with this vast territory before the advent of the early Europeans to the West Coast of Africa as commented above. The nomenclature according to Ejagham cultural history came about as a result of their encounter with some Cameroonian travelers who seemingly had missed their way and wandered into the territory. Then, as they decided to take a bit of rest being tired and worn out as also being famished from their long journey, they encountered soldiers also travelling through the same area. On seeing the soldiers and beign scared and frightened, in their desperation and exasperation they began to wander whether it was better and safer to run for their dear lives or to stay and seek refuge from their new hosts of Ejagham. As they were contemplating what to do, one of them had suggested: "let us ask them (Ejagham) if we can stay and "LET THEM ACCEPT FIRST" …ie. = "akãm kpã", when translated. Yes, from their desperation: "akãm kpã", which when translated means "LET THEM ACCEPT FIRST" …to be our hosts, the place and by implication the territory came to be known as "AKAMKPA". However, considering all this, every discerning reader of this Book can discover for him/herself that this looks like a revisionist bit of history to counter what URUAN-EFIK had said already. On all counts it would appear there was never any such nomenclature "AKAMKPA" = translated "akãm kpã" before the unkown soldiers and the Cameroonians came calling in the first place, talkless of the name pre-existing as AKAMKPA before URUAN-EFIK peoples who first encountered them. Head or Tail, it is "akãm kpã" and this should confine all further options on the matter.

From Oral tradition Ejagham peoples were very brave and skilled warriors but they lived peacefully for the most part with their neighbors. From 1500s they had to face slave raiders and traders. At the turn of the twentieth century the Europeans began to settle in Ejagham country. Their territory was divided into the German sector and British territory. The British sector became what is now called Nigeria and the German portion was Cameroun. The Ejagham fought in the beginning and tried to resist, but in the end they were forced to surrender. In 1918, when Germany was forced to surrender her territories in Cameroun water the 1st World War, the Cameroun sector was split between Great Britain and France. The Ejagham had no national freedom until 1960 when Cameroun and Nigeria became independent Republics. Even though, the Ejaghams remained separated by the boundaries of the two nations influence of missionaries/schools/governments/powerful neighbors kept them together till today. The Europeans also had great influence on the Ejagham people. They divided their territories such that today they face many obstacles because of it. For example, when a family member from Cameroun section wants to visit his kith and kin in Nigeria they have to get Visas and change to the new currency and laws in vogue.

Ekoi villages are built near rivers and streams. Around the villages are crops and beyond them lay forests some of which have given way to roads and towns

POPULATION, VILLAGE SIZE, HOME RANGE AND DENSITY OF TOWNS

There are over 150 villages and small towns throughout Ejagham territory and these are connected by roads or footpaths. Coconut trees abound and often indicate the vicinity of a village, similarly huge silk cotton or "Mboma tree" standing near the entrance indicate the approach to villages. Villages are in all sizes and similarly the sizes of houses vary depending on the wealth of the male head or pater-familias. Ejagham main food crops consist of carbohydrate staples viz. Grains, yams, corn, sweet potato, cassava, banana, and vegetables. Their main protein-lipid sources are fish, buffalo, elephants, wildcats, antelopes, rhinos, pythons, crocodiles, and monkeys. The weapons used for hunting are bows and arrows, blowguns as well as dane guns. They equally use flint-lock gun brought by the early Europeans spears, clubs and crossbows. There is a very interesting oral tradition in connection with oral history that reveals a different type of weapon used by the Ekoi people. It is said that ancient Ekoi peoples used to own war charms, which they used to confuse and hypnotize their enemies. They are said to have used scarecrows as puppets held with strings. They put these on the battlefront and jiggled them to make them seem alive. The enemy on seeing this would shoot at them. While the enemy was distracted they would then capture them alive. Very interestingly the Ejagham were able to prepare food storage for their seed crops and grains during the dry season. They usually built small houses along the fields where they stored crops near their farms. The Ejagham are also noted for their cocoa and coffee plantations and although they generally put them on sale, they always stored the pods in pottery before selling them. They had division of labour and women generally would farm and fish while the men folk hunted and helped with certain aspects of farming like bush clearing as well as planting especially yams. Land tenure in the Ekoi tradition was that land could not be outright sales because land belonged to the ancestors as first settlers even if they had been abandoned for a 100 years. But people could be made to pay for the rights to settle in the land after negotiations.

EJAGHAM ARTEFACTS, CULTURE AND SOCIAL PATTERNS

More of what is recounted here about Ejagham was as a result of the extensive interviews and comprehensive questionnaires undertaken among the Ejagham/Ekoi peoples within the country and in the Diaspora simply because it was noticed that they had many cultural patterns similar to URUAN/EFIK, ditto Northern Cross Riverians. The Ejagham are noted for their industry especially in artistry. Their Ceramics and different types of pottery from the making of jars for food and water pots to china wares with all manner of shapes and sizes are beautiful. Some are for domestic use only. They come in varying in colours shapes and sizes. They are a masterpiece to behold. I have mentioned this already in Chapter One with regard to the Quas who also are of Ejagham stock. Some of the ceramics are for decorations. The Ekoi peoples also have what they call "prescribed/proscribed" sharing patterns, eg. If men go hunting together there is a sharing of the game within the community, but there are cases of men hunting and women farming only for themselves and their family. There are also food taboos. Here neither men nor the women folk are allowed to feed on scavenger birds such as vultures. The kingfisher is forbidden food. Women may not eat wildcats, crocodiles, and the first animals caught by their husbands. There are also very strong taboos about distribution of animals killed in a chase. For example after the so-called the "general village/town hunt" one fore-hand and one hind leg of each game killed must be given to the townsfolk. The neck becomes the property of the man who stood nearest during the "kill". The tail belongs to the mother of the hunter, one leg and the back to the father or the head of his household while the head and remaining fore-legs are left to the actual hunter. The Ejagham just like URUAN/EFIK are great Canoes/watercraft rowers. Paul Amaury has also provided us with a glimpse into some Ekoi Anthropometry information. But he does give us other information about the size eg. For Mean adult height m and f : 3.2 Mean adult weight m and f as follows: Head: L-191, B-146, IND-76.2 Nose: L 45, B 43, IND 95.9

Face: L 61, B 139 IND. 43.5. Thus judging from the pictures and the type of work required, the Ekoi peoples are very well built and do maintain a healthy weight. They are not very robust and overweight. Regarding mating and marriage the age of menarche/ménage is between 9 and 10 and this was one of those objectionable habits which the early Europeans and Missionaries often disagreed about Ekoi culture and customs. Culture patterns like these are simply grotesque and bizarre.

In Ekoi country some children can take wives of an age as young as 10 or less even 8, but they do not get pregnant till their teenage years since African menstrual cycle generally starts around 12-13. This often happens at their first giving to birth (m and f) usually soon after marriage. The complete family members (m and f) of the Ekoi people are patrilineal. Everyone related to the father, grandfather or great grandfather is a member of the family and sometimes this can go up to 100 people. The wives are not considered to be family members since they belong to their own father's family. Inter-birth-interval is dependent upon live births and/or life span of the child. For example, there was a woman who gave birth and her child died within days. This woman became pregnant twice after, in what seemed like a relatively short time in both deliveries. Sometime later, her child passed away yet again. There are other stories of women with only 2 children and some stories with 6. So birth spacing in this culture seems to vary a lot. At "first marriages" (m and f), these usually take place during their teenage years. There is a formal marriage ceremony which takes place after the accepting of gifts by the bride's family. After the acceptance which happens privately between the parents (m/f), there is a public proclamation before the chiefs and other people in the community. To do that a bell is rung round the town to announce this purpose to the people. One often hears when the bell or drum is sounded he proclamation: "Oho Oho Owe," to signal forth coming of marriage in the community. These are words used in the ceremony and they mean "our own." One wonders if that is not what the Europeans call "Wedding Bells" too. The proportion of marriages ending in divorce is about 4.6. There is no actual number, but it is often stated that divorce is very easy for the women in Ekoi culture. A daughter always lived with her parents and moved in with her husband's family after marriage. The most common way for the husband to get a divorce is to rub white clay "Ndom" on both hands of the wife. Similarly, a woman can get a divorce by giving a slave to the husband instead. Polygynous marriages are a tradition in Ejagham, but the percentage of male polygamous marriages to the percentage of males married polygynously is 4:7. The Bride price in most cases can be simply through "bride service" given as dowry like the case between Jacob and Laban (Cf. Gen 29:15-30). A man who wishes to marry an Ekoi woman has to serve her people for a period of 2-3 years. He can as custom demands help to clear bushes for a few farming seasons. He is also expected to give gifts depending on his ability. Inheritance patterns also vary. If it is by a male, the man's brother inherits everything. His wife may inherit if the husband has so designated it to her but only if she has been delivered of children.

PROCEDURES AND OTHER USAGES & CUSTOMS IN EJAGHAM

Concerning parent-offspring, interactions and conflicts, the mother is completely in charge and in control of the children and so be it if she decides to leave and allow the children go with her. Homosexual activities and other social attitudes towards homosexuals indicate that Ekoi peoples do not accept these unnatural attitudes. Heterosexual sexual contact is always to be preferred. As a matter of fact, there has been found no such information about homosexuality in Ejagham. The pattern of exogamy vis-a-vis endogamy shows no such marriage restrictions among the Ekoi. The role of males in conception is the belief that paternity is not partible. No "other fathers" are recognized there can be only one father. Regarding the belief of what exactly the mother's role should be in procreation vis-à-vis the "receptacle in which fetus grows"; the Ekoi say a mother is expected to be very vigilant and careful throughout her life and to be able to observe the restrictions from certain foods in order to ensure a healthy child. To the question as to whether conception can be an incremental process ie. Whether semen can build up over time, the Ekoi say No! Females are supposed to be absolutely and truly faithful hence there should be no occurrence of sexual coercion or rape. Therefore, there should not be found any pattern of rape. But young girls are known to be tricked into taking "gifts" and when they accept, the men take them into their compounds. Should even an 8-year old girl accept a ring from a male, his relatives would come and bring her to his compound. The Ejagham have no preferential category for spouses eg. cross cousins but the females enjoy a lot of freedoms but not sexually. They are expected to be faithful, but they can easily divorce their husbands. The Ekoi peoples are not wont to giving gifts to extramarital partners or extramarital offsprings. When a mother dies the father and other wives raise the children. The adult sex ratio ie. the number of adult males divided by the number of reproductive females shows that men seem to be married to multiple women in most cases although there are no actual statistics.

There are also certain customs among the Ekoi eg. the father cannot eat elephant's flesh from the moment he finds out that his wife is pregnant. Again after the birth of the child, a mother is secluded for 1-2 months and the father is barred from "visiting" her. Another tradition is that whether the potential fathers are lesser/younger v/s. major/older, the understanding is that there can only be one father. A woman must be strictly faithful to one husband and not sample preferences. The elders of the group are much respected without question. There is usually a sense of animosity between in-laws eg. a mother in-law may convince her daughter to divorce her husband. Patterns of descent whether bilateral or matrilineal have certain rights and privileges but in Ejagham the pattern of patrilineal associations is preferred because for them a family is created from the father's line. Anyone related to the father, grandfather, or great grandfather is a part of the family. Certainly, a wife is not a part of the husband's family but rather her fathers. That is why in some Niger Delta ethnic groups eg. Esan in Edo State, the Itsekeri in Delta; if a wife dies her corpse is sent home to be buried among her kindred. Dorothy A. Talbot has written exhaustively on these Southern Nigeria patterns and regarding incest taboo, there are no avoidance rules in Ejagham because according to him "there are practically no marriage restrictions among these people." "It is not even forbidden by native law for half brothers and sisters to marry, though, cases of these kinds are very rare" (Cf. Talbot D.A., 1968, 32-45) 4.28.

In what way(s) does one get a name, change their name, and obtain another name? A child's first name is given based on the day, time, or place of birth. For example, "should it be born on a native Sunday it would be called "Edet" if a boy and "Ared" if a girl. If the child is healthy for a year then the name is permanent, but if he/she falls ill then the child is taken to the diviner who chooses a name. The name of the father or father's brother is added to the surname. In Ejagham, as noted already there are no restrictions as to whether marriage usually within or outside the community should be preferred and whether m/f. although it seems that the Ekoi people marry each other. Parents can arrange marriages, but in the end if the woman does not accept, then there is no marriage. There are sometimes conflicts of interest over who marries who because there may be competition among suitors for the same girl. When this happens men usually try to win her affection through magic rites. For example, they may put a curse on the other man vying for her attention.

In warfare/homicide fighting was usually out-group. It was a situation of one village going to war and fighting with another village or another group of people who might have started or brought about the aggression. Again Paul Amaury Talbot also stated that before the coming of the British colonial administration, the Ekoi people fought quite a bit. They made sure nobody flouted or wandered beyond their boundary. To this end the people used coconut trees as a sign on the boundary points to their villages. In certain communities like URUAN/EFIK, Okono trees were used especially the light green called "Afia okono". Afia Okono trees were used by Idu and Mbiakong in Central Uruan to mark the boundary between both towns. That might have informed the siting of the old parish centre at this parcel of land between Idu and Mbiakong which has borne the name Afia Okono to this day. It was to be the epi-centre for all activities and occasions occurring for all the villages under Central Uruan No. 1. Every community knew the boundaries of their villages. When the early Europeans came and wanted to trespass into their land, they offered serious resistance. At one point they even posed some resistance to British and German rule (Cf Amaury Paul, T. 1967, 138-46). There were village and house organizations. A few coconut trees indicate the vicinity of the village and boundary. At the entrance there was to be found a silk cotton ie. Mboma tree. At the center of the village was the community hall where town meetings took place, and behind it were charms to protect the village. In ancient times houses were built only along the main roads with gardens behind them.

There were always reported cases of in-group and out-group fighting and killings. Thereafter the Ekoi had to defend their land and resist against Europeans annexing or taking over their land. The Ekoi had trade networks with neighbors, especially Western Cameroun. "This was so because they had almost secured a monopoly of trade with the South-Western Cameroun where they found ready markets for salt, tobacco, cloth, and hardware from Calabar, which they themselves purchased in exchange for fowls, dried meat, sleeping mats, rubber and palm kernel. Besides there were indications of social hierarchies because they also kept slaves, although by the time Amaury wrote the book around 1912 slavery was scarcely practised since the British government had outlawed. Yet, the Ekoi people understood a distinct difference between those that were born free and born slave. Sometimes slavery could result from debt (Amaury Paul T. 1912, 478). Often those who owed substantially were sold or taken into slavery until they could free themselves upon the repayment of the debt. Personal as well as other group conflicts were inevitable. A number of times the conflicts snow-balled into open confrontations arising from the diversities and relationships with neighboring societies in the form of external aggression or relations. The Ekoi are not known to practise cannibalism since they had socio-political organizations and interactions with their neighbours. Cannibalism was practised only by communities which had conflicts with others and certainly not with their fellows. In the history of nations nobody is known to have eaten the flesh of one of his own. Ejagham villages usually comprised regarding their group or community size of several large families. With regard to their mobility pattern they always tended to live in the same place all year around unless some disaster or misfortune arose thus causing them to move.

Ekoi political system: consisted of the village which was governed by a chief and his council of elders comprising of the oldest living member of each family. They also had a village head or chief called "Ntufam" ie. "Ntufam Etek". The council of elders was responsible for the making of laws and decision-making. They also had certain clubs or organizations/ societies whose members helped the elders govern. They were usually empowered and sent by the elders to enforce laws. For example, they were given power to punish criminals. Hence they had to wear masks and run around the village until their work was completed. Similarly, in URUAN/EFIK, it was the "Ekpe" in their wearing outfits which also went round the communities to enforce the law and bring defaulters to face the law. In Ibibio land also the "Ekpo" masquerades who are law enforcement officials were the instruments and agents of enforcing the law.

For their past times and community amusements the Ekoi had clubs for boys, girls, and mixed groups. But there were age restrictions and these clubs were very exclusive. They held meetings of long sessions because they always had an aim in view the target of which they wanted to reach. Some even had great secrets. In order to get enrolled in a club, a prospective member had to apply and be accepted, and then he/she would pay an enrolment fee. Also in the Ekoi old age typifies wisdom. Therefore, the older generation was always to be respected. Youngsters were always to listen to the older people. Even siblings too were to listen and obey if they have only a year's difference apart. Members of clubs and organizations could form special relationships in order to forge special friendships and joking relationships. The Ejagham have specialized village structures including men's houses. There are also special places for women called the "fattening house". Usually before marriage women are secluded from everyone and they go to live in fattening houses to be taken care of. These are where they are to prepare for marriage. Whenever they are ready to give birth, the husbands and relatives arrange for where they will nurse their babies. After giving birth, if their parents are wealthy enough they are moved into these fattening houses. There are also the community centres where meetings are held. In the olden day's people used to sleep in hammocks or on elevated clay sofas. These are prepared in special sleeping rooms within the house. Usually the beds are made of clay, the same material used in mudding the houses.

In Ejagham land puberty initiations are practised and they are very similar for men and women. They are based on enrolment into different clubs, and as people get older, they raise different clubs to suit their status. The major difference is that men begin their initiation at age 10 and girls after giving birth. Palm wine is used at all festive occasions. Also imported liquor is used for libations especially at funeral ceremonies and at "plays" in honor of dead chiefs. In the past, funerals were very important to the Ekoi people since they hold great reverence towards their ancestors. The more important the member of the group the more elaborate the ceremony. When a person dies, the corpse is generally cleaned and dressed up. For important personalities they are buried with the pouring of libations.

Finally, we can conclude that when the Missionaries came at the beginning of 1900s the Ekoi transformed into Christians. Many of them did not understand the Ekoi religion and equated certain aspects of their religion as related to the devil. For example, the Missionaries did not understand "NJOM" and charms which the people raised to protect themselves and to ward off the devil. Today although some still hold on to their original beliefs there is also a church in almost every Ejagham village.

ORIGINS AND EVOLUTION OF YAKURR ETC. IN CROSS RIVER STATE

This short article covers some ethnic nationalities whose cultures bear striking similarities to the Ejagham; hence it will not be necessary to articulate any exhaustive treatment of their culture history. Also similar are their music, drumming, dances, mode of dressing, as well as their traditional religion. Traditional festivals in Northern Cross River State are primarily related to farming activities, the predominant occupation in the state. Such festivals are practised in Yakurr, Obubra, Ikom, Ogoja, Yalla, Obudu and Obanliku which are treated here. The Yakurr/Agoi speaking peoples are located in Yakurr LGA, while the Mbembe are predominantly found in Obubra LGA of which the Yakurr was a part in colonial Obubra Division. Further north are also to be found several sub-dialectical groups, among which are the Etung, Olulumo, Ofutop, Nkim/Nkum, Abanajum, Nseke and Boki all in both Ikom and Boki LGAs. The Yalla/Yache, Ukelle, Ekajuk, Mbube, Bette, Bekwarra and Utugwang are found in Ogoja, Yalla, Obudu and Obanliku LGA's in Northern Cross River State. All these epitomize the nation's linguistic and cultural plurality. But it is important to note that, in spite of the diversity of dialects, all these ethnic groups have a common linguistic root in Bantu and Semi-Bantu (Cf. Ute, Roschenthaler, 1966, 6-65). Most of the festivals in these communities are observed to celebrate their rich harvests especially the New yam festivals, like the "Leboku" of Yakurr, the "Ibibum" and the "Ahakpo" of the Mbembes of Obubra. These festivities still exist and serve as the traditional bond between the people and the supernatural. Among their popular dance groups are Keeled, Oban, MONIKIM, Giza and Aminakwol.

Culturally, the Efiks, because of their coastal location, have been most conspicuous internationally, nationally, and within the Cross River State. This is partly due to the primacy of Calabar in Nigerian history, and partly on account of the outstanding rich and elaborate cultural repertoire of the Efiks. Before now and especially in the colonial era and immediately after, namely during the First Republic, Efik was the language of learning, commerce and diplomacy since it was among the first to be written and officially taught in Nigeria. Throughout my sojourn in Ogoja and Ebonyi State in the 1950s, Efik was the lingua franca used both in text books and primers especially Reading Books. That is why its use and the cultural patterns both in dance and plays were Efik throughout the then Prefecture of Calabar which covered the entire Cross River State, Ebonyi and parts of Abia States. Among the broad cultural inventory of the Efiks are "Ekombi" which is the Efik classical music as also the "Ukwa" –Fencing Dance and displays, the only fencing match in sub Saharan Africa. Folklores and stories, the "Mbuk" namely, a collection of Efik folklores, myths, legends and stories formed the pre-literate pastimes of the peoples. The Ekpe cult organization which was elaborately discussed in Chapter III and of course the famous local cuisine the "Edika ik? " and a host of traditional dance forms formed the specialties of the URUAN/EFIK.

CULTURE HISTORY OF IKOM IN NORTHERN CROSS RIVER

The Mystery arts and cults of the Ikom language group in Cross River called the Ikom "Monoliths" are a group of stone sculptures found in a small area around Ikom. The place is inhabited by the Ekoi people who live in scattered villages. The stone monoliths are known variously as AKWANSHI or ATAL or ALAPTAL in Ekoi dialects. Of significance was the importance of commerce in Ikom during the 19th and 20th centuries. Before the coming of the early Europeans to Ikom, the people were living in their separate communities independent of one another. In short there was nothing like a central government, but each kindred group had its own set of village administration under a local chief. But one significant trait among them was their knack and expertise in commerce.

What really brought about the importance of Ikom and her instant development was her trade among the Cameroonians. Ikom communities prospered as they brought their goods and wares along the Cross River to Mamfe in the Cameroun Republic and in turn exchanged them with the French merchandise which they subsequently ferried to the Eastern town of Calabar, which was an important commercial town masterminded by the Supercargoes – the British, French, German and Spanish merchants from Europe. This success story of the Ikom traders was also made possible through their favourable position of being able to bring slaves from the interior of Bamenda to the slave port of Calabar. In practice, it favoured them doubly: they could bring European goods to the melting pot trading city of Calabar as also slave cargoes from their Cameroonian coasts as well.

At the beginning, most of the items of merchandise included palm kernels, palm oil and ivory. They even used their young boys and girls in the trade as those who gathered and unshelled the palm kernels while the girls in particular helped their mothers to prepare the palm oil. They also gained doubly when these girls would be betrothed by their parents commercial partners. Before the official introduction of the Nigerian currency then, most of these articles of commerce were exchanged for their kind which was known as "trade by barter"., Later small pieces of brass known as "sitim" were used instead of money. When the British traders arrived in the region and discovered that commercial activities in Ikom and environs were greatly developed, they introduced a new system whereby young people without parents or money could procure articles on credit and transport them to Calabar and bring back the proceeds which the British masters would in turn give them a percentage from the profit margin. This also greatly boosted the high profile commercial enterprises of the Ikom peoples. As a child, especially before Independence, this booming trade of the Ikom peoples was replicated in the villages of URUANEFIK especially among the coastal peoples. It even extended including trade with the Spanish in Fernando Poo. Ikom peoples enterprising acumen represents the irony of traditional tribal populations able to square up to the commercial revolutions of civilized peoples. This brief piece on Ikom bears testimony to the enterprising nature of preliterate peoples in most parts of West Africa, especially among the "ATAM" peoples of Northern Cross river. In fact, that "nom de plume" a.k.a pseudonym ATAM derives from the commercial enterprises of Northern Cross River peoples as the most successful traders of Ancient Calabar Prefecture. It was the name URUAN/EFIK bestowed on them for their excellence in trade (Africa: Journal of the International African Institute 1967, 43-51).

ORIGINS AND CULTURE HISTORY OF BOKI ETHNIC PEOPLES

The Boki/Bokyi ethnic group of Northern Cross River were originally under Ikom Division in the old colonial Administration of OGOJA Province. It is now an autonomous Local Government Area in the Cross River State of Nigeria. It was created on 28th August 1991, and its capital is Boje. The region has a contiguous border with the Republic of Cameroon and is known internationally as a commercial centre for agricultural commodities such as cocoa, coffee, timber, and palm products (Archived copy - Archived from the original on 2014-08-19). The Etymology of the name is derived from its original name which is actually the native tribe of Boki peoples who reside in the same geographical area called Boki. But the term originates from the word "Bokyi" which is from the Boki language and name of the tribe also sometimes referred to as Nki. Despite the fact of their being part of ancient Ikom some of which villages terminate in tributaries of the Cross River, Boki region is a completely landlocked area. The Local Government Area is bounded on the East by the Republic of Cameroon as well as five other Northern Cross River clan viz. on the North by Obudu and Obanliku LGAs; on the West by Ikom and Ogoja LGAs and on the South by Etung to the south LGA. The region is probably the most rugged terrain in Nigeria because it is almost completely covered by the Cross River Rainforest and is also part of the Afe mountain range of which 60% is almost inaccessible to vehicles throughout the year (Cf. http://www.cross river.com). Boki land is also prone to mudslides due to frequent high levels of rainfall. In July 2014 for example, mudslides swept away many bridges and this isolated communities including the region's capitol of Boje.

Boki district has many settlements with autonomous communities including:

SOCIAL TRAITS AND CULTURAL PATTERNS IN BOKI LAND

Boki ethnic nationality is the agricultural hub of Cross River State. As noted above, it is the largest region surrounded and covered by rain forest. This makes the region a viable territory for investment in agriculture. The Boki people have various traditions and customs that are unique to the district. Traditional dress for men consists of loincloths and a white long-sleeved shirt with a broad hat. Some men also carry a . Women usually wear wrappers with blouses and head scarfs. Some major events in Boki include the Boki New Yam Festival, the "Alobe" festival in Irruan and the "Etcen" in Borum as also Cassava Festivals. Music and dances are a common cultural feature in Boki tradition. They are usually organized during these festivals as well as on social occasions like marriages, chieftaincy and honourable prestige events etc. The common instruments used include: the Obam, Mgbe, Ndugho, Etcheh, Atam, Obon, Bekarim, Awaribo, Obashi and Enya-Atu. Other traditional events include inter-village cultural dances and competitions, age-grade meetings, burial ceremonies and communal farming. Not to be forgotten is another very important cultural identity of Boki including their war dance apparels and other outfits is their war dance. It is this war dance that has put Cross River on the map globally especially with regard to the National Festival of Arts and Culture.

In ancient times Boki used to be notorious for its practice of male and female circumcision, ostensibly to exhibit their abundant yams and other agricultural products without which they could not have got the where withal to keep their young men and women in seclusion doing nothing except eating and drinking while the quarantine lasted. In July 2000, female genital mutilation was made illegal by the Government of Cross River State in an attempt to stop violence and abuse against women. The penalty for such actions is fixed at a fine of up to ₦10,000 (Ten thousand Naira) ie. about US$600 or by a prison sentence up to three years (Cf. Ayang 2013, 11-16). Boki is also known for its traditional African markets and many towns have their own market days, such as in Okundi, Ntamante, Kakwagom, Wula and Katchuan.

The vast wildlife habitats within the thick forest region and vegetation presents a very unique topology. This continues to give Boki such an interesting environment for activist as well as conservationist groups to explore. The Okwango Division of the Cross River Park set up by the World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF) was established in Boki and continues to provide visitors the opportunity of witnessing wildlife in its natural habitat.

The Afi Mountain Wildlife Sanctuary mentioned earlier was created in May 2000 and is managed by the Cross River State Forestry Commission. The protection and research of the wildlife sanctuary are sponsored in partnership between the Government and four NGOs viz. Pandrillus, Wildlife Conservation Society, Nigerian Conservation Foundation and Fauna & Flora International. The Afi mountains gorillas belong to the most endangered species of the Cross River gorillas. Generations of hunting groups for Afi's gorillas, chimpanzees, drills and other endangered species have left them wary of humans, and years of protection may be required before they can more easily be seen again. Every day people are seen on day hikes and multi-treks into this "sanctuary of endangered species". It is hoped that in the near future a comprehensive programme of visits will be put in place preferably by the Drill Ranch Authority. To-date guided hikes are available for an additional fee, which the Drill Ranch collects on behalf of the Forestry Commission.

Afi Mountain is also listed as an "Important Bird Area" in Nigeria and there is a migratory swallow-roost at the Headquarters Boje which is one of the largest in Africa. Bird-watchers are welcome, but mist-netting is not permitted except by special arrangement with the state wildlife authorities.

CULTURE HISTORY OF YAKURR IN CENTRAL CROSS RIVER
ORIGINS AND EVOLUTION OF YAKURR PEOPLES

Ugep both as an autonomous community as also an ethnic entity of the great Yakurr peoples has been much around in this piece because like the Aros of Arochukwu, Abriba, Bende, even up to and including Afikpo, has been part and parcel of ancient Ibom country and primary settlement of the great URUAN/EFIK peoples. Up till the 1960s the pupils were still using the Efik primers in the Primary School system. To demonstrate this even till today, the symbol of greeting and invocation at councils and public assemblies is the slogan: "Ugep/Umor-Otu-Tu/Ugep Ebrutu!" As Ugep is popularly known, it is one of the largest units that constitute Yakurr sub-tribe which though as mentioned already was part of the ancient and colonial OBUBRA DIVISION in OGOJA PROVINCE. Ugep is also mentioned in African world history as one of the communities of ancient AKPA tribe who also jostled for space in ancient IBOM. Historians accept that Ugep originated from a place or village called "AKPA". It was one of the Eastern Ejagham races/clans in the Central senatorial district of Cross River State, Nigeria. They are known to have masterminded the expulsion of the Ibibios from IBOM after URUAN/EFIK had left the scene as recounted in Chapter I. They were often regarded as a warring lot. The reason advanced for their leaving Akpa was due to a religious clash between the two paternal groups that make up the Akpa family exacerbated by their ritual differences in the performance of burial rites for their deceased whenever a person from either of the families died. It was such a simple coincidence of sorts. As they often say and even in URUAN/EFIK" kp? mbre aman ut?k, ut?k aman mkpa", which when translated literally means: "A small thing/argument often leads to death." However, the story making the rounds was that the failure of the Ugep people to do the normal ritual performance for the decease person is what leads to what was called "The Great Trek" where the AKPA people are said to have pursued and forced the Ugep people out of the village by force of arms while they were pursuing a man called Edem Omilakpa who was tired and weak with his pregnant wife during the Great Trek. The story continued that a stone was pushed from the apex of a hill down to the Akpa warriors and the stone killed all the warriors and landed at the feet of the King of Akpa. That ended the war between Akpa and the people of Ugep, but the Great Trek continued. That stone is referred to as the "Ancient wonder and saviour stone "till today (Cf. Ubangha Bassey Onen 1978, 3-8).

Geographically, Ugep has often been referred to as the largest village in West Africa. I have mentioned this elsewhere in connection with Idu, the Headquarter of URUAN INYANG ATAKPOR. The indigenous peoples speak the "LOLA" language which is the general language spoken in Yakurr.

SOCIAL TRAITS AND CULTURAL PATTERNS IN UGEP

The people of Ugep did not just leave Akpa without bringing along their cultural heritage. In fact, they also left with most of the cultures that were practiced in Akpa, and that is the culture still in practice today. Some of these traditional patterns include the New Yam Festival which is now one of the most renowned festivals in Cross River State and beyond. In fact, it was the rebranded Leboku Festival that brought Ugep international recognition and the festival the State staged at the National Festival of Arts and Culture during the Governor Donald Duke Administration in 2005; Ebelembi, Obam; Ndebra. etc. Actually colonial Ugep according to Eteng, enjoyed the status of a local council – the NA Council in 1923 (Cf. Eastern Region of Nigeria Gazette No. 37/1955) and today Ugep/Yakurr has a very special, enviable position as a Local Government Council LGA in the Federal Republic of Nigeria 1999 Constitution. With the total number of inhabitants estimated at 250,000 citizens, Ugep ranks as one of the most populous ethnic groups in Cross River State. The traditional authority and high Chief of Ugep is "Obol Lopon" who is the spiritual and cultural head. He has full control of the place. He it is who and administers and controls the people. But the real chief priest is the "Ojokobi" who is also the fertility spirit of the land. The central figure in the administrative system with a powerful priest is called "Bi-Nah". Together with the other priests and the "king" they play their religious roles like the "Atewa Wu-kang – kang" with "Opebelede" as the chief celebrant of the Ugep New yam festival.

Ugep people are among the most educated, enlightened, liberated, egalitarian, industrious, resourceful; courageous and politically conscious of Cross Riverians. Their men and women are brave and people of substance in the Nigerian political arena. Their identity cannot be mistaken anywhere, any time. Some of their major native food items of the people include "EJAKPO" which is a delicacy prepared from the smoother part of cassava leaf;" Yedamblongh" is used in the eating of salad with mixed fresh palm oil, pepper and kola. "EBELEBELE" is cooked sliced cassava which is left till the following day before use. Ugep also has tourist sites eg. the "Ketabebe monolith". As a historical monument the "Uleng" and other monuments of Kiwel, Ekumini Del, Mma Itam Kema of Yatiyomoh, Ojokobi Deities and Ojonen are kept. To date Ugep people, at least the locals are very hardworking, courageous, brave, resourceful, well-educated. They are also lovers of truth and transparency whose major source of livelihood is farming and seasonal fishing. Many foreigners have come to find Ugep as a very accommodating area for all because an average Ugep citizen does not believe in discrimination and being sentimental. They are a peace loving people and there is always enough food for all. Ugep has many higher educational centres including schools and colleges viz. Institute of Technology and Management, Ugep, Business Management and Entrepreneurship Centre Ugep, etc.

IMPUNITIES: THE /BRUASAI ABUSE OF AUTHORITY IN NIGERIA

One of the issues yet to be appropriately addressed in this country is "understanding" or "misunderstanding" the "Democratic INSULATION OF SOCIETAL INSTITUTIONS vis –a vis authority and power from PARTISAN POLITICS and the ABUSE OF OFFICE. The operators of the Nigerian democratic experiment do not seem to be ready and willing to so do. In other words, they do not seem to have the political will and love for their fatherland to give the democratic experiment a chance. Partisan politics herein, as well as other democratic and civilized ways of doing things simply do not seem to count, not to talk of functioning in a way that permits the effective performance of statutory functionalities. In a situation where the rule of law and democratic norms are not respected neither do they count, then there is IMPUNITY which inevitably leads to ANARCHY and DOOM. The ugly and uncivil arrests, intimidations and harassments of persons and groups especially the "so-called opposition" sometimes by the once gallant Nigeria Police together with the EFCC, the SSS/DSS etc., speak volumes of and lends credence to the fact that our democracy is indeed collapsing irretrievably. The Government of our day has continued to exert such undue influence within key Government Agencies thus giving the impression that they are gradually degenerating into the secret police of Government to bamboozle and stifle perceived enemies and opponents of Government and other voices considered now as hate speeches inimical to Government. An example or two will suffice because of the mantra – "nothing will happen".

People just speak and do things with braggadocio, with the "BRUSAI" and most of the time with military Commando or Gestapo style of the Nigerian polilitics using the NSO/DSS and Mobile Police/Fire Brigade of the Nazi Germany Hiltleric era, because they fear neither God nor man, nor the consequences for their actions because nothing will happen. They are tin gods. Violence and dirty money have drowned decorum, good sense, the rule of law, civility and morality. One of the failures to do this has always been due largely to the inability to observe the fine divide between the Ruling political party and the government of the day via-a-vis respect for traditional rulership. There is so much abuse of power, authority and position in this country. Economic power can be brazenly abused in this our beloved nation; so too managerial power and authority can be ruthlessly deployed to oppress ordinary citizens; and of course political power can so imprudently and ruthlessly be deployed to repress society and norms. So we need to educate URUAN/EFIK people and by implication the Nigerian people to learn to conquer fear such that where there is danger they see great opportunities and challenges to be overcome. Yet like 7 UP the difference is quite clear! The only way to create a new or third force, call it what you like whether a new political party or movement, but not exactly like what AYCF, IPOP, NDAFF, OPC, XYZ etc. are doing, is to re-orientate and re-organize a new process as difficult as it may sound, and not allow the generality of citizens sitting down doing not thing but expecting may be angels, to fall from heaven and do something to challenge the situation. No, URUAN-EFIK, nay Nigerians must wake up from their slumber and break down the barricade and walls of the powers that be. They must be resolute and angry enough present a new agenda to stop this recycling of the old regimes and ways of doing things and have the courage to present a new business model and enterprise.

That a government is formed by a particular party that happens to be the winning party, in an election year in the country, does not mean that the government so formed and that political party are one and the same thing. They are not. According to Prof.Tonnie Iredia, Former Director General of the Nigerian Television Authority – NTA, whereas a political party is made up of ONLY the segment of the civil society that subscribes to its membership fold, a GOVERNMENT on the other hand is for all the citizens in the polity viz. children, boys and girls whether in school or not, young people whether they be students or self-employed, teachers, professors, farmers, artisans, workers both in the private and public sectors, housewives, merchants of all categories, directors and managers of organizations and institutions, the armed forces and the paramilitary lot, political parties both the ruling and the opposition, marketers, the critics in society etc. Accordingly, party events and party functions of whatever kind are not and cannot be seen as government functions ie. events bordering on the common weal for the common good and public order. Therefore, the government party, Conventions or rallies or whatever must not be seen as a government function though it may be of good purpose in the long run and for the organization of the common good of all citizens; even if the Head of State and other Government functionaries both of the same political party attend that event or rally. Accordingly, and not being "a government function", therefore the over-engagement of certain government institutions in such an event calls for concern, because it is not right and should be objected to by every discerning citizen of this country to wit, of the Federal Republic of Nigeria. Period!

In fact though it was in order to engage the police, and or the army and the paramilitary of the "Civil Defense Corps" ditto the Nigerian Television Authority - NTA, the Federal Radio Corporation of Nigeria – FRCN, etc. to help secure public order and for the good organization and media coverage of an event for the benefit and public reception of Nigerian citizens, the over-engagement of these Government apparata by just a political party that happens to be the "Ruling party" is anything else but what borders on impunity, immorality etc. and are offensive to the sensibilities of Nigerians and must be condemned in the strongest terms possible. When one considers the entire scenario, one wonders how such over-engagement could run counter to public security by dispossessing the police, the military and Para-military from their public places of primary assignments to the place of party events and more so, the loss of revenue and services in tow to the public and the Government media outfits, by having to cancel their public engagements and programmes in order to reschedule the whole day or even two or three days in each case, simply to satisfy the whims and caprices of a "Ruling Party". This is not seen or done anywhere in civilized realms like the Governments of the West and the Americas, even their Asian counterparts. It is equally a tall order to expect that in Nigeria, the IGP or the Directors of Governmental Media outfits would have to disengage their services to the public good - which is unethical /immoral anyway, but ironically expect the same Government apparata to sustain not only their maintenance quota, but also credibility-wise, to redress the national subsisting cynicism just to project the so-called Government of the day, positively.

Another abuse of the political ethos is in the discrimination and over-engagement of public and Government apparata for the SOLE benefit of the Ruling or "Government Party" as they call it in Nigeria, to the disadvantage or even exclusion of other groups and segments of the society and the so-called "Opposition parties". Whereas in the 2nd Republic to be precise, The Ruling Party, the NPN was seen to have given equal opportunity for the engagement of Government functionaries and apparata, viz. the Police, the media outfit notably the NTA and FRCN, so it appeared. In fact, proportionate time and air space were equally allotted to all the opposition parties viz. UPN, ANPP, APP, NAP, and PRP to mention just the main political parties officially registered and recognized as such by FEDECO at that time and now, their counterpart of INEC. But what do we see or notice in the so-called 4th Republic? Perhaps it could be explained away that while we had seasoned and level-headed and patriotic Nationalists like the Great Zik of Africa, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, Dr. Olatunji Braithwaite, Mallam Amino Kano, Alhaji Waziri and the not to be-forgotten "best President Nigeria never had" in the person of the incomparable Chief Obafemi Awolowo, as leaders of these parties, we do not have such as citizens of this country in the present dispensation. All we have are the military-cum fire brigade type of nationalists and leaders in the political parties as Presidents and Governors always behaving and dealing with citizens as if in the military era and acting in the BRUSAI-IMPUNITY fashion in the Nigeria of today. While the police and the media outfits, the NTA and FRCN and other societal institutions in the country give maximum attention to the Conventions of the Ruling party, to wit the PDP/APC, everybody knows from history that no other political party in Nigeria ever gets such equal attention, rather it is total alienation and black-out carried out ostensibly through the machinations especially of the police, the army and the paramilitary. Yet these Institutions were set up to, among other things, maintain law and public order uniformly across the board in the nation. Sometimes one wonders why the so-called "Government party" would decide to stand askance and unperturbed when mayhem ensues at the venue of an "Opposition Party Convention or Rally, with lives and property worth billions lost, only to turn round and use the situation to nail their "opponent party" as if what has been so endangered is not to the disadvantage of the Nigerian citizenry and polity? What a shame!

In civilized climes it would be of grave concern to the "Government party" to see to it that nothing untoward happens in any part of the polity, as there could be held responsible and answerable for the negligence and dereliction of a responsible government to allow any mayhem ensue for whatever reason or event in the polity. It is especially irritating and worrisome to say the least that in the world's 21st century, we still see the police and government apparata being over-engaged in the internal wranglings of the "Government party" occasioned by the conduct of Conventions, Congresses etc. of the government party which however is to the detriment of the opposition parties to which more than half the citizens in this country have subscribed, the oft mouthed "Mega party" or the biggest party in Africa notwithstanding. A major problem also to be discerned from all this is that, being aligned to one political party or the other, or even to a faction of the same party, it is not easy to know when to draw the line. The reason is that there is hardly ever a logical conclusion because horse trading within factions can ensue and all will be regarded as "a family affair", sometimes with the police looking the other way.

The point we are trying to make here is that it is ill-advisable for an otherwise non-partisan Institution like the Police force, the army, the Media whether "government owned" or private, including the so-called civil service/servants, or whatever, of the society/polity, to get enmeshed in partisan politics because in such institutions whoever does that is toying with his public image and public confidence. Why should any public Organization or Institution like the police, the army or even the NTA or a Government Newspaper Corporation get involved in the over-coverage or over-engagement with most of the key Staffers in attendance at a particular event of a political party, and in this case the Ruling party in the nation? When we consider what has been happening in Nigeria of recent, one encounters with horror the police for eg. being so patently partisan in favour of the "Ruling Party". In the 2nd Republic the NPN was greeted with public opprobrium and odium and tagged the "NPN Police Force" and the "Naira Party of Nigeria" for her excessive engagement of the police and money to sustain its tempo. Money and the Police were allegedly and effectively used to manipulate and rig elections. All these are skewed upon injustice and man's inhumanity to man and the fact of the matter is that no nation can survive without justice. The police on the other hand were also allegedly effectively engaged in the witch-hunt of Nigerians and the so-called perceived political opponents of the Ruling parties both in the States and in the Federation. And this has continued to be the public perception of the police till today. One sincerely hopes that with the no-nonsense posture of some IGPs like IGP Mohammed Abubakar; the police would distance itself from these sorts of impunities and abracadabra.

Coming on the heels and admonition of Prof. Tonnie Iredia, it is unwise for the police and by implication the public Media outfits to expose itself to the vagaries of political weather as no one will know for certain where to draw the line and from which corner the wind started blowing to overtake us. To compound matters, we can also analyze the display of power and authority whereby a Governor or even a mere

Chairman of Council, a Police Commissioner (CP) or any in the junior cadre Deputy Commissioner (DCP) and Assistant Commissioners (ACP) and even in some high profile cases, the Inspector General of Police (IGP) himself, who a while ago and before assuming this sort of exalted office and position were not known figures in the land. He/she feels lawful to intimidate and summon or order about a Royal Father like the Nsomm of Uruan or the Eze of Arochukwu, etc. and even the Obong of Calabar to appear before him. Whereas these officials could never contemplate doing so to the Sultan or even an Emir in the North of Nigeria or similarly the Oba of Benin/Lagos, the Oni of Ife etc. Could they summon the Oba of Benin or the Obi of Onitsha who are equally First Class Chiefs in their rank? Every monarch in the land is the Vicerent of God Almighty ministering to his people and should never be tossed around. If there is any matter of urgency, there are other junior officers in rank, the Minister or Commissioner, the Superintendent of Police or those in the Local Government Areas acting as Divisional Police Officers (DPOs). These should be sent to enquire or discuss the issue at hand and not them ordering the monarchs around. In civilized societies, people pay homage and courtesy calls to these traditional rulers of the people. From the second Republics right down even to the time of Lord Frederick Lugard, it was the other way round: The chief or paramount Ruler could summon the Governor or Police Commissioner. But nowadays because people do not have values any longer, being a governor or the so-called Executive Chairman, Police Commissioner, etc. they have become the Alpha and Omega, the richest and the most powerful in the land, and therefore they should not care about anybody else again, whereas they are only servants of the people and should be seen as such. This impunity and recklessness of whether the political, business, officials and traditional elite must be stopped because it seems people have now lost all sense of humanity and morality.

ILLEGALITIES – IMPUNITIES PERSONIFIED: LEGALISM v/s JURIDICISM

One other moot point that should be immediately addressed in connection with the understanding and/or misunderstanding of legal issues is the juridical overtones in the real meaning of "status quo ante. "It does not appear rational to take STATUS QUO in any case which is supposed to involve to opposing parties to mean a state of affairs ever before two camps or opposing views or parties or even positions in a dispute had come to the fore. For example, there was only one party in Nigeria known as the All Progressives Grand Alliance –APGA. Then towards the flagging off for the November 2013 Elections, a faction of the party allegedly sponsored by His Excellency, Peter Obi organized a Congress which threw up Mazi Okwu as the Chairman of the Party thus rejecting the erstwhile INEC acknowledged Chief (Sir) Victor Umeh as Party Chairman since the election of the Governor Peter Obi at the 2007 Elections. Now when the matter went to Enugu High Court, the issue of "Status quo ante" cropped up. The question now is whenever does the situation "Status quo ante" arise? Is it when Chief Paul Umeh was the only unchallenged APGA Party Chairman, or when there was the Convention with the election of Mazi UKWU to replace Chief Victor Umeh? This type of political gerrymandering has brought about so much confusion in the polity and we need to distinguish between a clear case of judicial procedure from Juridicism here. When Chief Victor Umeh was the undisputed National Chairman of APGA, nobody could talk of "status quo ante" as there were no two visible factions that could have been directed to maintain status quo. Consequently status quo can only mean as from when two sides became evident, otherwise, whenever the next case is called, the same side whether the UMEH faction, or the OBI faction would be both the plaintiff and also the defendant at the same time and this remains paradoxical and bizarre to the extreme.

Nigerians should beware because it is simply "a very dirty and open-ended political game", if you don't mind! It is not that these absurdities would be such a strange phenomenon in this nation, because anything can happen in the Nigerian political firmament, but it is just that the societal Institutions that get involved in such matters may end up being bruised and bastardadized to the extreme and no individual or institution including even the army is too great to be rubbished by partisan politics and politicians in our dear country Nigeria. Till date our Judiciary is still on its knees over the wranglings between the two top-most Chief Executives of the Judicial Institution of the land, the issue of the Chief Justice of the Federation and the Chief Judge of the Appeal Court is our case in point. Here I rest my case and point of view.

The Ifiayong Obot v/s Idu, Mbiakong Episodes: Ifiayong Obot is the original town in NORTHERN URUAN territory. At the time when the Europeans arrived on the scene bringing in clothings, wines, gun powder, tobacco, etc. in exchange for slaves, which trade had become the in-thing such as in most other parts of West Africa, there was a big booming market at Idu in CENTRAL URUAN territory then. It was the melting pot of all nationalities from Igbo country, Annang, Ibibio, Eket, Opobo, Andoni, etc. Before then, Idu Uruan market popularly known as ESUK IKOT ETUONG a.k.a ESUK MBEHE was still a big market. This being a local market, dealt mostly in Nigerian local merchandise like yams, cocoyams, fish, crayfish, timber, canoes, gin, cognac, etc. mostly from Northern Cross River ie. ATAM COUNTRY, and from Mbo, Efiat, Upenekang, BAKASSI ie. Ikang including former Western Cameroun which then was part of Southern Nigeria in the Southern Nigeria Oil Protectorate era. At this time also, some big time merchants from NORTHERN URUAN territory viz. Eman Uruan, Ita, Mbiaya, Ikpa, Idikpe, Ifiayong Obot etc. also came and joined in the booming trade with the Europeans. In time, a few of them mostly from Ifiayong Obot needed a piece of land to settle for their business and Idu gave them a piece of land adjoining the European settlement known as ANWA MBAKARA (ie. European quarters, now covering the Meridien 5-Star Resort and Golf Course). The author recalls that as kids they used to go pick straying tennis balls, golf balls, cricket balls, hockey balls etc. for the Europeans there in the evenings and public holidays and when their men and women were having their recreation time and playing in the courts and golf grounds then.

These Ifiayong Obot citizens lived there in peace and concord with their benefactors and neighbours like Mbiakong, Eman Ikot Ebo, etc. for decades. There was never the aborigine/settler factor then, everybody lived together as brothers and sisters in mutual comfort once the new settlers remained law-abiding and never tampered with the customs and traditions of the place especially in terms of vying for positions, taking over and selling the land and farm holdings or taking-over administration or the rulership and governance whether through direct administration or absolute control of the place in question. The Ifiayong issue came up when they had increased and multiplied and needed more land holdings for living quarters and business. But it seemed they bold-facedly and arrogantly expanded their given territory including claiming the booming market as their bona fide possession without permission and without informing their benefactors probably on account of the contiguity of the portion given them with the booming Idu beach markets. That is perhaps where trouble usually starts and in the Ifiayong v/s Idu case, they also allegedly encroached on Mbiakong land holdings with impunity. It has been an intractable case which had gone to court since the beginning of the 20th century with Idu as the plaintive and late Justice Eyo Nsa Ekpenyong Anwan as the presiding Judge. Idu was alleged to have won the case all through and the people from both parties were said to be living again in peace and harmony until after the civil war when hostilities started all over again. This and others have become a soar taste in the mouth with bitter animosities and bloodshed especially between Mbiakong and Ifiayong for decades now ever since after the war. But this is a case of brothers who I truly believe should ever remain faithful to one another and learn to keep the peace, yet this issue of Ifiayong doesn't seem to have abated despite Government interventions as if it is a case when two snakes fight and they must fight to a finish and may be, 'till death do them part'.

It was observed that since Idu groups of villages had been burnt down by the fleeing Biafran soldiers, Ifiayong had allegedly assumed that all the records and court proceedings on the case might have been burnt too, but this was not the case. The paramount Ruler of Idu who was the secretary of URUAN Council of Chiefs at the time and later became the Nsomm of Uruan, His Royal Majesty, Edidem Atakpor Titus Williams, a.k.a Okon Udo Ekpe, a very cerebral and highly calculated chieftain, who had reasoned that he would be held responsible if any URUAN sensitive documents could not be accounted for or were burnt while he himself could escape into safety with great inconvenience to himself even at the risk of his life. He had painstakingly preserved these documents. He had carefully taken care of the documents at the risk of his life. That was the story at the time and nobody doubted it. Idu was the Biafran military base and stronghold for both the navy and army for the entire Mainland of what is now Akwa Ibom State. Hence one can understand the hostilities at Idu and what the Biafran army did when the Federal troops started the bombardments and liberated Idu. The story is told that Idu had a very strong militia of indigenes of men and women who had manned the road blocks in the entire territory of Central Uruan both during and after the war and resisted interference by either the Biafran or Federal troops, and they were trusted and let be. Yet this issue of Ifiayong doesn't seem to have abated despite Government interventions.

PECULIAR MUSINGS & TRIBAL CONTROVERSIES IN OLD WESTERN CALABAR 1700-1900 AD ORIGINS AND EVOLUTION OF AYADEHE/OKU IBOKU

As observed already, all the wranglings, confusions and bad blood between URUAN who became the EFIK living on the one side of the Cross River from Iboku Esit Edik a.k.a. Creek Town, through Iboku Utan a.k.a Duke Town - Calabar, Akpabuyo, Ikon - Eto, Adiabo to Mbiabo through Mbiabo Edere, Obio Usiere to Ibom a.k.a. Arochukwu/Enyong Abatim and URUAN on the other side of the Cross River now settling on the Mainland and Riverine Areas a.k.a. Akwa Ibom State, also sharing boundaries with modern Odukpani LGA, started as I had often remarked "ke Mbakara ema eked?k obot" around 1700-1900 AD. All these have been documented and disccussed already even in this Book. They did not start today. It only remains for the Elders and the civil community in URUAN-EFIK to follow the path of honour, order, justice and peace and to tread carefully in order not to upset the apple cart. This is my humble prayer and advice to URUAN/EFIK of this generation. People should learn to live as brothers and sisters and try to avoid unnecessary recriminations and quarrels with one another for no just cause and give peace a chance. Boundary disputes and contentions are more often than not as a result of greed, pride and prejudice with a certain dose of "Brusai Impunities" in an attempt to get even with the other. It always ends in war and unnecessary shedding of blood if not the displacement of fellow citizens. Mm? ekeduk ekw? edia are ifa is what I often challenge them with, because it always ends in vanity, destruction of life and property and most eminently, retrogression and stagnation, anarchy and doom. The issue of Ikot Offiong v/s Oku Iboku is case in point. If you ask me why, you will find that there are always remote and immediate causes to this intractable problem: REMOTE, because any discerning URUAN/ EFIK knows that these people are not the direct descendants of URUAN/EFIK; the off-shoot at the lowest from AKWA AKPA URUAN. They are bona fide URUAN citizens yes, but those coming after the "EFIK" and URUAN had departed. Hence they are a sort of URUAN descendants born at Akwa Ibom final settlement as we are going to see. IMMEDIATE: Because during and immediately after the Nigerian-Biafran war, those refugees especially from Annang, Ikono and Ibiono country who were able, and actually crossed to the empty and deserted Ikot Offiong and Oku Iboku settlements soon discovered free un-occupied fertile land and settled there without any molestation or objections from any quarters since the owners of the territory had fled. It is the same thing that happened throughout the length and breadth of Odukpani and Akamkpa in Cross River up to Biase. In Itu – Odukpani territory they have commandeered and settled comfortably making use of the land planting and reaping as you go through Calabar – Itu high way. Everybody knows that these are not Odukpani or Efik citizens, they are all aliens and products of the war settling there comfortably. It was not the same with Ikot Offiong and Oku Iboku aborigines. Their land had been forcefully and unjustly occupied because these aliens did not return to their homeland after the war. That is the main source of the problem. None of any of these speak Efik; they speak Annang or Ibibio there. I noticed this when Dr. Emmanuel O. Asuquo a.k.a. 1030 was the Principal of the Presbyterian School, Oku Iboku, 1968-71, after which he was transferred to Central school Itu. The trouble started when the bonafide Ikot Offiong and Oku Iboku citizens started coming back, only to find their home occupied. Until the Itu LGA authorities in sync with the Traditional Rulers of Uruan, Itu and Odukpani stop playing this dirty and costly politics and sit down to settle the matter, no matter if the Federal Government decides to send a whole Battalion and Nigeria Police Command to the place, this intractable problem will escalate; mark my words: "koro Odudu ke kpukpru ini esin udi, enye onyu anam ntime". It is only they who can settle this matter and know 'who is who' within their domains and make sure everybody, citizen or settler, must remain law abiding or get the full weight of the law.

EVOLUTION & PROGRESSIVE EXISTENCE OF OKU IBOKU URUAN

Iboku is one of the Highest Grades of Ekpe in URUAN as also a district or Clan in URUAN, viz. Northern Uruan with Eman Uruan as its HQ. as seen already. The story therefore begins from there. Sometime in the late 1500s after URUAN had securely re-settled where they now find themselves, the story has it that a Chieftain, Chief Okpo Essia from neighbouring Oku, precisely Nduetong Oku in Ibibio country went down to Iboku Uruan, precisely Ibiaku Uruan and requested for one of their daughters – a princess' hand in marriage. Having fulfilled the necessary customary requirements, he got married and URUAN as custom demanded for the good care of the princess and success of the marriage gave their in-law a bevy of maids to assist their daughter in her matrimonial home. It later transpired that on a certain day during the planting and Ekpo Ny?h? season in Ibibio country, the princess with her maids were assaulted by Ekpo masquerades, an act that is taboo in URUAN. Even though the investigation showed that the masquerades did not actually beat up the girls but for their mere frightening the life out of the princess and her maids, URUAN viewed it as an act of assault and insult to URUAN nation and pronto ordered Iboku Ekpe to lay waste and destroy the entire Oku country and by implication destroy everything in sight as is characteristic of Ekpe when its laws are flouted, because this is exactly what it meant in URUAN tradition and Weltanschauung since URUAN there is no Ekpo society in URUAN kingdom. In carrying out this retaliation and reprisal on Oku nation, Iboku Ekpe were to bring back the entire family of the in-laws without harm. According to another URUAN custom, since the in-laws were not of URUAN stock, they were to be resettled at URUAN borders at the Cross River end. To this end, a suitable fertile land mass in Northern URUAN with borders with Itu was chosen within Ifiayong Obot axis which was an uninhabited virgin forest land expanding northwards to the Cross River. Then both the young men and women were sent out to provide buildings materials and other necessary things for the building of houses, etc. for the new settlers. Exactly where these new comers were to be resettled became known as "OKU IBOKU", ie. the country of URUAN citizens from "Oku" territory + "Iboku" Uruan kingdom while the adjacent territory right on the Cross River became known as "AYADEHE" in Ibibio tongue, become the territory to be inhabited by the in-laws from Oku country and URUAN hit squad of the MBON-EK? n MM? n ie. URUAN Navy (Cf. Ekpo S.E. & Co. eds. OKU IBOKU, Lagos 1988, 9-17). Oku Iboku needs no further explanations because it is exactly what it is, but concerning "AYADEHE" country some further explanations still remain to be made. This territory was carefully chosen by URUAN Chiefs –in Council because they wanted to scheme out any untoward attack or harm on Chief Essia, their in-law. Remember the in-law tradition and custom of "not harming the in-laws - UKOT, the grandchildren from the mother's side – EYEYEN and the – IMAN ie. Kindred in the Diaspora or living elsewhere within the territory. This was so, because anybody trying to get near the far country of OKU IBOKU or AYADEHE would have to first pass through most the villages lying between Oku Iboku and Northern URUAN Mainland and then he/she had the thick forests to contend with also. It was evident no one could do that without being spotted out and picked up by the vigilant villagers. Secondly the Efe Atakpor Council had commissioned Ufok, Nung Abin in particular to take charge of the security of the new settlers.

FOUNDATION AND EVOLUTION OF AYADEHE URUAN

There are at least three most important villages in IBIAKU URUAN group of Villages viz. Abak Ibiaku Town, Afaha Ibiaku Town and Mbiokporo Ibiaku Town respectively. The Royal House of Abak is "UF? K NUNG ABIN ANYE" which can produce the Village Head, Clan Head or even the Nsomm of URUAN. It is worthy of note that the inclination of affinity more often than not often holds sway in primordial neighbourhoods as in the case of URUAN in general and Oku Iboku/Ayadehe in particular such that as soon as a homeland was founded for Chief Essia, both the in-laws from the home people of URUAN and his Oku kinsmen and villagers flocked to the two settlements. Oku people flocked to Chief Okpo Essia while Uruan ie. Ibiaku people on the hand found solidarity with Ayadehe. In fact, as it turned out the home people of Oku and URUAN became so lured of this extensive fertile land with its high productivity and nearness to the sea that so many of them moved in trickles to live with these pioneer settlers such that within decades both settlements swelled up with many families thus resulting in a number of villages springing up all over the land and over time. Today Oku Iboku and Ayadehe are regarded as clans with dozens of villages and neighbourhoods.

NOMENCLATURE - AYADEHE: FIRST VERSION

To understand how the name AYADEHE came about, in this context as the name of the URUAN town on the Cross River, it is necessary to note that URUAN chose people to see to the security and protection of as well as look after the interests of the new URUAN/OKU settlers. First, most of those chosen as "Protectors" of Chief Okpo Afia and his household were from Uf?k Nung Abin Anye of Afaha in Ibiaku Uruan. Second, they were exceedingly numerous just like Uf?k Nung Edung in Ikot Osurua in Idu URUAN Headquarters. They became so numerous that people equated their population around the 14th century to be: "ewak nte ik? Ukana" - as many as the leaves of the African oil been tree". They were also a very weird, fierce and fearless people who could look at anybody eyeball to eye ball without blinking any eye. Third, they were also those of the military outfit in Ibiaku and URUAN in general. Their war lords could maneuver themselves and turn into ant hills, swarms of bees and wasps even snakes to sting their enemies. They were known to have the power and potency of appearing and disappearing when besieged by enemies. They could use Voodoo/Juju to barricade roads or blind their enemies. That is why it was believed they could easily get to enemy camps and ruffle them and get back unharmed. From their weird actions in the use of their war juju, the Nung Abin Anye of Ibiaku URUAN who freely opted to accompany Chief Okpo Essia, their father in-law for his defense and protection against possible attacks, in a bid to assure URUAN people that they were capable of carrying out their assignment, often proclaimed and described their modus operandi to be very effective. In other words, whatever they wanted to do "would be effective" or "potent", ie. "AYADEHE" in the new territory they were heading to protect. People therefore began to call the territory "AYADEHE" while others with enthusiasm deferred to the 'PROTECTORS' as "AYADEHE PEOPLE". There is also another explanation of the term because the protectors not only used juju or whatever; they also used machetes which were the common instrument of warfare in the ancient past. As described in Chapter I in the case of "the Annangs", they used to sharpen the machetes so well that they became so sharp and could cut anything on the way, hence the expression as they sharpened their machetes in preparation for action: "AYADEHE = it will be sharp" as knife. The Qumran people in the Old Testament also had among them a group of warriors like these designated the "SICARI", ie. those who carried sharpened knives for attacking the enemy. Whichever version one chooses to adopt, the designation was always to imply that it would be effective as to whatever they were about to do. Both verbs denote either the future Pluperfect: AYADEHE in Ibibio language translated as "IT WOULD BE EFFECTIVE/POTENT" or the future simple: "IT WILL, or IT IS GOING TO BE SHARP = AYADEHE".

ORIGINS OF AYADEHE: SECOND VERSION

To understand the rationale for a second version it is precisely about the implication of the translation of the Ibibio verb AYADEHE simply because the figure on the whole context was an Ibibio man, viz. Chief Okpo Essia from Nduetong Oku who in both versions was the father in-law to URUAN, precisely Ibiaku URUAN. The story has it that around the 14th century, a Chieftain from Nduetong of Oku Clan in the present UYO Local Government Area murdered one Akpan Ekpenyong Umo Etuk of Iba Oku, a neighbouring town still in Oku Clan and the reason was that Ekpenyong had committed adultery with his wife. Oku Elders tried him and passed the death sentence on him for murder. He, Essia escaped to Abak town in Ibiaku Uruan Group of Villages and took refuge with his son in-law, Chief Akan Anana Inwang Abin Anye of Nung Abin Anye because with his son in-law, he was absolutely safe, and nobody could attack him there according to tradition. But though Chief Essia and his household had been effectively protected and adequately catered for by his in-laws at Ibiaku Uruan, three important issues greatly bothered the people of Nung Abin Anye, his immediate in-laws. First the Oku people were persistently harassing and trying to hunt down Chief Okpo Essia and his family members considering that Iba Oku was only a short distance from the sector of Ibiaku Uruan viz. Nung Abin Ikot Anye where they were settling at the time which was Akwa Otong Abak Ibiaku Uruan across the ISO NYO STREAM, boundary with Iba Oku. Secondly, Nung Abin in-laws were thinking fast and considered that with Ekpo Essia and his family now almost permanently living among them, there would occur infringements of the rites, customs, traditions, culture and the rights of in-laws and those of "KINDRED" IMAN rights, which frown on the persecution of or causing any harm between in-laws and kins simply because Oku are IMAN to URUAN, as also in-laws to Ibiaku in URUAN. Any discerning reader of this Book can easily appreciation the problem and dilemma. Thirdly, as an abomination and blue murders were sure to set in, this aspect also greatly agitated the minds and hearts of both Chief Essia and Nung Abin people in general, because it was a question of life that was involved in the whole saga. The long and short of it was that both parties had to decide on parting ways, a situation that really hunted the hearts and minds of Abak Ibiaku URUAN in-laws. They struck a compromise whereby the Nung Abin Royal House of Abak Ibiaku URUAN pledged to continue to give protection and assistance to Chief Essia and his household wherever they elected to seek for sanctuary (Cf. Bassey Ada (Hon), Ayadehe: Founding of Ayadehe as Scion of Abak - Ibiaku Uruan, Uyo, 2008; See also Ekeruke O. Nkpanam in Historical Sketches of Ibiaku URUAN, Cal, 1944).

Together with Uf?k Nung Abia Enye, these three Houses a.k.a kindreds in Ibiaku Uruan bonded themselves and became known as "NUNG ABABAK" = the "People to be feared", which later nomenclature became the ABAK Royal Kindred/House in Ibiaku URUAN. They soon got ready to assist Chief Okpo Essia in any way possible since they knew that they could not continue to bear the burden of checking the menace of Oku people. They contacted other families/kindreds viz. Nung Otu, Nung Mbebit, Nung Edem Urua, Ikot Enin and Odok Okobo, all in Ibiaku Uruan Group of Villages. There and then the Council of Chiefs in Ibiaku Uruan resolved to bring the matter to the entire URUAN nation to assist in solving the problem. It was at the ESOP OFRI URUAN then known as EFE ATAKPOR ie. URUAN ATAKPOR COUNCIL of CHIEFS that the matter was discussed and a decision taken to the effect that Chief Okpo and his kindred should be given a separate dwelling place within URUAN territory but far away from URUAN occupied towns and villages where it would be impossible for Oku country people to get access. This decision as surmised above was in consequence of the culture and tradition of Oku people vis-à-vis the rights of in-laws and the "IMAN" relationship between Oku and URUAN nation. The Council therefore appointed some Chiefs to go search through URUAN North territorial boundaries within the Cross River axis but well beyond Ifiayong Obot where there was a mass of virgin forest and uninhabited land holdings for a possible location for Chief Essia. There was another request for Efe Asabo Council to contend with which was particularly from Nung Abin Anye Royal House. They demanded from URUAN, another large portion of un-inhabited land quite close to the former, where some of them could live to assist and protect the interests of Chief Essia and household. Thus two settlements along the borders of Northern Uruan on the Cross River came into being viz. the territory where Chief Okpo Essia settled and the territory of his Abak Ibiaku "PROTECTORS". Then through communal effort all the towns and villages in Northern URUAN came out to build houses as initial aid for them. Thereafter the home people from Oku became attracted to this fertile massive territory of Chief Essia whom they had rejected and began to go there in trickles to live with the pioneer settlers and within decades two big towns had grown up along the Cross River borders. It is worthy of note to conclude that human inclinations and the lure of kinship and affinity cannot be wished away anytime anywhere especially in Africa. As to the understanding of how the word AYADEHE vis-à-vis OKU IBOKU came into existence, this has been sufficiently dealt with in the first part.

OKU IBOKU/AYADEHE vis-a-vis URUAN

However, a few matters must be cleared up by way of summary review. First of all, the issue of the land and territory of AYADEHE and OKU IBOKU as part and parcel of URUAN territory now in Akwa Ibom State is unassailable and incontrovertible. Anybody who doubts can go and ask the Traditional Ruler of Itu or the Obong of Calabar where the territory belongs. Secondly, Chief Okpo Essia seems to be the Chief Dramatis persona in the two accounts except that the former sees him as an URUAN "father in-law" whereas the second version regards him as "URUAN" son in-law. Third, the second account does not make any mention of OKU IBOKU but refers to another "piece of land" near to Chief Essia's territory. Any discerning reader should be able to ask and answer the question what this nearby "piece of land" could be if not the territory heretofore known as OKU IBOKU where the Oku people came as in the second account "to settle in trickles". Fourth the very designations OKU IBOKU vis-à-vis AYADEHE are implied in the very analysis set forth herein: the one from the very fact that OKU OBOKU was populated by the people of Oku in IBOKU territory, the other in the context of the Ibibio terminology "AYA-DE-HE" a word derived from the verb "DE-HE" whether "Future Simple" = "will be sharp" or "would be sharp" in the case of sharpened knives and machetes in a war situation, OR again "FUTURE PLUPERFECT" viz. Would be Effective/Potent for juju and suchlike concoctions still for those preparing for war. URUAN/EFIK has no such vocabulary but would say on the occasion "EYE-S? P ie. "? Y? -S? P" in the case of Knives/machetes OR EYE-KAN or OYO-MUM or OYO-KOM or EYE-NYE-NE ODU-DU and suchlike expressions in the case of VOODOO. Finally, and most importantly, Ibiaku URUAN citizens had to consult and defer to the Elders of URUAN nation for a suitable land. They had no authority to allocate URUAN land especially in such a situation like this even though the land would be inhabited either by themselves in the case of AYADEHE or their in-laws or whoever in the case of OKU IBOKU. Again URUAN had to authoritatively designate the exact portion of land and the site. But nowadays we see all sorts of playing God and "BIGMANISM" in their display of BRUSAI and application of IMPUNITY. People do anything as if no higher authority exists any more. You see Politicians, Holders of Civil and Political Offices even the so-called Traditional Rulers and Kings playing God as if no other Authority Exists. The same is duplicated in towns and villages. Children and grandchildren sell off or allot land holding to all manner of people without reference to the customs, mores and traditions of the place in question. They can sell of any piece of patrimonial land holdings without any reference to their or even Village Heads. In the end all land is used up without remembering posterity. They build houses anyhow with no reference to the laws of the land whether colonial or national and with no provisions for road paths, further developments and expansion in the towns or villages. The result is that the whole place is so overcrowded that any little rain, there is massive flooding and erosion. This is not to talk of the rule of distance for building near public roads which requires at least 50 yards away from the road. At the end of it all, because of massive and fantastic corruption in the Nigerian psyche, some of the so-called Authorities, Family, Heads, etc. often "look the other way" such that people build houses and offices very close to public thoroughfares with the result that whenever these roads have to be expanded, the offenders sue for compensation and these are more often than not acquiesced to, so that they can share the compensations. There is neither law nor order in present day Nigeria, whereas such impunities should be visited with maximum penalties and bulldozers employed "with immediate effect" and the offenders made to pay to the covers of Government for the demolitions. Then Nigerians will come to their senses. How come those compensations are made to those who have broken the law in the first place? It is a very worrisome issue and other matters besides. Come to think of it, somebody sold at least 100 plots of land to a rich Government official for only N10, 000,000 (Ten Million Naira) without anybody raising any eye-brow or asking questions and without any reference at least to the head of the family, not to talk of the village or even the Clan Head – 100 plots of land sold by a son to the effect that: "it is my inheritance, it is my property"! Added to that is that buildings are constructed all over the place with no provision for playgrounds or town projects. Should any project occur, there is nowhere to site it. What type of country is this? Surely, there are existing laws and statutes, but the so-called Elders and Chiefs are lazy, incompetent and clueless. In an optimal situation, no citizen is allowed to dispose of patrimonial land holding without reference to constituted authority. The Ministry of Lands and Surveys should wake up to their responsibilities and prosecute offenders.

OLD WESTERN CALABAR 1700 - 1900 AD DEPARTURE OF ADADIA URUAN FROM WESTERN CALABAR THE EXPULSION OF THE ADADIA OF URUAN FROM PRESENT OKOYONG SETTLEMENT

We cannot do justice to this aspect of URUAN/EFIK culture history and heritage without making mention of at least some of the events that transpired at the heat of EFIK EBURUTU expansion and ascendancy just as we have done for URUAN above, but this should be left to up-coming historians and lovers of truth as also ndit? emana of URUAN/EFIK to begin from here and fill in the gaps of what remains to be said because as observed already, this is another sad commentary and irony of the rut and greed which URUAN/EFIK new comers have inveighed upon the Kingdoms. It also goes to prove what has always been known through the generations that the EFIK are no other than the descendants of ancient URUAN sea farers who discovered both the Atlantic a.k.a AKWA AKPA URUAN and ATA AKPA a.k.a Calabar. For what on earth would have prompted the proud and egoistic EFIK at this time to go struggle and even wage a war against the invading Okoyong aliens at the heels of the departure of the Adadias of URUAN from their bona fide territory of what became known as Western Calabar. Is it not for the fact that they wanted to tell the Okoyongs to their faces that they were intruders on their EFIK and by implication URUAN Big Brother's territory.

In 1703 to be precise, the Adadias of this world because they were neither spoiling for a war nor ready to fight any war of attrition with the Okoyong invaders, quietly departed the territory now occupied by Okoyong en masse carrying along all the paraphernalia of Ekpe Nkanda. I have noted elsewhere in conjunction with our treatment of Ekpe Globes and Houses that the Adadias were the Trustee Sole and custodians of Ekpe Nkanda through the generations from Usahaedet to Ibom, from Ibom to AKWA AKPA URUAN and from there to Iboku Esit Edik a.k.a Creek Town and to ATA AKPA, Calabar en route Okoyong. That war against the Okoyongs was a war of attrition in its starkest reality. Today though a distinct sub-tribe, Okoyong has no other language and culture apart from URUAN/EFIK.

OKOYONG IMMIGRATION FROM WESTERN CAMEROUN TO THEIR PRESENT LOCATION

This last mentioned group consisted of those of OKOYONG origin, a fragment of the remnants who stayed put within the Cameroun tribe and now long resident in the colonial old Calabar Division of AKAMKPA. They are also remnants of the EFUT, the bulk of whom are those now resident in Calabar South metropolis who must have occupied their present location centuries before URUAN/EFIK immigration into the present Calabar and beyond. Regarding the OKOYONG a sub-tribe, some earlier historians have reported that after having left the Cameroons, the AKPA/IKPA group first settled at Ododop in Akamkpa district. The Culture history of Okoyong solidly entrenched in Western Calabar a.k.a Okoyong is that they emigrated from Cameroun as most others of the Semi-Bantu races now occupying Southern Nigeria did, and travelling by land reached Ekang border with Nigeria. On crossing several rivers viz. Awa, Achang and Eku rivers the latter meandering and emptying itself into the Calabar/Idundu/ Atimbo Rivers, they settled at Ododop for centuries. But as their populations multiplied, and being a warlike and invading people, they fought among themselves and scattered far and near into the Nigerian territory some settling in the forest region first at Ekorn and others moving further to found Ekong Anaku while the rest moved and invaded the territory of Adadia URUAN in Western Calabar. Those groups which immigrated to Nigeria and settled in present day Nigeria include Ekorn, Korup and OBUNG while the others ERAT, IKON-KONDO and ONUM-ADUSE are still located at their primary settlement in Buea territory of Western Cameroun Republic. It is further stated that the group which migrated from Ododop to Okoyong in new Odukpani LGA were mostly those of the KORUP sub-tribe. They fought and expelled the indigenous population of URUAN Adadia and occupied the territory now renamed Okoyong. Some URUAN remnants are still residing there till today.

It will be recalled that when Calabar was liberated most of the indigenous Federal troops were Idu URUAN sons who also fought for the liberation of Okoyong in 1967. For reasons of space and costs, it may not be possible to divulge the intrigues these newly recruited URUAN – Idu sons employed for the liberation of Calabar and the mainland territory of old Uyo Province, but suffice it to say these really worked out and emboldened the Federal troupes as the war progressed to the advantage of the advancing Federal forces. That is why I am pleading with the Authorities of this nation to take URUAN/EFIK for reckoning and restore Calabar and Idu to what God Almighty had destined them to be, first by constructing Railway Terminals at Idu and Calabar, and second, by resuscitating the marine craft and our waterways up to Ikot Ana, Arochukwu, Itigidi up to Afikpo as formerly.

Nevertheless, some historians maintain that the Okeyong first immigrated to Akamkpa territory fought and lived among the Akamkpa Ejagham for a long time and multiplied there before moving to and expelling URUAN Adadia. I think this is a confusion of facts as the Ekong Anaku groups still solidly inhabit Akamkpa region as seen above. Even they still call their Chief and Head Denuo-Eno which should more correctly be Dono-da-Eno. It was later that they also fought with Old Calabar about 1878, and with Akamkpa about 1890 and finally with Odot in1921.

EFIK OF CALABAR V/S OKOYONG & CIVIL WAR: AKAMKPA VERSUS OKOYONG

We do not have the quantum of authority on the spate of happenings regarding the internecine push-push and hostilities that occurred as a result of territory acquisitions by the Okoyong between the close of the 18th century and the tail end of the 19th century of our Christian era. But it is on record that at the height of their ascendancy as one forging to becoming an acclaimed world class economic power, south of the Sahara, the EFIK had gained considerable authority as master of the coastal trade from Bonny to Afikpo all along the Cross River estuary wasters. What were their trademarks when they occupied Akamkpa and why did Akamkpa North and South descend upon them at their present location? All these are posers to prove our earlier position about ancient URUAN holdings beyond the present imaginings. Again why did Obong Akiba Akak stay put at Okoyong and his posterity are still there till today? To the left and right of Akpap Okoyong round about, and facing the Mary Slessor palace are houses belonging to ndit? IDU URUAN. But who put them there except that they are still holding fort to their inheritance there. Today there are still rumblings about these avoidable happenings simply because people have refused to remain law-abiding and to live and let live. One wonders why members from the same kindred as visitors and settlers would want to take advantage of their brothers'/sisters' liberality and generosity to dispossess their kinsmen/women who are the original and bona fide owners of the territory by force. For as the Psalmist has put it:" Behold how good and pleasant it is when brothers (and sisters) dwell in unity…It is like the dew of Hermon which falls on the mountains of Zion! For there the Lord has commanded the blessing, life forever more" (Ps 133:1-3). It was the same case with OKOYONG clan which stretches from Ekong-Anaku to Mbarakom as we shall see.

DISRESPECT FOR URUAN/EFIK CHIEFTAINCY TRADITIONS AND ELSEWHERE IN NIGERIA

This type of situation often happens because many a time out of greed, ignorance or disrespect for tradition, upstarts, impostors, foreigners, aliens, strangers and settlers including those who are even sons of royal descent but who are wicked, cultists with blood in their hands, womanizers and hedonists of rapine and iniquities, now take over control, and these epithets of pride and arrogance soon become so offensive, ignoble, spiteful and demeaning to the extent that internecine wars often ensue because more often than not, this has led to mutual acrimonies, bitterness and strife. Surely, there must be a sense of lawfulness and order for peace, harmony and progress to reign. For no people after having lived together in the land or territory as brothers and sisters for ages can now come to see or describe the other or anybody for that matter as slave, settler, alien, foreigner, "stranger element" or "ODUDUNG" except and unless things have irredeemably fallen apart and have become so fixated, rancorous, disdainful and muddled up or have taken a new turn with frayed nerves that the new comer, no matter how long he/she has settled there, he soon begins to "take over", assume undue authority, claim leadership roles and hegemony, after exhibiting an air of importance and superiority or even lordship as well as rulership over the aborigines. This has always been the beginning of the confusion, acrimony, strife and even war; ditto, the situation between the Fulani herdsmen "settlers" and the Riyoms, Junguns of Plateau State. Today this issue is becoming so intractable and lingering on for over a decade now, and is the case in point. What has happened is the same issue as was the case between URUAN/EFIK and the IBIBIO centuries before the Christian era, and later on between the IBIBIO and URUAN remnants now turned into the AROS of modern Arochukwu which led to the so called 'the "Ibibio war" when they were all at IBOM.

It is not that Nigeria's Fulanis in Kwara State, or those Fulani herdsmen in Plateau State, or even the Ibibio or Annang of Akwa Ibom State or any of the human species, whoever and wherever they may be, are found to be wicked ingrates. No, it is however that many of these awesome and treacherous persons always come in the form of true friends and neighbours to their new land of abode, and having overstayed their welcome as it seems in most cases, they now begin to foment and cause trouble with their benefactors. Yes, and with what ease they proclaim the name of God Almighty, yet only to exhibit that there is always an invisible arrow within them with which they pierce the hearts of their benefactor brothers and sisters who had received them with clean and open hearts. These are beasts in human skin that have dragged many fellow Nigerian tribes in their hospitality in the mud as happens even now in URUAN, because URUAN has always reasoned in their characteristic hospitality: 'Da owo nte owo edi owo". (6) We do not know whether we should trust people again in this wicked world because those nations and tribes including URUAN love and protect these others who have come to settle among them, but they are not loved in return. Yes, people like URUAN ditto the EFIK with clear conscience tend to trust people so easily, suspecting nothing untoward but believing everyone will be like them. Oftentimes, but always and usually, they (URUAN) must come to learn the hard way for taking people for granted and without finding out or asking questions about these new comers' intentions. They only come to discover too late.

But of course during the Stone Age, the so-called anthropoids behaving true to type, were simply beasts, living and acting so, just like those characters in the "Animal Farm" of the George Orwell fame. For this is not a question of the intransigence of those who never wanted change but wanting to or even being "traditionalistic", "tribalistic", "nationalistic", conservativistic", unprogressivistic", "aggressivistic" or whatever; "always living in the past". This is not the issue at all! It is all about living and let live, and 'being law-abiding' wherever they find themselves. That is why the Book of Life has said it in clear, unmitigated and unmistakable terms ("How good and how pleasant (Blessed) it is when brothers (and sisters) dwell together in unity! It is like the dew of Hermon which falls on the heights of Zion" (Ps. 133). But this is why URUAN/EFIK have this to say about the situation when things fall apart like this so as to be always reminded of what their proverbial and characteristic humaneness, traditional hospitality, sociability, love of fellowman has brought them (URUAN/EFIK) in their always being too hospitable, accommodating and kind to strangers. They often come too late to realize that man is but an animal who wants to grab at everything they see; not minding whether there are any "owners of things" at all, or whether in the nature and order of things," the owner is no longer and at all times the superior". (7) The youths and the new generation of URUAN/EFIK are very wary of strangers in their midst; because these more often than not abuse the hospitality and camaraderie shown them (8). As for the EFIK in particular, once beaten twice shy, and they hate the IBIBIO with a passion! That is why they snub URUAN and upbraid them for being too accommodating and too often forgetful of wrongs done them in the past and so they say to their face "sese mbufo URUAN emekabare "urua " (9). As Blessed Seneca has put it: "as long as you remain among men" ie., among the Ibibio and strangers, "you become less of men" (ie. with less of humanity, less of human behavior, less of IQ and standards (Imitation of Christ Bk 4, C). This should be enough to confine URUAN options and of others as well. We must simply learn to remain grateful to the people among whom we sojourn. Therefore, people settling among the so-called INDIGENES should endeavour at all times to be humble and law-abiding as from now. A word is enough for the wise because in clear terms it is the stranger or slave or alien who always brings trouble, betrays trust, causes strives and confusion, claims authority, assumes airs of importance, becomes arrogant and claims undue authority over their betters and owners of the land by Divine Providence.

(10) But this need not be so, because a people, a tribe or nation without stranger elements in their midst can never prosper. Any people or nation that refuses to accept or tolerate stranger elements and aliens in their midst, does so at their peril. The Israelites of old knew this too well ditto the Egyptians how-be-it even if these are treated as slaves, but they become later on the masters of the land. They always come in with their native and innate expertise like those who built the pyramids and Ramses in Egypt as also the great Temple of Jerusalem, one of the Seven Wonders of the World. Recently at the height of the Boko Haram a.k.a Jama'atu Ahliss- Sunna Lidda'awati Wal Jihad hostilities against Christians, and mostly South Easterners of Nigeria, Governor Isa Yuguda of Bauchi State in Northern Nigeria has warned his people that they should not endanger the lives of the 'strangers' in their midst adding that any State (in Nigeria) 'without strangers and non-natives cannot go far in development' (The Sunday Sun, Aloysius Attah, 5)

7. URUAN TRADITIONS, INSTITUTIONS, CULTURE & HERITAGE
CHIEFTAINCY TRADITION AND ELECTIONS IN NIGERIA

In traditional URUAN society, the administration of Law and Morality devolve primarily upon the Administration of public order (URUAN government) and Religion (mystical and supernatural forces and agencies). The aim was to effectively secure public order/harmony, crime detection, prevention and punishment by employing both human and supernatural agencies through oracles, mbiam, uka , divination, ordeals etc. Precisely because "the fear of mystical and supernatural forces was the beginning of wisdom" as the violation of laws, moral norms, customs and the committing of crimes and vices were promptly visited and punished by these hidden and unforeseen powerful forces thus making people to dread and recoil with fear at the mere mention even the threat of inveighing their wrath against law breakers and persons of immoral behaviours. Thus the deployment of Religion and mystical agencies became "the engine of the law" (Ekpo Israel, 33). It is a truism that African socio-political and cultural institutions are built on these metaphysical foundations, hence the fusion and constant interaction between the universe, our life forces and mystical /supernatural agencies. Because each individual is seen to operate on three levels of existence - viz. his personal existence, as an individual, as a family member and as a member of his/her peculiar society (kindred, clan or tribe), there is therefore a tacit solidarity and fusion between these three dimensions with all the established and structured patterns of behaviour and social, communal, socio-political relationships, such that every individual fundamentally, has communal interest for each other and his/her society /community at heart. This is with the result that there is never going to be such a thing as I, but only WE consciousness. This has been the spirit of Uruan people till today (eg. URUAN has to-date only one LGA and will remain so for some time to come despite recriminations and demonstrations from the elites of the new generation. However, the elders continue to say "NO". URUAN/EFIK believes in unity in diversity and peaceful co-existence because "Unity is Strength", modernism, Nigerian neo-politics, autonomous, individualism and narcissistic hedonism, materialism, religious relativism and amorality notwithstanding. We know that all these antithetical creeds against URUAN communal existence are not unconnected with Euro-centric culture which has permeated and almost subsumed African culture and Weltanschauung today. This has made Rev. Fr. Bisong E. Kekong to conclude that:

> If care is not taken African values, morality, and political administration will be completely obliterated due to individualism, exclusive personal achievements, profit maximization and steady progress in science and technology militating against moral integrity and societal harmony" (100)

D. RE-ORGANIZATION OF EFIK KINGDOM INTO THE NEW FIVE DISTRICTS STRUCTURE
5 PROPOSED DESIGNATED LOCAL GOVERNMENTS FROM CURRENT 3 EFIK

The present Federal Administration of the Federal Republic of Nigeria has put the entire EFIK kingdom of ancient ESSIEN EFIK DUOPEBA years before the Christian era - BC into only parts of three operating Local Government Authorities viz. Calabar North/Municipality, Calabar South and Odukpani East/West which makes nonsense of the teeming population of the EFIK EBURUTU peoples now heating the 7th digit. The main part of the whole of Cross State, prescinding from her teaming population and land mass is in EFIK territory. It is therefore suggested that since the EFIK from the days of yore till date have been organizing themselves with a twelve-district "ESSIEN EFIK DUOPEBA" structure, she should in the present circumstances in which she finds herself operate under at least FIVE designated Local Government structures to wit: Calabar District or Clan, Iboku District, Akpabuyo District, Adiabo/Odukpani District and Mbiabo/Eniong/Abayen District for the purpose of her civic and political Administration in the Federal Republic of Nigeria, while of course still retaining her twelve ESSIEN/DISTRICT/ CLAN structure for obvious reasons viz. her traditional and customary Administration in ESSIEN EFIK DUOPEBA kingdoms. The EFIK have always believed in the time tested mantra UNITY in DIVERSITY and in CO-OPERATIVE CO-EXISTENCE because "UNITY IS STRENGH" and this has always been the leit motif of our founding Fathers. Hence to continue to maintain order, solidarity, unity and strength of purpose and above all progressive standards, in all our doings in a united and indivisible Federal Republic of Nigeria, it is necessary to respect the wisdom of our forebears which is sacrosanct by building on those structures that made the EFIK dynasty enviable among her surrounding and admiring neighbours.

According to Dr. Amaku in his legendary fiction: EDIKOT ŋWED MBUK II, the EFIK kingdom which comprises 12 districts/clans while in UTUTU in Arochukwu/Igbo land was often referred to as EBURUTU, presumably after the word UTUTU which sounded in their ears as EBURUTU or HEBREW as mentioned above in Chapter I. This designation has stuck till this day. According to this legend, the twelve original Efik Clans which by implication have always been accepted by ancient URUAN also as twelve consisting of Iboku, Enwang, Abayen, Usuk-akpa, Eniong, Ito, Ukwa, Eke, Idere, Itu-mba-uzo, Biase and Ugep Eburutu. Then Biase and Ugep left first for Calabar and subsequently to where they now find themselves. These were likewise followed by Eniong, Ito, Ukwa, Eki, and Idere while Itu Mba-uzo simply moved up a bit to their present location and afterwards spread to present day Itu and its off-shoot, Obot Etim. Four clans namely Iboku, Enwang, Abayen and Usuk-Aka, sailed to URUAN who had now come out of Cameroun through Akwa Akpa Uruan. Meanwhile the following are the twelve Efik vis-à-vis URUAN Esien Duopeba formations:

[COURTESY OF CROSS RIVER STATE CLAN CREATION 1ST JAN. 1996]

E. RE-ORGANIZATION OF URUAN KINGDOM INTO THE NEW FOUR DISTRICT STRUCTURE

4 PROPOSED DESIGNATED LOCAL GOVERNMENTS FROM CURRENT URUAN LGAs

To-date URUAN has only ONE LGA and could remain so for some time to come despite recriminations and demonstrations from the elites of the new generation, but the Elders continue to say "NO". Why? According to the age-old UNITIVE MANTRA, URUAN also like her EFIK sister dynasty believes in UNITY IN DIVERSITY and in CO-OPERATIVE CO-EXISTENCE because "UNITY IS STRENGH". URUAN founding Fathers and Elders including the sage, Nsomm HRH Edidem Nyong Essien, HRH Edidem Atakpor James Udo-Afia, and others with this Author as champions of URUAN UNITY, continue to maintain as had been previously held, that the creation of more than ONE LGA in URUAN cannot be the only mechanism for expediting development in the clans, towns and villages in URUAN. Even though our constitutional assumption of equality of Local Governments and States in Nigeria on the basis of "Rawlings justice and equity" for sharing the national cake and largesse, it is nonetheless our contention that the creation of more LGAs in URUAN can achieve the aim of duplicating administrative bureaucracies. Rather than develop on the basis of their own economic growths, these new LGAs will only tend to become more dependent on either the STATE or the Federal Government for survival if not strangled by the now Akwa Ibom State Government under which they will be administered. The only visible development that can accrue to URUAN will be perhaps the development of the administrative headquarters in the new proposed 4 LGAs with added administrative burdens which do not promote capital projects of any meaningful consequence, and this certainly cannot allow industries, infrastructure and employments to flourish. But considering our modern trends and on account of modernism, neo-politics, individualism and narcistic hedonism, materialism, religious relativism and amorality, URUAN can join in the campaign for new LGAs in the hope that people will work towards taking the area to a developmental status in terms of attracting other Nigerians to URUAN to join them in building such Development Authority Areas as is now happening in Lagos State with the creation of 37 quasi LGAs a.k.a Development Council in addition to the original 20 LGA by the Asiwaju Bola Tinubu Administration (1999 - 2007). We have now come to know that all these antithetical creeds against URUAN communal existence are not unconnected with Euro-centric culture which has permeated and almost subsumed African culture and Weltanschauung today. This has made Rev. (Prof) Fr. Bisong E. Kekong to conclude that:

> "If care is not taken African values, morality, and political administrationwill be completely obliterated due to individualism, exclusive personal achievements, profit maximization and steady progress in science and technology militating against moral integrity and societal harmony" (Bisong E. Kekong, 100)

This may therefore inform the anguish and clamour for a Sovereign National Conference but which the Federal Government administrations, one after the other has continued to drag her feet, including the so-called indissoluble Almighty North which has time and time again tried to bamboozle and gag the progressive nationalities especially of the Western and South Eastern States which have always advocated and reasoned out, and calling for an urgent and immediate prompt convocation of the Conference for the survival of a united, indivisible and one Nigeria of our dream. But this had always remained a tall dream and just for a matter of time before the eventful clock inexorably ticks for her imminent and irreversible collapse as a failed nation. God forbid!

Nevertheless, with half-hearted and grudgingly contrived pronouncement of the October 1st. 2013 National Day by the Head of State, Dr.Goodluck Ebele Azikiwe Jonathan coming from one of the progressive States in Nigeria, viz. the South South has summoned courage and put its foot on the ground to say that such a Conference or Dialogue or whatever name called, can at long last be feasible especially with his setting up of the Dr. Femi Okorounmu-led Advisory Committee on National Dialogue to prepare the modalities for such a talk-shop while concerned Nigerians are still wondering whether this would not be another fool-hardy and waste of time exercise with the aim of fooling the Nigerian civil society again, especial now with the 2015 General Elections just at the door. This is not necessarily sounding the death knell of the nation or an empty unpatriotic prophecy of doom, but rather a definite clarion call for lovers of this country to wake up and heed the advice of our amiable Head of State, His Excellency, Dr Goodluck Jonathan and save Nigeria from the clutches of her unrepentant, reckless, wicked, unproductive and unprogressive oppressors of mankind. Nonetheless, Nigerian citizens must wake up in order to build a new united, prosperous, progressive nation of equity and civil order national RESTRUCTURES.

NB. All Village Heads & their Councils should convene and fill in the gabs according to their original identifiable kindreds & areas. To be sure, try and visit Idu, or Ekpene Ukim, or Ndon Ebom or Ibiaku Uruan/Eman to find out how their original and traditional kindreds and villages are constituted. eg. If you ask anybody in Idu :Where is Ikot Osurua Village or Ikot Ekang or Ikot Enam etc? you will be shown or directed thereto and you will have no problem in locating the territory, streets and town halls. Nowhere should be so designated as VILLAGE WITHOUT THESE LAND MARKS. Map out your appropriate Villages now because they will be visited by AKS Local Government & Chieftaincy Affairs both from the STATE & URUAN LGAs.

N O T E S

1. There is always a 'BRUSAI' in upstarts and nonentities who fake authority, influence and use brute force and try to exhibit exceptional strength and valour to hoodwink these abased citizens and thereby capture and claim power and positions in the society.
2. The traditional 'anointing' and declaration of an URUAN Traditional Ruler/Monarch designate who has been duly and unanimously been elected or appointed thus, always takes place with the adornment of UDAK at the national shrine and theatre at AKWAAKPA URUAN 'forest'- ISO ATAKPO at the Cross River estuary where the deity is believed to reside.
3. This is a typical Catholic principle to the effect that once the "King or Royal father" is converted then the whole territory has been won for the Lord. The legendary Bishop Josef Shanahan used this principle and method in winning the good will of the Obi of Onitsha in the 1900s and the whole of Igbo land was won for Christ despite the fact that the Church Missionary Societies of England were the first to evangelize South Eastern Nigeria.
4. This is because as the saying goes, once the master/mistress is away, the cripple in the house can afford to even dare put his/her dirty hands into the drinking water pot without any qualms. Can you beat that? Just imagine the temerity; no fear of anything not even suspecting that the master/mistress or the children could just turn up unexpectedly! The implication should not be lost to us. URUAN are so docile and complaisant, hence anybody can take them for a ride.
5. On this matter it is always wise to note these proverbs and wise sayings in URUAN which go like this:

   'SIK SANG, SIK SAnG 'B' OWO ITIE: koro, "Mf?n okowot Ayaiyo-o!, which literally translated means 'dress down, pleased dress down for me to sit also', and in so doing the new comer pushes down the owner of the place (seat) and the person falls over the ground. It is not just giving the person space to sit, but 'SIK SAnG' and saying it repeatedly, such that the owner willingly, unreservedly and gratuitously continues to dress down and is thereby knocked over with injuries: That serves him right, you would say. Isn't it so! As the story has it, there once lived a rich, noble, generous and philanthropic chieftain, (IYAY-IYO whose legendary charitable activities once caught up with him, and as the story went, his very beneficiary after being bestowed with more than he needed planned to and killed him (IYA-IYO his benefactor) to take full possession of his heritage: Same episode like the parable of Jesus about the ungrateful tenants of the vineyard who killed all the King's messengers and finally ended up beheading the heir apparent, his only son and heir, in order to take possession of the lucrative vineyard; Mt 21:33-46. Even URUAN/EFIK have put this into a song to demonstrate what ingratitude can do:'Nk?k ib?k nn? usine enyene edet ndom, Ah okom esikpo ebi Ah! Mb?k eyen nn? Eka okpon ama ?ny? , Ah okom esikpo ebi Ah! meaning I have prepared medicine for the squirrel to get teeth, but it she has used the very teeth to bite me; I have groomed a child for the mother, and after growing up it has run away!) There is nothing bad in trust, just that the heart of man is wicked; because many who act like this according to one writer in criminology as he put it said:"they simply are anthropological throwback from the Stone Age".
6. This same saying is simply URUAN application of the Gospel injunction: ie. 'treat every soul as if yourself, because he/she is also a fellow human being like yourself' ie. ("Do unto others as you would want them do unto you" Mt 7:13-14 :)
7. There is another proverb in URUAN/EFIK that: 'Andinyene edi akamba') In fact another URUAN/EFIK proverb which goes like this: "Ama okut Ibibio ekun? ika , koro idem ama asat Ibibio oyowot owo".
8. Never again help the drowning IBIBIO and by implication any neighbour, alien, stranger, or visitor among you; for whenever he is saved from the water, given first aid and fire made to keep him warm; immediately he gets better and regains strength, he will 'MOST CERTAINLY' snarl and snap at you and tear you to pieces if not brutalize and murder you.
9. This is an IBIBIO slang for renegades and worthless people to be cast away like excreta.
10. Oduduy asara asari, kpa enye esin ntime, enye ada mfina ye ut?k edi. Enye onyu oyom udi, ebi ubi, anam mbubik, anwana enwan, oyom owo ik?, ?d?k edid?k, efik owo…sia enyene obio anam nkp? esie etebede-tebe; enye iyomke mfina-o!

CHAPTER VIII

PART 1

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN CHURCHES IN URUAN/EFIK 1846-2018

His Lordship James Moynagh

Bishop Ajayi Crowther

Rev Hope Masterson Waddell

A THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH a.k.a. CHURCH OF SCOTLAND MISSION

In 1846, in response to several requests and the invitations of the Kings and Rulers of Calabar viz, King Eyo Honesty of Creek Town (Iboku Esit Edik) and King Eyamba of Duke Town (Atakpa a.k.a Iboku Utan) to the Church of Scotland Mission for 'men of book' to come and give their people an opportunity to learn the mysteries behind the white man's technological superiority(ie. the white man's book), and to enable them 'know book', the United Section Church of Scotland and the Scottish Missionary Society (SMS) jointly sent out a team of missionaries to Calabar. With Rev. Hope Masterson Waddell, a cool-headed man of practical mind and diplomatic skills who had previous missionary work experience in Jamaica-the West Indies as leader, Mr./Mrs. Samuel Edgerly, his son George, E. Miller and A. Chisholm as members of the team, set out for the West Coast of Africa and arrived Duke Town Calabar on 10th April, 1846. In appreciation and for the opportunity 'to learn book', these Chiefs and kings guaranteed land and protection for their settlement on the shores were even prepared to compromise some of their age-old traditions. These Missionaries with their connections to the British gun-boats were not only looked upon as vehicles for technical progress, but also as an insurance against the hostilities of the foreign European traders and slave lords. This pioneering work of spreading Christianity as intensified by the European missionary activities on the Nigeria West Coast in the 19th century, were also connected with the Evangelical and anti-slavery movement in Britain under the motto “The Bible and the Plough” which among others aimed at the abolition of slave trade in Africa and the promotion of 'legitimate' trade through encouragement of intensive agriculture. But this policy was soon replaced with the 'Christianity, Commerce and Civilization crusade' for colonizing and civilizing Africa along the British model of civilization. As observed earlier the spread of Christianity in Eastern Nigeria was pioneered by the Church Missionary Society (CMS) in the Niger Delta and Calabar area, exclusively by the Presbyterian mission. In , more missionaries came to Calabar and were divided among the principal Efik settlements: Rev.Hope Waddell was based at Creek Town, Rev. Hugh Goldie at Atakpa - Duke Town, and Rev. Samuel Edgerly at Old Town – Nsidung a.k.a. Henshaw Town. Each missionary station was situated on the hills above Calabar River as an autonomous complex consisting of a mission house or parsonage, a church and school serviced by surrounding farmlands and gardens and a small cemetery. Each mission also had its own dispensary, landing beach and some boats. Two schools were established, one at Creek Town and the other at Duke Town. Most of the evangelization was carried out by West Africans – the black West Indians of the mission viz. the Sierra Leoneans employed along the coast and the returnee Brazilians, some of whom were Yorubas, etc. who played the role of local catechists and teachers. All these got their moral and material support and protection from the mission establishment. Others acted as preachers, advisers and dispensers, and also as farmers, carpenters, printers and builders. Later as they gained more knowledge of the white man's book them, they also served as linguists, diplomats and even as Vice-Consuls and Native Courts presidents on behalf of the colonial authorities.

These early missionary workers spent most of their time and life on the missions and were eager and ready to tolerate personal discomfort and sacrifices. They were guided by idealistic fervour and desire to promote both the material and moral well-being of the Africans. By 1857 six schools, three churches and three mission houses were built and new mission stations were opened. In 1856 the station at Ikon Eto was opened, similarly in 1858 another station was opened at Ikot Offiong. These were financed by contributions from the church congregations in Scotland including the mission children's mission funds as also rich Liverpool merchants. By 1870 more stations were established along the coasts in URUAN, Okoyong and Edik Ikpa and later Ikpa Ene and other URUAN riverine stations notably at Ikpa, Mbiaya, Ibiaku Uruan, Idikpe and Ifiayong Obot all in URUAN North which were URUAN trading posts and slave beach markets. Here it should be noted that the activities of the representatives of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland were somewhat restricted to the coasts of Calabar and Uruan areas of operation where the people were taken to be of the same stock both speaking the same dialects of what later became EFIK language. This was so because URUAN now turned the Efik with their innate business acumen as observed already in Chapter I, wanted to retain their position as the only middle men/women throughout the 1700s/1800s instead of allowing the Supercargoes establish trading posts within the interior. They were powerful enough to prevent the Europeans whether as traders or missionaries from having free access through the Cross River. It was only later on with the increasing British interest and maneuvres that it became inevitable that this situation would change such that by 1885 the entire coastal region of what soon became Calabar Province was brought under British rule with the creation of the Oil Rivers Protectorate in 1891 and the entire interior becoming part of the Niger Coast Protectorate with Calabar as the Headquarters of all these administrations.

OPENING UP OF THE MAINLAND BY CSM

Later in the 1880s Efik supremacy was broken by the increasing European access to and penetration of the Cross River and the Missionaries were able to move into the Ibibio hinterland in the mainland part of old Calabar Province notably Itu, Ibiono Ibom, Arochukwu etc. Further extension work took them across the Cross River tributaries where they also established mission stations along Itigidi, Obubra, Ikom, and well into Igbo land mostly in Abia and Ebonyi States where stations like Bende, Ohafia, Uzuakoli, Edda etc were also opened in the early 1900s. These early missionaries were careful to cultivate the goodwill and friendship of traditional rulers and heads of families like Henry Cobham, head of Cobham Town, and other wealthy rulers like Adam Duke, Ironbar, Bassey Offiong and Obong Ekong Essien Oku of Duke Town, King Eyo Honesty II of Creek Town among others. A person like King Eyo Honesty as their permanent host was both interpreter and assistant. Later on, mission house boys and wealthy traders like Effiom a.k.a Ephraim Otu, Offiong Uwe and Chief Onoyom Ita Nya from Akani Obio Uruan helped in the penetration of the interior. It should also be remarked that the situation greatly curtailed the influence o Efik traditional rulers especially with the introduction and appointment of "Native Political Agents" a.k.a WARRANT CHIEFS who came to occupy the influential position of middle men between the colonial power and the populace at large. The role of Traditional Rulers was reduced to the ceremonial and decorative levels whereas the substance of power was elsewhere. By 1902 the title of Dukes and Kings was annulled and replaced by that of Obong by which the paramount Rulers of Creek Town and Duke Town ie. Calabar were to be styled – hence the "OBONG OF CALABAR". (Elections were conducted to these colonial positions and the last analysis all these lay with the British appointed High Commissioner as noted already. When we look at the whole scenario, it is history repeating itself in the worst calculations imaginable because as discussed already in Chapet VII, the neo-politicians of Nigeria have rubbished and basterdadized the entire plan of God Almighty by instituting themselves into creators and potentates with powers to bring about the selection of natural rulers for the people through their politization and monetization of Chieftaincy Affairs which only belongs to God thus turning politicians of natural rulers to subvert the civil order in the country. Nowadays Governors and Local Government have the Traditional Rulers in their pockets even to the extent of "recognizing" and "firing" if it is only demoting or suspending them at it pleases their fancy if they do not play ball. But in the whole wide world, who is he that gave them authority over natural rulers in the first place? It is a situation that has left the entire citizenry where this cries to the high heavens sway leaving the poor citizenry prostrate. It will be worse in the future if this is not addressed before it gets out of hand because it has begun to make political patronage even to the level of elections monetized thus making political positions become cash and carry; the "agbata ?k??" – situation of "you chop, I chop" syndrome as captured in the mantra of Nigerian politics by politicians who lack every degree of self discipline and emotional intelligence required to run a democratic system for good governance. This is because ethnicity, partisanship, "god-fatherism" primitive acquisition and personal aggrandizement have taken over the front stage of Nigerian politics which are militating against the ethos of progress and socio-political change. The result is that nothing works and there is not going to be any progress and change in the lives of the masses in the country side. Again in Calabar even the powers and positions of heads of Royal Houses and Families viz. the Etuboms were similarly reduced (which of course failed woefully; trust URUAN/EFIK) but the British still had their way. Calabar itself as Headquarters lost its position to Lagos when the Protectorate of Southern Nigeria was amalgamated with the Colony of Lagos in 1906 and Sir Walter Egerton transferred thither. Lagos from then became the seat of Government and Headquarters with momentous amalgamation in January 1914 of the colonies and protectorates of Northern and Southern Nigeria by the British schemer and architect, Lord Frederick Lugard even through Independence era until the not too recent transfer to ABUJA by the Murtala Muhammed administration in 1976 with Calabar being reduced to a mere provincial Headquarters out of the four Lugard created East of the Niger. Calabar was to be further humiliated, this time around by the East Nigerian Authorities with the Igbo colonization of Port Harcourt far into Kalabari URUAN/EFIK speaking territory and most profoundly with the transfer of its major sea port in the East to Port Harcourt thus cutting her off from the trade with the interior as formerly.

CONSTITUTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF CSM

But that is not exactly the issue here because it was also through this first wave of contact vouchsafed by the early Portuguese Catholic Missionaries under the protection of Portugal that these missionaries from their different Congregations as also their navigators were involved in the encounter with the West Coast Africa. In 1987 the General Assembly of the PCN was constituted with two Synods the proceedings of which declared the new position of the Head with the designation of Moderator. The Assembly also approved the new designation: The Presbyterian Church of Nigeria - PCN thus discarding the old tag: Church of Scotland Mission - CSM. In 1993 the PCN established her first Seminary which has now been upgraded to the Hope Waddell University located at Okagwe Ohafia in Abia State of Nigeria with the Motto: "Excellence, Integrity and Service." Recent Synods organized by the General Assembly have instituted the following new structures in the church viz. the Session, the Presbytery, the Synod and General Assembly. A parish consists of one to nine Congregations depending on the size. These Congregations are ruled by Elders and Deacons. Several churches constitute a regional Presbytery while the Presbyters constitute the Synod with the General Assembly as the Supreme Court. To date a number of those early churchmen since the 1980s have been elected Moderators. I can still remember some of my bosom friends like Rev. E. Ogarekpe and recently Rev. Prof. Emele Mba Uka of the University of Calabar who is now the current Moderator of the church. With this new structure, organization and new impetus of evangelism the Presbyterian Church of Nigeria – PCN has spread across the entire country with various Synods in Awka, Calabar, East, East Central, Mid East, North, South Central Upper Cross River and Synod of the West. Today there is a magnificent Church in Uyo as headquarters of the Church in Akwa Ibom State. (Cf.http://www.presbyterianchurchng.com) vouchsafed by the early Portuguese Catholic Missionaries under the protection of Portugal that these missionaries from their different Congregations as also their navigators were involved in the encounter with the West Coast Africa. B THE METHODIST CHURCH aka THE WESLEY MISSION

THE METHODIST CHURCH OF NIGERIA: THE THIRD CHURCH IN URUAN/EFIK

The Methodist Church founded by the Wesley Brothers, John and Charles, together with a fellow cleric, Rev. George Whitefield in Britain, was originally an evangelical movement known as Methodism, and later as Wesleyan Church. John Wesley was an Anglican cleric and Christian theologian born on June 28, 1703 and died on March 2, 1791. His works and writings also played a leading role in the development of The Holiness Movement and Pentecostalism. The Methodist Church Nigeria was founded 170 years ago on the 24th September 1842 when one Anglo-African Missionary, Thomas Birch Freeman arrived at the muddy creeks of Badagry in modern day Lagos, Nigeria and opened a church there for the spread of the good news of salvation of the Lord Jesus. About the man himself, he was born the son of an African freeman and an English mother on December 6, 1809. He first landed in what was then known as Gold Coast in West Africa, now Ghana and soon ventured into the creeks of what is today regarded as the bacon of Western civilization and Christianity in Nigeria viz. Badagry. Here he made up his mind to see to the spread of the Gospel in pagan Africa. Not too long he made his impact felt by establishing schools and hospitals and at the same time penetrating the hinterland with the Gospel. In contact with his home Wesley Guild of Britain, he was able to establish a number of hospitals and clinics all over the place, the first being the Wesley Guild hospital at Ilesha through the pioneering work of David Morley, Margaret Woodland with Doctor Andrew Pearson as the first Medical Director. With the raging scourge of leprosy all over the place at the time especially around Uzuakoli area in modern Abia State, they built a magnificent leprosy centre which catered for over 5000 patients as also a psychiatric hospital at Itumbauzo a.k.a. Itumbonuso of ancient URUAN. The Wesley church also established many schools both Nusery/Primary and Secondary usually known in those days as Methodist Boys High Schools or Methodist Girls High schools as the case might be. In particular, the Wesley church berthed as it were in URUAN/EFIK in the early 1900s. The Methodist Church at Calabar is situated at no. 13 Beecroft Street and from here the church spread to different areas across the length and breadth of Cross River and what is now Akwa Ibom State. The church has a number of branches known as circuits scattered all over Cross River and stretching to Ikom in Northern Cross River but here in Calabar there are two main churches, the mother church at Beecroft and another at Atamunu. In Akwa Ibom State there are hundreds of circuits spread across six dioceses known as Conferences viz. Uyo, Oron, Adadia, Oyubia, Eket and Ikono including those in ancient Oron territory with many branches scattered all over the length and breadth of Akpakip Aro both in Okobo, Oyubia, Oron, Ebughu, Udung Uko, Enwang and Mbo etc. with its famous Boys High School and Mary Haney Girls College at Esin Ufot ie. ORON town. In URUAN in particular, the church was established almost at the same time it berthed in Calabar with headquarters at Adadia. Most of the earlier circuits and parishes are to be found in Ituk Mbang, Ikot Oto Inyie, Issiet Ekim, and Idu Capital and formerly in Use Uruan with Adadia as the central church and diocesan Headquarters.

In the early 1960s, the church adopted a new Constitution which saw Patriarch E.B. Idowu as Head of the Church in Nigeria. With still another special Constitution at an Emergency Conference which was presided over by the outgoing Prelate, Dr. Sunday Makinde during its 44th Special Conference at the Williams Memorial Methodist Cathedral in Ago-Ijaiye, Ebute Metta West on September 1st 2013, this 1st Emergency Conference of the Methodist Church Nigeria which dates back to 1906 installed the Most Rev. Samuel Uche, formerly the Archbishop of Enugu Diocese as the new administrative head of the church. Thus the church has now been firmly established in Nigeria. The African predecessors of Patriarch Uche had been first the legendary Archbishop E.B. Idowu, followed by Sunday Mbang, himself a proud son of ancient URUAN/EFIK from modern Oron, then my amiable student in the first batch of the inauguration of the University of Calabar in the late 1970s Archbishop Sunday Ola Makinde. Rev. Uche's emergence as the preferred prelate-elect has been largely due to the church's commitment to true democratic principles that are primarily based on integrity and transparency following the Constitution of the church which stipulates that a prelate should be elected among bishops and archbishops whose ages must be 60 years old or slightly above. It means that since a prelate is expected to serve a single term of five years, no bishop or archbishop that has already clocked 65 years by election time would be deemed eligible for the position.

C. THE CHURCH MISSIONRY SOCIETY OF NIGERIA a.k.a ANGLICAN CHURCH/ANGLICAN COMMUNION

The Anglican church is often regarded as the New Testament Church in Nigeria and this information is gathered from the findings of the Seminarians of Immanuel College of Theology and Christian Education, Ibadan, Oyo, Nigeria by way of supplying answers to the Questionnaire given to them by the Rev. Olukayode Adebogun who eventually wrote about the Anglican Church of Nigeria in December 2002. The Anglican Church of Nigeria is part of the world-wide Anglican Episcopal Communion. It is in full communion with the Archdiocese of Canterbury. It is acclaimed to be the fastest growing and the largest as also the model in the Anglican World in the light of the New Testament church since it has reflected the pattern of a true evangelical New Testament Church tradition in every aspect of her life in a changing world and society. It is important to mention that Rev. Adebogun from whose documentary analysis I garnered this information is a full time priest in the Anglican Church of Nigeria. There are three provinces of the Anglican church of Nigeria today. There are also various forms of government viz. Episcopal, Congregational etc. The Nigerian Anglican Congregation has chosen to adhere to the Episcopal system. The three forms of leadership/ordained ministry of the Anglican Communion includes the deaconate, priesthood and bishopric. The process of ordination and selection of candidate for ordination has a long history rooted in tradition and generally the church is evangelical in nature holding to the doctrine and ministry of the one, holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church, and in communion with the See of Canterbury. Anglicanism initially grew from the historic faith of the English-speaking peoples but is now present in many different cultures and languages. The Anglican Communion is 70 million strong and there are 15 million members in the Church of Nigeria alone today.

REV HENRY TOWNSEND: OPENING OF THE 1ST CMS AT BADAGRY

As noted above it was the first wave of contact vouchsaved by the the early Portuguese Catholic Missionaries under the protection of Portugal that these missionaries from their different Congregations as also their navigators to the West Coast of Africa and by implication Nigeria. The second wave of missionary activity in the 19th century West African sub-region started with the Protestants. The sheer burden of this missionary enterprise lay with the liberated slaves as also the faithful lay men and women of the region.The Yoruba librated slaves from Liberia and Sierra Leone were the most enterprising both in commerce and in the spreading of Christianity. The growth of the Church of Nigeria (Anglican Communion) since the end of the Slave Trade was a very rapid one. It is interesting to note that within the last two centuries, Christianity and indeed Anglicanism, which started like child's play in Badagry (Barry Ferguson ed, 34), and Abeokuta (Robert J. Page, 134.) has spread like wild fire to all nooks and crannies of our country Nigeria. Christianity (Catholicism) which came into Nigeria in the 15th century was through the efforts of the Augustinian and Capuchin monks from Portugal. However, it was not until 1842 when Henry Townsend a Missionary of the Church Missionary Society sowed the seed of the Gospel when he landed in Badagry from Freetown Sierra Leone. Together with Samuel Ajayi Crowther a Yoruba ex-slave and returnee from Sierra Leone to Abeokuta, Henry Townsend who was later ordained priest in the Anglican Church of England in 1842 established the church first at Badagry in the same year. With the untiring efforts of these two Evangelists, Nigerians began to believe in Jesus as the Lord and Savior of the entire world and so, on December 25, 1842 in Abeokuta, Nigerians were able to celebrate for the very first time, the glorious Annunciation of the Saviour, who is Christ the Lord. Thus the 1st Christmas was born. They gave glory to God Almighty, experiencing the peace and joy of the Lord for which Anglicanism had been noted in Nigeria. In 1846, the same year the Church of Scotland missionaries, the Presbyterians landed in Calabar, the Rev Samuel Ajayi Crowther, The Rev Henry Townsend in the company of Rev Golmer and Mr. Philips worked together to consolidate the Church Missionary Society in what became known as the Yoruba mission. In 1857, The Rev. Samuel Ajayi Crowther led the CMS Niger Mission to Onitsha and environs to found a formidable native pastorate. He was elected Bishop in 1864 and posted to the See of the Niger and the Church of the Nigeria held sway till the formation of three provinces. Lagos became a Diocese on December 10, 1919 with F. Melville Jones as Bishop and Isaac Oluwole the Assistant Bishop. Before then the retired Bishop H. Tugwell acted as the Bishop on the Niger before Bishop Lasbrey's consecration in 1922. Rev.Leslie Gordon Vining succeeded

Jones as Bishop of Lagos, and with this the Anglican Church in Nigeria had now opened a new vista. Before 1955 when he died at sea, Vining, the last "white" Bishop of Lagos and the first Archbishop of the Province of West Africa inaugurated giant strides to expand the frontiers of the Anglican Church, training scores of young and dynamic Nigerian priests. Finally the Anglican Church arrived in Calabar in 1909 and since then 12 dioceses had now been created throughout Nigeria. (Adebogun Olukayode, 232)

After due process, the sixteen dioceses in Nigeria have been constituted into the three Provinces of Nigeria on the Feast of St. Mathias, February 24, 1979 with the Rt. Revd. Dr. Timothy O. Olufosoye the Bishop of Ibadan, as first African Archbishop, Primate and Metropolitan of Nigeria. Under Olufosoye, eight new dioceses were created viz. Kano Jos, Akoko, Owo, Akure, Orlu, Remo, Awka, and Osun. Upon the election of the Rt. Rev J. Abiodun Adetiloye, Bishop of Lagos his successor, as the second Archbishop, Primate and Metropolitan of Nigeria on April 14, 1988 and his presentation in June, the Church of Nigeria was launched on a growing fast lane. The Diocese of Abuja, covering the new Nigeria Federal Capital Territory, was inaugurated on November 26, 1989 with the Rt. Rev Peter J. Akinola, erstwhile Missioners, as Bishop. In 1990 the year following was declared the decade of evangelism. With unsurpassed missionary zeal, Archbishop Adetiloye initiated deft moves that culminated in the unprecedented consecration of eight missionary Bishops including the diocesan Bishop of Kano in April 1990 at St. Michael Anglican Cathedral, Kaduna, the 1st in this predominantly Muslim Northern Nigeria. Eight other missionary Dioceses were inaugurated in September 1990 as follows: Minna, Kafanchan, Katsina, Sokoto, Makurdi, Yola, Maiduguri, and Bauchi. Similarly the dioceses of Egbado, now Yewa and Ife were inaugurated in November 1990. Two more missionary dioceses of Calabar and Uyo also followed. That was why by then the Church of Nigeria, Anglican Communion had been proclaimed by the Archbishop of Canterbury as "the fastest growing church in the Anglican Communion worldwide! (Hilderbrandt Jonathan, 122) The first Anglican Bishop of Calabar was Canon W. Ekprikpo whose daughter was my student at the University of Calabar. She became a Catholic and was married at the Sacred Heart Cathedral by the legendary Archbishop Brian D. Usanga. The following Sunday both of us together with a large congregations of Sacred Heart Cathedral Catholic members attended the thanksgiving service at the Holy Trinity Anglican Cathedral Calabar and since then with his successor, Bishop E. E. Adeleye, also my student, the Church has grown in leaps and bounds throughout the entire territory of URUAN/EFIK.

CREATION OF ANGLICAN PROVINCES BY ARCHBISHOP ADETILOYE

To complete this analysis of the growth of the Church in Nigeria as living up to its billing, the church in Nigeria under Adetiloye created the dioceses of Oke-Osun, Sabongidda-Ora in 1993; Okigwe North and South in 1994), and between July and November 1995, Ikale-Ilaje, Kabba, Nnewi, Egbu, and Niger Delta North. Then in December 1996, five more missionary dioceses were inaugurated in the North: Kebbi, Dutse, Damaturu, Jalingo and Otukpo. The diocese of Wusasa and Abakaliki followed in 1997. The autonomous diocese of Ughelli and Ibadan North were inaugurated in 1998. Definitely the golden year which produced the largest number of dioceses was 1999 when four dioceses were inaugurated, namely; Oji River, Ideato, Ibadan south, and Offa, and then later in November eight new Dioceses viz. Lagos West, Ekiti West, Gusau, Gombe, Niger Delta West, Gwagwalada, Lafia, and Bida. The year ended with Oleh diocese on December 21. But considering the sheer vastness of the Church of Nigeria, the Anglican Communion, it was split into three Provinces on 20th September 1997 for effective management as earlier mentioned. It must be noted that these expansions and creation of dioceses were as a result of increase in the number of believers in the mission. Many followers had been added to the Anglican Church hence the need for decentralization. It was also the plan to reach out to other untouched areas/peoples. The expansion also brought the leadership closer to the people and helped churches to be united as partners in the missionary progress. The first Province now consists of the dioceses in the West which was headed by Archbishop J. Adetiloye himself as the Primate of All Nigeria. Province two consisted of the Eastern Dioceses with the Rt. Revd. Ben. Nwankiti of Owerri succeeded after his retirement in 1998 by Archbishop J. A. Onyemelukwe, Bishop on the Niger, while Province three consisted of the Northern dioceses with the Archbishop of Abuja with the Rt. Revd. Dr. Peter J. Akinola who later succeeded Adetiloye in 2000 as the new Primate Archbishop of Nigeria and now by Archbishop Niocholas Okoh. The Anglican Church of Nigeria has complete faith in the Almighty God and will go to where he leads striving to be more efficient and effective in the management of its resources, creating a sound financial base for itself and become more tolerant in intra-and inter-religions affairs. The Church of Nigeria is waxing strong as the spiritual, dynamic, united, viable living, caring, loving, relevant, Godly, Christ-Like, reformed, Charismatic and well ordered, evangelical, enterprising, disciplined, knowledgeable, bible based, growing, faithful, self supporting church ever self supporting and committed to pragmatic evangelism, social welfare and as the Church that epitomizes the genuine love of Christ. Finally let us in summary and conclude quoting Rev. Olukayode Adebogun:

> The CMS of London started in the CMS of London started in the year 1799 and was God's Agent of bringing the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ to Nigeria. Starting as CMS Schools, hospitals and Churches. The present Church of Nigeria, Anglican Communion was formed and has now grown to 77Dioceses as the fastest growing church in the Anglican Communion in the world. In 1994, between 4th - 8th July, a Provincial Missions Conference was held in Jos at the end of which a recommendation to establish a Mission Body was sent to the Episcopal Synod which considered and ratified the recommendation at her standing Committee Meeting in September 1994 at Erunwon in Ijebu Diocese. This independent and indigenous Missionary Body was inaugurated on 15th September 1996 at the Cathedral Church of Christ, Lagos Under an eighteen-man Executive council. CMS has the manifesto of Luke 4:18-19 to organize rescue operations as a mission agent of the Anglican Communion, taking the mission of God's love and reconciliation to every home in Nigeria, Africa and beyond.(Adebogun Olukayode)

D THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH a.k.a. CHURCH MISSION

The year 1918, popularly tagged in URUIAN/EFIK land as Isua Effiom Nsa – a.k.a the year of Influenza epidemic worldwide, marked the beginning of what is now known as the Apostolic Church, because in that year there were certain rumblings in the Church of England as some gentlemen and ladies in the Church felt they were schemed out in the run of things in the Church and therefore decided to stage a show and damn the consequences. In the church where some were engaged in the healing Ministry, some members of the Diamond Society in 1921decided to move on and get affiliated with the Faith Tabernacle Movement – still a protestant scion which had broken away in the early 19th century. At this time also some members of the Church of England in Lagos got wind of this and so began their correspondences with the Group Overseas. Three Delegates were dispatched in the persons of J.J.Williams, A. Turnbell and W. J. Williams to Lagos to find out the situation there, and these arrived in Lagos on 3rd September, 1931. Soon doctrinal matters began to occupy the centre stage of this new missionary enterprise and in 1932 Pastors G. Perfect and I. Vaugham came down to Lagos as the first Resident Missionaries. In Nigeria the church flourished and spread till it berthed in Calabar and IDU still within the 1930s. Up to this the Apostolic Church was organized as a Missionary Church just like the other Missionary churches in Nigeria and Church Organization and Administration were still directed from Overseas.

But by 1981 the Church had come of age within its 50 years of existence. To mark its Golden Jubilee which was celebrated in grand style at Calabar, the whole Church assembled thither for the epoc making Celebration. I was the Secretary General of the Bible Society of Nigeria, South East Area then, one of the ten Zonal and Provincial Administrative divisions of the Organization in Nigeria with Pastor G. Williams as President General and then Archbishop F. Arinze of the Archdiocese of Onitsha as Vice President General. I therefore made sure the entire Oecumenical Churches in our region attended the Rally and these comprised Units from Abia with Headquarters at St. Michael's Anglican Communion Aba, the Units from Old Rivers now comprising Bayelsa and Rivers State with Headquarters at Port Harcourt and Units from Old Cross River with Headquarters at Calabar. The Ceremonies were held at the No.13 Edgerly Apostolic Church Calabar. Therefore for the first time in the history of the Church, the first ever indigenous President of the Church in the person of Pastor Eyo Edet Okon, himself a proud indigene of Iboku Esit Edik a.k.a Creek Town was sanctioned as Field President General. He had since 1956 acted as Church Field Superintendent, Overseer and Chief Pastor of the Apostolic Church right in Lagos. Great Calabar sons like Pastor E.O.Asuquo, E.A. Asuquo etc. had championed the cause of the church at those times in Calabar. In 2002 at the usual December Convention, Pastor J.O. Arikpo was nominated Assistant Field Superintendent with new Constitution creating the following four Administrative Areas of the Church viz. Creek Town, Akpap Okoyong, Okurikang and Atan Onoyom in Enyong. Enyong has now been divided into three zones with three new Field Areas namely, Esin Ufot, Ikot Hogan-Hohan Bassey and Obom Itiat. The current National Field Superintendent is Pastor E.O. Hogan.

BREAK-AWAY CHURCHES AT INCEPTION

In 1909, William Oliver Hutchinson broke away and started a Pentecostal Church in Britain at the Emmanuel Mission Hall. It soon became the Headquarters of a large network of Pentecostal Assemblies known as the Apostolic Faith. Later Rev. Daniel Powell Williams became an Apostle in the rebirth of a movement which created another sect of the Apostolic Faith Church in Wales in 1916. In 1920 Rev. Ben Fisher became a leader of an Independent Pentecostal Congregation in Belfast forming yet another network of a break-away Church with a large group of Pentecostal Congregation with Headquarters at Bradford. In 1922 the Bradford Group formed a prophetic administrative Union which has become the harbinger of break-away sects of the Apostolic Church which has mushroomed into hundreds of Apostolic Pentecostal Denominations with all sorts of nomenclatures Like Mt. Zion Church, AME Mt. Zion, Mt. Zion Full Gospel Church, etc.

THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH IN URUAN KINGDOM

At IDU, URUAN Headquarters, the Apostolic Church now re-christened THE APOSTOLIC CHURCH weathered the storm through thick and thin especially at the time the erstwhile Pastor around the 1960s tried to introduce his own version of the church by renaming it A.M.E. Mount Zion Church. Most of the pioneer members of those early 1930s called off the bluff and relocated to the centre of the town. Today it is still battling to maintain its position as the third premier Church in URUAN land after the Catholic Church (1906), the CMS now African Church (1915) and the Apostolic Church in question (1934). In Calabar proper, the entire Secretariat at No.111 Marian Road has been completely restructured with new imposing structures while the premier Church at No.13 Edgerly which was first restructured by the erstwhile Governor, His Excellency Don Etiebet, himself a proud member of the Church, is now wearing a new look and waxing strong with branches all over URUAN/EFIK territory.

E. THE QUA IBOE CHURCH a.k.a QUA IBOE MISSION

PREAMBLE: About 1886 when Calabar attracted so many people from the Mainland now Akwa Ibom State, some of these great merchants came from Ibeno. These had come in contact with the Presbyterian Missionaries in Calabar. They then requested for missionaries to be sent to them to teach more about God. That letter of request was received by Mr. Foster, a Jamaican missionary who forwarded it to Dr.Grattan Guinness, the Principal of Harley College in London where Missionaries were trained. But in June 1887 at Belfast Dr. Guinness read the letter from Ibeno chiefs to the students announcing to them that the letter in question was an appeal from the southern shores of Nigeria requesting for a white teacher to teach their people about God. On hearing this appeal, Samuel Alexander Bill from Belfast, Northern Ireland who had accepted God's call about 1864 took the challenge and decided to go. But it was made clear to him that there was no Missionary Body to send him implying that that he would be going as an independent pastor. Meanwhile Dr. and Mrs. Guinness had undertaken to sponsor him and support with tropical outfits as far as their means could permit.

BIRTH OF QUA IBOE/AKWA IBOE CHURCH IN NIGERIA

The Church as we have come to know it was therefore one of the independent missionary associations of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The church came to be established in the wake of the missionary activities of the Presbyterian mission in the interior of old Calabar province precisely in the late 1880s. The arrival in Calabar of this un-sponsored European missionary Rev. Samuel Bill so to speak, on 6th October 1887 marked the beginning of a new era of a new missionary effort but now in the heart of the Ibibio country. On his arrival he was welcomed by the Presbyterian Missionaries who taught him th language and customs of the people. On December 3, 1887 he arrived at Upenekang/Ibeno and was warmly received by the people thus signallying the halting of the Presbyterian missionary activities and further advance into the mainland part of the Oil Rivers Protectorate as it was then called. In 1888 Rev. Bill was joined by Achier Baille both of them working untiringly. They soon began to see the fruit their labour in the conversion of a woman named Mma Etia, and later his house servant David Ekong who later became the first ordained Minister of the Qua Iboe Church. The first Communion Service took place on 16 February 1890 with eleven Communicants participating. During the year he left a short leave in Belfast taking with him his servant David leaving Baillie to overseer the work. At home he got married to Grace Kerr who was then a student in Harley College London. While at home he began his appeals for Aid for the spread of the Gospel in Nigeria and before long the Qua Iboe Council for Aids was formed towards the sponsoring of the Evangelism work. Many leaders from various denominations in Belfast were representatives of this Council and they set about drafting the Constitution of the Qua Iboe Church in line with Evangelical and Inter-Denominational line. In May 1891 Bill returned to Ibeno at the head of the team with his wife and David Ekong to continue their evangelical activities as a non-denominational body under the assumed title of "Qua Iboe Mission" on the bank of the Kwa/Qua Iboe River. The evangelists were not really from any recognized missionary association in Great Britain, Scotland or Ireland unlike the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the CSM for short. In time many volunteers from Belfast and other parts of Great Britain joined the team and more converts were won for Christ many of whom had begun to read and write and some being appointed teachers and preachers. These evangelists who constituted themselves into a formidable church society, the Qua-Iboe Mission, were a very daring and enterprising lot who were so encouraged in their self-appointed task of evangelism by both individuals and certain members of the Presbyterian churches in Scotland and Northern Ireland as sponsors up till 1908 when they now began to depend on their own resources, imagination and devices most of the time, and they really excelled in establishing a formidable church by so doing. As a virgin area of missionary activity, they embarked upon the establishment of a mission of their own all over the Ibibio land. This church has continued to flourish especially in the East of Ibibio country.

CHURCH EXPANSION AND EVANGELIZATION IN THE HINTERLAND

Rev. Samuel Bill and companions were not satisfied to confine themselves to the ministry in Ibeno alone, they set out going up the RIVER preaching and establishing stations all over the Qua Iboe River basin in their task primarily administering to the spiritual needs of the people and winning souls by condemning in the bargain those known to have associated themselves with government and those who desired higher education whom they described as "evil men", preaching about "the wrath to come and hell fire" and against those "who inevitably must have habitually been dining with the devil. It was a powerful and fear striking method of evangelism indeed and it really bore much fruit as we are going to see. In fact it is probable that these evangelists were inspired by the created and ways created by the society for the propagation of the Gospel in foreign lands which pervaded the England of the time. By and large these missionary activities spread like wild fire such that their evangelical field spread from Ibeno to the whole of Okat, Afaha Eket, Ikot Abasi, Etinan Abak, parts of central Ibibio ie. Aka in Uyo district notably Etinan area and parts of Itu district viz, Itam and Ibiono areas even up to Aba in Igbo land. Each of these centres with their out stations were called Districts but later renamed Superintendencies. About 1932 the church even advanced to Northern Nigeria among the Igala and Bassa in Kogi State. In time, the Qua Iboe Church in Northern Nigeria so expanded that that it constituted an Area Conference of about five Superintendence comprising Idah, Ankpa, Igala Ogugu and IbajiIn the 1960s the Church spread to the townships and cities including Lagos, Kaduna, Port Harcourt, Enugu, Kano Zaria, Lokoja etc. Later the mission also berthed in URUAN and EFIK kingdoms Calabar and IDU but could not really get a foothold of the area owing to the uncompromising proselytization, appeal and acceptance of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the CSM popularly tagged by the adoring citizens as Akwa Uf?k (Abasi) and the Catholic mission by the people in these areas.

SUCCESS OF THE QUA IBOE CHURCH IN CROSS RIVER AND AKWA IBOM STATE

The Qua Iboe Mission achieved popularity and success probably on account of the architectural designs of their churches in the Gothic style of buildings, the same as the Catholic-Anglican church buildings of the ancient Holy Roman Empire. The mission was also known for their melodious and beautiful style of signing church hymns and choruses such that during the choir competitions organized among the missionary churches of those days, the Qua Iboe Mission almost always came up tops, a situation which I later noticed myself especially in the special circumstances by which the legendary and iconic O.A.Ufot, erstwhile Registrar of the West African Examinations Council - WAEC in the 1960s and later as the first Registrar of the Federal University of Calabar (1975-1988) often conducted the choir both in their Qua Iboe Church at No.15 Mbukpa, Calabar and at the Protestant Chapel, UNICAL for short with no qualms at all. That why I have mentioned this point because these choirs were mainly made up of elderly men and some women – all converts to the church, and they usually held two to three choir practices every week supervised by ably trained choir masters usually their expatriate missionaries. Of course in URUAN/EFIK kingdoms and Idu they could not match the choirs of the Presbyterian and Catholic Churches at Duke Town Calabar and Idu with their powerful pipe organs also in tow imported from the Overseas.

Soon the missionaries put head and soul to their task of evangelization, but this time engaging in the training of local agents and pastors, deacons and deaconesses most of whom, again for some obscure reasons were from among the elderly. Most of the pastors were literate only in the URUAN/EFIK language and for that reason, they were only able to read and interpret the Bible which had already been translated into that Efik language of culture. It therefore meant that they were deficient and so limited in their horizon of the knowledge of the background history of the Bible and the accuracy of its translation. It seems they even despised with contempt and opposition those young educated men and women who were fond of expressing themselves in English. We would not be too far from describing this unfolding situation as one brought about by protagonists of obscurantism and opponents of that direct study of the Greek Bible to which the Dutch humanist Erasmus and John Colette the founder of St. Paul's School of London used in expressing the criterion of truth. The situation of some of the QIC devotees as also some pastors of the Qua Iboe Mission Church of those halcyon days could also be described in this light. As everyone knows, the King James English Bible of 1511AD was translated from the Hebrew Masoretic Text, whereas the Douay Catholic English version which came later on about 1516 AD was translated from the LXX (Septuagint) text which was all in Greek and was meant for the post exilic Jews as also the whole civilized Greco-Roman world beyond 500 BC era. Even the great Cicero had opined this when commenting on St. Augustine, that Catholic luminary in the firmament of great teachers in the early Church to wit, that had he but known Greek, which neglect but had disqualified him from expounding the Scriptures he might have been the greatest scholar after Socrates or Aristotle that ever treaded this earth below. (Cf.Hon Sir Ethbert Udo Udoma, 11) However, there was one field which the Qua Iboe missionaries appeared to have excelled, viz the "imposition of missionary boundary" both for themselves and for other denominations, a prototype of the "Demarcation of Africa in 1884" by the European nations referred above. First of all the mission succeeded in getting the Church of Scotland Mission, the Methodist Mission and the Church of Missionary Societies a.k.a. The Anglican Church Mission to agree to the demarcation of the spheres of effective occupation and influence among the various missionary bodies in the then Eastern Region of Nigeria south of the Niger. By that agreement each missionary organization had to confine itself to its own area of jurisdiction and was not permitted to transgress into the territory in the effective occupation of another mission. As a consequence, that agreement ensured competence but lack of progressive policy of expansion and development. The result was therefore stagnation in the absence of even Christian competition for excellence. It was a very sad commentary to the Lord's injunction of proclamation of the Gospel to the ends of the earth. This also meant that each missionary organization had to confine itself to its own area of jurisdiction and so was not permitted "to transgress into the territory in the effective occupational another. Small wonder then that until after the war, places and towns like Etinan, Ewet Offot just to mention a few were never converted to Catholicism or any other church denomination and these are towns less than a two kilometres from Akwa Ibom Mission in Etinan, ditto the Catholic Mission in Anua near Uyo. Another final point about the evangelization is the economic missionary method and knack which they employed in their Administration. They capitalized on this demarcation policy and were able to build one of the most distinctive educational Institutions in the whole of Ibibio land, viz. Etinan Institute equivalent to Hope Waddell Training Institute (Presbyterian) and Cross River State. The Institute still remains one to be reckoned with till today. The 20th century Qua Iboe Church produced such great personalities like O. A. Ufot erstwhile Registrar of WAEC and 1st Registrar of the University of Calabar and A.U.Ema, Superintendent of Schools, MOE TTC Examinations Board in the colonial era, also A.T.U.Ekong Chief Inspector of Education South Eastern State during the Gowon Regime and, Her Excellency Nne Isong Chief Superintendent of Education, State Schools Board and F.U.Ukpong - Qua Iboe Church General Manager of Schools all of them in the education sectors. The Qua Iboe Church of the 1950s -1970s also produced great personalities men and women who dominated both the civil and political sectors including Mrs. Affiong Abasi-Atai, erstwhile Hon Commissioner of Education and above all His Excellency, Governor Clement Isong, erstwhile Governor of the Central Bank of the new ₦1, 000.00 currency fame and the first ever civilian Governor of Old Cross River State Nigeria (1979-1983)

F. THE LUTHERAN CHURCH OF NIGERIA aka LUTHERAN MISSION

PREAMBLE: Today the Lutheran Church of Christ Nigeria now numbering about 1,700,000 members and led by Most Rev. Nemuel A. Babba which was established in Nigeria branched from the Sudan United Mission in 1913. The Lutheran Church indeed is a major Denomination in Nigeria which as observed already was established from the Sudan United Mission viz. the. Danish Branch.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH OF NIGERIA

Formerly tagged the Lutheran Church of Christ Nigeria (LCCN) the Lutheran Church had the following as pioneer Missionaries namely, Rev. Niels Bronnum, his wife Margaret C. Young and Dagmar Rose. But Bronnum's wife died shortly after arrival in Nigeria. Then Rose brought back Bronnum's infant son. Bronnum continued his missionary work and established the first mission at Numan. The mission eventually expanded and in 1948 the first five indigenous pastors were ordained. By 1955 it was known as the Sudan Lutheran Church of Christ, but in 1956 it became an independent Lutheran Church of Christ, Nigeria with Pilgaard Pedersen as the first President. The Church which in Hausa reads: Ekkilisiyan Kristi a Nijeriya Lutheran had as its first Nigeria President Akila Todi in 1960. He was elected Bishop in 1973 when the Church adopted a modified Episcopal policy.

STRUCTURE OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH OF NIGERIA

The LCCN is led by an Archbishop and is further divided into 8 Dioceses viz. Abuja with Rt. Rev. Benjamin Fuduta as Bishop and Head, Arewa diocese with Rt. Rev. Amos B. Elisha as Head, Bonotem diocese with Rt. Rev. Isaiah Lerum as Bishop, Gongola diocese with Rt. Rev. John Kennan as Bishop, Majo-Belwa Diocese with Rt. Rev. Musa Panti Filibus as Bishop, ShallHolma Diocese with Rt. Rev. Dimga Jones Kadabiyu as Bishop, Todi Diocese with Rt. Rev. Clement Dogo as Bishop, Yola Diocese Rt. Rev. Amos Yakubu as Bishop, each headed by a Bishop together with a mission. The Headquarters still remains Numan. But concerning EFIK land and Calabar in particular, it was Rt. Rev. DR (Bishop) Nelson Unwana then at the Headquarters, Obot Idim Ibesikpo that was first elected V. President of the Lutheran Church in Nigerian and posted to Calabar in 1972. From then onward the post civil war Church has been waxing strong at No. 16 Nelson Mandela Street as Headquarters of the Calabar Church with her own Nursery Primary School within the Church premises as the former Lutheran Primary School was taken over by Government ever since the civil war.

G THE JEHOVAH'S WITNESS – a.k.a KINGDOM HALL

The Jehovah's Witnesses Kingdom a.k.a Watch Tower prides itself to take its nomenclature from the Bible precisely Acts 1:8 “But you will receive the of the Holy Spirit which will come upon you, and you will be my WITNESSES not only in Jerusalem, but throughout Judea and Samaria, and indeed to the ends of the earth.” Precisely as a movement, its early beginnings date back to the Bible Students' Movement in the United States of America in the 1870s among followers of the Christian Restorationist Minister, Charles Taze Russell. Later on the name of this organization was changed to the International Students 'Association anchored by the new group in 1914. It is also through this group that the new name the “WATCH TOWER” came into being. Russell taught his followers concerning the non-existence of Hell and the final annihilation of unsaved people on the day of the Armageddon when on that last day of the end of the world, there would be a fierce terrible battle between good and evil that would destroy and bring this world to its final dissolution. He probably must have picked the doctrine from the Seven Day Adventists, a religious movement that gained currency at the time of which he could have become a member thereof. The popular weekly magazine of the Jehovah's Witnesses is the AWAKE sometimes distributed free with other pamphlets eg the Watch Tower magazine by itinerant members to their fans especially when they move from house to house visiting homes on Saturdays and Sundays. Saturday, the Sabbath Day is their official holyday of obligation and worship at their Kingdom Halls since they do not believe in “churches” as official holy places of worship arguing that Jesus the Christ never founded nor worshipped in churches. One begins to wonder what the Jewish synagogues were meant to serve when He often attended there including his disciples and even St.Paul as recorded in his missionary journeys in the Acts of the Apostles. Russell died about 1916 and was succeeded by Joseph R. Rutherford, a judge. The Jehovah's Witnesses also base their faith-belief and mantle of evangelization on Isaiah 43:10: "You are my witnesses, says the Lord and my servant whom I have chosen, that you may know and believe me and understand that I am He. Before me no god was formed, nor shall there be any after me, I, I am the Lord"

The Movement entered Nigeria in the late 1930s when World War II was just beginning and before the war ended it had berthed as it were in URUAN/EFIK land. I can still recollect as a kid in the early 1940's precisely about 1942/3, when my late uncle, Efanga Edem Okon as a pupil at the famous Rev. Cruikshank School at Mbiaya URUAN, as it used to be called often came home with some leaflets. When I was able to read, he gave me a copy of St. John's gospel with a blue cover and very beautifully bound an attractive pocket book which I treasured indeed. But my mother persuaded me not to read it because its texts and contents were different from the ones we were used to, viz. the Catholic version. But I often hid it and read some passages especially the ones on the 6th chapter about the Bread of Life and this must have informed my requesting my mother to allow me receive Holy Communion like my elder sisters. Promptly I was officially enrolled in the Catechism First Holy Communion Instruction evening classes even though I was only five years of age. In 1943 she presented me for the First Communion examination before the visiting Rev. Father Superior to Idu town on "bush tour". As I was crying, the priest placed me on his laps and fired the questions which I rattled away still crying and sobbing. For the next five years I was the "populo admiratio" a wonder child, as my mother had to be struggling with the Church wardens when bringing me to the altar rails when it was the time at the Holy Mass for Holy Communion. Everybody can remember when toddlers and kids crying would run after their mothers while going to receive the Holy Communion; but because people had thought looking at me "so tiny", that I must be one of these kids and toddlers. Eventually, when my uncle finished schooling and was working with the colonial Palm Produce Companies the UAC, PZ etc. at Nwaniba, he became one of the chief promoters of the Movement in the area. They always held their rendezvous and assemblies either at the veranda of a Jehovah's chieftain at Beach Town, or Marina Idu or at his own down town - "IDU Usuh?re" residence. One of his daughters was the much talked-about pupil all over the country in the 1970s that refused to recite the National Pledge at their school assemblies. My uncle then was probably the number one fan of the Movement travelling far and wide across the length and breadth of Nigeria for their Crusades at Lagos, Makurdi, Ilesha, Benin, Onitsha, etc. In the house you could not even take your meal in peace because of his biblical argumentations without stop and you asked "could he ponder just for a moment to hear your own side of the debate!" This was their stock in trade. Also Jehovah's Witnesses are wll known for their door to door ministry and evangelism as also distribution of their religiousn literature. Even while at the University of Nigeria Calabar Campus which later became UNICAL in 1976/77 academic session, on many occasions as their members often swarmed into the University quarters every Saturday and Sunday with their ubiquitous AWAKE magazines, I had to decide to buy some of the magazines off them just to send them away. It was usually the same refrain: one-sided argumentation, with no thought to the views of others! The Jehovah's Witnesses deny most of the Christian doctrines like the Blessed Trinity, Heaven and Hell, the immortality of the soul, the place of the Virgin Mary in the economy of Salvation, the divinity of Christ etc; they consider these as unscriptural doctrines. They equally do not observe birthdays, Christmas and Easter Solemnities or any other Holy days considering them as of pagan origin. They only maintain quoting from the Gospel passages of St. John that Jesus was merely the Son of God, and you begin to wonder whether they have taken the trouble and pondered to read the very first chaper: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God". (Jn 1:1) Of course they have not been admitted into the World Council of Churches for obvious reasons since they do not believe and profess the Lord Jesus as their personal Lord and Saviour of mankind. In the preceding years up till the end of the civil war, the Movement reigned supreme in URUAN/EFIK land and thereafter the Brotherhood of the Cross and Star literally swept them off leaving only remnants across the length and breadth of the territory. Nowadays they are only active in the towns and cities especially Calabar and Idu the headquarters of URUAN/EFIK nation.

H. THE PENTECOSTAL CHURCHES a.k.a PENTECOSTAL FEDERATION OF NIGERIA

The term Pentecostalism refers to certain elements of Christian life often associated with the experience of the power of the Holy Spirit which strongly manifested on the day of Pentecost in the Bible and the consequent gift of Spirit by Christ. 'Pentecostal churches' as a term over the years, emerged from the 'Holiness Movement' which held the view that "Baptism in the Holy Spirit" apart from the accepted Church doctrine of regeneration, was an experience of empowerment for the ministry, viz evangelism church administration, etc. available to all believers. It was also emphasized that this spiritual baptism was accompanied by the ability to speak in tongues. (Cf J.D.Douglas, ed. 645-646) Etymologically the term Pentecostal/ism stems from the Greek/Latin word 'PENTECOST' which in the English version of the New Testament simply means 50 implying the 50th day which to the Jews of old referred to their Exodus event and Covenant of God with them with the giving of the 10 Commandments to Moses on Mount Sinai en route Canaan. Originally the Hebrews celebrated 50 days after this event viz. Commemoration of the Passover corresponding to our Christian Easter. Then 50 days after, they used to celebrate the harvest of their 'First Fruits' usually the grains festival, just like our 'Yam Festivals' etc. in thanksgiving to God. Later on they commemorated this event with all the Jews and those in the Diaspora coming over Jerusalem. This continued to beginning of the Christian era when after the Lord's Ascension into Heaven, just as He had promised precisely50 days after the Passover during which He was crucified and rose again, the entire city of Jerusalem was filled with pilgrims for this festival, and the Lord sent the Holy Spirit to descend on the Apostles then assembled in the Upper Room of the Last Supper. This was the great event that was to become the new PENTECOST from which Pentecostalism has derived its name and movement. Therefore it would be correct to say that the power and enthusiasm manifested in the early Christian community which witnessed the Pentecost that is playing out in the Pentecostals today as contemporary Christians believe in the possibility of receiving the same experience and Gifts as these first Christians on that Pentecost day. Pentecostalism today is therefore the re-enactment of the experience of Jesus 'followers on the day of Pentecost over 2000 years ago, ie. 50 days after His glorious Resurrection at Easter – the Christian Passover.

ADVENT OF MODERN PENTECOSTALISM IN NIGERIA

Some historical antecedents can be adduced to the advent of modern Pentecostalism right from the time of the break-up of the Church of England as a consequence of the Reformation of Martin Luther. This was occasioned in the early 1800s when John Wesley (1703-1791) a British Evangelical preacher formerly of the Anglican Church and his brother founded 'Methodism' as a means to returning the Anglican Church to the fundamental practical piety of the original practices of the Church of England. He started his movement by offering his followers a 'second blessing' which he called "the entire sanctification" based on his theology of the work of Grace as separate from salvation with holiness. He saw this as an experience of the "Baptism with the Holy Spirit and fire." According to him, since Christ died for all, but then only those who believe an attain salvation which is a work of the Holy Spirit, hence without the saving aid o the Holy Spirit saving grace can be resisted and a person falls from grace. It therefore means that Salvation is only for all believers aided by the grace of the Holy Spirit. This makes him one o the forerunners of Pentecostalism. Similarly, the Presbyterian pastor, Edward Irving (1712-1834) also placed emphasis on the manifestation of the grace /gift of the Holy Spirit through speaking in tongues teaching that tongues were "the standing sign" and "root and stem" out of which flowed all the other gifts of the Spirit. Tongues also for Irving were the "outward and visible sign of the inward and invisible grace which the Baptism of the Holy Spirit confers." From this he developed charismatic eschatology of the period prior to the Second Coming of Christ when "a latter rain" of extraordinary gifts would be given again by the Holy Spirit to the church. In the 1840-50s Methodism emphasis of this "second coming" spread to America with a call for a return to Holiness and this was literally transported as it were into the Pentecostal Movements with the motive of preserving and spreading Wesley's doctrine of "entire sanctification and Christian perfection". According to the teachers of this new "Holiness Movement" the problems confronting the Church were due to lack of the marks of sanctification in the members. It was therefore necessary and indispensable that this malady of the church be cleansed through the process of the sanctification of members vouchsafed through Baptism of the Holy Spirit. Empowerment by the Holy Spirit is the view o this new mission and this position is very central Pentecostalism even in contemporary church. In 1990 Summers Parham (1873-1929) embarked on another dimension he termed "Millerianism". This was occasioned by his enrolment into the Holiness Congregation led by Frank W. Stanford from whom he acquainted himself with the doctrine of the "latter rain" of the outpouring Of the Holy Spirit. Impressed by this doctrine he sought to acquire a more profound manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit having had only isolated reports of the manifestation of the power of speaking in tongues among Stanford Parham's missionaries as proof of the Baptism of the Holy Spirit by instant restoration o the apostolic gifts. He then directed his students to strategize and deepen their knowledge of the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. For according to him the peculiar gift of tongues was the spark necessary for the beginning of Christian faith and its growth in the Jerusalem church. This provocation dramatically bore the expected fruit when Agnes N. Ozman now La Berge, one of his students had asked Parham for his imposition of hand upon her to send her forth into foreign fields viz. China and he though reluctantly not having had the experience before, lad hands up [on her, and instantly she began to speak in the Chinese but could then unable to speak in English again. With this Parham himself and the other students were also baptized in the Holy Spirit which he himself testified that after the event he could now speak in the Swedish tongue and other languages until the morning. It is therefore to his credit that the Pentecostal theology owes the crucial definition of speaking in tongues as the "in ideal evidence and acted level of the latter rain" which he termed as Millerianism to wit, the evangelical style of conversion, sanctification, divine healing and the eschatological return of the Holy Spirit power as evidenced in glossolaria. (Cf. nanVinson,15-22-Synan Vinson.15-22)Finally we must do to these the experience and movement o the Keswick English Holiness teachers, a movement which began earlier on in England about 1874 AD. This was another example of the shift of emphasis to "spirit empowerment in the "second blessing" referred to earlier. It started off through the holding of annual conventions for the promotion of practical Holiness by the Keswick teachers who regarded the concept of 'second blessing' as eradication of sinful nature and Baptism in the Holy Spirit as an endowment of power for service. Certainly most Pentecostal pastors and evangelists nowadays would also like to sustain this view for the sanctification of the church and their members, but Keswick teachers emphasized the need for the spirit's empowerment for Christian service as a paradigm of the early church. Synan Vinson, 15-22)

PENTECOSTALISM: THE RENEWAL MOVEMENT WITHIN CHRISTIANITY

Pentecostalism has become a very wide and concept that defies definition. It has developed into a concept that is better described than defined. Frank D. Macchia, considers it as a renewal movement within Christianity that places special emphasis on a direct personal experience of God through Baptism in the Holy Spirit and has an eschatological focus and an experiential religion. (Achunike Hilary C.35) Pentecostalism as a direct cognate of the term Pentecost as in Acts 2 which denotes the event and outcome of the descent of the Holy Spirit and his gifts on all Christians. Consequently, Pentecostal is used today to apply to not only the group but also the adherent of those assemblies, sects and churches that emerged as the result of late19th and 20th century revivalist preaching among American and Baptist congregations. In the USA at the turn of the 20th century precisely 1901-1906, this movement started in a simple black church in Los Angeles where W.J.Seymour, descendant of the African slaves who had been shipped to American was the minister. Pentecostals claim to be concerned with the restoration of those gifts which are believed to have first been bestowed on the church on the day of Pentecost (Acts2:1-4), hence, their primary concerns is to make anew the Pentecost event their worship places special stress on the practice of the gifts outlined in 1cor, 12, Rom. 12 and Eph. 4. Some of these gifts are revelation, inspiration and power gifts eg. the gift of speaking in tongues. The most notable is 'speaking in tongues' which some advocates see as the initial evidence of baptism in the Holy Spirit. Others include healing, miracles and deliverance exorcism. The power to exercise these gifts comes via baptism in the Holy Spirit usually regarded as a distinct action from sacramental Baptism.

In Nigeria the movement wasn't a veritable religious feature in the Nigerian religious landscape before the 1970s when the mainland churches dominated the scene, but nowadays it has come to stress personal relationship with the Holy Spirit as the mainstay of Christianity often to be identified with fundamentalism and evangelism. The only church that held sway was the Cherubim and Seraphim which blazed the trail as an independent religious movement, distinct from the mainline churches was founded in 1925. It was later termed Alladura movement because it was not strictly Pentecostal in nature but mostly 'spiritual prayer houses for healing'. It was the mushrooming of the Alladura churches that led to the establishment of independent churches like the Faith Tabernacle, the Christ Apostolic, the largest Alladura church in West Africa, the Assemblies of God which started in Diobu, Port Harcourt in the later 1960s – the church which inherited the Church of Jesus Christ an upshot of the Faith Tabernacle, spread as an independent church, etc. In fact in the late 1960s (during the civil war and early 1070's shortly after) the Catholic Church, in order to stem the tide of Catholics of members streaming to these faith healing churches and prayer houses, spearheaded by the like likes of Rev. Fathers Godwin C.Ikeobi and Monsignor Matthew Obiukwu (my colleagues and contemporaries) started a counter prayer movement in the form of 'prayer ministry 'to provide Catholics with an alternative for the healing ministry and prayer. Later on in the early 1980s Rev. Fr. (Prof) Emmanuel Edeh also began his own brand as a response to the Pentecostals. His Catholic prayer ministry of the Holy Spirit at Elele, Port Harcourt gave him out as a Pentecostal or Charismatic Father, (though he denies this) because he started off with Charismatic choruses, testimonies and reported healings. In the 1990s other Catholic priests like Fathers John Ugobueze, Stephen Njoku, Christian Usung Urua, and Ejike Mbaka gave their own response to the Pentecostal through their healing ministry at Wednesday evening services with Rosary procession, singing of choruses, sermons and 'Holy Ghost Hour' healing sessions, not leaving out the collection of tithes. Many priests, Seminarians and Rev Sisters have since joined the band-wagon of Catholic Charismatic Renewal healers and prayer warriors and the situation does not seem to be abating. The Aokpe phenomenon in Benue State has really sparked off this scenario and since the late 1990s the place has turned into a Mecca of sorts through a girl visionary Miss Christiana,who claimed to have had an apparition of the Blessed Virgin Mary. A chapel and a Parish centre have been created by the Catholic diocese of Otukpo for the devotion and spiritual needs of pilgrims and those seeking for miracles and spiritual favours.

PENTECOSTALISM AND 20TH CENTURY RELIGION MOVEMENTS

The emergence of Pentecostalism as one of the major developments of the 20th century Religious Movements has gained great momentum. Its rapid spread is very pervasive here in Nigeria. Recently Rev. Fr. Jude Anyaeche has been quoted to have had an encounter with a Pentecostal girl who challenged him that Pentecostals like the ancient Israelites walking round the walls of Jericho would in no time walk round the walls of the Catholic Church and other mainline Churches; the so-called Protestant churches, only once, and they would all collapse Jericho-wise. The mainline or Protestant churches are those Christian churches established after the great Catholic Church shake-up by Rev.Fr. DR. Martin Luther in 1516 AD tagged the Reformation which resulted in the break-up of the Catholic Church and the establishment of splinter churches ie. Protestant Churches like the Lutheran church, Presbyterian Church, Methodist church, Anglican Church, Methodist church, Apostolic church, Qua Iboe Church etc.which also found their way into Nigeria since 1840s. And this was a little over ten years ago; today, and in all probability the Pentecostals are taking over the management of Christianity in Nigeria. As I write this book, the head and president of the Pentecostal Federation of Nigeria (PFN) is also the current President of the whole Christian community in Nigeria tagged the Christian Association of Nigeria (CAN) in the person of Pastor Joseph Ayo Oritsajafor of the Word of Life Bible Mission, Warri. Pentecostals are making waves and winning converts mostly from these so-called original Christian mainline churches by the day and this is to state the obvious. The rank and file of these mainline churches according to Rev. Fr. Hilary C. Achunike of the University of Nigeria, Nsukka, and even the Catholic Church hierarchy in Nigeria and elsewhere are all disturbed and disquieted.

THE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF NIGERIA - ORIGINS

The Christian Association of Nigeria (CAN) was founded in 1976 with Dominic Cardinal Ekandem as first President General and Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Adegbite, Secretary General ostensibly to call of the bluff and taunts by the Muslim faithful that Christian churches can never unite or come up together with one voice on any matter of national discourse. CAN is an Association of Christian Churches with distinct identities, recognizable Church structures and systems of worship of one God in the Trinity of the Father, Son and the Holy Spirit. It was actually General Olusegun Obasanjo, who as then the Military Head of State precisely on 27th August, 1976 summoned several Christian church leaders to Lagos for discussion regarding Government's intention to introduce the recitation of the National Pledge and salutation of the National Flag during school Assembly in both primary and secondary schools nationwide. Curiously the church Leaders offered no objections, but insisted that this could be done only on the condition that the usual Morning Devotion and Prayers would precede it. It was after leaving Dodan Barracks that the church leaders directed by the Holy Spirit I would say, decided to use the occasion to hold another meeting among themselves at the Catholic Secretariat close by. Here they unanimously arrived at the monumental decision to form an organization which among other things would provide a forum where they could regularly meet together to take joint actions on vital ecclesiastical matters and to checkmate the growth of political Islam as also deliberate on issues affecting the generality of Nigerians. CAN was registered under the perpetual succession Act Cap. 98 of the Federal Republic of Nigeria (CAC) on 19th December, 1986 with Archbishop A. Okogie, Pastor J. G. Sakpo, Rev. Charles Williams, Rt. Rev. John Ogbonnaya, and Clifford Mobolaji Smith as Trustees. The Aims and Objectives of CAN among others include: (a) To make Christ the centre of all its works and to promote the glory of God by encouraging the growth and unity of the Churches and helping them to lead the nation and her people to partake of Christ's Salvation and all its fruits. (b) To cement the bond that wedges Christianity in the country together since without unity in CAN there can be no progress. (c) To create an atmosphere whereby member churches of CAN could have a more effective fellowship and dialogue on Christian Faith, its defense in Nigeria and all over the world. (d) To serve as a basis of response to the unity of the church especially as contained in our Lord's pastoral prayer that they all may be one (John 17: 21). (e) To promote understanding, peace and unity among the various people and strata of society in Nigeria through the propagation of the gospel. (f) To act as a liaison committee by means of which its member – Churches can consult together and when necessary make common Statement and take common actions. (g) To act as watch person of the Spiritual and moral welfare of the Nation. (h)To make CAN an advocate of freedom of Religion in terms of the rights of individuals to associate and worship without any coercion, fear of molestation and persecution from any quarter. (i) To resist any attempt by the Government of the day or her Agencies to favour one religion more than the other or turn the nation into a mono-religious state. (j) To challenge the ills in our society and ensure that the attention of those in government is always called to serving the nation creditably just as efforts would be geared towards the eradication of corruption in the society in collaboration with EFCC, ICPC and other credible bodies in the country which are committed to the same goal. (k) To ensure that Christianity is given its rightful position in the nation and that Christians are never treated as second-class citizens with regards to any other religious adherents. And in this connection to totally condemn any anti-Christ moves in the nation with a view to making sure that they are dropped with immediate effect. (l) To make CAN self sufficient and independent, able to respond with her relief agencies to disasters within and outside the body and also able to cater for the hurting, the less-privileged and the poor as one of the cardinal ministries of the Church.

CAN is made up of altogether five distinct Blocks of Christian churches with distinct identities, recognizable church structures and systems of worship of the One True God Almighty in the Trinity of Persons – Father, Son and the Holy Ghost (Spirit). viz. (1) the Christian Council of Nigeria made up of the so-called MAIN-LINE CHURCHES – the original members of the World Council of Churches: the Anglican Church/Communion, the Baptist Mission, the Presbyterian Church of Nigeria (PCN) the Methodist Church of Nigeria (MCN) the Lutheran Church of Nigeria (LCN) the Apostolic Church, the Qua Iboe Church (QIC), etc; (2) Catholic Church tagged Catholic Secretariat of Nigeria (CSN) – these two blocks formed CAN in 1976; (3) the Christian Pentecostal Fellowship of Nigeria/Pentecostal Fellowship of Nigeria (CPFN/PFN); (4) the Organization of African Instituted Churches (OAIC) popularly tagged Uf?k Akam /Prayer Houses and (5) the FELLOWSHIP OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST in Nigeria known in Hausa as "TARAYYA EKKISSIYOYIN KRISTI A NIGERIA" a.k.a TEKAN/the "EVANGELICAL CHURCHES OF WINNING ALL" a.k.a ECWA which is a grouping of all the churches that trace their origin to either Canadian-based Sudan Interior Mission (SIM) or the largely British-based Sudan United Mission (SUM) popularly tagged the Alladura viz. Cherubim and Seraphim, Deeper Life Bible Church, the Celestial Church of God, etc. ie. the noisy vivalistic churches - Uf?k Abasi kpa Ub?k. Since the time of Dominic Cardinal Ekandem, CAN has been headed by Anthony Cardinal Okogie (CSN: 1988-1995), Prelate His Eminence Sunday Mbang (CCN-Methodist: 1995-2003), Primate Jasper Akinola (CCN-Anglican Communion: 2003-2007), Archbishop now John Cardinal Onayekan (CSN: 2007-2010), and currently Pastor Joseph Oritsejafor (CPFN/PFN - Bible Church: 2010 to date). It is likely either the CSN or CCN block will slug it out with the PFN/TEKAN groups as Rev. Samuel Olasupo Adeniyi Ayokunle, the president of the Nigerian Baptist Convention (NBC) is warming up for the contest come 2016 when the tenure of Pastor Joseph Oritsejafor expires. Today CAN has become the largest Oecumenical Body ever established n Nigeria and indeed Africa.

CHRISTIAN ECUMENISM, CHURCH UNITY/DIALOGUE & WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

We cannot successfully round up this discussion on CAN without treating, however perfunctory, the issue of Church Unity, Interfaith Dialogue as also the champion of unity and dialogue, viz. the World Council of Churches although the Catholic Church considers it only in terms of the Mainline so-called "Protestant churches" including the Eastern Orthodox churches. The call for Christian unity by the Second Vatican Council (1962-65) by His Holiness Pope St. John XXIII who died in 1963 and which was ably continued and concluded by Catholic Major Seminaries, has made it mandatory that in all Houses of Religious Formation, Scholasticates and indeed all Institutes of Higher Learning including Catholic Universities throughout the world, should include a short-term programme of at least 2 hours a week semester course on Oecumenism. This course should be taught for the purpose of educating future Ministers both of the Word and Sacraments as also pastors in the spirit of ecumenism and interreligious Dialogue.

CHRISTIAN UNITY/ECUMENISM –INTER FAITH & RELIGIOUS DIALOGUE

The call for Christian Unity by the Second Vatican Council (1962-65) has made it compulsory that in all Churches nationwide, Theological Institutes, Catholic Major Seminaries, Houses of Religious Formation and indeed all Institutes of Higher learning including Catholic Universities throughout the world should present a short-term programme of at least 2 hours lesson a week as a semester course on Ecumenism. This should be taught for the purpose of educating future ministers and pastoral workers to be imbued with the spirit of Ecumenism and Interreligious Dialogue. The Decree on Training of priests "OPTATAM TOTIUS" also declares that with due regard to conditions of different countries, students should be introduced to a fuller knowledge of the Churches and Ecclesial communities separated from the Holy See so that they may be able to participate in promoting the restoration of Unity between all Christians as well as other Religions of their regions and countries. Thus, they will recognize more clearly what goodness and truth these religions possess through the providence of God and learn how to refute their errors and so bring them the light of Truth. There is therefore an urgent need to prepare priests, Seminarians and the Religions, men and women even Catechists for Inter-Religions Dialogue and International Relations.

CHRISTIAN ECUMENISM AND CHRISTIAN UNITY

The context in which many Catholics and other non-Catholic Christians live and work today is multi-religious, and in Africa there are followers of African Traditional Religion (A T R), Muslims and in the regions of Asia, Hindus, Buddhists, Suphs, followers of Bahai etc. A Christian pastoral worker living among adherents of these Religious groups cannot remain indifferent. It is not enough merely to know our Christian Doctrine or religious tenets; we need information about other Religions especially ATR and Islam. In some Seminaries and other Institutions of Religious Formation and Houses, these courses are taught under various titles viz. ATR. Inculturation Theology, African Thought and Culture, African Spirituality / Philosophy, Islam, Interreligious Dialogue, etc, but in this programme as envisaged herein the general course heading should be that of Vatican II ie. "Ecumenism" ie. (UNITATIS REDINTEGRATIO simpliciter OR "Christian Unity" following the Encyclical "UT UNUM SINT" which is committed to the Ecumenism of late His Holiness Pope John Paul II following the idea expressed by Pope John XXIII at the opening of the Vatican II Council. The study of the Ecumenism Decree must be formulated in the Catholic way which aims at "Continuing Reform" by concentrating not in altering the deposit of Faith, or changing the meaning of Catholic Dogmas, or in eliminating essential words from them, or accommodating its Truths to the preferences of a particular age/ situation, or suppressing certain articles of the Apostle's Creed under the false pretexts that they are no longer attainable or understood in today's world simply to achieve some compromise. This as we know, is a contradiction to the effect that God who is Infinite Truth, has quarantined "Religious freedom" to all manner of persons notwithstanding, especially in what concerns God and His Church.

EFFORTS AT STARTING ECUMENTICAL DIALOGUE

THE UNITIVE OCTAVE AND WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Year by year and for many decades now, the Catholic Church and indeed some Christian churches never cease to pray every January 18 – 25 for Church Unity known as UNITIVE OCTAVE even before Vatican

II. The general idea behind the Octave prayer was the hope that Protestants would return to the One True Church and that the Orthodox religion of the East would end. But on the hand Protestants in general engaged in their own version of the ecumenical movement in the "World Council of Churches" based in Geneva, Switzerland for the same purpose of Church Unity. The World Council Churches is the fellowship of churches which professes the Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour according to the Scriptures and therefore seek to fulfill together their common calling to the glory of One God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit (Cf. W C C, New Debhi – India 1901). Although the W C C had started the Ecumenical movement about 50 years before Vatican II, it was really the proclamation of the Decree that sparked off a new impetus in the new way the Decree speaks of the non-Catholic Christian Relations. Instead of dogmatically insisting and praying for their return to the Roman Catholic Church as the only possible movement towards Church Unity, the Decree is now concerned with the movement towards Christ the Redeemer. From the Protestant angle, this has set in motion a fresh orientation pregnant with creative possibilities. Today, then, the door is made wide open as the Ecumenical dialogue has been lifted to a new level in the mystery of salvation since the Holy Spirit is also ever at work in "Ecclesial Communities" outside the Roman Catholic Church. This aspect as it were goes to show-case the earlier stand of the Roman Catholic Church against the background of the Encyclical "MORTALIUM ANIMOS" of 1928 of PP XI and the "MONITUM" of the defunct Holy Office of 1948. The new approach is gratifying and in accord with the Protestant principle of the "REFORMATION" as it stresses the task of Renewal and Reform which are essential to ecumenical advance. Another note-worthy aspect of the Decree is the frank statement which acknowledges that "men and women on both sides had sinned and fallen short of the Grace of God". They were therefore to blame, hence the need for common penitence and mutual forgiveness in order to develop a new atmosphere of ecclesiastical relations very different from the polemical self righteousness which had often characterized discussion between Catholics and Protestants in the past.

ECUMENISM AND ECUMENICAL DIALOGUE AND ACTION

The term Ecumenism comes from the Greek word "Oecumenism" and means "universal", "unity" and by implication the programme and principle of uniting the different Christian Churches together. It is directed towards seeing things through the eyes of another, hence, respect for one another and amicably tolerating the differences in others without of course obscuring or blurring these differences in order to open the way for genuine and fruitful dialogue. What is envisaged is that Christian congregations of whatever name should begin to move forward in both Dialogue and concrete measures of co- operation and follow this more excellent way towards Christ. This is a challenge but the assumption that the Roman Catholic came in as the only true Church is implicit, for it is through her alone, which is the all-embracing means of Salvation that the fullness of the means of Salvation can be obtained.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

But while the Catholic Church commits herself to genuine and sincere ecumenical dialogue and action, she must guide herself against a false conciliatory approach which may water down the purity of Catholic doctrine and obscure its meaning. Catholic Beliefs must be explained more profoundly and precisely for a deeper realization and clearer expression of the unfathomable riches of Christ. Genuine and fruitful dialogue must bear the stamp of candour. But what is important is that ecumenical dialogue should bring both the Roman Catholic Church and the non-Roman Catholic churches to live and work together in Christian fellowship.

FELLOWSHIP / ECUMENICAL AND COMMON PRAYER

For this reason and in special circumstances it is both permissible and desirable that Catholics join in prayer with their "Separated Brethren" so as to keep ecumenical dialogue at a deep spiritual level and save it from becoming over- intellectualized. Prayer together is the simplest expression of the new ecclesiastical relationship and the most convincing evidence of ecumenism. Pope Paul VI himself had started it all when at the close of Vatican II Council; he joined with Protestants / Orthodox etc. participants in a Service Prayer for the Unity of the Church.

PRE-REQUISITES FOR GENUINE DIALOGUE

With the establishment of a Pontifical Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue towards a working group with the World Council of Churches, co-operation and concern for dialogue will be greatly enhanced. Pre-requisites for this should include, Christology, Inculturation Theology, Missiology, A T R, Islam and the study of Vatican II Documents viz. on Religious Freedom "DIGNITATE HUMANAE" on non-Christian Religions "NOSTRA AETATE", on Missions, "AD GENTES", on the Eastern Churches "ORIENTALIUM ECCLESIARUM" and on Communications "INTER MIRIFICA". The need for underlining the importance of these foundational Courses of Catholic Theology cannot be emphasized. The whole teachings of the Church and practices must be brought to bear as the goal of Missionary activity through formation in the spirit of ecumenism and fraternal dialogue especially with non-Christians.

CHURCH AUTHORITY AND DIRECTION

When the minds and hearts of ecclesiastical students including theological Students, Scholasticates and Seminarians are opened and refined to appreciate the relationship between the traditions and Religions of their homelands and Christianity, they will be led resolutely along the road to sanctity and involvement in justice and peace. In accordance with these indications of the Magisterium, awareness will be raised for leadership roles in these religiously pluralist societies.

AFFECTIVE AND EFFECTIVE GROWTH OF COMMUNION

Christians must profess that the church is One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic and in so doing must strive purposefully to travel until that blessed day when full Unity in faith and practice will be achieved, to wit, when they can celebrate in peace together the Holy Eucharist of the Lord. Then the great doctrinal centrogencies in mutual understanding will be achieved between the Churches. This then will become the ultimate goal of the ecumenical movement as a fully visible unity among all the baptized, which also is the concept of the unity willed and demanded by Christ the Lord. Ecumenism requires that Christian communities should be able to help one another so that there may be trully present the full content of the heritage handed down by the Apostles. This full communion cannot be attained which is only through sublime evangelical Charity, hence issues dealing with Baptism, Holy Eucharist and Authority are basic. Then in the communion of the one Church willed by Christ, a true consensus of faith can be achieved through relating Sacred Scripture as the highest form and Authority in matters of faith and morals and Sacred Tradition as indispensable to the interpretation of the Word of God, the Eucharist as the Sacrament of Praise to the Father – the Sacrificial Memorial and Real Presence of Christ and the sanctifying outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Then Ordination as a Sacrament to the threefold Ministry of the Episcopate, Presbyterate and Diaconate, the Magisterium entrusted to the Pope as the Successor of Peter and the Bishops as the successors of the Apostles in union with the Pope will be enhanced and upheld. Finally in relation to the Virgin Mary as th Mother of God and Mother of the Church who intercedes for Christ's disciples and humanity ill form part of the Deposit of Faith.

CONSEQUENCES OF COMPLETE ECUMENISM IN THE MIND OF CHRIST

Prudence of Faith in the avoidance of False Irendicism and indifference to Christ's ordinances will finally issue forth in the courageous journey towards unity. The transparency of faith must show-case faith in the avoidance of false Irendicism and indifferentism as prudence shows that we should reject any half hearted commitment to unity and more so in avoidance of prejudicial opposition and defeatism which sees everything Catholic in negative terms. This obligation to unity must respect the truth which is absolute to the law of the Gospel. In all this, it is necessary to keep carefully in mind the distinction between the deposit of Faith and the challenge to deep holiness and to make a serious examination of conscience. Ecumenism is a dialogue of conversion and takes place before God, each individual church and individual person in recognizing his own faith and coming before Christ the Intercessor.

UNDERSTANDING UNITY IN DIVERSITY

Part of the problem in understanding what unity – Ecumenism – must mean to Christians is expressing unity in those concepts that can lead to a great deal of romanticism particularly in the Body of Christ which is the church. Unity is not exactly unanimity unless they mean something that can work to their advantage or it will not be unity. It is difficult to manage differences and mouth doctrinaire unity to stifle opposing views. When we fail to explore the diversities in the Body of Christ we rather shift opinion to sensitize the Body of Christ to the imperative of Unity in Christ. The point is that Christ desirers to reveal the depth of the great varieties that exist in Himself through us. It is then left for us to see the great unity that is emerging before us when we allow Him to reveal the diversities that exist in Him through us. The way to understanding Christian unity is through Christ, for in Christ the artificial partitions which we enact to divide ourselves, crumble before us. The Epistle to the Ephesians very aptly teaches us how we can change diversity to achieve unity (Eph. 4:3-6,17-25). To uphold a vision of unity which takes into account all the demands of revealed truth, the transparency and the prudence of faith requires that we try to avoid and reject both half hearted commitments to unity and even a more prejudicial opposition which we see as indifferent to the Church's Ordinances because the obligation to respect the truth is absolute and it is Inspired Truth that is speaking to us by the one Holy Spirit into which we all are baptized in Christ (Eph.2:11-8). In this process, we must not impose any burden beyond that which is strictly necessary (1Pet. 5:28) viz. patient and courageous efforts and keeping faithfully in mind the destruction between the Deposit of Faith and the formulation in which it is expressed.

DIALOGUE OF CONVERSION AND WITNESS TO HOLINESS

In understanding how deep and various the commitments to Ecumenism should be, the Holy Spirit calls us to make a serious examination of conscience. We must learn to enter into a dialogue of conversion as a spiritual mandate. Since this is a dialogue which takes place before God, each individual must recognize his faults, confess his sins and place himself in the hands of the One who is our Intercessor before the Father. This dialogue of conversion on the part of each individual and community must have a face and acceptance. Its demands will bring about fraternal relations much more than cordial understanding or external sociability which are far from the solid basis of conversion and ecumenical commitment in which Christ leads all without exception to examine themselves before the Father whether they are faithful in seeking the plan of Christ for His Church. Where there is a sincere desire to follow Christ, the Holy Spirit never fails to pour out His grace in extraordinary ways. He will lead communities along His paths to where he wills and to the visible Koinonia and service or his plan of salvation. Then full unity will come about when all come to share in the fullness of the means of Salvation entrusted by Christ to the Church by reciprocal fraternal assistance. Communities will in turn strive to give in mutual exchange what each one needs in order to grow towards definitive fullness in accordance with God's plan. Prayer should always form part of this longing for Unity and as one of the basic forms of our love for Christ and the Father who is rich in mercy. It must occupy the first place in this journey of understanding disposing us to ask God for what we need – clear spiritedness, strength and courage to take whatever steps are necessary so that our commitment can be authentic.

DIALOGUE WITH EASTERN/ORTHODOX CHURCHES SPEPARATED FROM APOSTOLIC SEE

For years and centuries since1054 AD, the Church has been taken as symbolic of the greatest Schisms - one of the decisive events in the tragic rupture between the East and West of Christendom. On Saturday, July 16, 1054 AD during the reign of Pope Leo IX, the papal delegate Bishop later Cardinal Humbert who was also the Pope's Secretary arrived at Constantinople in modern Turkey armed with two Papal Bulls which in effect were Conciliatory Letters from the Pope, one to Emperor Michael Constantine and the other to the Patriarch, Archbishop Michael Cerularius. Since the Patriarch was known to have very little subtlety and wit or theological culture of a Photus, he was equally arrogant, ambitious and immensely popular with the people, but with rather low opinion of the papacy, he refused to accredit the highly influential papal delegates and treated them with disdain, whereas the Emperor on the other had received them well. Then as the Byzantine monk attached to the Patriarch in turn presented a rebuttal that seemed critical of the Latin usages, the delegates raised the provocative Filioque question, and Archbishop Humbert losing his patience strode with his colleagues into the Basilica of Sancta Sophia shortly before the afternoon Liturgy and laid the Bull of Excommunication of both the Emperor and Archbishop Michael Cerularius at the altar and then departed "ceremonially shaking the dust off their feet." Then the Patriarch Michael Cerularius in turn excommunicated the papal delegation by ordering the Bull to be publicly and solemnly burnt in what is known in Church history as the "Great Eastern Schism". Soon after a Synod condemned the actions of the delegates and solemnly anathematized Archbishop Humbert and his companions while carefully avoiding any mention of the papacy. This left the door open for the Pope to resume friendly negotiations. Pope Gregory VII who succeeded Pope Leo was Humbert's close friend and would not have dreamt of repudiating his friend's actions. Coupled with Humbert's star continuing to rise his version of the affair was accepted as the right one and subsequent Popes followed this line. Consequently they too were regarded as partaking in this Great Schism. On the other hand since the Patriarch's successors also refused to seek reconciliation, they were regarded as partaking in the Schism. But by continuing to elect schismatic bishops the whole patriarchate of Constantinople was eventually included in the excommunication. However just before the close of Vatican II on December 7 1965, His Holiness Pope Paul VI and Patriarch Athenagoras of Constantinople knelt in solemn ceremonies at St. Peter's Vatican Basilica, later at St. Sophia Istanbul, and in prayer together nullified the Anathemas of 1054. It was this that dramatically opened the way to accepting the new breath of the Holy Spirit in conciliation. But before that, this first reading of the seamless role of Christ occurred because of the controversies over dogmatic pronouncements of the Councils of Nicaea in AD 325 which defined that Christ is God and consubstantial with the father "Homoousios"- same nature. The Council of Ephesus AD 431, had also defined that Christ was only one Person namely, the second Divine Person of the Blessed Trinity and that He was both God and man in the "HYPOSTATIC UNION" with Mary her mother as the "THEOTOKOS". The Council of Chalcedon AD 451, which condemned the Monophysite Heresy also defined that Jesus was perfect God and perfect man. And so for many centuries the churches of the East and West went their separate way though a brotherly communion of faith and sacramental life bound them together especially the patriarchal churches of Constantinople, Antioch, Alexandria, Jerusalem, Moscow, Serbia, Bulgaria, Romania and Georgia.

FORMULATING AND PRESENTING AUTHENTIC DOCTRINES

Following Vatican II declaration on Religious Freedom - DIGNITATIS HUMANAE; truth or most appropriately Christian doctrines must be presented especially in what concerns God and his Church and therefore the need to be presented in a way that makes it understandable to those whom God intends it. A concept of Greek theology in their historical context and way of thinking had brought about the tragedies in the doctrinal controversies of the past as mentioned in this early Council. But we know that preaching either in the undeniable superiority of Greek language and Byzantine culture and customs of his advance society inevitably imposed all forms of particularism ethnic exclusivism and racial prejudices even national arrogance. The content of faith is for all humanity hence it must be translated into all cultures but the changing meaning of truth must be preserved. Ecumenical activity must be exercised both in daily Christian living and in theological and history study. This is how Pope John XXIII believed about the unity of the council that is ecumenism has an organic part of the life and work of the Church, and therefore pervading all of the Church's traditional activities. All dialogue should imply global existential dimensions seeing that the more purely Christians strive to live according to the Gospel, the more they are furthering Christian Unity. All ecumenical dialogue should also serve as an examination of conscience in the dialogue of conversion mentioned already hence the vertical thrust directed towards Christ the redeemer and Lord of history and our reconciliation. This vertical aspect enables all to acknowledge jointly and to be at ease with each other so that we can be seen as men and women who have sinned and have obtained forgiveness and reconciliation.

DIALOGUE AS INSTRUMENT OF RECONCILIATION

Dialogue is also a natural instrument of resolving disagreements and comparing different points of view. In studying areas of disagreements the whole body of doctrine must be considered since full communion can only come about through acceptance of the whole truth into which the Holy Spirit guides the Church. Hence all forces of reductionism and facile agreements must be avoided. All serious questions of Faith must be fully resolved otherwise they will re-appear at another time in a different guise. Such examination of Doctrines must take account of the hierarchy of the Truths of Christian Faith and practice for it was inevitable against the problem of the different formulations of Doctrine that the heresies ensued in the first place leading to the break away.

PRACTICAL COOPERATION IN WITNESSING TO THE GOSPEL MESSAGE

Cooperation among Christians are not aimed at mere mutual knowledge, common prayer and dialogue, the pastoral, social and witnessing to the truth are essential. Through such cooperation a true school of ecumenism and dynamic road to unity of faith is made smooth as also a means of evangelization. Then as in the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount, Christians of differing confessions learn to consider one another not as enemies but as brothers and sisters. This brotherhood leads more readily to new expression of communion as Christian/ecclesial communions "are in full communion with the Apostolic See and the Catholic Church". This vocabulary inevitably confirms in our minds a universal brotherhood of Christians with a firm ecumenical conviction thus consigning to oblivion the ex-communications of the past. In other words, ecumenical dialogue of this kind converts to fraternal charity which embraces all the baptized in Christ such that revelry becomes helping one another, violent political aggressiveness translates into large hearted philanthropy and ecumenical courtesies becomes building up the Church into multi-lateral dialogues in true solidarity in the service of humanity.

Thus Christian communities join together in taking a stand in the name of Christ like CAN on important national events and programmes. Significant signs of convergence in ecumenical cooperation and dialogue are also manifest through divine worship and the word of God notably in the different language groups of ecumenical translations of the Bible thus offering a solid basis for prayer and pastoral activity of all Christ's followers. Following the liturgical renewal, other ecclesial communities have made effort to also renew their forum and order of worship. In his context especially, it is not worthy that in certain particular cases the Sacraments of the Eucharist, Penance and Anointing of the sick can be administered to Christians not in full communion but who greatly desire to receive, but the condition for such have been laid down in CJC 844 and 671. "LUMEN GENTIUM" on the Dogmatic Constitution on the Church #15 has acknowledged the saving elements also found in other churches and ecclesial communities."

LITURGICAL TRADITION OF THE EAST AND RESUMING OF CONTENTS

The disciplines approved by the Holy Fathers and Ecumenical Councils have also made this acknowledgement in the conviction that legitimate diversity is in no way opposed to Church Unity but rather enhances the Church's splendour and fulfillment of her mission. Therefore fraternal relations through a dialogue of Charity should strengthen doctrinal discussions through the joint international communion for the theological dialogue between the Catholic Church and the Orthodox Churches of the East. The first promptings have been theological dialogues with the Orthodox Churches in canonical communion with the See of Constantinople. So far there is reciprocal representation of the celebrations of SS Peter and Paul at the Vatican and the solemn celebration of the feast of St. Andrew on November, 3 at the Phenar a.k.a Istanbul in Turkey. Taking part together in prayer and liturgical celebrations like this will foster fraternal coordination and to put in practice the Lord's will for his Church. Not to be forgotten is the declaration of SS Cyril and Methodius of Thessalonica the Apostles of the Slavonic countries as co-patrons of Europe during their Jubilee centenary celebrations. St. Benedict having been already proclaimed Patron of Europe. These proclamations of the Byzantine Saints have further promoted topics of dialogue between the East and the West.

"SISTER CHURCHES" – PARTICULAR CHURCHES WITHIN THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

The apostolic exhortation of St.Paul "Bear one another's burdens" (Gal. 6:2) compels us to establish full unity in legitimate diversity and since by apostolic succession the churches are united by the priesthood and the Eucharist, the beautiful expression of old "sister churches" which local churches were fond of applying to one another for centuries should guide the "Deposit of Faith" against all corruption. The church's journey which started in Jerusalem on Pentecost day and its ecumenical expression was centred on St. Peter and the Eleven (Acts 2:14). Therefore the first structures of the Church both in the East and West evolved in reference to this Apostolic heritage such that her unity during the first millennium was maintained within these structures with whom they were linked. It is clear then that if in our millennium we are seeking to restore full communion with the churches, then we must took back towards those age – old structures of "Sister churches" to perpetuate the communion of faith and unity of families which ought to exist between the churches. But for now after Vatican 11 the local churches gathered around their Bishops have adopted that designation "Sister churches" especially with the lifting of the actual excommunications. These structures of Unity which existed before the separation are a heritage of experience, which should guide our common path towards the re-establishment of full communion and the traditional designation of "Sister Churches" should ever accompany us along this path. Therefore the declared purpose and hope of Ecumenism is to re-establish together full unity in legitimate diversity because God has granted us to receive in faith what the Apostles saw, understood and proclaimed and by baptism "we are one in Christ Jesus" (Gal.3:28). With the establishment of the "Joint International Commission for Theological Dialogue" between the Catholic Church and the Orthodox Church, the communion which is founded on the unity of faith will find its fulfillment in the common celebration of the Eucharist. Thus since Vat 11, Rome has with greater rapidity restored fraternal relations with the Ancient Churches of the East especially those which rejected the Dogmatic formulations of the councils of Ephesus and Chaldean.

DIALOGUE WITH OTHER CHURCHES/ECCLESIAL COMMUNITIES OF THE WEST
Specifically,"UNITIATIS REDINTEGRATIO" addresses the Protestant Bodies as "Ecclesial communities" to imply a modification of the traditional Catholic attitude that the corporate life of Protestants has some kind of "churchly" reality. But the difference here between "Church" and "Ecclesial community" of Vatican 11 should be underlined. Non-Catholics still need further light as to how far the Catholic Church acknowledges the reality of the "Church" beyond its own borders. The future of ecumenical dialogue hangs on this especially when we understand the Church according to the Word of Christ "thou art Peter, and upon this rock I shall build my Church" (Mt.16:18). But how the road is open as Catholics and non Roman Churches can now live and work together in Christian fellowship. It is pertinent to note that these "ecclesial communities" differ not only from the Catholic Church but also among themselves thus making the understanding of "Church" different. There are weighty differences – historical, sociological, psychological and cultural but not significantly in the interpretation of revealed truth, hence the need to propose some basic guidelines for such dialogue especially with these Christians who openly profess Jesus Christ as God and Lord as the sole Mediator between God and Man.

SACRED SCRIPTURE AND REVELATION
When the Christians separated from the Roman Church love and venerate the Sacred Scriptures towards cult and to constantly make "expert" study of it, and when they affirm the divine authority of the sacred Books, they are thinking differently from the Catholic Church which reposes all authority to the authentic teaching office of the Church in the Magisterium for the explanation and proclamation of the Word of God.

THE SEVEN SACRAMENTS OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

By Baptism, a Catholic Christian is oriented toward a complete profession of faith and complete incorporation into the system of salvation as Christ willed and towards a complete participation in Eucharistic Communion. The ecclesial communities lack the fullness of unity and incorporation, hence any meaningful dialogue must include understanding the true meaning of the Lord's Supper, the other Sacraments and the Church's worship and Ministry.

THE MORAL QUESTION - THE MAGISTERIUM

In moral matters also the Gospel is not always understood as Catholics do since they do not admit the solution for the more difficult problems of modern society, hence dialogue with them must start with discussions concerning the application of the Gospel to these moral issues. Hence the Council declares that the task of reconciling all Christians in the unity and in the only One Church of Christ transcends human energies and abilities and hope should be placed entirely in the prayer of Christ for His Church "UT UNUM SINT." In view of all this, the Catholic Church desires nothing less than full communion first in the area of ethics and morality especially as there are many Christians who do not always understand the Gospel in the same way as Catholics. Hence dialogue must concern the moral principles for the Gospel and their implications. Secondly, since 1968 Catholic theologians have been admitted into full dialogue as members of the theological department of the Moral Council of Churches and the Communion of Faith and Order.

BILATERAL DIALOGUE:
Having been inducted with dedication on disputed questions viz. Baptism, Eucharist, Ordained ministry, the sacramentality and Authority of the Church and Apostolic succession, these as we know involve questions of Faith and the primacy of conscience, let us now be sustained by the prayers of the Catholic Church and others for unity (Cf. Unitive Octave Jan. 18-25). We must give thanks to divine providence for common prayer and practical cooperation coupled with the apostolic travels of St Pope John Paul 11, to the nations of Europe – the UK, Switzerland, Finland, Norway and Sweden, the Americas and Asia, then ecumenical cooperation and the promotion of world peace have been enhanced.

PERSECUTIONS AND INTOLERANCE – CONDITIONS FOR DIALOGUE

We can be really content that the Pope has said the last truth, but he will feel lone and uncontented until others share it. Throughout history, people have converted in order to be successful whether in politics, business or the professional world. Now what are the conditions in which such can take place?

Not engaging in irrational arguments: Now from the de-ontological and epistemological considerations, it would seem that neither religious relativism ie.liberal tolerance, nor religious absolutism from the utilitarian point of view can result in persecutions, but they should lead to mutual enlightenment. The reason is that out of ten contestants every nine is convinced than ever that they are absolutely correct in their arguments. And indeed nobody really wins in an argument because losing they lose it, and winning they lose still since they most probably have hurt their opponents' pride and they will resent the triumph of winners. It may therefore not be prudent to engage in argumentations, hence the need for dialogue which amounts to co-operation on these matters. When for example I allow the Jehovah's' Witnesses their views and arguments, I may as well be helping them to enjoy peace of mind and to feel important, but are things equal after that? This is only one condition for dialogue to make the proselytizing Jehovah's Witness happy about their position. Till tomorrow they will stick to their guns and feel good, you just have to let them be and leave it at that unless you want to feel and hurt yourself.

Not undermining the efforts of others: Another condition for dialogue demands that we should understand that everyone has the right to proselytize and win members, and may the best win. Yet we should not be surprised that proselytizers resent, fear and even try to undermine the efforts of other sects such that when the two aggressive proselytizers meet, the result is inevitably a holy war, conflict and violence. Then what kind of society/community would it be in which everyone is trying to proselytize everyone else? It is only if reason triumphed that the best could win, but can reason prevail in the circumstances we now find ourselves! Can anybody win a society in which everyone is aiming to persuade rather to learn – to lead rather than to follow? Either proselytizing would give way to a holy war or the abolition of missionary activities and true religious conversion or the collapse of the society. For when people are continually subjected to attempts to convent them by setting up new churches, they end up reacting by becoming liberal and tolerant observers and proselytizing appears to them as silly and futile business. Everybody becomes at best agnostic if not atheistic or even indifferent and freethinkers. The result is that churches become empty and the end term is religious relativism. But according to Bishop Matthew Hassan Kukah, for pastors and priests their churches or assemblies will always boom with crowds of worshipers and by implication tithes, "trays" etc., but whether they believe or practice any religion at all is quite a different matter.

Not all should be preachers/teachers but humble learners/ followers: When we reflect on these facts we realize that there is indeed the sense in de-ontological arguments about proselytizing, hence the universal right for missionary enterprise: "Go out into the whole world, proclaim the Good news to every creature" is the mandate of Jesus to his missionary Apostles and by implication the Church which will always be seen to be missionary (Mk. 16:15) otherwise the collapse of such a society and the end of missionary enterprise. Rather, in an ordinary society (not imaginary as above) not everyone is interested in proselytizing, many people are often more than interested in learning as followers than in preaching and persuading/ converting others, for though while may wish to be pious worshippers and "to save their souls" few wish to be humble learners. Hence proselytizing continues to gain acceptance because there are quite a good many who are humble and docile enough and are willing to allow themselves to be converted by others. In a perfect society some are obsessed with teaching while others are docile learners and followers and we can see the balance between the two activities. As Nietzsche opines, in the realm of Religion there is a myriad of sheep-like followers. For the charismatic leaders like Chris Oyakilome of the Christ Embassy, Dr. Uma Ukpai of the Assemblies of God, W.F. Kamuyi of the Deeper Life Bible Church not to talk of Pastor Enoch Adeboye of the Redeemed Church of God (RCCG) and even our charismatic Rev. Fr. Camillus Ejike Mbaka and Rev. Fr. Patrick Edet both of the Catholic Church etc.

Then we can counter these with the biblical charismatic leaders like St. John the Baptist, St. Paul, even Muhammad and the Lord Jesus.

Inter-Faith Dialogue: In Inter-faith Dialogue discussion (dialogue) where both Christians and the other parties interact, they should never attempt to enter into public debates and disputations about words and so risk the confusion and even apathy of their listeners.

Rule of faith - Dogmas not to be debated: Surely matters of Faith, canons and dogmatic teachings ie. Doctrines of the Church cannot and should never be debated in public with rancour and ridicule. They have been already judged and disposed of by the Competent Ecclesiastical Authority of the Church whether in ecumenical Councils or the Magisterium and Creedal pronouncements.

Avoiding problems and scandals to the simple minded: Inter-faith debates involve arguments ie. Reasoning to settle a matter in doubt, and since matters of Faith are certain, they cannot to further debated about unless the debate is to refute errors. According to S. Thomas Aquinas, we do not need to worry about those who wish and firm in their faith, only small-minded listeners pose problems, and we must ward off scandal of the weak.

Avoidance of "evil persuasions" and spared of falsehood/heresy: Where Christians are surrounded by Muslims, pagans, Eckankarists, Pentecostals etc. who seek to corrupt the true Faith and Orthodoxy, they should be exposed to public debate so that true Christian faith will be strengthened and infidels deprived of their potency to deceive and confuse. We should debate about these matters specifically of the Faith, make the truth known and refute errors. Such debates can defend the Faith and convince those who have fallen into error. The ideal in all these according to Aquinas is to compel infidels not to hinder the spread of the Faith by their blasphemies and evil persuasions.

Dialogue not Monologue: Dialogue requires the free interchange of ideas between parties both of whom are full-fledged speakers and listeners for etymologically speaking, dialogue is a "talking between" not a "talking at" the parties concerned. Aquinas point of view is that the educational motive of Religious Dialogue requires that to enter into dialogue with others ie. outsiders one must have the courage of one's conviction so as to convert the outsider and this becomes a MONOLOGUE rather than DIALOGUE. But for most proselytizers the "Good News" of Salvation is good and true. If we are to alive in harmony with our neighbours surely we ought to know something about their basic world-view. By talking with people of other faiths, we must be prepared to learn from them also and by so doing enrich our faith because outsiders have access to sources of information and insights that may not be available to us. Aquinas himself borrowed for his SUMMA THEOLOGICA proofs of God's existence from Jewish philosophers, from the Aristotelian Maimonides, from Arab/Muslim Averroes etc. The worldviews of the outsiders are multifarious under the sun, and can only be understood by those who seek a comprehensive vision of Reality.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM & RELIGIOUS ANARCHY/DISLOYALTY

As a consequence of the "Model Theory of Religious Freedom", the churches find themselves in an anomalous position. Catholics believes that they possess the only complete version of Truth viz. the complete Bible of 45 books in OT ie. Genesis – Malachi, but outwardly in their civic and social relations with other churches and civil powers they preach and practise toleration and this involves a deep psychological difficulty for the members. This is the best compromise human wisdom can yet device but it has inevitable consequences. It is difficult to remain convinced that the authority of any other church is divine, when as a matter of fact and daily experience, all religious sects have to be treated equally. So many Faiths, so many loyalties are offered to the modern man. When there are so many churches in the same community/town like Idu Uruan or Calabar metropolis with more than five hundred (500) denominations each; then no one can make wholly good the claim of universalism and orthodoxy. To be Catholic in outlook, none has the power to discipline an individual which only a Universal Church can. Imagine a scenario in which in a family of six to ten almost all the family members attend different denominations: the pater familias or husband says "we have to go to the beach and collect the goods/ house effects or whatever. Then the wife begins to excuse herself: "we have fasting today": the second daughter or so son complains: we have 'tarry night' and choristers are expected to come for rehearsals" and so and so forth. Not minding what the 4th Commandment of God may ordain, nobody in that family will obey either their father or mother, or senior brothers/sisters, uncles or aunts in spite of the obvious benefit going to collect the items from the beach means to the welfare of the household! In place of one Church which is Sovereign over all men, there are many rival churches, rival states, voluntary associations and detached individuals. Religion no longer regulates their domestic or civic duties, their economic activities, their family life and their opinions/options. It has ceased to have universal dominion and is only held to be supreme within its own domain and there is much uncertainty as to what that domain really is. Hence the religious obligations of any individual are often weaker and weaker as his social interests become generally weaker than the fiercer claims of patriotism or even the duty of piety such that even in the Church, men no longer listen and feel that these are the words from the "King of Kings and Lord of Lords". And this has raised a variety of political, social, theological and philosophical problems bordering on secularism hence the decline of all religious and societal norms. This is worrisome to say the least!

Thus the man who is willing to tolerate Religious pluralism must be a Relativist for then the habit of religious toleration will dispose a man against unquestioning acceptance of the authority of a particular sect. Even the relative separation of Church and State has tended to weaken both political power and that of the Church though it may strengthen the moral foundation of such churches. The power of the Catholic Church may be greater now than it was at the Reformation and the Inquisition, the result is that genuine religious commitment in modern pluralistic societies in the world is steadily declining and even the past two hundred years have produced some of the greatest and most erudite religious men like Kierkegaard, Karl Barth, Cardinal Newman, Bonheoffer, etc. The spectre of public schools with the so –called "Government take-over of Mission Schools" in democratic pluralistic societies as an instrument of secularization is another case in point. Nigerians are better witnesses to the reign of secularism and fallen standards in our "public schools". Though public schools arose out of the need to provide education to the masses as Mission Schools were few, selective and even elitist and could not cater for all grades of children coming from different backgrounds. Education is still the key to civilization, and if churches had provided adequate education for all children, public schools would never have become popular. But then it was impossible for Missionaries to cope, if one would speak the truth. Most Mission Schools especially the Catholic schools were heavily subsidized by the Vatican and this could not be stretched to the limits. One remark of course is that Mission or Church schools originated in the context of the different denomination which could never cater for all the children except their separate sects. But if religious schools cannot compete with public schools, it is because religious peoples ie. the so-called Christians have failed in their responsibility to support the religious schools of their churches. Public schools are non-sectarian ie. non-denominational and this has become a political phrase rather than an accurate description of what actually goes on in the public school system which can never be absolutely neutral on religion. For one, Religion has become for most modern men and women one phrase in a varied experience and no longer regulates their civic duties, their economic activities and their family life. It has become "give to Caesar what belongs to Caesar".

According to Walter Lippmann in his "Foundations of Religious Toleration/Pluralism", when many churches are tolerated, it is futile to command obedience. Today for example, President Paul Biya of the Cameroun Republic has vetoed these pluralist and Pentecostal Assemblies. I have agonized in vain to explain let alone get the people to understand what harm the proliferation of churches in a given community has caused. There is civil disobedience and anarchy and chaos everywhere as nobody obeys any orders except with force and violence and in the Nigerian context with "kola or monetization with peanuts. The Government has o put its civil defence of officers and men and security forces on the streets to get the simple order of "general sanitation" on course. Similarly the church has to excommunicate or suspend Christian from the sacraments to command obedience. We cannot go on like this without running into anarchy and doom. Under the prevailing theory of public schools, the churches are silent about matters of faith and our teachers are supposed to be neutral on the issues of History and Geography or even Civics and Religious Knowledge in favour of Science related subjects to be taught and learnt in the school system of today. These inevitably bear upon religion and churches to permit this since they cannot agree on the Dogmas they would wish to be taught. Catholics would rather have no dogmas at all than broadminded Protestant dogmas in the so-called "CRK" that may be imparted in public schools, so where are we? No church can sincerely subscribe to a theory that questions of Faith do not enter into the education of their children. If there is teaching of Science, the teaching by implication is almost always relative. The teaching of History in such schools nowadays is nothing but a diluted Protestant version of History. But the chief effect of non-sectarian or liberal non-denominational policy is to weaken denominational attachments whether Catholic or of any other denomination and to wean the child from the Faith of his fathers by making him feel that patriotism demands he should not press his convictions too much.

It is to maintain that good fellowship means that the child must not be too rigid and absolute, but once in a while he will surly make a bold effort to combat this. In place of one church which is sovereign over all men, there are now many rival churches and rival potentates and voluntary organization, NGOs, the Lions Clubs, the Rotary Clubs etc. Religion for the modern man is an individual affair that must not compel the obedience and commitment of anyone. It has ceased to have a "universal dominion over men" hence the weakening of their religious and even civic obligations except of course their political and social interests. When in their churches they no longer feel assured that they are listening to the Ministers of the heavenly King - the Lord Jesus. Hence the social, political and theological problems they bring to the society can only be imagined. Lippmann looking at this phenomenon opines that there is a causal relationship between secularism and Religious pluralism such that religious pluralism inevitably results in secularism and the "decline of all Religions in such a society". Some honest competition among religions may well be a healthy thing, but in a theocracy competitions are reduced to the barest minimum and only the established churches essentially are able to cope. It is the game in town such that a person can either take it or leave it. With enlightened leadership a theocracy can be the only progressive institution with a civilized community where all will take progress, development and forge for the way forward. One can only be advised to think about what happened during the "Golden Age" of Israel vis-à-vis the old Benin Empire we have graphically portrayed in Chapter One above.

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES PRESIDENTS GENERAL WCC 1948 - 2018

INTER-RELIGIONS DIALOGUE & WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES
THE PROTESTANT INITIATIVE: WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES - ORIGINS

While the Roman Catholic Church stayed to watch and pray, the Protestant churches intensified the ecumenical dialogue and opened their Secretariat in Geneva – Switzerland in what has come to be known as the World Council of Churches (WCC). But by June 1959, His Holiness Pope John XXIII had summoned the College of Cardinals and set up a Secretariat for promoting Christian unity at the Vatican with the biblical scholar, Augustine Cardinal Bea as Chairman and Cardinal Prefect. Then Vatican II Council later in 1963 proposed the Decree "UNITATIS REDINTEGRATIO" on Ecumenism. Again recalling the events of widespread disagreements whereby large communities became separated from full communion with the Catholic Church (cf. The Reformation) the Decree explained that no sin of separation should be imputed to those who at present are born into these communities rather since they are instilled with Christ's faith they should be treated with respect and affection as brothers and sisters. It was in the light of this that the Vatican 11 tag of our "separated brethren" for the protestants came into being. With this understanding the Decree called for common prayer, communication in sacris, in special circumstances for Christian Unity and during Ecumenical gatherings.

THE BEGINNINGS – FAITH & MOVEMENT ORDER – FORMATION OF WCC

As observed already the impetus to the Ecumenical Movements came from the concern of Christians for a visible and manifest Unity of the Church of Christ wherein Christ prayed: "I do not pray for these only ie. the Disciples, but also for those who believe in me through their word, that they may all be one; even as You Father, are in me, and I in You" (Jn 17:21). This was a very outstanding feature of the last century during which the Anglican Bishop Bristol O. S. Tomkins, a onetime Secretary of the World Conference on Faith and Order, described the events which covered a number of different Movements which quite spontaneously and independently either from a missionary impulse or the desire for the "evangelization of the world" culminated in the formation of the "International Missionary Council" as well as the "World's Student Christian Federation". Some other Movements sought to bring the conscience of Christendom as a world to bear on the social, economic, industrial, political and international concerns of mankind to wit, a sort of "UNIVERSAL CHRISTIAN COUNCIL" for life and work as well as "WORLD ALLIANCE" for International Friendship through the Christian Churches for the world. Still there were other Movements which envisaged cooperation and evangelism thought and action despite the differences in faith and order (Cf Tomkins O.S.1952, 2-8). This led many concerned Christians to meet either privately or in Conferences across denominational boundaries - an encounter which gave impetus to a Christ- rooted brotherhood of all Christians, no matter their church or sectarian allegiances, through prayer and study in order to chart out a sort of Ecumenical Movement for a visible unity of all in the Mystical Body of Christ.

THE WORLD MISSIONARY CONFERENCE 1910

The first of these Meetings was the World Missionary Conference which was held in Edinburgh Scotland in 1910. (Cf. Ibebuike P.C. Vol. 9, 1910 11-17, See also The Eucharist Frankfurt, Peter Lang 1989, 34-37). This Conference was carefully prepared and organized to bring all the various Protestant church Leaders together in an international forum to know and esteem one another. But the organizers carefully charted the path the Conference was going to take to make sure everybody would be carried along by insisting that "no expression of opinion should be sought among other things from the Conference on any matter involving any ecclesiastical or doctrinal questions on which those taking part in the Conference differed among themselves". This point must be well noted as a Protestant mentality and not one charted by Catholics. In fact this clause made it possible for many of the Protestant sister-churches which were hesitant to attend the Conference notably the Anglican Church and the Society for Preaching the Gospel –

"Church of England" to make up their minds. This concept also was to give effect to the principle of mutual respect between Christian denominations in an assembly or forum like this. It means that questions affecting differences of Doctrine and Order between Christian bodies must be expunged from any discussions, resolutions or programmes of such Conferences. This Conference, the precursor of modern "Ecumenical Movements" took place in grand style with a mammoth attendance of about 1335 delegates which for 10 days discussed freely the problems arising from the foreign missions of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

THE INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL

This Council grew from the World Missionary Council of Edinburgh since a committee of International Missionary Council had organized it as a sort of "Standing Committee" under Bishop John H. Oldham as the secretary. The meeting had been set up to continue the work of the Council. In 1921 in New York, the IMC was constituted with John Moth, a Methodist layman as Chairman. This Council united the Protestant Missionary Councils and all the missionary agencies in Europe and North America. In organizing its international meetings first in Jerusalem in 1928, Tambaram in 1938, Whitby in 1947, Willingen in 1952 and Accra in 1958, this Council achieved quite a lot as we are going to see. The great work of the IMC as a global network became the preparatory stages towards coordinated activities of study, consultations and conferences for a united action the first fruits of which was the development of a truly "International World Council", ie. the coming together under one umbrella of the IMC, Faith and Order and Life and Work groups as we are going to see. In 1948 the Faith and Order/ Life and Work Movements united to form the World Council of Churches (WCC). In 1961 the International Missionary Council joined the WCC with a secretariat in the Far East specifically to meet the refugee and emergency needs in Asia and the Middle East. Following these was the "Evanston General Assembly" which in 1954 was to set up a joint committee to fully integrate the IMC. In 1961 at New Delhi the IMC was formerly enrolled into the WCC and this necessitated the restructuring of the WCC with the result that a new division was created as the "Commission on World Mission and Evangelism". This Commission enjoyed a certain independence and could liaise with other bodies which were not yet full members of the WCC.

THE FAITH AND ORDER MOVEMENT

Let us go back to see how these things unfolded. Later on, Bishop Charles Brent of the Episcopal Church of America, a first delegate of the 1910 Edinburgh Conference who was perplexed and agitated at the Council concerning its stand on the exclusion of matters of Faith & Order together with Rev. W.T. Manning Bishop of New York called for a World Conference of "all Christian communions throughout the world which confess Our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour" to discuss issues of Faith and Order, to wit – those matters of FAITH in contrast to BELIEF in its functional dimension and in contrast to CREED as well as ORDER, which as used by Anglicans denote matters concerning the Church, Ministry and Sacraments. Bishop C.P. Anderson of Chicago together with an influential layman, Sir Robert Gardiner were elected President and Secretary respectively of the said Council. Gardiner carried out most of the Council's organizational duties and with two other American Churches viz. the "National Convention of the Disciples of Christ" and the "National Council of the Congregation of Churches". These similarly passed those resolutions with the responsibility of getting them ratified by the Episcopal Church. The committee tagged "Plan and Scope of the North American Preparatory Conference" was set up and charged with the following: (a)THE CHURCH: Its Nature and Functions (b) THE CATHOLIC CREED ie. the Apostles' Creed – Credo" as safeguard of the Faith of the Church (c) GRACE AND SACRAMENTS (d) THE MINISTRY: its nature and functions (e) Practical questions connected with MISSIONARY /ADMINISTRATIVE FUNCTIONS OF THE CHURCH (Cf CJC 1254 - 1310). In 1952 the Commission held its 3rd World Conference at Lund in Sweden and moved from comparative ecclesiology to a new method of discussing and evaluating Conference topics as theological dialogues treating controversial issues from biblical and Christological basis ie. "CHRISTOCENTIC THEOLOGY" and other factors "to proclaim the oneness of the Church of Jesus Christ and call the churches to the goal of visible unity in one faith and one Eucharistic Fellowship".

The Committee on Faith & Order has 120 members who meet every three /four years and is a mixed forum with 30% women of great orthodox theologians and Church leaders worldwide viz. Africa, Asia and Latin America and even non-member churches of the WCC. In 1963 its 4th Conference chaired by Oliver Tomkins, Bishop of Bristol took place at Montreal – Canada. In 1968 the Roman Catholic Church was officially represented with 12 members and has since been taking part in all Faith and Order studies. (Cf. Transky T. 1991, 43-45; See also Tissington T. SPCK 1954, 12-16). After the 1st world war, a preliminary Conference on Faith and Order was convened at Geneva in 1920 with delegates from 40 countries. At the end of the Conference a "Continuation Committee" was formed to replace the Episcopal Church with Bishop Brent as Chairman. This was set up precisely with the duty of among other things fixing dates and places for the next World Conferences and making of arrangements. Therefore, the Committee was taxed with the other duties of supervision, of the circulation of Conferences Reports to the churches as also the reception of their replies etc. In 1926 the first official conference on Faith and Order took place at Lausanne – Switzerland with a total attendance of 439 delegates from 108 churches worldwide. This particular event was namely to register the apparent fundamental agreements within the Conference as well as the grave points of disagreements. The method of the Conference was known as Comparative Ecclesiology and was used in evaluating among others seven topics of the Conference viz. (a) Call to unity (b) The church's common confession of Faith (c)The church's Ministry (d)The church's Message to the world. The Gospel (e) The nature of the Church (f) The Sacraments (g) The Unity of Christendom and the existing churches. (Cf. Gassmann G., 1991, 19-23). In 1937 the second World Conference of Faith and Order took place at Edinburgh with 504 delegates representing 122 churches under the Presidency of William Temple, the Archbishop of York in England. The Conference was precisely to among other things clarify and decide despite opposing voices on several concepts of Church Unity and to unite Faith and Order with Life and Work Movements so as to form the new World Council of Churches which took place in 1948 at Geneva.

LIFE AND WORK MOVEMENT

Before the First World War, the idea of forming a worldwide movement of churches which could work together for world peace and justice between nations was always discussed at Christian Peace Movements but after the 1st year of that war, the need arose for a founding a more urgent and hence a "UNIVERSAL CONFERENCE FOR PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY" better known as Life and Work. This was formed in 1914. For its inauguration, a joint appeal was circulated from the Federated a.k.a "Federal Council of Churches of Christ" in America, the "Primates" of Sweden, Norway and Denmark to the different independent ecumenical bodies and leading churchmen and organizations in Holland, Switzerland and to several neutral countries. The Circular among other things lamented that the war was causing untold distress. It warned that Christ's Body – the Church was suffering and mourning. It also exhorted those churches "We servants of the Church, address to all those who have power or influence in the matter and earnest appeal seriously to keep peace before their eyes in order that bloodshed may soon cease. We remind especially our Christian brethren of various nations that war cannot asunder the bond of international union which Christ holds in us". (Cf. Bell G. K. A. ed. 1926, 2-6).

PLANS FOR THE FORMATION OF THE WCC

At the end of the war plans were afoot for the formation of a World Conference to chart out a just and lasting peace so as to formulate the Christian response to the economic, social and moral issues in the post war world. In 1920 a leading figure Archbishop Nathan Soderblom of the Lutheran Church of Sweden with remarkable talents and deep social concern and passion for Christian Unity determined to make this first preparatory Conference of churches one that would deal with social issues as well as support the idea of a an eventual ECUMENICAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES. In 1923 a preparatory "Executive Committee" met at Zurich in the following words "The Conference on Life and Work without entering into questions of Faith and Order, aims to unite the different churches in common practical work, to furnish the Christian conscience with an organ of expression in the midst of the great spiritual movements of our time, and to insist that the principle of the Gospel be applied to the solution of contemporary social and international problems." In 1925 the 1st. Conference of Life and Work which differed from those of Faith and Order as well as The World Alliance for promoting International Friendship through churches and dealing precisely with questions of peace and international goodwill was born at Stockholm. All except the Catholic Church was represented. With 500 delegates from 37 countries this world conference of sorts went about to discuss: (a) The purpose of God for humanity and duties of the church (b) The Church and economic /industrial problems (c) The Church and socio-moral problems (d) The Church and international relations (e) The Church and educations (f) Methods of co-operation of Cooperatives and Federative efforts by the Christian communions. The spirit of that conference lay in its insight that "the world is too strong for a divided Church". But its weakness was its avoidance of theological issues. A continuation committee as usual was appointed to among others organize the next conferences. The 2nd conference was convened at Oxford in England and it was this Conference which passed a resolution to unite with Faith and Order movement and work for the sustenance and progress of the WCC which materialized in 1948 with the Conference of Life and Work as one of WCC's major Commissions (Cf. Albrecht P. & Loosky N. et als op cit 1991; See also Visser't Hooft W.A. 1954; Hodgson L. ed. 1938).

With the Stockholm and Lausanne Life and Work / Faith and Order Conferences convoked in grand style with maximum attendance came many calls for a Council of churches and as Visser't Hooft has testified: "The idea of a World Council of Churches was in the air, but so long as there were in existence several different and independent ecumenical bodies it seemed impossible of realization" This was the problem, agreeing to merge/unite the two topmost world movements with such important stake holders not in hurry to shift grounds whereas for the lay mind the existence of such bodies in the church of Christ could neither be understood nor appreciated. There was also the other fact that as Life and Work was becoming more and more theological and Faith and Order more practical, such a situation of itself was fraught with serious problems. But providentially what paradoxically seemed to save the situation and urgency was the looming totalitarian doctrines of the 1930's for which the churches had to seek for solidarity – hence the reinforced conclusion for the ecumenical task.

In 1936 both the Universal Council for Life and Work and the World Conference for Faith and Order appointed a committee which passed resolutions recommending the review of the work of ecumenical co-operation.

[C. 35] The committee of 35: A committee with selected women and youth representatives and some officers of the ecumenical movements numbering 35 of them, subsequently met at Westerfield College in London in 1937 and unanimously recommended what resulted in a Memorandum to wit:

(a) That the new organization shall have no power to legislate for churches nor commit them to action without their consent
(b) That to be effective it must win the respect of the churches in such measure that people of greatest influence in the life of the churches are willing to give their time and thought to the work.
(c) That as is the case in the modern church, lay people holding posts of responsibility and influence in the secular world can be called upon to bear witness in certain spheres in the church.
(d) That the new council would enter into relationship with other ecumenical bodies so that the life in them may derive stability and true perspective from the churches.
(e) That each conference was to approve the establishment of the World Council of Churches which would function through a General Assembly of representatives of the churches, a central committee, a Commission for further study of the two existing Conferences.

Such an arrangement of course required a first class intelligent staff in order that matters for discussion and action could be adequately prepared. To this end each conference was to appoint a committee of seven to make a combined commission of 14 pending the formation of the World Council.

[C.7 // C.14] The Committee of 7 viz. Resolutions of life and Work Comm. of 7 at Oxford: At the 1937 Conference of Life and Work William A. Brown with the delegates mostly from the United States of America and Pastor Marc Boegner leading the delegates from the European side unanimously adopted the Resolutions of their groups and went on to approve the proposal of the [C. 35] when it was put to the floor of the assembly with only two voices dissenting. The Conference then ended with naming seven [C.7] delegates and their alternates for the formation of the [C.14] with their counterparts from the Faith and Order when this latter would meet.

[C.60]Resolutions of Faith and Order at Edinburgh: Similarly, when the Faith and Order met at Edinburgh to discuss the proposal of the [C. 35] a committee of 60 under Dr. Ross Stevenson as chairman met and recommended that the conference should give a sympathetic welcome to the general plan without committing itself to the details and should also present a favourable recommendation to the churches worldwide. It further made a number of provisos to be incorporated to the effect that: the Faith and Order shall in the first instance be in the Continuation Committee appointed by WCC and that for any further appointments members from Faith and Order "shall always be from the churches which fall within the terms of Faith and Order and addressed to churches worldwide which accept our Lord Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour". Other guarantees were that the work of Faith and Order should be carried out under a theological secretariat pending the formation of the General Assembly. Their [C. 7] which would co-operate with those of Life and Work was implemented and given the mandate to complete the details for the WCC and their plans. Subsequently with the meeting of the [C. 14] drawing up the Draft Constitution of the WCC the Faith and Order component submitted its continuation committee in 1938 at Clarens in Switzerland where the Faith and Order gave its final approval to the Union of Life and Work to form the World Council of Churches WCC.

[C. 14] The Committee of 14: With their separate alternates after their Oxford & Edinburgh meetings in 1937 as seen above, these decided to increase their membership by inviting people from different groups of churches to help in drawing up the Constitution for the proposed WCC. This enlarged body decided to meet at Utrecht Holland in 1938 and using the submissions of [C. 35] as guide, set out to discuss three paramount issues and details viz.

AUTHORITY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES - WCC

On the Authority of the World Council of Churches, they approved that the WCC "shall offer counsel and provide opportunity for a united action in matters as one or more of them may commit to it." It shall have authority to call Regional / World Conferences on specific subjects as occasion may require. The WCC shall not legislate for churches. It shall not act for them in any manner except as indicated above and as hereinafter may be specified by the constituent churches. Accordingly, the Chairman Archbishop Temple clarified the other issues of the MEMORANDUM emphasizing that "the WCC is not a FEDERATION, as commonly understood since the General Assembly GA and the Central Committee will have no constitutional authority over the constituent churches. Any authority that it may have will consist in the weight which it carries with the churches by its wisdom."

THE DOCTRINAL BASIS OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

On doctrinal basis, the Committee agreed after prolonged debate that "the WCC stands on FAITH in Jesus as God and Saviour." The basis of all this is an affirmation of the Christian Faith of the participating churches not so much a creedal test to judge the churches or persons but an affirmation of the Incarnation and Atonement. The WCC is to be a fellowship of churches which accept these TRUTHS and is therefore not concerned with the manner in which churches interpret them hence the responsibility of each particular church to decide whether or not to collaborate on this basis.

THE MANNER OF ELECTING REPRESENTATIVES OF THE WCC

On the manner of electing representatives of the World Council of Churches, the Utrecht Conference could not decide but recommended that the seats in the Assembly were to be distributed among member churches by the General Assembly. Meanwhile as a sort of interim arrangement, a provisional Committee was set up comprising the [C.14], their alternates an three members each from the Life and Work and Faith and Order administrative committees to be headed by Archbishop Temple with Sir W.A Visser't Hooft as Secretary General. This provisional Committee set to work almost immediately and at its first meeting at Germaine in January 1939 fixed a tentative date ie. August 1941 for the INAUGURATION OF WCC with letters embodying the Draft Constitution sent out to the churches. But as events sadly turned out the 2nd World War shook the earth in September 1939. Thus the 1st. Assembly had to wait until after the traumatic catastrophe when Deo Volente, it finally convened in August 1948 in Amsterdam, Holland.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY: INAUGURATION OF WCC - AMSTERDAM 1948

The glorious day came on 22nd August 1948 when 351 delegates from 135 Denominations in 44 countries of the world assembled at Amsterdam for the Inauguration of the World Council Churches, WCC and its 1st General Assembly, GA. At the 1st plenary session on the 2nd day – 23rd, Pastor Marc Boegner submitted the Resolutions to constitute the WCC in the name of the [C. 14] and the provisional Committee saying:

(a) "That the 1st Assembly of the WCC declared to be and is hereby constituted in accordance with the Constitution drafted at Utrecht as approved by the churches;
(b) "That the General Assembly consists to those persons who have been appointed as official delegates of the churches adhering to the Council;
(c) "That the formation of the World Council of Churches be declared to be and is hereby completed. These Resolutions were adopted nemine contradicente by a great applause, thus concluding the vision of ten long years of endeavours. The joy of this success also reflected in the message of the churches by the Assembly wherein they declared: "We bless God our Father, and Our Lord Jesus Christ, who gathers together in one the children of God that are scattered abroad. He has brought us here together at Amsterdam. We are one in acknowledging Him as our God and Saviour. We are divided from one another not only in matters of faith, order and tradition, but also pride of nation, class and race. But Christ has made us His own, and He is not divided. In seeking Him we find one another; here in Amsterdam we have committed ourselves afresh to Him, and have covenanted with one another in constituting this World Conference of Churches. (Cf. Billad G.K.A. The Stockholm Conference on L&W 1925 OUP London 1926; See also Visser't Hooft W.A The Genesis and Formation of the WCC Geneva, 1982; Hodgson L. The 2nd World Conference on F&L Edinburgh SCM 1938; Kirche und Weldt in okumenischer sicht. Bericht der Weltkirchenkonference von Oxford uber Kirche, Welt und Staat).
(c) Establishing relations with denominational federations with other ecumenical movements world wide.
(d) Convening world conference on specific issues as occasion may require.
(e) Giving support to churches in their task of evangelism. Membership of WCC is drawn from the churches which agree with the basis upon which the Council is founded and which fulfils these criteria:

Autonomy ie. Churches are responsible to no other church for the conduct of its own life. Stability. Size. Relationship to other churches. While the official report of 1st General Assembly stated that all confessional families except the Roman Catholic Mission were represented meaning that the Roman Catholic Mission is not a member of the World Council of Churches. All the other four ancient Orthodox Patriarchates of Alexandria, Antioch, Constantinople and Jerusalem were all foundation members as well as the churches of Greece and Orthodox Church of the United States of America. The Orthodox churches of Russia and Eastern Europe became members in 1961 while the Roman Catholic Mission attended in observer status in 1963 justifying the work of the good Pope St. John XXIII in his convocation of Vatican ll in 1963.

BASIS OF WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

The defining basis of the WCC is with respect to the Council's nature whose original basis was adopted by Amsterdam 1948 following the Utrecht formulation by [C. 14] in their meeting of invited churches, to wit: "The World Council of Churches is a fellowship of churches which accept Our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour" although some conservative minded and liberal Protestants expressed dissatisfaction with this formulation. To this end Archbishop Temple had explained the theological implications thus:

The WCC is not a federation but a FELLOWSHIP of churches and this means it cannot exercise any constitutional authority over the member churches., also while the WCC "stands on faith in Jesus Christ as God and Saviour, in essence an affirmation of the Incarnation and the Atonement, the churches will have freedom to interprete that faith in their own way". Since Utrecht, some have been arguing against this basis which the Amsterdam Assembly had judged is quite adequate for the present purpose of the WCC. However, the 2nd Evanston Assembly in 1954 has accepted it arguing that the function and basis of WCC is although "less than a CONFESSION, but it is much more than a mere formula or agreement," since it has shown the nature of ecumenical fellowship and it has provided an overall orientation for the Council's work and has also indicated the general range of fellowship which member churches sought to establish. But between Evanston and New Delhi 1961 a new sub-committee has worked on the issue receiving suggestions from a number of theologians such that the new "BASIS" dawn up in 1960 by the Central Committee and adopted by the majority now reads: "The WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES is a FELLOWSHIP of churches which confess the Lord Jesus Christ a God and Saviour according to the Scriptures and therefore seek to fulfill together their common calling to the glory of the one God, Father, Son and the Holy Spirit." This new BASIS was adopted by the General Assembly.

MEMBERSHIP IN THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Since then, those churches which have agreed with this BASIS are eligible to apply for membership and application are approved by 2/3rd of the Central Committee unless 1/3rd objections are received within six months overall orientation for the Council's work and indicate the general range of fellowship which have agreed with this BASIS are eligible to apply for membership and applications are approve by 2/3 of the GA.(or 2/3 of the Central Committee) unless 1/3 objections are approve by 2/3 of the General Assembly (or 2/3 of the Central Committee) unless 1/3 objections are received within six month from the member churches. A prospective member must also "show sustained independent life and organization as well as constructive ecumenical relations" with other churches in its country. To-date member churches have about 25,000 members and churches with at least 10,000 members may be associate members and eligible to participate but may not vote in the Assembly because becoming a member signifies "faithfulness to the BASIS on which the Council was founded, fellowship in the Council, participation in the life and work of WCC and commitment to the mission of the church". As the World Council of Churches does not collect dues/subscriptions from the churches, only annual contributions to the general Budget and programmes of WCC commensurate with their resources are listed among membership responsibilities.

ORGANIZATION & STRUCTURES OF WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Since the 1948 Amsterdam 1st Assembly defined the tasks of WCC in its Constitutions and clarified them ie. its decisions concerning policies and programmes, the WCC discharges it legislative and executive functions through the General Assembly, the Central Committee and the Exco through officers and subordinate bodies of the Secretariat. The General Assembly is the supreme legislative body to determine policies and review the implementation of programmes and meets every 7/8 years. Its composition has delegates of voting rights representing their churches and the General Assembly elects the 6/7 PRESIDENTS OF WCC who form the PRAESIDIUM as well as electing the CENTRAL COMMITTEE made up of 145 elected and 5 co-opted members also allocating seats pro rata on the basis of numerical strength, confessional representation and geographical distribution. The Central Committee elects the SECRETARY GENERAL as well his assistants with the Exco elected from its rank and file. The Central Committee meets annually but the Exco of 27 meets twice a year. The Central Committee implements the polices of the General Assembly, approves and reviews its programmes and priorities, adopts the Budget and elects a 14 – 16 man Ex-officio members. The Secretary General is the Chief Executive and Head of Staff elected for a 5-year term and is accountable to the Central Committee. The seat of the Secretariat and Commissions is at GENEVA with a branch office in New York. The 1st Secretary General was Sir W.A Visser't Hooft (1966 -72) 3rd Sir Phillip Potter (1972 - 84) 4th Sir Emilio Castro (19845-92) and currently 5th Sir Conrad Raiser. SUMMARY: RELATIONS BETWEEN WCC & ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

As stated above the RCM though invited did not attend nor register as a member in the 1948 Amsterdam 1st Inauguration. But with the convocation of Vatican ll by Pope St. John XXIII 5 Vatican Observers attended the Conference in 1961 at New Delhi. Later the Institute of the Pontifical Council for promoting Christian Unity established Relations with WCC on observer status at Geneva in 1963. In 1961 during the Central Committee Meeting at Enugu-Nigeria, the working Group between WCC and RCM was officially established. In 1968 His Holiness Pp Paul VI at the HQ Geneva attended the Central Committee and announced that membership of the Holy See in WCC was not yet mature and this settled the question of RCM membership in WCC for now.

SUMMARY – INTER-RELIGIOUS DIALOGUE AND ECUMENISM

In this last article we are discussing not the Ecumenical movement as such which is concerned mainly with dialogue with churches (East/West) and ecclesiastical communities separated from the Apostolic See i.e. Ecumenism simpliciter, but the coming together of all Religious Bodies (RELIGIONS) Christians and non-Christians in Dialogue. This is inter-religious Dialogue and must be distinguished from the Ecumenical movement treated in Articles 1-3, viz. the Apostolic See or Roman Catholic Relations with Islam, ATR, Asian Religions (Buddhism, Hinduism, Shintoism etc).

ESSENCE AND FORMS OF INTER-RELIGIOUS DIALOGUE

By definition using the expression of Francis Cardinal Arinze, 1st Prefect/President of the Pontifical Commission for non-Christian Religions in consonance with the Pontifical Commission/Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue and the Secretariat for promoting Christian Unity/Congregation for Doctrine of Faith (Propaganda Fide) at the Vatican. This Inter- Religious Dialogue "consists in meeting other believers as the starting point". In short, it is relating both in converse and discussion with people of other religions since we live and work in a pluralistic world of Religious Pluralism. The number of Religious Beliefs and Practices in Nigeria today is breadth-taking, hence the necessity for Inter-Religious Dialogue if we want to live and work as citizens of Nigeria and with Nigerians. In inter-Religious Dialogue, we must break the walls of prejudices and learn to live together in freedom, openness, mutual understanding, give and take and try to listen to one another in an encounter and atmosphere free of rancour and prejudice that will open so many possibilities to all and sundry. It is important also that a clear distinction be made here that inter-religious dialogue is neither Ecumenism, nor separatism, nor syncretism, nor relationism, nor even for the purpose of proselytism to win others or convert others to Catholicism and vice versa. Hence, the forms of inter-religious dialogue should embody dialogue of life, dialogue of Action, in theological exchanges, exchange of Religious experiences, prayer, sharing, joint ventures, eating/drinking together, etc. Because of the unity of our human nature as members of the human race and our quest for truth, our dialogue should focus on some theological foundations viz. that God is Creator and Father of all; that Jesus Christ is our Saviour and the Holy Spirit the Sanctifier. We share one earth and have same destiny and so our culture, social relationships and ethical relations should inform our political and economic interactions. The whole world is a global unity, hence inter-dependence both in political and global economic education (globalization).

AIMS AND OBJECTIVES/ BASIC APPROACHES TO DIALOGUE

The Vat. 11 Decree on Priests "OPTATAM TOTUS" clearly states the importance of educating future pastoral workers, ministers, pastors, evangelists, catechists, etc. in the spirit of ecumenism and inter-religious dialogue, first by knowing and understanding the Churches and ecclesial communities separated from the Holy See so that they may learn to take part in promoting the restoration of unity between all Christians. Secondly they should be introduced to acknowledge whatever other religious organizers commonly encounter in their localities. Religious workers should be able to recognize more clearly how much goodness and truth these other religions possess through the providence of God and so learn how to refute these errors and bring the light of the Gospel (Truth) to those without it. Thirdly according to the Decree "AD GENTES" on Mission, they should be opened and refined in Philosophy and Theology to be able to appreciate the cultures of their people, relationship between the religious traditions of their homeland and Christianity, learn the history goals and methods of missionary activity as well as the peculiar social, political, economic and cultural conditions of those peoples in order to be for and in the spirit of ecumenism. They should be prepared for fraternal dialogue with non-Christians.

PRACTICAL DIMENSIONS/PASTORAL IMPLICATIONS OF INTER-RELIGIOUS DIALOGUE WITH CHURCHES

Based on the realities of political, social, economic and religious dimensions in Africa, Catholic Teachings and/or whatever other teachings/programmes on Inter-Religious Dialogue should be seen as one of the most pressing challenges facing the Church in the world of today. Therefore pastoral agents – priests, pastors, evangelists and seminarians need to be prepared to enter into inter-religious dialogue with a firm commitment to Catholic faith founded on divine revelation and accurate understanding of Catholic Theological principles. They need to take a contextual approach rooted in our African life realities and teachings of the Catholic Church. Christian churches since the Bible is the supreme authority for building up the faith. Hence pastors, students and priests should be devoted to the study of the Bible eg. the Bible stories about Jonas, the Syrophoenician woman etc. These can form excellent points of convergence to bridge differences in religious understanding. Some regarding the church's initiative and approaches in the history of the Church can also help here viz. the patristic age, medieval/modern missionary effort and expansion, church organizations in contemporary experience, World Conferences on Religion and Peace as also the project for Christian Muslim Relations on Dialogue should be consulted viz. Council Documents, Papal Documents and Encyclical, Documents from National Episcopal Conferences as also Documents from the Pontifical Commissions and Councils viz Pontifical Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue, Pontifical Council for Culture, Pontifical Council for J.PD, Commission for promotion of Christian Unity, Commission for Religious Relations with Jews including other initiatives and Documents of the World Council of Churches, WCC, Meeting African Religions - ATR, Letters to World Religious Leaders of Francis Cardinal Arinze, President for the Pontifical Commission on Religious Relations viz. Non-Christian Religions (1997 - 2002) , Messages to Muslims (1967 - 2003) etc. Finally, Vatican II Documents quoted or used in this Programme viz. "NOSTRA AETATE" on "Non Christian Religions", LUMEN GENTIUM on "The Church", DIGNITATIS HUMANAE on "Religious Freedom", "AD GENTES" on "Church Missionary Activity "GAUDIUM ET SPES" on "The Church in the Modern World" including the Encyclicals of Pope Paul VI "ECCLESIAM SUAM" and those of Pope St. John Paul II "TERTIO MILLENIO ADVENIENTE" and "UT UNUM SINT".

Furthermore, basic teachings on ATR, Islam, Hinduism, Taoism, Eckankar etc, must be sustained. The Council's commitment to Oecumenical Dialogue far from being the responsibility of the Successor of Peter ie. the Pope or the Apostolic See, is also the duty of individuals, Christian or non-Christian whether as local churches or special Commissions for fostering the ecumenical spirit, and should operate in individual institutions eg. Dioceses, Major Seminaries, Catholic Universities and Institutes of Higher Learning especially with reference to African Traditional Religion (ATR), Islam, and Inter-Religious Dialogue. Students of Oecumenism should critically examine and approach their study of Theology or Religious Studies in the light of the Magisterium and Church official teachings using the Documents as enumerated above. They should always check on the Vatican website www, Vatican.org and also consult on line or through their libraries and Documents of the Pontifical Council for Inter-Religious Dialogue (PCID) at the Vatican. The PCID would be happy to receive comments and enquiries from Seminary teachers, professors and even the students themselves especially those from Catholic as also Protestant Seminaries, Institutes and Religious Houses of Formation and Scholasticates, etc. Some of the materials as presented here are as a response to these requests and what are expressed here are simply indications to guide those who are stake holders in the effort towards ecumenical dialogue. But there is a great need today to study closely the foundational courses and programmes especially in theology which are geared towards genuine inter-religious as also ecumenical dialogue as part of the whole Teachings of the Church and Missiology the end term of which is the all-round formation of future pastors, ministers and other evangelism organizers in order to lead them resolutely on the road towards sanctity and the salvation of mankind.

THE IMPLOSION OF PENTECOSTALISM a.k.a CCRN

The implosion of Pentecostalism now tagged Catholic Charismatic Renewal of Nigeria (CCRN) which is the Catholic counter-part of Pentecostalism has influenced not only the lay Catholic Faithful but even more so, the clergy what have come to be regarded Pentecostal or charismatic priests and bishops, whereas there are bishops and priests who will not want to hear of Pentecostals or have anything to do with them in their dioceses and parishes. In the 1980's the Catholic Charismatic Renewal was banned by the erstwhile Bishop of Owerri, Most Rev. Dr. Mark O. Unegbu of blessed memory. I can recall that in the late 1970's with the introduction of the movement at the Catholic Chaplaincy of University of Ibadan, I started the movement with the assistance of two Catholic students of the UI viz. Mr. Dominic Ukpong from St. Peter's Ibiono and Miss Patricia J. Nyambi from the Sacred Heart Cathedral at the then St. Paul's Catholic Chaplaincy UNICAL, now St. Paul's Parish, and I did send as the transport system in the institution at the time was optimal, a large contingent to the Rally presided by the now excommunicated Archbishop Malingo in 1979. After that the movement spread like wild fire into all parts of the then Ecclesiastical Province of Onitsha in the defunct Eastern region of Nigeria. The introduction of the Movement was to counter the protestant movement of the time that almost ruined the Christian youths Catholic and Protestant under the banner of the Scripture Union (SU). It was my raison d'être that convinced and prompted the erstwhile Archbishop of Calabar, Most Rev. Dr. Brian D. Usanga to grant the go-ahead for the inauguration of the Movement East of the Niger. Today, I can count the good, the bad and the ugly which this counter Movement and by implication Pentecostalism is wrecking on the Body of Christ nationwide. In fact it was on account of the fall-outs from the Charismatic Movement that provoked the Church's hierarchy in Nigeria to promptly publish Guidelines for the Catholic Charismatic Renewal of Nigeria specifically for the Healing Ministry in the Catholic Church. But the problem of Pentecostalism, particularly among priests does not seem to be abating. The issue simply borders on the loss of pristine Faith in the Christian Churches because most of our Catholics and indeed other Protestant Christians who come home from Port Harcourt, Lagos, Benin etc. during Christmas and Easter come back more Pentecostal than Catholic or Anglican or Presbyterian than ever.

Today in particular Idu and Calabar the HQRS of URUAN and EFIK kingdoms, there are hundreds of these Pentecostal Churches with their own reformed brands in tow. In these two towns not less than ten indigenes have established their own brands. Today too, this upsurge has made some people to claim that in Nigeria only two things are viable: "selling petrol and planting new Pentecostal Churches" because both are indisputably money yielding ventures especially as prosperity preachings and stage-managed healings and miracles are on the increase thus inflicting casualties in their trail on the Catholic Church in particular and the other mainline Christian churches in general. The growth of Pentecostalism in Nigeria is attested to especially among members of the Redeemed Christian Church of God pastured by Enoch Adeboye, the Assemblies of God started by the Anglican Augustine Wugu and the Deeper Life Bible Church headed by Pastor W. Folorunsho Kumuyi, and these have now become the fastest growing Pentecostal churches in Nigeria today. Perhaps it may be profitable to sketch in brief, some of these high profile Pentecostal Churches that have so much gained thousands of adherents nationwide today. It is also necessary to group them in their different platforms under which they operate in what has now become the Pentecostal Federation of Nigeria. My categories here may not be exactly how the Federation identifies itself but my attempt follows what has been unfolding to me since the 1940's when the erstwhile Christian Church viz. the Catholic Church in Idu became fractured with the mushrooming of Protestant, Evangelical, Prayer Houses and Alladura/Pentecostal brands. At least five categories can be identified viz. the Evangelical Churches popularly tagged" Uf?k Abasi ? kpa Ub?k", Prayer houses/homes, Faith-healing /Spiritual/Prophetic Churches, and the so-called Independent Religious Movements tagged Vivalistic /Charismatic /Crusade Pentecostal churches. But today some writers have assigned certain descriptive names/categories to identify these New Religious Movements (NRMs). Rosalind I.J. Hackett (Cf.Hackett R.I.J., 16-21) from Scotland who joined our Department of Religious Studies and Philosophy in the Federal University Calabar in the 1980's as also Friday M. Mbon (Mbon F.M, 21-14) made extensive study of Nigeria's NRMs and came up with their categories as Neo-primal movements; Healing home; Spiritual Science Movements eg. Eckankar, Bahai Movement, etc; Independent churches; Prophetic healing churches and Revivalisic Crusades. But even with these we come to discover that the classifications represent merely some domestic NRMs because we should be conscious of the fact that all these are only descriptive terminologies like "Uf?k Abasi ? kpa Ub?k" or even Uf?k Akam uk?k Ud? ?" ie. Independent African Churches; Faith Healing Churches and Spiritual/Prophetic Churches. These may only be valid at the time and can be subject to changes when any RMR changes its style, or even scale as they are unfolding themselves these days because in the phenomenology of religion as envisaged here, no single classification is entirely universal. NRMs are a global movement and in their worldwide perspective they have come into existence upon contact with established historical religious denominations or mainline churches and therefore denote a quest for freedom from such hierarchically structured religious bodies. Thus within the last two or three hundred years according to William H. Turner of the University of Birmingham who has made a comprehensive study of the Nigerian Independent religious churches, there is a very unprecedented and rapid rise of a variety of religious creations as a worldwide religious phenomenon (Cf. (Turner,W.H.12). According to a Vatican Report (Cf. Vatican Reports, 312-320) also these NRMs are to be found across all the world's continents. Another author on NRMs, Peter B Clarke, (Clarke P. B.38-42) believes that in order to appreciate these religious movements for what they are, they should be considered from a global perspective. It is noteworthy as observed already, that just as in Latin America which has long produced a number of prophetic, Pentecostal and messianic movements, it is correct to say that no single country can fully represent the variety and diversity of religious movements across Latin America. There is therefore fluidity of movement across national and continental boundaries. In fact this may well be the reason, why in order to extricate themselves from these hierarchies, they often denounce these "Big Brother/Sister" churches as most of the time their pastors' preachments are either on castigating the Catholic Church or another mainline "Protestant Church" usually the one from which they originally sprang. That is why I have tried to domicile their former erstwhile denominations in my table below. A good example is what happened a few years ago at Idu when the erstwhile presiding bishop, to mention the name, Bishop Aniema S.Etuk was challenged by one of his ministers and this ended up in fisticuffs. Just not to let down his ego, he bolted out from the original older Mount Zion Light House which has been there for ages and formed his own charismatic church with much ado and high profile, which he named "Jesus shall Reign Church" and it is making waves all over URUAN kingdom. This happened in 2008 to be precise. As we can surmise, most of these movements are new, not only in their existence but also in their thinking and acting seem to be just responding to global realities, because people instinctively want to be actors and shakers on the global stage. But what we should always not lose sight of is that people wanting to be actors on their own, means that religious faith can become a matter of personal opinion to be practiced as one thinks and not as Christ has directed his Church which is his constituted Body as such – a rather dangerous proposition, if you won't mind! That is why we are seeing this trend of hostility and sometimes downright hatred and attitude towards the established churches in our clime and pervading atmosphere of relativism most especially manifest in the a la carte religious groups and Pentecostals whereby everyone feels too subjectively free to establish and run his own church the way he wants.

NON-EVANGELICAL CHURCHES: NEO-PRIMAL MOVEMENTS.
1. THE EVANGELICAL SPIRITUAL HOLINESS CHURCHES

The above designation should be self explanatory in that this group of Independent African Churches continues to respect our African belief systems and according to Monsignor Kenneth Ennang (Ennang Kenneth, The Nigerian Catholics and the Independent Churches: A Call to Authentic Faith, Paulines, Pub. Africa, Nairobi –Kenya, 2012, 28-37) it revitalizes primal and religious concepts. Not much appeal is made is made to the bible as her adherents seem to reject alien religions which employ the bible most of the time. Ethnic affiliations are paramount and the African deity is universalized to the point of the transcendent and they are not so much interested for the sake of winning new members. The First Spiritual Holiness Church founded by Martin Edem U. E. Uwang of Idu URUAN in 1932 is our case in point. The former, a Catholic who married second and third wives after Baptism, the latter a Methodist who had a harem of powerful wives and concubines could not bring themselves to order in their churches. They were a law to themselves and have held sway till today, but one thing they have in common is that apart from their powerful wives who direct the affairs of their churches most of their adherents are those who come for one problem or the other usually sickness or devil possession related many of whom return to their bases after receiving whatever benefits they claim in other words they are not so much interested in winning souls. They retain the core elements of their culture and ancestral religion and in so doing embody a philosophical and accurate identification of African traditional religious habits and practices. It is a classical Revivalisic religious movement which strives to recapture the old African way of life with syncretism tendencies to involve most of our African beliefs and practices with the aim of restoring ancestral brands without any unifying ideology but rather varied local structures of the tribe with underlying theocracy and ideology. Some authors include Goddism as a brand which lays emphasis on worship of God the way their fathers did arguing that any foreign worship is selling the birthright of his ancestors, the pride of African glory. (Onyioka, Kevin O. 6-8*). Adherents use all sorts of things especially in dealing with healing eg. roots, herbs, concoctions, invocations, coloured candles, blood of victims, hairs, feathers, shells etc. in order to conjure a fetish and awesome atmosphere to prove the potency of the concoctions. To be added to this for completion is the weird neo-pagan brand which found its way into Idu counter part of the International Wizard Union (IWU_ known by that acronym in URUAN founded by Denis S. E. Mbang and now championed by my cousin Francis A. I. Ekarika, both of whom had completely apostatized from the Catholic Church and turned full-scale to demonic practices. They employ all sorts of diabolical usages in their so-called churches viz. MBIAM, oriental practices, amulets, charms, voodoo, NDEM and other demoniacal practices. The religion is too exotic to occupy our attention but adherents join forces with others with ideological enthusiasm.

2. PRAYER HOUSES AND HEALING HOMES

Healing homes - UF? K AKAM are offshoots of traditional African healing houses just like the neo-primal movements but they abhor anything diabolical or demonic. They comfortably fit into the mould of religious movements but not as churches properly so-called because often practitioners and adherents have recourse to divine assistance for the cures that are performed. They are similarly eclectic, syncretism and exogenous and draw from a large range of sources including Christianity, Islam, Occultism, Oriental magic, Astrology and Metaphysics. Some homes are homeopathic and employ botanical medical clinics, physicians etc. According to Rosalind Hackett (Hackett R.I.J.,32-36) such healing homes have places where patients often stay, the healer having recourse to traditional healing practices and mixing them with whatever religious direction they consider appropriate. During healing sessions mysterious invocations are chanted and rituals are performed "to ensure the repeal of the ailment" which is considered to be a manifestation of evil. Often the healing is carried out in such a way such as can impress upon the patients and the public that the pastor-healer has specific gifts and charisma which come from some other enigmatic sources only acquired by the healer. The Edidem Bassey Spiritual/occult church founded in the 1940s at Ikot Ekpene in Akwa Ibom State seems to qualify in the description of our categorization of prayer houses. Both visitors and clients are usually astounded at the exotic and bizarre signs often exhibited in the entire practices and wonder whether these are what one would normally expect in churches.

3.THE SYNTHETIC/EXOGENOUS BETHELS/CHURCHES

What comes to mind here are those so-called ecclesial Assemblies of a type which can also be included among NMRs in the lineup of modern African religious movements. H.W.Turner [(Turner, H.W. 17-21)] uses the term synthetic in the sense that their founders arrogate to themselves all the divine attributes from Christianity, Islam and African traditional beliefs such that they can be seen as having the prerogatives of God himself building up more and more enigmatic and mysterious theories. These horrendous theories are an amalgam of terrible religious ideas but which are incorporated as Christianity holds that these are nothing but mythical religious groups which exalt their leaders/founders as spiritual heads of the movements and the universe, the personification of the Holy Spirit, the incarnation of Jesus and even God himself. They also see themselves as exponents of the Old Testament and the new prophets of their people - not Christian people. In the Brotherhood of the Cross and Star founded by Ete Bassey Asuquo Bassey in the late 1950s who then re-christened himself as Olumba Olumba Obu – a mythical nomenclature for his movement – sees himself as the Saviour of the condemned/impoverished Nigerian society who has incarnated to redeem mankind. He teaches that there are seven incarnations the first being Adam and the last being himself as the ETE ie. Father. Through him the 'father', the divine metamorphosed into the world and he is therefore destined to judge the world. He should therefore be divinized and worshipped accordingly, though often he denies that he is 'the father'. The BCS claims to be a missionary religious movement and has since through powerful money bags adherents like Chief Asuquo O. Ekandem of Southern URUAN established branches called "bethels/chapels all over Nigeria as well as Overseas notably in Europe and the United States of America. E.B. Clarke also describes the movements and their practitioners as those who believe in the "living dead",in sorcery and witchcraft among other things.Nevertheless, this category of religious movements have found acceptance neither in the Pentecostal Federation of Nigeria (PFN) nor in the Christian Association of Nigeria, (CAN) the umbrella of all Christian Churches. Friday M. Mbon who has done a study of the Brotherhood of the Cross and Star or Christ Universal School of Practical Christianity holds that these are nothing but mythical religious groups which exalt their leaders/founders as spiritual heads of the movements and the universe, the personification of the Holy Spirit, the incarnation of Jesus and even God himself.

4. THE EVANGELICAL CHURCHES aka UF? K ABASI NKPA? -UB? K

Churches in this category specifically tagged Uf?k Abasi ? kpa Ub?k because of their noisy clapping of hands are the erstwhile or pioneer independent churches in Nigeria which seceded from the old missionary churches ie. Mainline churches including the Catholic Church. Classical examples are the Mc Donald Christ African Church situated adjacent to the Sacred Heart Cathedral Calabar and the African church at the centre of Idu town. They are politically motivated churches with their basic re-actions to the white monopoly in the parent Anglican Church formerly, Church Missionary Societies –CSM. They actually emerged as a result of the heavy criticisms leveled against missionary domination and the lack of equality given to African ministers of the same or even higher. R.C.Michelle (Mitchell R.C.482-496) opines that, at the other end of the spectrum were a number of African independent churches which grew out of hostile ecclesiastical policies bordering on administrative matters regarding the erstwhile missionary churches and the need to establish a new religiosity free from all vestiges of white rule in religion, culture, governance and economy. Another example of African independent churches are the Mount Zion ecclesial assemblies – Zion, an apocalyptic term to signify that a church has separated itself from its parent church due not necessarily to any fierce political concern or fear of domination but usually around the personality of a founder. Most of these churches eg. A.M.E.Mount Zion, Full Gospel, Light House, Christ Apostolic, Salvation Army, Church of Christ/God etc. come under this designation and they lay emphasis on pneumatolgy, ie Pentecostal revelation soteriology and sociology hence their penchant for baptism by immersion and healing in anticipation of the second coming of Jesus. They are prophetic healing churches so to speak and most of them have emerged because of their link with the Zion church with an added aspect of baptism of the Holy Spirit in addition to baptism by immersion and healing.

5.REVIVALISTIC CRUSADES a.k.a. PENTECOSTAL CHURCHES PROPER

In Nigeria especially a new type of almost depicting the Crusades of the Middle ages save that they are not military nor do they have unknown in obscure Nigerian villages anything to do with regaining the Holy Land, but of course this time, in regaining the soul of Christendom through their loud and noisy trumpeting on huge advertorial billboards and banners announcing up-coming rallies and jamborees with disco-type reception, loud speakers and deafening shouts of characteristic "B? Tua exclamations" of Alleluia – Praise the Lord! These are to intimate and invite people to come and "receive miracle of healing, prosperity and breakthroughs" and they can conveniently operate in school football fields, auto-roadsides, concert halls, stadia and other open spaces with a major draw in diversity with no specific doctrinal or administrative postures. Their constant mode of preaching is the American tele-evangelist style with the bible as the weapon book of reference and a white handkerchief to boot. Most of these evangelists and preachers are powerful power brokers in their different evangelical churches either as founders or "ministers of the word and gospel." They delight in mass appeal hence stage-management capturing huge numbers in their congregations, the more they are from the mainline and other Protestant churches the better. They prefer to appear on television rather than remain unknown in their native and obscure Nigerian villages. They also classify themselves sometimes as "inter-denominational" revivalists and Pentecostal crusaders most of them Nigerians and oftentimes invited American crusaders a view to attracting many people from as many belief systems and denominations as possible to their rallies. As the title implies, these crusades are organized basically by Pentecostal Churches notably the Church of God Mission Int'l Benin founded by the legendary Archbishop Benson Andrew Idahosa (formerly an Anglican who later joined the Cherubim & Seraphim) now powered by his wife Archbishop Margaret as presiding minister, the UMA Evangelistic Association founded by itinerant flamboyant preacher Rev.Dr. Uma Ukpai of Uyo, the Rev. Mboho's Good News Evangelistic Association in Abak, the Deeper Life World Mission powered by Dr.William F. Kamuyi of UNILAG formerly of the Apostolic Faith, the Redeemed Christian Church of God founded by Pa Josiah O. Akindayomi formerly of the Cherubim & Seraphim now succeeded by the charismatic pastor Enoch Adeyare Adeboye, the Assemblies of God which was started by Bro Augustine Ehurie Wugu who on living the Anglican Church first embraced the Faith Tabernacle healing group and later founded the Church he first christened the Church of Jesus Christ, the Living Faith Church Worldwide a.k.a Winners Chapel, another mega church founded and presided over by Bishop David Oyedepo, Christ Embassy Int'l founded by the flamboyant fun-loving pastor Chris Oyakilome, and here in Calabar by the young charismatic Emem Isong just mention a few. Recently the itinerant German evangelist pastor Reinhardt Bonke has been speeding like lightning through Nigeria so much so that he feels more at home here than his native Deutschlands, preaching teaching and promising heaven on earth with promises of miracles, wealth, breakthroughs and prosperity to the ecstatic crowds that frequently mob him more than Christ ever was. His organization, a quasi-Pentecostal, Christ for the Nations is also an Evangelical outfit to draw a large circle of clientele characterized by typical and rigorous born-again persuasions.

NB. The number of various Churches in URUAN/EFIK represents the number of Autonomous communities (Villages) and not the actual physical Churches and Church buildings. In Idu town for example, there are only three physical Catholic Church buildings for the over 40 autonomous Communities in the area viz St Joseph's Catholic Church Idu, St Patrick's Catholic Church Ifiayong Esuk - Beach Town, and St Benedict's Catholic Church Nwaniba. Even at that, there is no Parish centre with a resident pastor (Catholic Parish priest) in any of these, whereas Idu URUAN is the Headquarters of both the Local Government Authorities and of the entire URUAN nation in spite of the fact that maintenance of the Parish Centre as also the Parish priest himself and the two Riverine station Churches depend mostly on Idu. This is probably the only Headquarters of a Local Government Authority in Nigeria that has no parish status. It means the whole of Central URUAN North as well as Central URUAN Riverine are served by only one Catholic parish station which is situated at Ifiayong South still in Central URUAN South popularly now gazzetted as Ifiayong Usuk in contra-distinction to Ifiayong North popularly known as Ifiayong Obot ie. Ifiayong North of the "SE OBOT IFIAYONG KO" fame, a town which is situated in Northern URUAN. The whole of Central URUAN Riverine comprising of well over 20 Autonomous Communities (villages) have only two physical Catholic Church buildings, viz. St. Peter' Catholic Church @ Akani Obio Uruan, the cradle of the entire URUAN/EFIK kingdoms at AKWA AKPA URUAN and St. Andrew's Catholic Church @ Ikpa Ene. All these have to come all the way by sea to attend the Parish Mass, Council meetings and other Parish events at St. Joseph's Parish centre Ifiayong Usuk which serves both Idu URUAN, Idu North Central as also the entire URUAN Riverine communities, since there is no other parish centre. Again, this is nothing but the so-called politics of marginalization, the Nigerian edition.

On a more serious and larger scale in the socio-political dimension of this our belove country, this very politics of exclusion has also played out very dramatically in the total neglect of the area since Independence resulting in what could be termed as the complete black-out of IDU the headquarters of URUAN nation from Nigeria's developmental efforts to bring the good things of life to a Nigerian people. Whereas IDU, should be the de facto town where the strategic location of the Nigerian Navy headquarters and stronghold in Akwa Ibom State, the current charismatic action Governor of the State, His Excellency, Chief Dr. Godswill Obot Akpabio in his massive developmental and progressive effort to place Akwa Ibom State on the progressive map of Nigeria, instead of sitting the nearest seaport and naval base to the state Capital at IDU, precisely in Nwaniba town, a distance less than 10 kilometers away from UYO, has deemed it politically profitable to site the navy HQ and sea-port at Ibaka which is more than 100 kilometres from Uyo, the State Capital city as remarked elsewhere in this book. Ibaka Navy base yes, and justified, but this sounds very evil and unproductive as far as the economic potentialities of both the State in particular, and Nigeria in general, are concerned! And this is nothing but again the politics of standing justice and good reason on the head to score political points. Or again, when viewed over the entire spectrum of the progressive positioning of Nigeria against the "20/20/20 mantra" of Nigeria becoming the 20th greatest economic nation on earth, one wonders why a railway terminal in conjunction with those colonial constructions at Port Harcourt and Lagos should not also be sited at Idu with all the conditionalities for bringing such a progressive venture easily available. At is apogee, as a kid I was able to understand and count the number up to at least 5000. There were not less than this figure of adult human beings eking out their living at IDU and by implication NWANIBA through various economic activities both at the ancient Idu Beach market now gazzetted Ifiayong [Beach] a village whose pioneer settlers came from a neighbouring Northern URUAN town gazzetted as Ifiayong Obot over a century ago precisely to participate in the booming merchandise at the aforementioned IDU beach market. This great market which engaged in the slave trade and was also the centre for British Companies like the PZ. John Holts, UAC, Chellerams, M&K etc. as also remarked elsewhere in this volume, was the melting pot of nationalities from almost all parts of Nigeria. Similarly, a modern sea-port at IDU would open the gates to easy commerce and other progressive economic ventures between Nigeria and the Cameroun Republic, Gabon, Equatorial Guinea, the Guineas, Senegal etc.; countries along the coast of West Africa which could be reached through the proposed sea-port within less than an hour. The same appeal also could apply to Calabar port, the HQ of URUAN/EFIK kingdom on the other side of the great Cross River estuary. But will Nigeria, the so often mouthed "Giant of Africa" do this so as to achieve this greatness? No, because of the politics of exclusion and marginalization in situations that would bring massive transformation of the nation within a shorter period of time and indeed to her own peril and detriment; too much politics to catch the nearest way! The situation better captured in the non-completion of the East-West Road from Lagos - Warri and to Calabar since 1999 till date is our case in point! What a miscalculation and misplacement of priorities under the politics of exclusion and marginalization! I am a great believer in truth and justice. I believe that there cannot be peace and progress in URUAN/EFIK communities, in Cross River, Akwa Ibom State and in our nation without truth and justice. I also subscribe to the view that peace is not exactly the absence of war and conflict or even strive and contentions like we find now even among political parties, villages and states except with the PRESENCE OF JUSTICE. When justice is done and seen to be done to all manner of people, of tribe, religious groups, political parties even states unjustly manipulated and marginalized, there cannot be peace anywhere. When the goods and services of this country cannot be made to go round; qualified persons wherever they come from being appointed to key positions, employments given to those who deserve, industries and projects sited where they deserve to be sited, there cannot be peace. (Mkpisong & Prof Mrs. P.J.Okon, 3-5)

THE HIERARCHY OF THE CALABAR MISSION 1934 - 2018

The Catholic Archdiocese of Calabar formerly erected and raised after sixty-years to that status in 1994 was the Ecclesiastical territory carved out, precisely in 1934 from the Prefecture of the Southern Provinces of Nigeria and the Cameroons under Bishop Charles Heerey successor of the legendary Bishop Josef Shanahan CSSp as Vicar Apostolic. As at then, the Catholic Prefecture of Calabar comprised of what has now become the Catholic Dioceses of Ogoja, Abakaliki, parts of Umuahia and Port Harcourt Dioceses as also the Dioceses of Ikot Ekpene, Uyo and the Archdiocese of Calabar itself with the visionary and indefatigable James Moynagh SPS, as Prefect Apostolic. The pioneer Missionaries viz. the Holy Ghost Fathers as they were fondly called in the early days of the Missionary Church 1903 – 1930 and the St. Patrick's Fathers, SPS 1930 to the present with that pioneering, apostolic and determined spirit of Faith, had worked tirelessly under very difficult circumstances to sow the seed of the Catholic Faith in the Calabar-Ogoja land. The Archdiocese of Calabar which by implication is also the Headquarters and Metropolitan See of the Ecclesiastical Province today comprises of four suffragan Dioceses to wit, Ogoja, Ikot Ekpene, Uyo and Port Harcourt.

THE EARLY EVANGELIZATION EFFORT IN WEST AFRICA AND NIGERIA

To understand how the Calabar Mission came about, it is necessary to go back to 1885, when the Holy Ghost Missionaries from France arrived in Nigeria. But as captured in the early history of the foundation and evolution of Calabar in Chapter I, it was through the auspicious exploration of and contact with the Coast of West Africa by the arrival of the early Portuguese explorers in the 15th century precisely in 1462, that catapulted the fruitful evangelization of the territory tagged the Guinea Coast by the Portuguese and later came the French Missionaries who took over the work of evangelization of the area as we are going to see. It was also through this first wave of contact vouchsafed by the early Portuguese Catholic Missionaries under the protection of Portugal that these missionaries from their different Congregations as also their navigators were involved in the encounter with the West Coast Africa. In 1462 the Portuguese Franciscans led by Alfonso de Bolano arrived the Guinea Coast to evangelize. By 1486 the Dominicans had also arrived and were evangelizing in Senegambia among the Wolof ethnic groups. Following the pattern of Church-State Relations Missionaries always called at the courts and palaces of chiefs and kings, sought to convert the king and from there attempted to convert and make the populace Christian. It was the Greco-Roman tact that worked right from the time of king Charlemagne in the 6th century with the mantra "cujus regio ejus religio" by which all the people with the franchise in the king's domain would vote for or become converted at the king's behest. Thus as we shall soon discover, both the Oba of Benin and the Olu of Warri as soon as it became possible during this period, had many contacts with the Missionaries. At times it was the traditional rulers themselves who encouraged missionary work and even paid for their maintenance although at certain other times they acted the devil's advocate and hampered and move to preach the faith in their territories eg. Warri at the time of the arrival of the Missionaries became a flourishing Christian community.

It so happened that at the request of the king of Benin who had come in contact with the Portuguese in 1485, the Church was implanted in the kingdom. This early contact with the Portuguese even brought about their entry into the Itsekeri kingdom in modern Nigeria which enabled an Itsekeri prince, Antonio Domingo to travel to Portugal for Higher Studies for ten years and come back marrying a Portuguese noble lady. One of the children of this marriage even became the Olu of Warri in 1640 (Cf. Fagun Michael, 1962, 71). The Portuguese Missionaries continued with the Itsekeri kingdom but the two Missions were then served by Portuguese Augustinian Friars and these were only intermittently from Sao Tome which was later made a bishopric in 1543 by Pope Paul II. Likewise, the Senegambia mission of Cape Verde was made a bishopric in 1533. The Benin mission also led to a happy relationship with the Oba such that one of the Oba's sons some others of the royal court who very prominent men were baptized (Cf. Kenny Joseph, Ibadan, 1990, 71-75). It however that missionary enterprise was fraught with a lot of problems and the first enthusiasm and euphoria of the coming of the missionaries fizzled out. It was later on that the Portuguese Capuchins led by Angel de Valencia and his companions came to continue the work of evangelization in the Benin kingdom around 1651 and they were favourably received by the Benin monarch. Even the story making the rounds had it that the Oba sent one of his sons to Portugal to study for the priesthood and he ended up marrying a Portuguese princess and the whole idea fell to pieces. But no sooner had they settled down probably for a year than the palace nobles and officials became antagonistic simply because the Missionaries had asked them to denounce human sacrifices and other pagan practices. They even prevented the king from seeing them till they became frustrated and abandoned the mission. Later on about 1656 some Italian Capuchins including Angelo di Ajaccio and Bonaventura di Firenze also brought letters to the Oba but were refused audience with the Oba and they veered to Warri.

AFRICAN COASTAL TOWNS AS TRADING BASES OF THE EARLY PORTUGUESE AND EUROPEAN SUPERCARGOES AND EXPLORERS

But come to think of it, most of these early Portuguese and other European Supercargoes who came accompanied by the missionaries were mainly explorers and regarded the African coastal towns merely as trading bases to launch their mercantile programmes hence such name tags as Guinea Coast where these birds abound in the entire West African coast, Ivory Coast or Côte de Voire where elephants abound, Gold Coast now Ghana where gold abound, Equatorial Guinea where the Equator passes through this coastal African strip, Slave Coast like Calabar which was the main slave port since the 17th century, etc. The West African coasts were meant to open the gates to easy commerce and other progressive economic ventures between Nigeria and Europe for them. Hence all these coastal strips of West Africa covering the Cameroun Republic, Gabon, Equatorial Guinea, the two Guineas of Guinea Bissau and Guinea, Senegal etc. and other countries along the coast of West Africa reaching up to the sea-port of Calabar were called the Guinea Coast by the explorers and the later European Supercargoes. All these were something of great economic advantage to the early European traders (Cf. The Lineamenta For the Synod of Bishops, Vatican, 1990. 10). With the patronage privilege "PATROADA" granted by Pope Pius II to the Portuguese in 1462 for the evangelization of the Coast of Guinea, the early Missionaries who came along with their trading counterparts tried tooth and nail but in vain to explore the West African interior. But in spite of the heroic pioneering efforts of these Portuguese Missionaries the implanting of the Catholic Church in West Africa became almost a mirage until the arrival of the Holy Ghost Fathers from France grace à la the Congregation of Propaganda Fide founded in 1622 as we shall soon see. The reasons for this state of affairs are not far to seek. First, the Portuguese Fathers, mostly the Capuchins and Augustinians, became extremely involved in protecting their "patronage rights" to the exclusion of all other Missionaries except the Portuguese whereas they were extremely short of personnel to spread out. Second, Missionaries from other European nations who also were able to obtain the "patronage privilege" from Rome connived with their Portuguese counterparts to circumvent the exercise of effective supervision and control of Rome by obstructing the missionary policies and approaches promulgated by Propaganda Fide to direct evangelization in these territories. Third, even the Missionaries themselves became so involved with the success of the mercantile objectives of their home nations rather than the progress of their missionary activities. Fourth, in Nigeria in particular where the authority and power of the potentates were supreme, it became increasingly impossible for missionaries to have direct access to the kings who exercised sway over their territories. A case in point was the refusal to and obstruction of the Missionaries to see the Oba of Benin who had given permission to the Missionaries to evangelize in his domain and even to come and see him in person. Fifth, the Portuguese Government was more keen on protecting the missionary effort of their Missionaries in their areas of control and consequently they acquired the character of ecclesiastical colonies (Cf Lineamenta of 1990, 10; See also Odey E. Ushie, 15-16). Sixth, besides Christian Missionaries were not tolerated by most African potentates except the Supercargoes who had Trading pacts with the African Authorities. Seventh, with the exception of the Italian Capuchins in the Congo and Angola, the early Portuguese Missionaries were loath in learning the local dialects and could not face up to the need for a deep and accurate knowledge of African languages where they operated ditto the customs and mentality of the people. In short, Inculturation was lacking. Eight and finally the tropical climate took a great toll of the Missionaries thus depleting their work force and in cases as was happening in Nigeria most of them died of malaria on arrival. This indeed became the moot point why most of the missionary effort was abandoned. But towards the beginning of the 19th century Spanish and Portuguese influence began to wane as the system of PATROADA declined leaving room for the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda Fide to exercise a firm and untrammeled hold on missionary policy and strategy in Africa such that each Mission coming to Africa was entrusted the "IUS COMMISSIONIS" and jurisdiction to operate within a specific Missionary Institute or Congregation.

ASSIGNMENT OF THE WEST AFRICAN COAST/VOLTA BY THE PROPAGANDA FIDE TO THE S. M. A. FRENCH S MISSIONARIES ORIGINS OF THE HOLY GHOST & S.M.A MISSIONARIES IN NIGERIA

Later the Propaganda Fide assigned the West African Coast across the Volta and the Niger to the French Missionaries of the Congregation for Africa Mission a.k.a Associeté de Missions Africaine (SMA) which was founded by Bishop Joseph Melchior de Marion Bresillac at Lyons for work in missionary countries for the building of local communities and local clergy in 1856. The Society was entrusted with the Vicariate of Sierra Leone in 1858. Through difficult times the Society weathered the storm until the demise of the founder in 1859. His successor Fr. Augustine Planque equally founded Our Lay of the Apostles Congregation for Women Religious to assist the Mission. It was these Nuns that ran the first clinics which helped to reduce infant mortality in West Africa. The Congregation was to later establish Convents at Lagos and Abeokuta. In 1861 the Congregation established a Vicariate of the Bight of Benin with Headquarters in Dahomey (Benin Republic). It was from here that one of their members, Francesco Xavier Borgehero visited Lagos in 1863. In 1883 Lagos was created a Vicariate Apostolic with Bishop Jean Baptiste Chausse as first Bishop and Vicar Apostolic. That mission soon brought about the establishment of the Church and by extension the dioceses of Benin, Jos, and Kaduna which were formerly under the Lagos jurisdiction. In 1884 the Vicariate of Upper Nigeria as created with its Headquarters at Lokoja and later Asaba was created with Mgr. Carlo Zappa as Superior. This mission was so successful that it produced the first Nigerian priest, Rev. Fr. Paul Obodoeechina Emechete in 1920. Similarly, the mission produced the first Yoruba priests, Frs. Julius Adewuyi, Peter Oni and Lawrence Layode who were trained at St Gall's Major Seminary Quidad in Dahomey. But Fr. Joseph Kenny OP and John Boar insisted that they were not the first priests of Nigerian origin because the Benin Mission of the 16th Century actually yieled fruit and produced a priest in 1517 and Joao Alvares an indigene of Warri was ordained priest at Sao Tome in 1765(Cf. Baur John, Paulines, 1994, 148). In 1929 Benin became a bishopric with Thomas Broderick SMA, as first Bishop. Regarding the Protestant Mission in West Africa, this has been treated above already.

GRANTING "IUS COMMISSIONIS" FOR OPENING UP THE UPPER AND LOWER GUINEA BY THE CONGREGATION FOR THE EVANGELIZATION OF PEOPLES

By the special Grace of God, the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda Fide now tagged the Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples which had then got effective hold on the Congregations coming for missionary work in West Africa in particular granted the ius commissionis for the opening up of the Upper and Lower Guinea to spread the Good News of Christ. This territory was a very vast region covering the whole of West Africa down to Gabon. ln 1842 Pope Gregory XVI who as then Cardinal Cappellere, was appointed Prefect of the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda Fide by the Holy See. He then established the Vicariate Apostolic of the TWO GUINEAS stretching from Senegal to the Orange River in South Africa covering over 5000 miles of coastline which extended without limit to the interior. He also and appointed Msgr. Barron Bishop over the Vicariate. Msgr. Barron immediately set out in search of Missionaries who would willingly come out to West Africa then known as the "White man's Grave" on account of the unfavourable climatic conditions and attack of mosquitoes. With the Dominicans and Jesuit Fathers declining his appeal to come to the tropics, coupled with the esoteric reports and descriptions of the European Anthropologists, explorers cum traders and journalists about Africa and her peoples, to this extent only very few were willing to venture into the West African Coasts (Cf. Murdock Peter George, NY. 1959, 85; See also Obi Celestine A. Africana, 1985, 7; Dodd J.M London, 162, 43). But with the Lord all things are possible and there is never a lack of "good Samaritans" like St. Paul who came over "to Macedonia to help us" (Cf. Acts 16:9); people who would give their lives without counting the cost. Such were the Holy Ghost Fathers volunteers who first landed in Liberia to assume missionary work.

But how? In 1848, the Holy Ghost Congregation came into being as a result of the merging of the tiny Congregation of the Holy Spirit which dates back to 1703, and the recently founded and somewhat larger Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. This newly constituted Missionary Body was given the responsibility of evangelizing this immense Vicariate of the TWO GUINEAS. It soon proceeded to develop and soon received the assistance of the Society of African Missions (SMA) which was established in 1856 as noted above. The first Missionaries came to Nigeria and opened up the Catholic Mission of Lagos in 1868. In 1884 the SMA was given the responsibility to establish another territory in Northern Nigeria which was then the Prefecture of the Upper Niger. In 1885 the Holy Ghost Missionaries moved into Southern Nigeria with the arrival of Fr. Josef Lutz and gained ecclesiastical independence to establish the Independent Prefecture of Lower Niger which metamorphosed into the Prefecture of Southern Nigeria. These were members of the new Congregation founded along with a Seminary on Pentecost Sunday 1703 in France by the legendary Father Francois-Claude Pollart des Places.

LIFE AND TIMES OF FRANCOIS-CLAUDE POLLART DES PLACES, FOUNDER OF THE CSSP

The Congregation of the Holy Spirit or simply Spiritans, a.k.a CONGREGATIO SANCTI SPIRITUS, was founded by Claude Pollart des Places, the eldest and only son of Francois des Places and Jeanne le Meneust on February 25, 1679 in Rennes, the Capital City of Brittany. At the age of nine as a day student in the near by Jesuit College of St. Thomas, he began a lifelong association with the Jesuit Congregation and graduated with LLB Degree at 16 at the University of Caen in Normandy. Six years later, he completed his post Graduate Studies and obtained his Licentiate from the Law School of Nantes. In 1701, he commenced his studies for the priesthood as a boarder at the Jesuit College in Paris. Later, he left his boarding room in their hostel to go share his loggings with a poorer day students struggling to find food and educational facilities to do their University assignments and home work. Later on he assembled about a dozen of these poor students and opened a Seminary he named after the Holy Spirit. Gradually this Community developed into a Religious Institute. It was from this tiny group as one can surmise that he formed the young students who were ready and willing to become priests but too poor to do so. Being interested in the poor by nature, he continued to freely spend all his personal earnings which he had gannered from generous friends for the education of this lot. In 1703 on Whit Sunday a.k.a Pentecost Day, the Congregation of the Holy Spirit (CSSP) was granted approval as a Religious Institute of Men Religious. He completed his ecclesiastical studies ande was ordained priest in 1707. With this his work rapidly began to grow but the labours and anxieties connected with such kind of endeavour weighed heavly on him with the result that his health began to decline thus ending in his death from pleurisy on October 2, 1709 at the tender age of thirtyone. (Cf. Herbermann, Charles ed. NY. 1913, 12ff)

After his demise, the Instiute continued to make progress and became so well organized that the young growing Congregation of the Holy Spirit as it came to be called began to receive approbation of both the Civil and Ecclesistical Authorities. The Congregation began to minister to the poor and to provide Chaplains for hosiptals, prisons and schools. It soon developed a quasi missionary role and some of the members began to volunteer for Missionary Apostolate in the Far East of China and Japan as well as North America. In 1765 the Holy See entrusted the fledgling Congregation with direct care of South American Missions and colonies such as French Guiana. The Congregation also began to send Missionaries French Colonies Overseas, India, China and even to West Africa but suffered much from the French Colonialists. But no sooner had the Congregation begun to make waves both in France and Overseas than the French Revolution struck and this completely destabilized the Congregation which at the time was constituted mainly of Seminary Lecturer Priests. Nevertheless, the Congregation Members Overseas continued to maintain very strong ties with the Home Seminaries and Institutes. By 1792, the Congregation had trained about 1,300 but the French Revolution suppressed all the Seminaries and the Congregation was greatly affected to such an extent that at the end of it all one member, Fr. James Bertout was the only member left. He had survived miraculously as it were. Because he passed through a number of vicissitudes including shipwreck on the way to his place of assignment in French Guiana, enslavement by the Moors and his soujourn to Senegal as a British slave in West Africa. But on his return to France after the hostilities of the Reformation when peace had been restored to the Church, he re-established the Congregation to gather new members for the Congregation then near extinction.

THE PROVIDENTIAL MERGER WITH THE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF THE IMMACULATE HEART OF THE MOST BLESSED VIRGIN MARY

During the Napoleonic regime, the French Government gave permission in 1802 for the Seminary to re-open. and also given the task of supplying prists for missionary work in the French Colonies in Africa, the West Indies and India. Then providentially in 1848 a Jewish Convert, Fr. Francis Liberman, the often called "SECOND FOUNDER" as also the 11th Superior General (1848 – 1852), who had in 1842 founded the Religious Society of the Immaculate Heart of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary dedicated essentially towards administering to the emancipated black slaves in the French Colonies was prevailed upon by the Holy See to join forces with Fr. James Bertout and merge with the older Congregation of of the Holy Spirit as noted above. Following upon amalgamation as it were, the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart and the Spiritan Congregation merged in with Venerable Francis Mary Liberman often called the 2nd Founder as the first Superior General of the united Religious Societies thereof. (Cf. Appleton Robert; Catholic Encyclopaedia NY. 1980) In the succeeding years, the amalgamated Congregation became so impregnated with the spirit of Father Liberman and his Foundation Members that he became regarded as the renewer of te Congregation of the Holy Spirit under the protection of the Immaculate Heart of Mary after Fr. Liberman and his followers had joined theCongregation (Cf. Koren Henry, J. Dusquesne University Press, NY. 1958) The Congregation began to be organized on a solid basis in the old French Colonies by securing Bishoprics and making provisions for the supply of clegy through the Seminary of the Holy Ghost now continuing on the lines of the original Founders. By 1876 the French Government under King Loius XVIII had granted permission to the Congregation to supply priests for the Colonies. Thereafter and in the succeeding years, they opened up the vast domain of Africa which later became the chief field of missionary enterprise of the Holy Ghost Fathers.

The taking up of the African Mssionary effort by Fr. Libermann was masterminded by two American prelates under direction o the first Council of Baltimore. By 1833 Bishop England, the Bishop of Charleston had already drawn attention of the Congregation to the need of evangelizing the West Coast of Africa and he urged that Missionaries be sent there without delay. Thereafter the assembled Fathers of the Council commissioned Rev. Dr. Barron who was then Vicar General of Philadelphia to undertake the Mission to Cape Palmas. Subsequently the zealous priest work tirelessly at his assignment and the report of his exploits elated the Propaganda Fide which promptly recommened him to be consecrated Bishop and appointed Vicar Apostolic of the Two Guineas. With only one priest and a Catechist to assist him in the vast mission territory, he repared to France for the supply of more Missionaries. Atonce Venerable Fr. Libermann supplied him with seven prietsand three Co-Ajutor Brothers. But thedeadly African climate played havoc on the lives of the Missionaries with the result that only one of the was left as the resdt died of malaria related epidemic. Later Bishop Barron retired in 1847 due to failing health, this marked the end of administration of the two Guineas by diocesan Bishops and the entire territory was handed over to the Holy Ghost Congregation. In the end nearly 700 Missionaries laid down their lives in West Africa and other African regions before 1913 but the spiritual results as we are going to see compensated for it all with hundreds of thousands of soldid Catholics won for Christ where there was not a single Christian among the over thirty million African pagans who inhabit the Districts assigned to the Holy Ghost Fathers. At the time, these were Christians inhabiting the Diocese of Angola, the Vicariates of Sierra Leone, Senegambia, Gabon, the French Lowerr Congo now renamed Ubangi, the French Lower Congo now called Loango, Northern Madagascar, Zanzibar, the Prefectures of Lower a.k.a Souther Nigera, French Guinea, Lower Congo and Bata in Spanish West Africa now Equatorial Guinea and the two Congos viz. Former Belgian Congo or the Demoratic Republic of Cong (DRC) and Congo Brazzaville. By the turn of the 20th Century the Holy Ghost Congregation had the following Provinces: France, Ireland, Germany, USA, Belgium and Portugal as well as the Foreign Missionsunder the central control of the Superior Genetral residing in Paris. However, the whole Congregation was under the jurisdiction of the Cardinal Prefect of the Propaganda Fide. In 1908 the total Statistics of the Holy Ghost Missionaries stood at 195 Religious Communities worldwide, 722 Holy Ghost Fathers, 210 Professed Scolastics, 655 Professed Brothers 230 Novices and 595 Aspirants and more than half of these were engaged as Missionaries in the African Missions alone. On July 26, 1962 at its General Chpater in Paris, Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, Archbishop of Dakar widely respected for his experience in the Mission Field and his ability to to deal effectively with the Roman Curia, was elected the Superior General. Meanwhile the Congregation has 24 Superiors General to-date (Cf. WIKEPEDIA):

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NEW ONITSHA CENTRAL MISSION IN SOUTHERN NIGERIA BY THE HOLY GHOST CONGREGATION

In April 1857 the Vicariate of the two Guineas was divided, the Upper Guinea with Headquarters in Sierra Leone. The Lower Guinea became a Vicariate Apostolic under Bishop Pierre de Bierre with Headquarters at Gabon. It was from here that the real work into the interior extending to Southern Nigeria with Headquarters at Onitsha began. Onitsha by then had become almost a quasi-parish out-post of the Gabon Mission. Then with the impetus given to the work of the Holy Ghost Missionaries, a formal request was made to the Propaganda Fide by Fr. A. Emonet, then Superior General of the CSSp Congregation for the opening up of the evangelical mission on the Niger-Benue Confluence ie. at Lokoja now in Kogi State of Nigeria. At the time, this territory belonged to the Vicariate of Gabon. It so happened that on the Feast day of St. Michael the Archangel on September 29 1885, the first batch of four Holy Ghost Missionaries Fr. Horne and Brothers Hermas and Jean-Grotto formerly of the Congregation of St. Coeur de Marie hitherto founded in Paris by Fr. Francis Mary Paul Liebermann, all of them in their twenties and recently ordained and professed, together with Father Joseph Emile Lutz previously Superior General of Rio Pongas for ten years in the Republic of Guinea and who also had previously served in Sierra Leone, left Paris, arriving in Liverpool on October 10. There in the company of some SMA Fathers and Sisters they arrived Sierra Leone on October 26, 1885. On their arrival the SMA Missionaries travelled to Lagos which had already been opened up in 1842 as observed already, while Fr. Lutz &co. stayed on to prepare for their onward journey to Onitsha. It must be noted that up to this, various Christian Missionaries were operating in Onitsha up to Lokoja where they enjoyed the company and protection of the European Supercargoes, Colonial Officials and the Royal Niger Company, RNC.

JOURNEY TO ONITSHA: At Lagos they took a boat and started off in November arriving Akassa on the Lower Niger where the Royal Niger Company refused them passage to Lokoja which was actually their first destination. But this set back did not deter them. The next day they took another boat to Brass and were fortunate to meet Charles Townsend a company agent, who received them with unreserved cordiality. The following day he took them in his own motor-boat arriving Onitsha on 5th December 1885 where they decided to settle after being received with warmth and cordiality by the Obi of Onitsha, Eze Anazonwu instead of risking another journey to Lokoja which was to be their official destination in the first place. Thereafter they addressed the Obi on the purpose of their Mission in Africa and made their request which the King very readily and with unreserved cordiality acceded to viz. granting them his permission to establish the Catholic Mission in his domain. Since they had left the two Rev. Brothers at Brass behind, Fr. Lutz went back to collect them with the 70 trunks they had brought from Europe for the opening of the new Mission. Then he left the two Rev. Frs. behind to scrutinize the place intending to be back to say Mass there on Christmas Day. The return boat developed a serious mechanical fault and they could only say the Christmas Mass on board the boat.

ARRIVAL OF THE FOUR PIONEER CSSP MISSIONARIES AT ONITSHA

On the 29th they arrived Onitsha where all the four Missionaries re-united. At Onitsha they changed their minds to settle there as their permanent base instead of going to Lokoja because Onitsha was discovered to be the gate-way to the heart of Igbo nation with an estimated population of 25,000 and the large population had not been influenced by Islam. The climate also seemed healthier than Lokoja coupled with the king's and the R.N.C's cordiality and reception with the large market in tow operating every day at Onitsha. They had no choice therefore but to choose Onitsha as their Headquarters. Having reported to Mr. Sarjent, the General Manager of the Royal Niger Company at Onitsha who had made them welcome, they signed an undertaking to concentrate on their Missionary activity there and not to trade or make Treaties with the natives. They settled down with them for some time while they continued their negotiations with the king for a piece of land he had earlier promised to donate. The piece of land was situated on the bank of the Niger about 20 hectares. On January 6, 1886 the Feast of the Epiphany, they signed the Agreement with the King in Council for the use of the land in perpetuity with full rights to exercise the Catholic Faithwithout let or hindrance. The Missionaries on their part and in gratitude for the concession undertook to provide formal education free of charge for all the children of the community. On Easter Sunday April 7, 1886 after completing the new mud house they built on the land, they officially dedicated the place despite the big down pour which prevented many from witnessing the historic ceremony. They named the place "H O L Y T R I N I T Y" – a name already earmarked from France before their departure and opened a dispensary there as a vital point of contact with the people. On June 20, Feast of the Most Holy Trinity, they conducted the first Rite of Christian Initiation and the Catechumens sang hymns in Latin, English and the Vernacular for the inauguration of the centre. Thus with Holy Trinity as centre, the spiritual and pastoral odyssey of the Catholic Church in Eastern Nigeria had begun and the Missionaries at once sought to penetrate the hinterland.

In that same year 1885, Fr. Ambrose Emonet, SG. of the Holy Ghost Congregation in France wrote a request to the Sacred Congregation for the creation of the Prefecture of Southern Nigeria which at the time extended from the Niger as far as the British Cameroun to the Benue including Yola and southwards to the Atlantic with Onitsha as Headquarters and Fr. Lutz as Prefect Apostolic. Fr. Lutz was born at Dauendorf in France on January 8 1853 in a family of 8, two of his sisters having joined the Congregation of St. Joseph of Cluny, while one of his brothers and himself joined the Spiritan Congregation. On December 23, 1876 he was ordained priest and sent on his first Mission to Sierra Leone as also Rio Pongas in the Republic of Guinea. Since he had some missionary experience and knew what it cost to make impact on the local population on the West Coast, that is why he was appointed as head of this Mission to the Lower Niger (Cf. Cook Arthur Norton, London, 1964, 39; See also Richard & John Lander, London, 3.)

On 17th December 1895 Fr. Lutz died and was succeeded by Father Josef Reiling. Born at Alsace in France in 1860 he joined Fr. Lutz in 1891 but ill health forced him back home for medical attention. It was while recuperating at home that he was named successor to Fr. Lutz on October 10, 1886. He soon set out to return to the Lower Niger but became ill en route where he stopped at Senegal to recuperate but never did and returned to France to put in his resignation in July 1898 without ever setting foot into this Prefecture. Fr. René Pawlas then nominated his successor was born a native of Villier-en-Argonne France in 1886 and had previously worked in the Missions in Senegambia from 1890 -1898. He was an energetic worker and had known the peculiarities of the Lower Niger Mission. He reported with two other priests and a Rev. Brother Hermas, together with Fr. Jean-Baptiste Engasser – a first comer at Onitsha and well prepared for active evangelization to resume duties on November 5, 1898. Within a short period, he had reviewed and implemented the missionary activities of Fr. Lutz and outlined his special plans to include evangelization work the building of schools and orphanages and setting up refugee camps for outcasts, abandoned slaves etc. Again misfortune struck and Fr. Pawlas lay a-dying without fulfilling his programmes and making memorable impacts. This marked the end of 15 solid years of the Lower Niger Mission, specifically in Southern Nigeria.

PROFILE OF THE PIONEER HOLY GHOST MISSIONARIES OF CALABAR MISSION

MONSIGNOR ALEXANDRE LEON LEJEUNE APOSTLE OF CALABAR MISSION

Msgr. Alexandre Leon Lejeune born on March 25, 1860 at Tournais, France and at the age of 24 he was transferred from the Senior Seminary at Seez to Chevilly before his Ordination in 1885 the very year the S. Nigeria Mission took off with Fr. Lutz. After Ordination he worked in Gabon for fifteen years but while on sick-leave in Paris he was named 4th Apostolic Prefect to succeed Father Ren? Pawlas who had died on March 15, 1900. He was a strong and very capable priest endowed with many talents and tremendous energy. On taking over he started penetrating further into the interior and founded Calabar as the Central Mission in 1903 having noticed its strategic position as the vital connection by sea between Southern Nigeria and the rest of the world. Calabar was visited monthly by at least 8 ocean liners from England and Germany as well as numerous cargo-boats. It was also a great centre for missionary activities. To this end and as was arranged, Msgr. Lejeune and team left Onitsha for Calabar on February 2, 1903 accompanied by Fr. Patrick McDermott and were joined by Fr. Leon Lena from Gabon on February 3, 1903 where the first Holy Mass was said at 19 Boco Street, Marina Calabar presided over by Fr. Lena amidst 150 joyful and enthusiastic devout Catholics made up of Lebanese, Portuguese, French, English including the local people and other Europeans within a population of over 20,000 inhabitants. This marked the official opening of the Calabar Central Mission (Cf. The History and Origins of Congregations working in the Arcdiocese of Calabar continues from the ORIGINS OF THE RELIGIOUS SISTERS OF CHARITY below).

At Calabar Msgr. Lejeune quickly stayed with the convivial and generous Consul General and High Commissioner, Sir Ralph Moore who handed over to Sir Walter Egerton. There he met Etinnyin Etim Essien Offiong III, the great grandfather of Fr. Michael U. Offiong and Srs. Immaculata and Elizabeth. He is said to have donated land to the Missionaries. A school St. Louis was built there manned by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny where forty Presbyterian girls are said to have converted and joined the Catholic Faith. Soon afterwards and in response to Government invitation and directive to Missionaries to supply highly trained teachers to feed the High School it had founded which was the highest in West Africa which also prepared Candidates by means of Examinations for entry into Universities abroad for training as doctors, engineers, lawyers etc. the Presbyterian Mission in response promptly established what became known as the Hope Waddell Training Institute beside the Government High School at Leopard Town. Similarly, Msgr Lejeune also considered establishing a Catholic Training College to train students up to the seventh and eighth Grades and a Chapel where the Catholic students of the Government High School would come to fulfill their religious obligations. Since the Government had laid down that its students should also have a religion, Government wanted the Catholic Mission to build a Chapel nearby. This was the result of St. Joseph's College of Cluny built at Egerton street the ground floor of which served as school, while the first floor was the residence for the Rev. Fathers and Brothers. Other houses, kitchens, workshops and sheds were also set up. Later in 1935 the college was transferred by the St. Patrick's Fathers to what is now St. Patrick's College, Ikot Ansa. The next challenge for Lejeune was to build a Convent for the Sisters of Cluny for the education of girls and care of the sick on Calabar Road; the school which later brought in Sr. Magdalene Charles Walker into the scene in 1923 after the Cluniac Sisters had been recalled as a result of the First World War. At the same time, the Government handed over a hospital of 60 beds and a crowd of patients numbering over 150 who came everyday for medical care to the Sisters. This is what later turned to be St. Margaret's Hospital. It was the salaries given to the Sisters that helped to maintain them and run the schools. Apart from the training college and convent, Lejeune wanted the Calabar Mission to start a Coffee plantation which would give employment to many applicants and have a considerable impact throughout the length and breadth of Cross River. After having made a good start, he then turned his attention northwards. He even made effort at establishing the Church at Bornu and other places since the territory was so vast extending as far as Yola. His idea was to imitate Government by pushing forward everyday and never relenting. Hear him:

We now march along with the Governments who give us the example … and we are going to show that we are Catholic, evangelizing and planting our Faith everywhere. It is necessary that we should be honourably represented everywhere. For that, we need help and along with help, we need missionaries (CSE B/192/A04, Oct.20,1903)

HOLY GHOST FATHERS WHO SERVED IN CALABAR AFTER MSGR LEJEUNE

Msgr Lejeune therefore made efforts at establishing numerous Catholic Mission stations through the work of his successors as we are going to see. Like St. John the Baptist, Lejeune wanted to decrease into oblivion so that God's kingdom on the Lower Niger might increase. But Calabar will never forget this indefatigable and massive red-headed giant of a man with red beard covering half his chest as described by Bishop Josef Shanahan himself. He was the 4th Prefect Apostolic and the new Apostle of Calabar who laid the foundation for the monumental achievements of Fr. Louis Lena, Bishop Josef Shanahan and others who took over as from 1905. When his health began to fail him, he bowed out and returned to France leaving Fr. McDermott to remain in Calabar as Superior until 1904 when Lena took over.

FR. PATRICK MCDERMOTT: Born on April 14, 1859 at Mullin, Ireland Fr. Mcdemott was educated at Rockwell, Langonnet and Chevilly where he did his theological studies and was ordained in 1880. On August 28,1881 he took his Vow of Religion and after serving at Rockwell College for a year he was posted to teach Philosophy in France for three years. He was the assigned to the USA to teach teach at the Spiritan College in Pittsburgh. In 1902 God granted his long desired wish to come to Africa and he sailed together with Josef Shanahan and Bro. Eusebius Aheame for Southern Nigeria where he was assigned to Calabar with his two companions in 1903 for the opening of the Calabar Mission. Money to prosecute the work and lay a good foundation of the Mission became a problem and he went back to Europe for fund - raising Ireland but when he returned he was re-assigned to the Onitsha Mission.

FR. JOSEPH LOUIS LENA: Fr. Lena who took over in Calabar from Fr. Mcdemott had a little bit of time probably longer than the others was born on March 1874 at Faouet in France. He belonged to the over a hundred Novices at Chevilly who were preparing for mission work in Africa, America and Asia after their eventual Ordination. He was ordained in 1990 and sailed the same year together with Fr. Charles Bray from Bordeaux for the Gabon Mission. In 1903 he was re-assigned to the Calabar Mission where he presided at the first Mass with Msgr Lejeune and Patrick McDermott as mentioned already. While at Calabar, he was later appointed the head of the Calabar Mission. The Government at Calabar pressed on him to start a special school up to Grades 7 and 8, a project that would prepare pupils to enter college as also prepare them for University studies in England. It is said that apart from pastoral duties, Fr. Lena was also a great English teacher, teaching the children in the schools. Some of the teachers he groomed apart from teaching in these higher Grades were also trained as Catechists and received great commendations from Government schools Inspectors. The schools were equiperated to high schools and accounted "the most beautiful schools" in the country. By 1908 Fr. Lena had opened up many Mission stations and schools both in Calabar and the Mainland. He travelled through AKWA AKPA URUAN through the agency of the Supercagoes going to Idu Beach Town – AKWA ESUK MBEHE - to establish quite a considerable number new Churches at Use Uruan, Idu, Ekeya, Nsukara, Use Offot and Anua etc. Sometimes he would be dropped at the creeks from where he took canoes to his destinations in the Mainland directed by the Calabar "Mission boys" from Use Uruan and Use Offot. One of these boys was Samuel Ikpe Inuk, the father of Phillip Ikpe and grandfather of Dominic Phillip Ikpe of the great Ikpe family in Use. Dominic started off at St. Lukes Hospital Anua with and later went Overseas and came back to establish the University of Calabar Clinic and worked there as Chief Pathologist. Fr. Lena was the first to publish the Catechism in Efik in 1908 which was later enlarged and reprinted by Fr. Kraft in 1912. He was recalled after the war and became a member of the General Council of CSSp in 1919. He died in 1960.There were other Holy Ghost Fathers who served in the Calabar/Anua Mission until the coming of Bishop Moynagh, the Maynooth Volunteers and the St. Patrick's pioneers. Most of them were those from Ireland who accepted Bishop Shanahan's incessant appeals and joined the Holy Ghost Congregation to be able to come to the Missions since at the time, only Religious Congregations were granted the ius commissionis to volunteer for missionary work in Africa and the Americas which also were pagan lands.

FR. LOUIS WARD: Among these who may be mentioned is Fr. Louis Ward born June 1872 in Donegal, Ireland. He entered the Royal University of Ireland in 1888 and after earning his BA Degree proceeded to France for Further Studies. He made his Vows in 1902 and was ordained at Chevilly on March 28, 1903. Having been assigned, he arrived Calabar on October 5 and was saddled with the task of looking especially after the schools as education was the main thrust of the apostolate. In 1906 he was appointed head of the Ogboli Station in Onitsha and looking after a school with some 450 pupils. In 1917 he was re-appointed to Calabar from where he returned to Europe in 1921 when his health began to decline.

FR. JOSEF KRAFT: Another very important figure in the Calabar Mission was Fr. Josef Kraft who was born on January 5, 1879 at Heimsburnn, France. After his junior and higher school studies he did perfecting and Novitiate within four years and took his Vows in 1900 at Orly. He then began his theological studies at Chevilly and went for a year's perfecting before being ordained priest on October 28, 1904. On September 5, 1905 he sailed from Liverpool to Calabar where he was appointed English Language Master. He knew English very well and could speak without foreign accent or affectation. Then he was moved to the Mainland where he threw himself wholeheartedly into evangelization opening up station after station and establishing schools at Oron, Okobo, Uruan, etc. and also training Catechists along the line. He built Eman Uruan Church between 1908 and 1910 and Nsukara in 1912. In 1911 he laid the foundation of the structures at Anua particularly the storeyed Frs' house which he completed in 1914. Together with Fr. L. Treich he opened up stations at Adiasim, Abak, Ukana Iba and Ikpe Annang, Ifuho, Urua Inyang, Afaha Obong and Midim, Urua Akpan, Okon, etc. in what is now known as Ikot Ekpene Diocese.

After the arrival of Fr. Howell, he went by land from Calabar to Owerri trekking through the swamps and forests together with Shanahan. This must have prepared the latter for his 1000 Miles famous trek to Cameroun in 1919. Back in Calabar he built the famous Sacred Heart School to accommodate over 800 pupils together with the chapel and another residence which still stands strong today. Coming back from Owerri in 1919 he completed the buildings at Anua especially the boarding school for teachers and Catechists. In 1922 he left Africa for good.

FR. FRANCIS HOWELL: As remarked above Fr. Kraft's companion at the Calabar Mission was Fr. Francis Howell who had arrived Calabar on September 28, 1910. Born on May 18, 1880 at Cork, Ireland Fr. Howell attended Blackrock University where he bagged his BA Honours, did a year's prefecting at Rockwell and made his Religious Vows in 1906 at Prior Park England before going for his theological studies at Chevilly where he was ordained on October 28, 1909. At Calabar he was appointed curate to Fr. Louis Lena and spent nearly a dozen years here visiting over twenty outstations and doing bush trek all over the place before going on leave for the first time. He soon became a very famous teacher and preacher. He was to be later sent as pioneer pastor to open up Ogoja. He also worked here for over a dozen years opening up stations at Kakwagom Yahe, Ikom and most of the towns and villages in modern Boki. Before his departure back to Calabar, more than half the people of Ogoja were converted. Fr. Howell was a charismatic missionary, so well loved among the people of Calabar that Howell Street which runs from the Sacred Heart Cathedral straight through and beyond St. Mary's Efut Abua was constructed to his honour. In 1933 he went on leave and on his return he was transferred to Emekuku.

FR. PAUL BIECHY: Another great Holy Ghost Father on mission to Calabar was Fr. Paul Biechy. Born on June 28, 1884 at Hattstatt, France he was professed on October 6, 1908 at Chevilly where he also completed his theological studies and was ordained on October 28, 1912. After a year he was appointed to Calabar but soon after was transferred to Anua Mission which by then had become a residential station covering what is now the entire Akwa Ibom state. Every single station or Mission was founded with base from Anua. The centenary account of 1985 puts Anua in terms of ratio ahead of the Onitsha Mission as a territory of over a million population covering an area over 6,000 square kilometres with a Catholic population of over half a million consisting of 18,027pupils and 82, 557 adults excluding double this as Catechumens and those sympathetic to the Catholic faith. Fr. Kraft was a bull-dozer and was known and seen all over the place. He could visit a dozen stations which were miles apart within a week. At one time he could be called to Calabar should a priest there fall seriously sick or be sent to another place within Igbo land to administer. One important point we should note is that these Rev. Fathers were Religious as also Missionaries and could be assigned and re-assigned as the need arose. A priest missionary was always on the move and like Fr. Kraft; he could in one or two months be assigned to Ogoja and from there to Abakaliki or Bansara. The next time he would be seen at Anua doing his work having left the stations to the Catechist-teachers to administer, a task with they so admirably and conscientiously performed with zest. As Religious, these priests belonged to one single jurisdiction spanning the entire Kogi State, all the five States in Igbo land and the former Eastern Region and also Western Cameroun.

One then could understand why Fr. Kraft could be sent to Dekina in Kogi State, the next time he would be administering at Oban ie. in the Calabar Mission. Soon afterwards he was back at Anua which was his official station, then off to Emekuku in Imo State - a formidable station just like Anua in those days. In fact at a time it used to be the un-official Headquarters of what became Old Owerri Diocese comprising Imo, Abia and parts of Rivers along Port Harcourt axis since Ogoni land belonged to the Calabar Mission. When the St. Patrick's Fathers came, the same thing replicated itself. As a young priest almost fifty years ago and posted to Ikot Edibon on official appointment, due to paucity of priests especially during the war, I could leave Ikot Edibon for Mass at Ikot Ataku or Eket main town, then pass on to say another Mass at Ntak Inyang in Esit Eket or Enwang in Mbo territory. I would then move from there to say a third Mass at West Itam and from there say the last Mass of the day at either Obio Offot or Mbiokporo Nsit keeping the Christian faithful waiting and gazing when I would be able to arrive from Oron, or from Itam near Uyo, or from Obio Offot if I was taking the Road. This was possible because by arrangement once the priest had arrived ether by motor cycle or car through those unpaved roads, a messenger would be dispatched immediately while the Mass would be on to alert that next station on the programme, and the messenger would fulfill his Christian duty by attending the Mass at this destination and cycle back home after the Mass while another messenger would take off when the next Mass would begin at the third station to inform them of the time to expect the priest's arrival there. The Christian faithful had the faith, humility, stamina and courage to fast, pray and wait for the Mass without complaint. Should the priest not arrive when expected, they would dispatch a messenger, of course by bicycle, to find out. It could be due to a burst tyre or the priest having to visit the sick in the station. Again should a longer time of arrival be expected, the Faithful would be asked to go home and come back within three to five hours depending on the expected time of the priest's arrival while some Christian Faithful would just like Mary Magdalene did, stay put, pray and wait. I could remember as a kid, that the Midnight Christmas Mass scheduled between 12am and 2am in Central Uruan often took place between 3am and 5am simply because the officiating priest would be coming either from Calabar by canoe or Essene, or even Bori or Bodo Town in Ogoni, now Port Harcourt Diocese. Nowadays once a priest is one hour late that is the end of the Mass and perhaps the beginning of the collapse of the Parish or station with unprintable abuses on the priest. Would it not have been proper to exercise patience, say some decades of the Rosary between 10 and 20 as expected of the good Christian faithful just like our great grandfathers and mothers did? Then in some good time afterwards, they could draw the attention of the erring "young priest" for some briefings in order to admonish him to take his priestly ministry more seriously and with encouraging words to do better in the future while they also pray and assist him to succeed. The Missionaries like Fr. Kraft were neither angels nor saints but they had the faith, enthusiasm, stamina and courage to do all those great things. On the other hand the Faithful were humble, docile, prayerful and full of faith and understanding to encourage their work-ahol-lic and indefatigable Missionaries. This Christian attitude paid off in that it made them endure the hardship to stay on for years on end without visiting their parents or graves in the case of those whose parents had died while they were toiling in Mission fields.

Fr. Kraft became the official Fr. In-Charge and in 1914 after the construction of the Frs. Edifice which still stands strong till today, the Mission was officially opened with two other priests including Fr. Paul Biechy in attendance. He mastered the Efik language very thoroughly. I can recollect when on his second visit to Nigeria in 1954 on the occasion of the Pontifical Consecration of Dr. Brian D. Usanga, he elected to visit St. Patrick's College and Holy Family as we were writing our Senior Cambridge Examinations and addressed us in perfect Efik. Whereas there were over a dozen Protestant Missionaries working in the area compared to only two of them at the time, Fr. Biechy's tactics was to establish a network of outstations staffed by Catechists and teachers who were regularly visited by either of the Fathers. By 1920 Anua Mission had over 200 Catechist/teachers manning 120 stations. By 1930 the network expanded to over 500 stations over 200 of these having schools attached to them. For example Idu station was opened in 1906 but the school was established in 1914. At Fr. Kraft's departure in 1922, he became the Father In- Charge as the Head of the mission was known in those days. Soon afterwards he was recalled to France to serve as Novice Master at Chevilly. In 1936 Pope Pius XI appointed him Prefect Apostolate to Congo Brazzaville where was later consecrated Bishop on June 4, 1936.

REV. FR. FRANZ JOSEPH SINNER: Rev. Fr. Franz Joseph Sinner was born on August 2, 1862 at Lana in Italy. After his graduate studies at 33 he joined the Holy Ghost Congregation and made his Religious Vows on October 8, 1895 at Chevilly. Six days after he set sail to Zanzibar in East Africa. In 1913 he sailed to Calabar and plans for the establishment of the High School as demanded by Government was on high gear, he was immediately assigned to source for funds needed for the construction of the work. He headed for Austria and received a lot of donations for the school. Soon afterwards he was re-assigned to the Anua Mission to assist in putting up the prefabricated metal building that served as temporary Frs' residence while the kori-kori construction work of Fr. Kraft was going on. In 1918 he too ill and was sent to Calabar for rest while waiting for the ship back to Europe. In 1920 he set sail and returned to Italy.

FR. HERBERT WHITE: was and English priest born in Manchester England on February 17, 1887. In 1906 he started his Seminary studies and made his Profession on December 1, 1911 at Chevilly. Then he began his theological studies there but was interrupted by the First World War. He was however able to resume his studies at Langonnet and was ordained on October 28, 1916. In 1919 he received his first Missionary appointment to Emekuku, then Aba. In 1923 he was re-assigned to Calabar, but his primary field of ministry lay in Ogoja to which he ministered from 1927 after which he was again recalled to Igbo land with arrival of the St. Patrick's Volunteers and men.

FR. THOMAS RONAYNE: Fr. Thomas Ronayne together with Fr. Patrick Whitney were the first Maynooth Volunteers to heed the appeals of Shanahan to come to Nigeria but he eventually ended up joining the Holy Ghost Congregation after serving in Calabar since 1920. Born at Dunmore, Co. Galway in Ireland in 1887 he attended the famous Holy Ghost Fathers College Rockwell and Blackrock Colleges from 1889 -1905. After prefecting he attended Maynooth National University and Seminary for his BA and was ordained in 1910. He went to serve in the USA for five years in the Diocese of Sioux Falls but was recalled to minister back home in Monkstown parish, Dublin. While in Dublin he met an older Cork priest Fr. Edward Galvin ordained in Maynooth in 1909. Fr. Ned Galvin was a returnee from the US where he had served in Brooklyn Diocese and back home he still had that missionary enthusiasm and promptly volunteered to minister in China. Having sailed to China and worked there till 1915, he was joined by Fathers, Patrick O'Reilly of Meath and Joseph O'Leary from Cork, two Irish Volunteers who really wanted to launch an Irish Mission to China at Fr. Ned's instance. At their urging Fr. Ned returned to Ireland where he met Fr. Thomas Ronayne informing him of his plan to get a Maynooth Professor who would be ready and willing to head the proposed China Mission as such a priest Professor would readily have the confidence of the Bishops of Ireland. Fr. Ronayne promptly wrote to a Professor classmate and friends, Fr. John Blowick, a Professor of Theology in Maynooth inviting him to join the proposed Movement as Head of the China Mission. It is important to observe that this was the time of the First World War when most of the French Missionaries serving in Chana then were recalled and drafted to serve in the war effort thus resulting in the dire need of priests to minister in China. Prof Blowick soon afterwards resigned his Chair of Theology to become the key figure in the China Mission since the Bishops of Ireland had approved in principle, the setting up of an Irish Vicariate in China just as was the case with the Holy Ghost Fathers succeeding to establish the Southern Nigeria Vicariate with Vatican approval. In fact, to Fr. Ned Galvin this was a veritable sign from Heaven that his prayers and tears to St. Therese of the Child Jesus, Patroness of Missions had been answered especially with Fr. Roynane also rooting and burning with zeal to serve Overseas but not necessarily to join the China Mission. But while all these were going on, Bishop Josef Shanahan was also in Ireland canvassing and appealing to the young Irish Diocesan priests and Final Year Theologians at Maynooth to volunteer even for a few years for missionary work in Nigeria especially in the Calabar Mission. After his appeals in Maynooth, Bishop Shanahan visited the Holy Ghost Motherhouse in Parish and travelled on to Lisieux to pray at the tomb of the Little Flower. On his way home in London he received a letter from Fr. Ronayne volunteering for Nigeria. Meanwhile Fr. Thomas had already had seven years pastoral experience in the US and Ireland and the Prefect Apostolic of Southern Nigeria, Bishop Shanahan was overjoyed to have such a one for the Calabar missionary effort. On November 24, 1920 together with Fr. Patrick Whitney and in the company of Bishop Shanahan they sailed to Calabar from Liverpool and arrived at the steamy seaport of Calabar on December 15, 1920. At Calabar Fr. Ronayne worked very tirelessly organizing the school system as well as what could be called "Holy Ghost Missionary League" the equivalent of the "Friends of St. Patrick", but principally to those in Ireland to recruit priests as well as get financial support for the Calabar Mission. He it was who received Sister Magdalene Charles Walker of the Congregation of the Sisters of Charity on October 3, 1923 in Calabar as also Agnes Ryan and Mary Martin who later became Superiors General of the Medical Missionaries of Mary and Missionary Sisters of the Most Holy Rosary respectively. Fr. Ronayne continued at the Calabar Mission till the tail end of the foundation of the St. Patrick's Society. Together with his counterpart volunteers Fathers Patrick J. Whitney, Vincent Davey, John Finegan John Gaffey, Patrick Kelly and Joseph McCloskey they were confident that thy would make the first members of the Society, while Fr. John Browne was expected to commit himself in due course, which left them tow short of the proposed ten Foundation Members. But unfortunately their confidence was misplaced as strong worked against the new Society when the Vicar Apostolic withdrew his support without any tangible explanation for his volte-face in any of his letters. Seemingly he had bowed to pressure because according to him:

"I think however, that I am well enough known in Rome to preclude the possibility of my support being interpreted as hostile to my Missionary

Colleagues… and circumstances have already arisen and are of such a serious nature that l cannot be possibly carry out my promise although I have the approval of Rome. (Cf. T. Kiggings: Letter to Archbishop Le Roy, S.G. of CSSP – France;51)

The future of the Volunteer Movement did not look very bright now that Bishop Shanahan had abandoned the idea of forming them into the St. Patrick's Missionary Society. Thereafter Fathers Tom Ronayne and co. only remained as temporary volunteers and any decision they might make about joining the Society was a long way down the road. Soon emerged a lack of synergy and unity between Fr. Patrick Whitney and Ronayne with Tom Ronayne's tendency to always speak out his mind, thus putting a strain on his relations with most of the figures in authority. According to Bishop Moynagh, though both were sincere and committed men who respected one another, but they could not work together and this was disastrous to the future of the Society. Fr. Ronayne could not stomach Fr. Whitney's drive regardless of whose feet was trodden upon. Fr. Ronayne was an over-conscientious and meticulously correct man, a bit legalistic – a man whom it was thought would be the first Superior General (S.G). He was mostly correct, gracious in public relations and clearly deeply spiritual. By Fr. Patrick Whitney appointing as Director, one of the young and new Volunteer arrivals in Calabar Fr. Michael Kilmartin together with then Fr. James Moynagh and five others in 1930, that appointment was nonetheless a slight on Fr. Tom Ronayne and one he keenly felt whereas he was the only one on the Nigerian Mission who had committed himself so far. In 1931 Fr. Ronayne replaced Fr. Kilmartin as Director who resigned to facilitate the appointment of the most senior and most experienced man to the post. This was the last straw as it were, and on St. Patrick's Day, March 17,1932, the St. Patrick's Society was formally commissioned in the presence of Archbishop Cullen with Fr. Patrick J. Whitney as the first Superior General and three others as members and officers. Meanwhile Fr. Thomas Ronayne refused to take the Oath of Temporary Vows having found fault with the Constitution of the Society which had cut out all dependence on the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda Fide which everybody wanted included so as not to make the Society a sort of Religious Congregation instead of one for secular priests. After some time in Ireland he returned to Nigeria and joined the Holy Ghost Congregation very unexpectedly in 1938. He continued to remain in Nigeria till the very end of his life when he died in 1965at Bigard Memorial Seminary Enugu having been posted as staff thereto.

FR. EDWARD J. KNAEBEL: arrived Calabar sailing from Liverpool on September 14, 1921. He was born on January 8, 1884 at Philadelphia, USA. After earning his BA Degree at Duquesne University in1904 he joined the Spiritan Congregation and was professed on August 15, 1905 at Cornwells. He went for prefecting a.k.a. Probation and afterwards proceeded to the University of Freiburg for his STL Degree and was ordained on December 8, 1909. On September, 14, 1921 he set sail from Liverpool to Calabar and was promptly assigned as Director or Administrator of the Sacred Heart Station. My father was always mentioning his name because not only was he baptized together with his two elder brothers Raymond and Basil in that year 1921, but he also taught them English at the Sacred Heart School although he was the Principal of the St. Joseph's College as well. He was equally the General Manager of Schools of the Calabar and Anua Missions. But his desire was more on evangelical work than teaching in schools. As Superior of the Calabar Mission, he was assisted by Frs. Charles Heerey and Thomas Ronayne. He was very fluent in the Efik language and later on he was posted to the Anua Mission as Fr. In-Charge.

FR. JAMES MEEHAN: Fr. James Meehan was a native of Antrim, Ireland, born on January 15, 1897 at Larne he graduated from Blackrock in 1916, did prefecting for two years at Rockwell. He later made his Vows at Kimmage and was ordained by Bishop Shanahan on June 24, 1926. The following year he was assigned to Calabar. He was re-assigned to Anua and finally to St Charles Training College Onitsha.

FR. ANTOINE STIEGLER: was born in France at Soultsz-Bains Alsace on October 24, 1895. He was one of the forty –seven Novices who made their Vows on September 17, 1923 at Orly. He then went for his theological studies at Chevilly where he was also ordained priest on October 28, 1927. The following year he was assigned to the Nigerian Mission at Calabar and later re-assigned to the Anua Mission. He was one of those who received Bishop James Moynagh group of seven in 1930 and later served again at Calabar till 1932 when he was posted to Ihiala. Here it should be noted that many Holy Ghost Fathers were still ordained for the Calabar Mission but with coming of the Bishop Moynagh group a number them were posted to Igbo land and came only intermittently to assist either at Calabar or Anua. Anua and Calabar meant the resident Missions in the entire territory expanding to Ogoja and Abakaliki and the priests could be sent or went on bush trek to the towns and villages of the two Missions. In 1934 this territory was carved at as an autonomous mission with the erection of the Calabar Prefecture with James Moynagh as Prefect Apostolic and afterwards as Bishop as we are going to see.

JOSEF SHANAHAN - APOSTLE OF SOUTHERN NIGERIA 1905 - 1932

Guided by that hand of Providence, Father Josef Ignatius Shanahan, then a final year student at Rockwell Theological College Ireland, having listened to the appeal of Fr. Francis Xavier Lichtenberger a missionary priest working in Southern Nigeria who had come on leave and used the opportunity to tour Europe and give lectures to young students to come to the missions, immediately wrote an application to Paris to become an apostolic missionary in Nigeria. Within three weeks the reply came appointing him as a missionary to go and help Msgr. Lejeune. Born on June 6, 1871 in Glenkeen Co. in the Archdiocese of Cashel, Ireland, Shanahan joined the Holy Ghost Congregation at the tender age of 12 and was sent to France for his Secondary and Philosophical Studies. Thereafter he entered Rockwell School of Theology and was ordained priest by Bishop Allegeyer, the Vicar Apostolic of Zanzibar in September 1902. The arrival of Shanahan marked the beginning of Irish missionary movement to as also the replacement of French missionaries with English/Irish missionaries in the Lower Niger (Cf. Ryan, Sister Mary Brigid HRC, Ireland, 1967, 18, See also Ronayne Thomas 1936, 136). The Calabar Mission tagged, "Sacred Heart Mission" established in 1903 grew rapidly and when Shanahan took over from where Lejeune, McDermott and Lena had stopped, the sky was the limit to his missionary exploits beginning with his treks into the hinterland. Up till 1900 the Royal Niger Company was the official representative of the British Government in Nigeria, but it soon dawned on them that the Company was only interested in their business gains without any interaction with the people to promote British interests and concerns for the people. Therefore, hence the British Government took over by cancelling the Royal Niger Company's Charter as discussed already in Chapter I. As most of the European settlements and enterprises were still concentrated in some spots along the Niger, Shanahan took advantage of this lacuna and made exploratory treks with a view to selecting strategic and fruitful centres for his apostolate. He also directed the priests in the Missions to go on treks to found missionary stations. The Missionaries were to set out and introduce formal education as well as teach the people some basic tenets of the Catholic Faith without making undue war with the traditions of the people. Nevertheless, they were to act with a firm communication of the safeguards and orientation of the minds of the people based on acceptance of Christian standards and practices. It is with this organized evangelization effort through treks that opened the way for the phenomenal outreach in the Calabar Mission beginning with the building up of Sacred Heart Mission as the Calabar evangelical mission was called.

The treks into the interior yielded fruit. The great missionary Shanahan himself started walking boldly into towns and villages where no white man had set foot before. He saw the importance of education and therefore built a network of schools which formed the foundation of one of the most flourishing missionary churches in the world. He encouraged his men in the field to follow suit. This was also duplicated in the Calabar mission. With the first trip to Use Uruan in 1906 by Fr. Joseph Louis Lena, the Superior of the Calabar Mission in the company of Fathers Josef Kraft and L. Treich. At this first contact with the mainland of Calabar, Fr. Lena made several trips and founded the Anua Mission as the new Headquarters of what is now known as Akwa Ibom State. He later sent the two Missionaries in the persons of Fr. Josef Kraft and L. Treich who were with him in Calabar to open up new Missions in the Mainland a project which took them several years to fulfill including the establishment of Churches at Adiasim, Urua Inyang, Ifuho, etc. in what is now Ikot Ekpene Diocese. According to Fr. Hugh McGrath, it was the two missionary pioneer Fathers who were later joined by Father Paul. Biechy that were responsible for the phenomenal growth of the Anua Mission. When Fr. Biechy took over as Superior he was joined by Fathers Philippi O'Connor and Joe Delaney and two Reverend Brothers Armand Hanson with an architect who between 1912 and 1914 built the Anua parish house and the two schools still standing today. Fr Kraft had previously completed St. Lawrence Church Eman Uruan in 1910, similarly St. Michael's Church Nsukara Offot. In order to streamline the missionary approaches and programmes, Shanahan convened the first ever Catholic Congress of the entire Prefecture on January 1915, the second of which must have been inspired by this Congress was convened by his successor Bishop Heerey during the Marian Year celebration of 1954, still at Onitsha. That grand rally was to serve among other things in bringing about the re-union of all Catholics for the first time to intermingle and know themselves within this vast territory, the invitation to all non-Christians of the area and to point out to the especially the young the necessity to imbibe and appreciate Christian ideals as also shield them from evil influences rampant in the area. About thirty-five principal stations and sub-stations including stations from the Calabar territory viz. Anua mission, Essene mission, and Oron Mission, Oban and Calabar itself. The Congress was very pastoral in orientation and with the Christian regulations put forward attenuated many years of mutual understanding between the Church and indigenous cultural practices and traditions as it pointed out very clearly what Catholic teachings were regarding each subject. Meanwhile Shanahan's trek policy had taken the teams directed by Fr. Lena and Joseph Kraft from Calabar to Ikot Ekpene and environs where they established the new stations of Adiasim the first ever station visited by Fr. Kraft in 1912 Abak 1919, Ukana Iba and Ikpe Annang 1917, Ifuho, 1918, Urua Inyang 1917, Inen 1923, Afaha Obong and Midim in 1919, Ikwen 1923, Nto Edino 1925, Urua Akpan 1916, Okon 1919, and Ekpenyong Atai 1922 (Cf. Catholic Diocese of Ikot Ekpene, 2013, 115 ff). That impetus of missionary trek also brought the opening of mission station to Ogoja and Abakaliki with Bishop Shanahan himself at the head of the delegation en route what is now known as the Cameroun Republic.

Despite his numerous treks to open new mission stations throughout the length and breadth of Southern Nigeria and the Cameroons, it was quite obvious that Shanahan was operating from Onitsha. But the enviable structures of the Catholic Mission at Calabar such as the former Sacred Heart Church/School along Lagos Street, the Father's one-store building which also served as St. Joseph's College on Egerton Street erected ostensibly in honour of Sir Walter Egerton the last Consul/Governor General who was transferred to Lagos in 1906, but most especially the Cluny Convent - 3 storeyed buildings which still stand strong along Calabar Road till today were not lost to historians of the century. In fact, it was here that Shanahan and Marie Mary Martin formerly Marie Helena Martin, a British Volunteer Aid Defence Corps a.k.a Red Cross nurse met during the 1st World War, to work out the Religious Rules for his proposed Congregation of the Holy Rosary Sisters which he founded. No doubt Shanahan must have enjoyed his Calabar visits partly on duty and partly on temporary Retreats. Miss Marie Martin had met Bishop Shanahan during the war in 1918 in Calabar and was told of the great need for medical missionaries in Southern Nigeria.

THE CREATION OF OGOJA PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC 1938

ST. BENEDICT'S CATHEDRAL – O G O J A

The most important event which preceded the opening up and establishment of the new Calabar Mission ditto Ogoja Mission was the appointment and consecration of Shanahan as Bishop and Prefect of Southern Nigeria on June 6, 1920. According to Fr. Patrick Whitney, Bishop Shanahan right from the outset was very "hopeful of the success of his "Volunteer Movement" for the expected new Mission which by God's inscrutable way was later to be carved out from the Southern Nigeria Mission as a separate and autonomous Mission. Bishop Shanahan was also optimistic with the suggestion that the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria and the Cameroons might one day be divided in favour of the Irish Secular "Volunteer Priests" which turned out to be the Prefectures of Calabar and Ogoja as we are going to see. Following Shanahan's incessant appeal, Fathers James Mellet and T. Douvry who were traveling from Calabar across the Oban hills, opened the first Mission – St. Benedict's Ogoja where they celebrated the first Open Air Holy Mass on Pentecost day May 16, 1921. It was named St. Benedict's after the reigning Pope Benedict XV. From that centre, the Faith spread through the length and breadth of Cross River Area and Towns as also Tiv and Munchi land and the Cameroons. It was these Missionaries that went on to open new Out-stations in the Ogoja axis like Obudu, Ikom, Kakwagom despite bad roads and bush tracts, cultural differences, language barriers and other set-backs.

That same year on June 3, 1921, Bishop Shanahan in order to get people to assist at St. Benedict's Ogoja as teachers and in the opening of new Out - Stations in Ogoja, sent the Senior Seminarian John Cross Anyogu to Ogoja. For after bagging his BA in Classics at Castlehead England, Anyogu had recently returned to resume his Ecclesiastical Studies at Igbariam where Michael Iwene Tansi and William Obelagu were also studying. He was ordained priest on December 8, 1930, consecrated Auxiliary Bishop in 1957 and installed Bishop of Enugu in 1962. The other two Seminarians were later ordained in 1937, while Michael Tansi joined the Cistercian Monastery in England in 1950. This era soon witnessed the evangelization of places like Ugep, Ntamante, Bansara, Alebo, Nsadop, Okpoma, Okuku, Bendi, Sankwala, Ohong and Yahe. Between 1921 and 1926, many Mission Stations and schools were established within the Ogoja sector.

BISHOP MOYNAGH WITH ETUBOM MAURICE ARCHIBONG AND ST. THOMAS' TUTORS

Bishop Moynagh and one of his Pioneer Teacher Maurice F. Archibong

With the exception of Fr. P. J. Whitney himself all the priests working in the Calabar Mission were Volunteers; ditto Ogoja. There were only about five of them who had to cater for the vast territory. In Ogoja, there were nineteen Outstations, Okuni being the second to be opened in 1934 after Ogoja which was the only residential station then. The only SPS who ever worked after its foundation by Fr. J. Mellette followed by Fathers Groetz, Howell, White and Meehan was Fr. P.J. Whitney who lived there soon after the establishment of the Society and even erected the residential edifice popularly tagged Whitney House" and Thomas McDonald who had come to Nigeria a year before. Father O'Connor of course used to come all the way from Eke to do bush trek of the Out-Stations. By 1938 Ogoja Mission had only 20 churches, 13 schools, about 2000 Christians and 1262 Catechumens compared to Calabar with 27 out-stations in Calabar, 67 in Oron, 95 in Essene, 146 in Anua and 165 in Ifuho. But later in 1938, they were joined by the arrival of Fr. Seamus Carraher also from Armagh and with McDonald both of them carried on the work in Ogoja after Whitney had returned to Ireland in May of the following year. For Mgr. Moynagh, his commitment to education was irrevocable having noticed that the Catholic Church's record in Education was far behind the Protestants'. Up to this most of the teachers in the Calabar Mission were trained at Christ the King College Onitsha, later St. Charles built by Bishop Heerey. To cut costs he embarked on the ambitious establishment of first Grade College or Monotechnic comparable to the "Almighty Hope Waddell Training Institute, Calabar, establish since 1895, Bishop Moynagh promptly in 1937 established the St. Thomas' College, my alma Mater at Ogoja town with Fr. P. J. Costeloe as Principal and Etubom Maurice Archibong and co. who were Grade I teachers from St. Charles, Onitsha where Cardinal Ekandem also studied. Later

Bishop Moynagh recommended and directed the Holy Child Sisters on the one hand to upgrade the St. Joseph's College earlier established by Mother, M.C. Walker to a Higher Elementary College for senior teachers while St. Mary's College Afikpo was established for the lower Grade of teachers as Teacher Training College Grade III. Within five years the entire Prefecture could boast of even surplus teachers of men and women. Soon the Catholic Schools were to acquire such reputation in discipline and academic excellence among the people that it became customary to think of establishing schools than building churches – a situation that beat the Protestants pants down to it. That is why one often found grandiose Protestant churches built all over the length and breadth of Cross River and the Mainland, now Akwa Ibom State.

But to Mgr. Moynagh's mind it seemed he still had to do more especially in Ogoja sector. Coincidentally as Fr. P.J. Whitney's six-year term as Superior General of St. Patrick's Missionary Society would be coming to an end in 1938, he sought the advice of his co-workers and both Moynagh and T. McGettrick recommended Fr. P. J. Costeloe, their classmate as the new Superior General of SPS though Bishop Riberi would have liked Mgr. Moynagh to combine both positions and divide his time between Calabar and Kiltegan for the mean time. In March 1938 the erection of Ogoja as a new and independent jurisdiction from Calabar and Fr. Patrick Whitney was appointed Prefect Apostolic thereto by Rome. It was a classic Roman action: Promoveatur ut amoveatur" ie. promote the one you want to dispose of and remove him to another place. To Bishop Moynagh's mind this best suited the situation they found themselves. Bishop Thomas Keogh of Kildare accepted Fr. Costeloe's nomination, meanwhile Fr. Whitney would have to resign and come back to Calabar.

The First World War (1914-1918) had brought a big toll on the fledging missionary Church depleting the work force of Shanahan with the consequent hindering of catechetical work and opening up new stations in the hinterland. Volunteer missionaries could not come out as before while the war raged. Moreover, some of the Missionaries had even to quit and enroll in military service and more tellingly, the German Holy Ghost Fathers had to vacate the British Cameroons. Therefore, in 1917 Pope Benedict XV had to appoint Shanahan as the Apostolic Visitor to the German Missions in the Cameroons and to administer the territory. That implied that Shanahan had to visit Cameroun in person and administer the Sacraments to the people and even to stay and encourage them to persevere in the Faith until the Pope would send them Missionaries to reside with them once again. In fact, in 1920 true to his prayers, the Pope did send them the English Mill Hill Fathers who took over the administration of the territory. But before then Bishop Josef Shanahan had to make the trek to the Cameroons traveling from Calabar through bush tracks and the mountainous region of Oban. This trek was a very personal one and he decided to personally go there and stay with the people, reserve the Blessed Sacrament for them and assist them in whatever way he could as there were no more priests around. Shanahan started his "Missionary Journey" from Calabar going on foot through the Oban hills through the vast territory of Ogoja and up to the Cameroons. This visitation to Cameroun resulted in the famous 'THOUSAND MILE TREK' that was so much exhausting and full of hardships. He encountered terrible mishaps on the way, so much so that the Apostolic Visitor barely survived it. He collapsed many times on his way to render the promised visit to the villages and before he could go round the villages and complete the journey he was rushed to a hospital in Duala where he spent weeks before returning to Calabar.

After that momentous trek, Shanahan health deteriorated beyond imagination and forced him in 1919 to return on leave to Ireland to recuperate. While on sick leave precisely on April 17, 1920 Pope Benedict XV announced the elevation of the Prefecture of Southern Nigeria to the status of Vicariate Apostolic with Shanahan also being elevated as Vicar and to the Bishopric. This was a vast territory covering over 68,000 square miles which included Munchi in Benue and comprised of 8 provinces. At the time, the portion of the Vicariate covered was only 4 provinces comprising Onitsha, Owerri, Calabar and Ogoja with a population of 5,107 million inhabitants (Cf. CSE B/192/A/07 Yearly Report, 1920). The other 4 Provinces not yet touched by the Gospel Message of Christ - a Message of love and peace but which was captured by Islam comprised Munchi I and II (BENUE), Mubi and Yola(ADAMAWA) with a land mass of 31,000 square miles and a population that had become Muslim. Shanahan chose to be consecrated at Maynooth ostensibly to attract volunteers to the Nigerian Mission as also cement the link between Nigeria and the Irish Church. On June 6 Shanahan was consecrated Bishop on his 49th birthday at Maynooth by Bishop Kelly Ross with Fr. Thomas Ronayne serving as Master of Ceremonies and Rev. Patrick J. Whitney as Deacon at the Mass. These were to become the first Volunteer priests he would be bringing back to Southern Nigeria. That same year the Sister of St. Joseph of Cluny incapable of handling the post-war situation were recalled to France. But the most import scenario in all this was the discovery of the vast territory between Calabar and the Cameoun Republic, namely the thick tropical forest area named Ogoja by Shanahan while on his trek to the Cameroons. This territory will now form the subject of our pre-occupation in our research.

The return of now Bishop Shanahan to the mission as Vicar Apostolic resulted in a new impetus to the evangelization effort. With those he was also able to bring to Nigeria following his appeal were two French Holy Ghost Fathers James Mellet and T. Douvry and these arrived with him at Calabar steamy seaport in 1920. In May 1921 these two arrivals traveled from Calabar across the Oban hills and after visiting the station in Oban traversed the thick forests and climbed the Oban Hills exploring the possibility of opening up the Tiv Mission through Ogoja forest land. The journey was tedious and fatiguing. On arrival at Ogoja, they were hosted in the Government house by the Colonial Administrators there. After some days they set out to open the Tiv Mission and luckily got a good reception from the Tiv chiefs and elders. When they made their intention known especially their plan to open up stations along with building schools for the people, the Colonial Resident in the territory getting wink of the proposal, wrote back to the visiting Fathers disapproving of their plan because Benue Province a Muslim area as such in the Northern Region of Nigeria, was a territory reserved for Islam. On account of this, the scheme had therefore to be dropped and the visitors decided to go back and open up the Ogoja Mission instead. Another factor why they had to abandon the establishment of the Tiv Mission was because of the difficulties they were encountering in traversing further north into Tiv land, hence their resolve to settle for Ogoja and to embark on establishing a big centre of the Faith in the new region. On May 15 the Eve of Pentecost, they were right within the precints of Ogoja land and the following day, Pentecost Sunday they conducted an open air Mass for the people. This signaled the opening of the first mission – St. Benedict's Ogoja. It was named St. Benedict's Mission in honour of the reigning Pope Benedict XV. From Ogoja they explored the vast territory which stretched up to Abakaliki and spread through the length and breadth of Northern Cross River as far as Tiv land. Further thrust into the area and adjacent towns would later on bring the Church also to Tiv and Munchi land and the Cameroons, but this was another mission to be accomplished.

These pioneers although based in Calabar did come back and on several occasions always tried to plough their way through the bush and forests to and from Calabar to Ogoja. As it can be imagined, that mission to and fro Ogoja from Calabar was poorly done. It could not materialize in the proper opening up of the Ogoja Mission as envisaged by Shanahan. It needed a sort of permanent settling down to the task ahead. In fact it was only until the coming of the St. Patrick's Kiltegan Fathers in the 1930s that the Ogoja Mission really took root. It was these SPS Missionaries that went on to open new stations in the Ogoja axis like Obudu, Ikom, Kakwagom etc. despite the bad roads and bush tracts, cultural differences, language barriers and other set-backs. The language barrier was real as there was no common language in the entire region as was the case in the Calabar Mission. There are at least 22 languages in the region some of which are spoken by as few as five thousand inhabitants who at the time were 90% illiterate. They had to employ men trained in the Cameroons who had mastered the "Pidgin English" earlier introduced there by the Colonial Germans as the lingua franca of sorts. These were the people who were employed as interpreters. That same year on June 3, 1921, Shanahan in order to get people to assist at St. Benedict's as teacher and in the opening of new stations in Ogoja sent the Senior Seminarian John Cross Anyogu who had recently returned from England after bagging his BA in Classics at Castlehead England to resume his ecclesiastical studies at Igbariam where Michael Iwene Tansi and William Obelagu were also studying.
From 1930 the territory then including Abakaliki was assigned to the newly arrived St. Patrick's Missionary Fathers from Ireland. In 1934 the Calabar Mission including Ogoja became a Prefecture with Mgr James Moynagh, one of the 1930 SPS Fathers named the Prefect Apostolic. Bishop Moynagh on assumption sent more Missionaries to the Ogoja region and to attract immediate Government grant from the Colonial Government of the day established the premier post-primary Institution, St. Thomas's T.T. C Ogoja since as at then, there was no post Primary Institution at Ogoja Area. At the time, there were only three Mission Stations viz. Ogoja, Kakwagom (Boki) and Abakaliki. The Schedule below shows the state of affairs then in the Ogoja sector.

ORIGINS AND BRIEF HISTORY OF DIOCESE OF OGOJA 1921 - 2018

FR. JAMES MELLET – APOSTLE OF OGOJA DIOCESE

Born on July 2, 1886 at Gossboyne, Mayo Co Ireland, Fr. James Mellet was another Holy Ghost priest to come to the Calabar Mission having been professed on October 8, 1911, done prefecting and graduated with a BA Degree at Rockwell University before his priestly Ordination on October 28, 1916. In 1917 he was assigned to Calabar where he learnt not only the Efik language but also other languages like Ejagham, Boki, Ekajuk, After a few years he was transferred to Ogoja to open a new station in the hitherto unvisited vast countryside of Northern Cross River together with Fr. T. Douvry. He took off through Oban axis and forest highlands which really was a roundabout route passing through the ancient boundary station Mkpot between Ogoja Diocese and Calabar which Archbishop Ukpo and Ekuwem visited soon after their appointment to the Archdiocese of Calabar. He did this just to be able to call on the people of Oban to bid them farewell as he had worked there before and considering that Oban was evangelized by the legendary Fr. Louis Lena since 1906. There was an extraordinary hospitality accorded him by the good Oban citizens because everywhere he visited he was speaking with the people in their Ekoi tongue. St. Michael's Oban Baptism Register indicates that in his first coming Fr. Mellet had baptized hundreds at Oban, Nyaye, Ikpai, Ekong Anaku, Abaiti, Mfamosing, New Netim and Akamkpa. One could only recall the type of reception and honour given to the Apostolic Nuncio, Archbishop Carlo Maria Vigano in 1997 when on a pastoral visit there in order to appreciate the kind of reception Fr. James Mellet got on this his passing visit to Oban. Then they finally arrived across the Oban hills and opened the first mission station – St. Benedict's Ogoja where they celebrated an open air Holy Mass on Pentecost day May 16, 1921. The station was named St. Benedict's Mission - Ogoja after the reigning Pope Benedict XV who had given Shanahan the jurisdiction and raised him to the dignity of a bishop earlier on in 1920. From this centre the Faith spread through the length and breadth of Cross River area and going up far into Tiv and Munchi land and the Cameroons where Fr. Mellet ministered to the people. Afterwards followed the St. Patrick's Missionaries who actually promoted the Mission towards what has become Ogoja Diocese today. In fact it was these SPS Missionaries who went on to open new stations in the Ogoja axis like Obudu, Ikom, Kakwagom etc. despite bad roads and bush tracts, cultural differences. As remarked above Fr. Paul Biechy also ministered here to the people in 1922. In 1922 he went on leave for the first time and while there he was appointed to assist in training of the Congregation of the Sisters of the Most Holy Rosary newly founded by Bishop Shanahan at Killeshandra. He was also assigned with the task of preaching and appealing for Missionary work in Africa as also writing articles and gathering funds. On his return in 1032 he was re-assigned to Nsukka and later to Oguta. Fr. James Mellet was a very proficient teacher. Most of his work this time was on teaching and writing. He was a prolific writer and most of what we now come to know about the history and times of the Holy Ghost Fathers including the History of Ogoja Diocese were authored by him.

1. MGR. PATRICK J. WHITNEY, SPS (1938- 1941)

Born on July 7, 1894 in Breen in Leitrim and Sligo County Ireland, Patrick J. Whitney attended Dedreenrgon National School Ireland and later proceeded to St. Mel's College in Longford, Ireland. In 1913 Patrick in his aspiration to become a priest was admitted into the famous St. Patrick's College, a sort of Higher School in preparation for the University. From here he proceeded for his Seminary training at the National Seminary, All Hallows, Maynooth, Ireland and was ordained Catholic Priest on June 20, 1920 with Fr. Thomas Ronayne as Deacon of the Ordination Mass and the newly consecrated Bishop Josef Shanahan in attendance. Following Bishop Mynagh's incessant appeal for Volunteer priests from Maynooth for the Southern Nigeria Mission, Patrick Whitney who had listened to and nurtured the ambition to try his Ministry in Africa should he succeed in becoming a priest, had already med up his mind in his fourth year in Theology to opt for the Nigerian Mission. In April 1920 while yet a Deacon informed his parents about his future plans and was promptly resisted by his mother. But after his Ordination together with Rev. Fr. Thomas Ronayne an elderly priest from Dublin accepted to go temporary service to the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria.

Accompanied by Bishop Shanahan, they arrived at the coastal town of Calabar on December 20, 1920. Fr. T. Ronayne was assigned to serve in Calabar while Fr. Patrick Whitney went for his Ministry in Emekuku in the rural country side of Igbo land. At Emekuku he served as assistant to Fr. Daniel , CSSp. Fr. Patrick Whitney has recounted the task he hadto perform in administrering to over ten thousand of baptized Christians and about forty thousand (40,000) Catechumens in the region as also his ministry in the schools numbering over two hundred schools. Faced with this daunting challenges, Fr. Whitney saw the great need for recruiting more Missionaries to Nigeria and became incensed and determined to help Bishop Shanahan in the appeal to young Irish priests to volunteer for Southern Nigeria. He already had envisioned the need for the establishment of a new Missionary Society to assist the Holy Ghost Fathers who were hard pt to it and seemed unable to cpe with the task because they were already stretched within limits providing Missionaries to the Far East – China and Australia and even the Americas.

Providentially, Fr. Whitney was appointed by Bishop Shanahan to go back to Ireland and start a new promotion viz. the establishment of a Religious Congregation for Women to assist the meager number of priests in the Nigerian Mission. Towards the end of 1923, Fr. Whitney set out to lay the foundations for the establishment of the new Congregation of the Holy Rosary Nuns at Killeshadra in Ireland. In 1928 the first five of these women were professed and soon preceded to Nigeria. On arrival Bishop Shanahan sent them to Mother Magdalene at Calabar for brief tutorials and grooming. Within the ensuing years many Holy Rosary Sisters were professed in Ireland and were sent to Nigeria to join their group in Onitsha where they quickly undertook the establishment of schools, training colleges, social centres and hospitals to fulfill Bishop Shanahan's vision to give the Nigerian women an opportunity to play their rightful part in society and become good Christian wives and mothers.

In the ensuing years while still in Ireland, Fr. Whitney consistently tried to persuade Bishop Shanahan to step up the recruitment of Volunteer Priests for Foreign Mission in Southern Nigeria. He even went on to suggest the setting up of a Mission House in Ireland as a base where both priests on leave from the Nigeria Mission and those newly recruited before their being sent forth could be accommodated. This he thought would really make the appeal effort attractive to volunteers. This was noted and Bishop Shanhan's response was positive and Fr. Whitney was given the mandate to start recruiting Volunteer priests because this soon gave him a new impetus for missionary appeal drive. Meanwhile Bishop Shanahan kick-started the appeal effort by going to Maynooth to appeal for diocesan priests to come to Southern Nigeria for a period of temporary service in the Mission. It was not an entirely new idea because some time previously the Holy Ghost Superiors in Paris even suggested such an overture. Then Shanahan went down to meet contact with Maynooth through Father Malachy Eaton, a member of the University-Seminary Staff and a close friend of his sister's family, the Dawsons then living in Maynooth. He was well received by the Preident a.k.a Vice Chancellor, Mgr. J. McCaffrey who was beaming with genuine interest for the Missions Overseas. He soon became a great friend of the Nigerian Mission. He then arranged for Bishop Shanahan to attend the dinner party programmed for the Bishops of Ireland at the Cardinal's lodge in order to be in a position to address the Bishops using that occasion. At the dinner, he was made to sit beside the Cardinal and Shanahan and after introducing him to the assembled Bishops of Ireland, Shanahan addressed them "as he never spoke before or since". He captured the attention and interest of the Bishops who gave him permission to go meet all he students of Maynooth and seek Volunteers among them who would be willing to serve in the Nigerian Mission for at least five years. Bishop Shanahan's appeal made a great impression on the Maynooth students with the result that a number of them expressed interest including Rev. Patrick J. Whitney who was one of the candidates for Ordination in June 1920. In 1925 he was able to recruit three new Volunteers, viz. Fr. Joseph Fiegan from Rap-Hoe Co., Fr. John Gadffney from Kilmore Co. and Fr. Patrick Kelly from Meath Co. In 1926, he returned to Nigeria and was appointed to Eke Parish to replace Fr. Thomas Mulvaney who died earlier on that month. In 1928 Fr. Whitney was formally incardinated into the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria with a view to transferring him later to the new Missionary Society that was soon to be established for the Nigerian Mission. Many of the Holy Ghost Fathers on ground did not appreciate Fr. Whiney's return to Nigeria sequel to founding a ne Congregation/Society on the Mission. They demonstrated vehemently to Bishop Shanahan because this would curtail their area o administration in Nigeria. In 1929 due to this type of pressure, Fr. Whitney was given a new letter of ex-cardination from Shanahan and returned to Ireland to pursue the tsk of founding the Irish Violunteer Society which as we are going to see metamorphosed into what became the St. Patrick's Missionary Spociety, SPS – Kiltegan. The rest is history as they say.

On December 13, 1929 after his Interview with the Authorities in Rome as also with the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda Fide, to his great surprise and joy, the recived the Letters of Authority to found the new St. Patrck's Society which was formally commissioned in 1932. It was to be a trialfoundation- ie. Ad experimentum which was the term used by Rome. With the peremission given to him by Mgr. McCafferey, then President /Rector of Maynooth, Fr. Whitney was able to directly make appeals to the student body for volunteers for the Nigerian ission. That historic appeal resulted in the recruitment of five volunteers straight from the 1930 set of the newly rdained priests and one of them was Fr. Thomas McGettrick, the other being Fr. James Moynagh both of whom have made this history f the Church in Calabar and Ogoja Mission memorable. On St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1932, FR. Whitney together with his cousin, Francis Whitney and Fr. Francis Hoickey took the Oath of Temporary Vows and Membership as new Members of the St. Patrick's Missionary Society in the presence of Bishop Matthew Cullen, Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin Diocese, Ireland. At the ceremony, Fr. Whitney was appointer first Superior General of the SPS. Things began to move very fast in the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria s Bishop Shanhan grated FR. Whitney free rein. As the new Suoperior General he began to promote the the division of the Vicariate and was the brain behind the creation of both Calabar (1934) and later Ogoja (1938) as new Prefectures Apostolic. It was also by his recommendation that Moynagh became the first Prefect and later Bishop of Calabar. That same ywear 1932, Fr. Whitney returned to Nigeria in the company of Fr. Thomas McDonald and took residence at Okpoma in what was to become the Ogoja Mission. It was then that he built the so called "FR. PAT'S HOUSE."

He then returned to Ireland soon after to establish what became known as St. Patrick's Seminary, Kiltegan with himself as the first Rector thereof. After finishing his 8-Year Term as Superior General (1932-1938), on March 8, 1938 he was appointed Prefect Apostolic of the newly created Ogoja Prefecture by Pope Pius XI. On November 9, that same year Bishop James Moynagh handed over the Ogoja Mission to him with nine priests on the staff of the new Prefecture. According to Fr. Kiggins, Fr. Mgr. Whitney returned to Calabar en route Ogoja laden with such amount of supplies that most of them were left lying on the verandah of the Mission house unused for a long time. He also brought a Ford kid car, the first of its kind to be driven in that part of the world along with several motor-cycles, an outboard marine vessel a.k.a engine boat in order to plough the Cross River to Calabar, etc. Soon after, he got priests to be permanently resident at Ogoja, Okuni Abakaliki and Kakwagom for the first time while he himself lived at Okpoma-Yalla. Before this priests were only coming and going from Calabar to do the bush treks. He built a mud house for himself at Okpoma. This may well account for the Emeritus Archbishop Ukpo's strong belief that the Headqurters of the Diocese was meant to be at Okpoma. In fact Whitney had even started the construction of a permament Church here probably meant to be the Cathedral, which still stands strong till today. My first impression of the Okpoma building with a beautiful porch in 1957 was that of a Church instead of a school although it was actually serving as a Church for Sunday services. Mgr. Whitney had also intended bringing in the Medical Missionaries of Mary (MMM) to open a hospital at Ikom, as also the Holy Child Siters to build their Convent at Okuni both of which eventually happened during the time of his successor, Bishop Thomas McGettrick. In 1939 he became ill and returned to Ireland for recuperation but leaving the missionary effort to be continued by the pioneer SPS Fathers. But obviously he had laid the foundation for a vibrant Church in Ogoja. On all accounts, Mgr. Whitney was an extraordinary priest, very intelligent, energertic and powerful; one who could never say “die”. He was absolutel pragmatic and indefatigable. His appeal for Volunteers brought at least thirty –six priests to the Calabar/Ogoja Mission. He combined perfectly his pastoral endeavours with the work of Administration as Founder. He certainly brought the Catholic Religion and provided grassroots development especially in education and health facilities for the people. In 1941 he resigned as Prefect Apostolic and bowed out. His illness was irreversible on a number of factors – first of all his work-alcoholic temperament, no rest, no proper taking care of his health, or medicaments and to me he was the hero of that era. It was left to Bishops Moynagh but most eminently, the toughened Bishop Thomas McGettrick to bear the mantle of bringing the Ogoja Mission to the level we now find Ogoja through the solid foundation he had laid. On July 17, 1942, Mgr. Patrick Whitney bade good-bye to Ogoja and to the World in death giving the way to others to carry on.

2. BISHOP THOMAS MCGETTRICK sps (1941- 1973)

The Rev. Father who baptized me in 1937 at Anua was Fr. Thomas McGettrick. He hailed from Emlegh – Ballymore Killaville County-Sligo, Ireland. He was born to a family of five on December 21, 1905 – the very year Fr. Josef Kraft CSSp arrived Calabar on his first mission to the Prefecture of Southern Nigeria. He received the Sacrament of Baptism ten days later from Fr. Rogers O'Donnell at his small home Church in Killaville under Buninaden Parish and at nine received his First Holy Communion and Confirmation with the nam Michael. For his primary education he attended the Killaville National School and later finised up at Clonem National School. For his secondary education, he got a scholarship and was admitted in 1919 to the famous St. Nathy's College, Ballaghaderren, a quasi Minor Seminary from which boys are admitted into the National Seminary Maynooth. At the college he became an altar boy a.k.a Mass Server, and was fregistered to serve at Mass on Sundays. Among his school subjects included English, Irish, Mathematics, Greek, History and Geography. In 1923 he sat for and passed his Middle and Senior Grade Exagave him minations which also qualified him to study in the University and pfroceded to Sligo for the Matriculation Certificate Exams. After qaulifying in his Matriculation, Mgr. Ambrose Blaine, the President (Rector) of the College recommended among others who had shown signs of religious vocation to his diocesan Bishop at Achonry who straight away sent them for admission into Maynooth for their priestly formation. Thus began his journey towards the Catholic Priesthood.

On June 22, 1930 he was ordained a priest and shortly afterwards was enlisted for the Nigerian Mission. On September 30 1930, together with four of his colleagues as also Maynooth Volunteres, viz. Fr. Cornelius Plunkette, Fr. Ciaran Ryan, Fr. James Moynagh and Fr. Patrick Costelloe, in the company of Fr. Patrick Whitney, Fr. Thomas McDonald CSSp and Fr. Daniel Walsh CSSp they sailed to Calabar to commence heir pastoral assignments in the then Calabar Mission. On his arrival he was posted to St. Mark's Oron under Anua Mission in the Mainland. There he met and worked as assistant for three years (1930-1933) with his seniors, Fr. Charles Meehan CSSp and Fr. CSSp from Donegal. When the two Holy Ghost Fathers were re-aassigned to Emekuku he continued alone as Father In-Charge and opened up a number of stations raising the number from 60 to 97 and the number of Catholics from 2,200 to 4,242 with 2,963 Catechumens and 340 Christian families. In June 1934 he briefly went back to Ireland on leave and on his return was assigned to the Anua Mission where he worked until 1940 before going on leave again.

Precisely on February 4, 1940 Fr. Thomas McGettrick left Anua on leave after receiving the news of his elevation as the new Prefect Apostolic of Ogoja, taking over from the sick Mgr. Patrick Whitney who was equally back home for recuperation which never was to happen. When Mgr. Whitney left for Ireland, he handed over the Ogoja Prefecture to Fr. Mcmanus McClafferty as Pro-Prefect. At the time Mgr. McGettrick took over from Fr. McClafferty there were only eight priests living in four residential Parishes in the Ogoja Mission: and two teaching in St. Thomas' Ogoja – all of whom Maynoth Volunteers. Mgr. McGettrick started off with education as his first step towards evangelization. His motive was, train the child, and you train the citizenry. The second was to do something to help the leprosy afflicted populace. The leprosy scorge was breath-taking. Back home in Ireland he started the first series of appeals for leprosy work which appeared in AFRICA - the SPS Missionary Magazine.

Soon on arrival back in Nigeria he started nursing the idea of founding a leper settlement with the Colonial Government Officials who offetred him some promise and support. Step bt step he moved towards the final realization of his plans and made arrangement with the Holy Child Sisters (SHCJ) who accepted to run a Boarding Convent School at Ogoja with Rev. Sr. Osmund de Maille as Superior of the Convent. With a Grant of one thousand British Pounds (£1,000:0:0) from the Propagade Fide Rome, he was able to over the problem of finance and completed the Convent house at Kakwagom. There and then problem of the Hansen's disease – Leprosy mentoned above also came to the fore and was to be tackled headlong. This led to the establishment of the Leper Colony at Abakaliki which was the greatest centre of the scorge. In 1945 he succeeded in completing the St. Patrick's Hospital in Abakaliki with building also of a mini clinic at Afikpo and Obudu. He also built the Tuberculosis and Leprosy (TBL) Hospital at Monaiya which gradually has developed into the magnificent hospital we have today. To be able to do all these medical enterprise he enliosted the Medical Missionaries of Mary (MMM) which had successfully been established in the Calabar Mission by Bishop Moynagh.He also enlisted the support of the World Health Organization (HWO), the British Empire Leprosy Re;ief Services (BELRA and the Unmited Nations C and Education Fund (UNICEF). As observed already, McGettrick's first love was in the field of Education and he went about establishing a number of schools all over the Ogoja Province. Prominent among these School and Colleges include the Mary Knoll College (1953) St. Patrick's Technical College Ugep (1960), Holy Child Mt Carmel Girls College (1962), Holy Child Ikom (1965) Boki High School (1965), Obudu Secondary School (1961) etc. He created many Parishes from 4 in 1941 to in 1973. Also worthy of note is his Consecration of two indigenes of the Diocese; Bishop Joseph Edra Ukpo for Ogoja in 1971 and Bishop Michael Okoro in 1983 for Abakaliki where he had retired thither on March 1, 1973. On December 19, 1988 he was called for higher services among the Church Triumphant at the age of 83 having stayed as first Bishop of Ogoja for 34 years (1939-1973) and of Abakaliki for ten years (1973-1983). He had wished he were a monk whereby he would have lived "more purely, fell down more rarely, rose up more speedily, walked more cautiously, bedewed with the waters of Grace more frequently, cleansed more quietly and rewarded more abundantly" (St. Bernard)

3. ARCHBISHOP JOSEPH EDRA UKPO (1973-2014)

On June 6, 1937 a bouncing baby boy was born to Chief John Edra Ukpo and Madam Theresa Ogeeyi Ukpo both of Okpoma Village in Yala LGA of Northern Cross River State. He was no other baby than Joseph Edra Ukpo who was to become a legend in the Church's Annala in Cross River State. In 1943 Bishop Ukpo began his primary School at Christ the King Okpoma, the School I first started my Teaching Practice while at St. Thomas HETC Ogoja and St. Joseph's Igbeagu, Abakaliki (1857-58). He later continued at St. Christopher's Primary School Abuochiche in Bekwarra LGA (1945-1946); St. Charles Obudu (1947-1948) then back to Christ the King Okpoma for his Standard IV (1949) and completed his Standard Std V1 in flying colours at St. Benedicts Cathedral School Ogoja (1950-1951). In 1952 he was admitted for his Preliminary Teachers Training Course (PTC) at St. Thomas HETC Ogoja. With the establishment of Mary Knoll College Okuku in January 1953, he switched over there for his Secondary Education (1953-1957). On completion he applied for the priesthood and was granted admission at the prestigious Bigard Memorial Seminary Enugu where he began his Seminary Studies in 1958 and completed in1964. He was ordained priest on April 25, 1965 by Bishop Thomas McGettrick. In September 1965 the young Father Joseph Ukpo was sent for Further Studies at the University of Nigeria Nsukka (UNN) to study Physics /Education. As the civil war (1967-1970) disrupted his studies, he returned to his diocese and was appointed Rector of the Minor Seminary at St. Augustine's – Ezzamgbo (1967-1968) and after successfully crossing the battle line to his native Ogoja, he was appointed Parochial Vicar to Holy Family Parish Ikom (1968-1969). Later in 1969 he was appointed Parish Priest of St. Joseph's Okuku which incidentally included his home town of Okpoma (1969-1971). While there, His Holiness Pope John Paul II nominated him the Auxiliary Bishop of Ogoja. He was consecrated Bishop on September 19, 1971 at St. Benedict's Cathedral Ogoja. In 1973 he was enthroned Bishop of Ogoja while Bishop McGettrick moved on to the newly created Diocese of Abakaliki. Now the chief shepherd of his native Diocese of Ogoja, the young autochthonous Bishop took over the reins of governance and administration of the Diocese. Among his great achievements while in office include the establishment of the All Hallows Chancery, the reconstruction of St. Benedict's Cathedral, the establishment of Mater Dei International Nursery School Ogoja, Regina Caeli Nursery School Obubra and Holy Family Nursery School Ikom among others. In the Secondary Schools cadre, he also established Regina Pacis Sec. School Ofumboncha – Obubra, the Good Shepherd Special Education Centre Ogoja, Pope John Paul Minor Seminary Okpoma and St. Joseph's Centre for the Blind Obudu. He equally established the Diocesan Communications Centre with Diocesan Newspaper "The Message" in mind. He opened up over 20 parishes in addition to the twelve parishes with over 760 Outstations he inherited from Bishop McGettrick. By the time he was appointed Metropolitan Archbishop of Calabar, taking over from Archbishop Brian D. Usanga, Bishop Ukpo, he had ordained 76 new priests in addition to the litany of hid achievements.

On December 17, 2003 after 23 prolific years as Bishop of Ogoja, he was appointed the Metropolitan Archbishop of Calabar and was canonically installed on February 14, 2004at the Sacred Heart Cathedral by the Apostolic Nuncio Archbishop Augustine Kasuji. On June 29, 2004 he received the Pallium at the hands of Pope John Paul II at St. Peter's Piazza at the Vatican. At the helm of Calabar he introduced among other things the First Sunday of December Annual Archdiocesan Harvest, Final Returns by all Parish Priests every Sunday, the Calabar Archdiocesan School Board, the building of the Pastoral Centre at St. Patrick's Ikot Ansa and the transfer of the Marianum Spiritual Year to Immaculate Conception, Mfamosing was also the renovation of St. Theresa's Printing Press and the coming on board of Veritas News Letter to replace the moribund Catholic Life and Obufa Uwem magazines. He ordained over 30 new priests within the ten years of his administration, a figure far more than the number of indigenous priests he met on ground aside creating some new Parishes like Parish of the Ascension Nyakassang, St Michael's Obung and Church of Annunciation Kasuk. But there is no basis for such a comparison because Bishop Usanga himself ordained more than three time the number of his predecessor. Yet people would prefer the handful ordained by Bishop Moynagh to the 100s ordained nowadays because Vocations were hard to come by and to become a priest in those days was like gold tried in fire. that Archbishop Ukpo also held several positions within and outside the Church. He was Member of the Public Relations Department of the Catholic Secretariat Abuja for several years. Member of the Society of the Linguistic Anthropologists of Nigeria, Member of the Bible Translation, Nigeria. He equally served as Pro-Chancellor and Chairman of the Governing Council UNICROSS as well as Member of the Cross River State Schools Management Board, Calabar, CRS State Health Management Board, Health Advisory Council, and finally Chairman Margaret Ekpo International Foundation (2000-2017). Within the Episcopal Circle he also held posts as the Episcopal Delegate Synod of Bishops for Africa and Rome (1994-1998); Chairman National Episcopal Commission for Marriage and the Family (2005-2006); Chainman National Episcopal Commission for Justice, Development & Peace (1997-1998); Chairman Department of Church and Society CBCN (1999-2000). On February 2, 2013 Archbishop Ukpo sent in his retirement letter to the Vatican. His Motto is: OMNIA OMNIBUS IN CHRISTO – To be all things in Christ.

4. APOSTOLIC ADMINISTRATOR, MGR. PATRICK ODEY IDIKU (2003 -2006)

To God be the Glory! I always give thanks to God for the life and times of my beloved and bosom friend and brother, Mgr. Patrick Odey Idiku, born to Mr.Gabriel Idiku Obialega Odeyand Mrs Lydia Eneyi Idiku (nee Ogbudu) on August 15, 1946, exactly ten years before I set foot on his native Okpoma (Olachor) town in Yala LGA when I soujourned there as a Higher School Teacher on Teaching practice from St. Thomas's H.E.T.C. Ogoja. When we first met after his return from the USA after bagging his PhD in Educational Adminisytration in 1983, it was "recognition" just like that: and he could remember after the necessary introduction that I was his pupil teacher at his home School, Okpoma in 1956/57. From thenceforth we became close friends and confidants. Another brother and friend of course is Very Rev. Fr. Gregory Atemgweye Unimna of Obudu, himself also Mgr. Patrick's classmate. Patrick was baptized into the Catholic Faith at 10 on December 23, 1956 while a pupil. As can be concluded he did his Primary School first at his home town – St. Christopher's Ogbudu – Okpoma (1954-56) and later at Christ the King Okpoma where I met him and where he bagged his First School Leaving Certificate in 1961.

Between 1963 and 1965 he attended St. Augustine's Minr Seminary, Ezzamgbo in Abakaliki. He later completed his Secondary Education at the famous Mary Knoll College, Okuku in 1967, the very year I was ordained priest. Soon after he indicated his desire to become a Catholic priest and his parents promptly acquiesced and gave him their blessing. Bishop McGettrick gave him a recommendation letter with which he was admitted to study for his priestly formation at the St. Augustine's Major Seminary, Jos – Plateau State from 1967 to 1973. He was ordained Catholic priest on December 9, 1973 at St. Benedict's Cathedral, Ogoja by Most Rev. Dr. Joseph Edra Ukpo. After his Ordination that same year he was given his first Pastoral assignment at St. Paul's Parish, Wanokom. While at Wanokom he was also appointed National Assistant Chaplain of the CYON. In 1976 he was sent for Further Studies by the Bishop at the Villanova University, Philadelphia – USA, where he bagged his MA Degree in Educational Administrtion in 1977 and afterwards his PhD at the University of Pennsylvania USA on May 18, 1981. While abroad, he was appointed Assistant Parish Priest of St. Rose of Lima, Philadelphia USA. On his return he was assigned as Parish Priest of Immaculate Conception Parish Bunyia- Irruan, Boki he had newly opened. He other appointments also included St. Charles, Obudu and All Saints Parish, Agbokim.

Apart from his pastoral assignments, Fr. Idiku being a professional educationis also taught at the Pivotal College Jos (1971-1973). He was the Vice Principal at Upper Darby High School, Delaware State

USA *()1978-1979, Vice Prinipal St. Thomas' TTC Ogoja (1979-1984), HOD Education Department (1985), Principal Mary Knol College (1989 - 2003) , a post he held until he was the Apostolic Administrator of Ogoja Diocese by Pope St. John Paul II in 2003 following the elevation and transfer of Bishop Ukpo as Metropolitan Archbishop of Calabar on December 17, 2003.

Mgr. Idiku was a priest of immene capbililities coupled with his religious, poliical and social responsibilitits he was saddled with. He was Chairman, Ogoja Diocesan Indigenous Priests' Association (1986-1992), Chairman Mock SSc Examinations Committee (1089-1990), Chairman Committee on Guidelines for Inspection and Supervision of Schools, Ogoja Zone (1990) Chairman Academic Quiz Competition Committee (1990-1991) Chairman Cross River State All Nigeria Conferences of Principals of Secondary Schools, ANCOPSS (1991-1992), State Editor-In-Chief of ANCOPSS News Letter "THE PRINCIPAL", Chairman, National Association of Indegenous Priests & Religious Ogoja Diocese (1991-1998), Chairman National Academic Competition Committee of ANCOPSS (1991-1993), Member Board of Governors – Mary Knoll (1986-89), Member Governing Council, Cross River State College of Education Akamkpa (1993-1996) Chairman, Nigerian Union of Teachers (NUT) Cross River State Wing (1990-1997), National Chairman Nigeria Union of Teachers (NUT: 1997-1998); Chaplain, UNICAL Chaplaincy – Okuku Campus (1999-2003), Parish Priest St. Joseph's Paris Okuku (1993-2003).

In December 2003 as noted above, the erstwhile Ogoja Diocesan Bishop, Joseph Edra Ukpo being raised to the dignity and of Metropolitan Archbishop and following his transfer to the Archdiocese of Calabar, Mgr. Patrick Idiku was appointed Apostolic Administrator to the vacant seat of Ogoja Diocese (2003-2006). With the Episcopal Ordination of Bishop John Ebebe Ayah in 2006 as the new Bishop of Ogoja, his mandate as Apostolic Administrator lapsed and he was subsequently appointed the Education Secretary of the Ogoja Diocesan School Board, Patron Annunciation Old Girls Association and Chaplain Knights of St. Mulumba (KSM), posts he held until his protracted illness and hospitalization at the Niger Foundation Hospital Ogoja. On June 20, 2012 he received the divine call to Glory among the Church Triumphant. His Hobbies had been Music, Photography, Education and Family Counseling.

5. BISHOP JOHN EBEBE AYAH (2007 -2014)

To all intent and purposes, Bishop John Ebebe Ayah is always a winner for the Lord is good to him all the time. Born into the family of Mr. David Kudong Aya and Elizabeth Igwu Ayah of Buya in Bishiri-Obanlikwu LGA, he was brought up as a little child in the Cameroons where he grew up with his paternal aunt, Madam Christiana Kudong who cherished him very much. His stay with the "aunty" in far away Cameroun so influenced him that people often wondered whether indeed he was a Nigerian citizen as can be seenin his inter-personal relationships. For his Primary rimary Education, he attended the Baptist Primary School Limbe, Cameroun (1968-1975) and even started his Secondary Education there. In 1977 he was brought home to Nigeria as his desire to become a priest blossomed. Nurtured by Very Rev. DR. Chris Owan as also through the support of Fr. Anthony Bassey, he gained admission into the famous St. Augustine's Minor Seminary Ezzamgbo in Abakaliki where he bagged his WASE Certificate in 1984. With his Secondary Education successfully concluded, he applied for Admission into the Spiritual Year and the Bishop, Most Rev. Dr. Joseph Edra Ukpo recommened him for a year's Prefecting a.k.a Probation at Pope St. John Paul II Minor Seminary, then situated at Abakpa, Ogoja.

In 1985, he was admitted to begin his priestly formation at the Bigard Memorial Seminary, Ikot Ekpene Campus for his Philosophical Studies. In 1989 he proceeded for his Theological Studies at the prestigious Bigard Memorial Seminary, Enugu Main Campus where he distinguished himself in various ways there endearing himself by his amiable and jovial character to he the rank and file of the august Institution especiall the Authorities and Formators. Along the line, he was appointed the Auxiliary a.k.a "University Student Union Government President" during his last year of formation in 1992. On July 24, 1993, he was ordained priest in his native Parish of Mater Redemptoris, Sankwala – Obanlikwu by Most Rev. Dr. Joseph Edra Ukpo. He began his first priestly assignment as Bursa in the Pope St. John Paul II Seminary – Okpoma (1993-1994). In the middle of 1994 he was assigned to St. Paul's Parish Wanokom. In December of 1994 he covered St. Joseph's Parish, Bansara a well. Thereafter he was promoted Parish priest and posted to Holy Spirit Parish Abuochiche where he worked so assiduously towards the creation of St. Paul's Parish, Ukpah that till todayeverybody remembers him wherever he worked.

Considering his admirable and pragmatic performances in the pastoral field, his Bishop in 1998 recommended him for Further Studies at the University of Leuven in Belgium where he bagged his PhD in Moral Theology. Back home to Nigeria in 2005, he was assigned to his native Parish and a few months later he was re-assigned for the third time to Pope St. John Paul II Minor Seminary Okpoma as Rector. With this significant assignment coupled with his other leadership qualities specifically as educator, formator and counselor, it did not take long for the Authorities to consider him the best qualified to fill the vacancy left in the Bishopric of Ogoja. On October 14, 2006 he was named Bishop elect of Ogoja by his Holiness Pope Benedict XVI. On January 6, 2007 he received his Episcopal Consecration with the Motto of his Episcopacy: "UT DEUS AMETUR – that God may be loved" as if to say with St. Augustine "Ama Deum et quod vis – Love God and do whatever you like".

With his superlative and uncompromising mien uncanny, the new Bishop engaged himself with the tasks of his ministry which witnessed great strides in all areas of diocesan administration and developmental acumen. His punctuality and pragmatism have worked well thus earning for him him the toga of "the people's Bishop" as if to say: servus servorum Dei – the servant of the servants of God". A Bishop very dedicated to duty, he has tried to touch the lives of many wherever he finds himself as he goes abpout creating new Parishes and quasi – Parishes with the tag "RCM Parish" and these have worked for the growth of the Diocese. As at now in the hierarchy of he Episcopal Conferences of Nigeria – CBCN, he stands tall in his appointment as Chairman of the Youths Commission. With the elevation and transfer of Bishop Joseph Ekuwem to the Metropolitan Archdiocese of Calabar following the resignation of erstwhile Arcbishop Ukpo, himself a proud indigene of Ogoja Diocese, Bishop Ayah was nominated Apostolic Administrator of Uyo Diocese on September 13, 2013. He was subsequently appointed substantive Bishop of Uyo and Apostolic Administrator of Ogoja, sede vacantis by Pope Francis I on July 5, 2014. Consequently, he was installed Bishop of Uyo amidst pomp and pageantry on September 20, 2014. This is the man that has succeded as a winner because ?kp? ama odot owo eyak en? - he whom the cap fits wears the crown". Bishop Ayah's Hobbie are rreading, farming and musing among others.

6. BISHOP DONATUS EDET AKPAN (July 6, 2017 to-date)

What will be will be: "O the depths of he riches and wisdom and knowledge of God: How unsearchable are His Judgements and how inscrutable His Ways! For who has known the mind of the Lord, or who has been His Counselor? To Him be all Glory and Honour for ever and ever. Amen" (Rom 11:33-34) Born to Mr. and Mrs. John Akpa Ogwu of Ikot Ada Utor in Essien Udim LGA on August 7, 1952 and baptized at the age of 10 in 1963, Bishop Donatus Edet Akpan received the Sacrament of Confirmation and joined the Association of Mass Servers. This new Bishop of Ogoja Diocese is the 5th Bishop of Ikot Ekpene extraction. His predecessors have been the late Bishop Silas Ephraim Obot, Bishop Camillus Etukudoh, Bishop Camillus Umoh, Bishop Umoren (MSP) all of them from Essien Udim Local Government in Ikot Ekpene Diocese – Akwa Ibom State. So "you can now see what I am saw" Courtesy of Chief Chike O

Little Donatus went for his Primary Education in St. Mary's, his native Parish School, Urua Akpan. In 1970 he graduated there obtaining his First School Leaving Certificate with Distinction. In 1971 he got admission into the prestigious Queen of Apostles Seminary, Afaha Obong where in 1975 he bagged his WASCE Certificate in Grade I. On the completion of his Sewcondary Education, his ardent desire to become a pries yielded fruit when his Ordinary, the Late Cardinal Ekandem recommened him for admission in the famous Bigard Memorial Seminary, Enugu. He completed his studies and obtained the Bachellor Degrees both in Philosophy and Theology. On October 12, 1985 he was ordained priest at the St. Anne's Cathedral by Bishop Edmund Fitzgibbons of Port Harcourt Diocese at the instance of Cardinal Ekandem. In 1987 he was sent for a Post Graduate Course in Education at the University of Nigeria, Nsukka where he bagged the Diploma in Education (PGDE) and a Master's Degree in Theology in 1988.

After his priestly Ordination, he was first assigned as Bursar to his Alma Mater, Queen of Apostles seminary – Afaha Obong. In 1989 Cardinal Ekandem then Apostolic Administrator of the Independent Mission of Abuja withdrew him from Ikot Ekpene Diocese and appointed him to the SS Simon and Jude Minor Seminar, Kuje- Abuja under Fr. William Ojukwu as Rector. Here he taught both in the Seminary as also serving as Assistant Priest in St. Kizito's Parish, Kuje. He was also equally appointed Chaplain of the YCS in the Federal Capital Territory (FCT) College (1989 - 1999). In 1992, Bishop Donatus was appointed to take over from Fr. Ojukwu as substantive Rector of the Seminary. In 1994 he was appointed Parish Priest of Christ the King Church, Kubwa (1994-2001). He completed the construction of the new Church of All Saints, Dutse and moved in as pioneer Parish Priest in 1901. After five years, he was transferred to Our Lady Queen of Nigeria Pro-Cathedral, Garki in 2006. In 2012 he was transferred again to SS Peter & Paul Parish Nyanya where he worked until 2014. In 2016, he was moved to Holy Rosary Parish, Wuse and was the Parish Priest there until April 2017 when Hiss Holiness, Pope Francis I raised him to the dignity of a Bishop and appointing him substantive Bishop of Ogoja Diocese.

While working in the Archdiocese of Abuja, Bishop, then Fr. Donatus also held the following positions:

OGOJA AS THE NEW PREFECTURE AND OPENING OF SCHOOLS 1938

In 1938 Ogoja axis was created a Prefecture by Pope Pius XI with Mgr Patrick J. Whitney as Prefect Apostolic. Mgr Whitney was suddenly and inevitably to withdraw from the Mission in 1940 for health reasons and Mgr Thomas McGettrick another 1930 St. Patrick's Society Father, then stationed at Anua Mission was appointed to take over as Prefect Apostolic of Ogoja. He opened numerous schools which were really small Catechist centres and stations ostensibly to tackle the language problem and the populace were enthusiastic as they wanted their children to learn English. Bishop McGettrick captures this issue of the Catechists and teachers as the prime movers of the early Church missionary endeavours. According to him, on his arrival at Anua he noticed that Fr. Josef Kraft had deployed over two hundred Catechists into his work force. With these it was easy for the Mission Stations to be regularly visited by either of the Fathers on the Anua Mission. By 1920 Anua Mission had over 200 Catechist/teachers manning 120 stations (Cf. McGettrick T. Cecta Nig. Pub Enugu, 1988104-5). By 1930 the network expanded to over 500 stations with over 200 of these having schools attached to them. The Catechists were the constant companions of the Fathers especially on bush treks. As indigenes, they knew a lot of the customs of the country and they were very adroit and capable advisers on any issue that cropped up. For example, the were instances when young girls would be reported by the church members as keeping company with men. Usually the girls would deny, but the Catechist would call the priest aside and say "she is telling lies as she is pregnant" Then the Rev. Father would ask how he knew it. There was a situation one of the Catechists explained that he could know at a glance either from the girl's eyes or watching her backside. Such pieces of information greatly helped the Missionaries. Even one of the funny Catechists whenever there was a denial of any wrong before the priests would immediately cut in saying" No more of your hen talk! Tell the truth now" Some of the chief Catechists who assisted Bishop McGettrick who he also brought to Ogoja to assist him were James Akwa Isua, Christopher Nkim, Raphael Udo and James Hogan.

The other problem was the roads as there really none hence Ogoja region being tagged "The Lost Province"; it was really a traceless prairie as people had to trudge through endless bush tracts. To adequately staff the new schools, he embarked on recruiting teachers from his old Anua Station and Calabar. Bishop McGettrick was soon to be joined by Fr. Matthew McGrath from Calabar who straight away began building the parish a new house – a lovely two storey building, well roofed and ceilinged to replace the old Father's house built by Mgr. Patrick Whitney, the so-called "Pat's House". Similarly, Fr. McClafferty had begun building the first permanent presbytery at Kakwagom. It could accommodate three priests comfortably and still remains a monument till today.

By 1948 Mgr McGettrick had opened up Afikpo Mission, 140 miles from Ogoja from there many outstations including Ishiagu in Abakaliki axis were opened. It was very difficult to build the Abakaliki Mission as most of the people very conservative and hard to analyze lived on their farms and not in the villages. According to McGettrick they were ten years in the Mission before any tangible progress could be achieved, the major reason being that there were at least five paramount native chiefs who exercise absolute control over the people and nobody could operate by way of opening churches or schools without their authority. These chiefs reigned supreme until the Nigeria Independence in 1960. I can still recall one of them, His Imperial Majesty of Ezza District, Chief Idika who was said to have married 1000 wives excluding his concubines in the villages. Being asked by Mgr. McGettrick why the Church was not received in Abakaliki, one native Government teacher answered that "the real natives of Abakaliki think the priest is a colonial servant since he lives in Abakaliki Township" (Thomas McGettrick, CETA Nigeria, Enugu,1988 133). As observed already, this was the same view the Author's grandfather held hence his refusal to receive Fr. Lena who came to Idu in 1906 and later moved on to Use Uruan thus making Use the cradle of Catholicism in the whole of Akwa Ibom State and beyond.

After that McGettrick posted a priest to Ezza in 1949 and the Abakaliki bush region miraculously opened up. The rest is history, as they say as McGettrick also opened up Izzi, Ishielu, Mgbo and Umuezeoka in the 1950s. By 1967 there were eleven Parishes in Abakaliki and nine in Ogoja with over 120,000 Catholics in the Diocese. Catholic Marriage was not so much a problem in Abakaliki Mission as monogamy was long established there, but to get people to marry in the Ogoja Mission was tough. In 1973 before the Diocese was split after the pontifical Ordination of Bishop Joseph Ukpo in 1971, there were 64 priests in the Diocese and in 1982 35 in Abakaliki alone. In Bishop McGettrick's estimation, every Bishop was accorded the highest respect by the people and he was well received because of his unique chance of being able to meet the people, pagans as well as the Christians alike especially as he went on Confirmation tours. The Bishops was always given a public reception and no country in the world could give a better reception than the Nigerian people. Many of these institutions like schools and hospitals established in these places were as a result of the meetings with Bishop. It also afforded the Bishop the opportunity to address the pagans with the Christian message.

St. Thomas T.T.C which was earlier established by Bishop James with Fr. Patrick J. Cottesloe as the first Principal of the College was assisted by Etubom Maurice Archibong, an accomplished teacher of note and a solid good Catholic. He had been trained by Fr. Joseph Lena in the first "Monotechnic College". The College was established by Fr. Louis Lena in 1912, the famous St. Joseph's College as it was called. This was the first Secondary with a Post-Secondary wing added which served as a quasi - Polytechnic for the training of first Class Teachers. It was the first of its kind in the whole of Eastern Region of Nigeria. St Thomas' Ogoja was established to train teachers from Calabar, Ogoja and beyond and it became a spinner of teachers of sorts producing both teachers and evangelists. In 1953 Bishop McGettrick established the famous Mary Knoll College Okuku as the second post – primary school to be opened in the Diocese. In 1960 he opened St. Patrick's Trade and Technical College Ugep. In 1961 the County Secondary School Ikom was opened, ditto County Secondary School Obudu in 1961. In 1962 Holy Child Secondary School Mount Carmel, Ogoja was opened, and in 1964 Our Lady of Aica Institute was established to train girls aspiring to the sisterhood. Holy Child Secondary School followed in 1967 and in spite of the Government take-over of schools, the Pope John Paul Minor Seminary College was opened in 1982 by the first African Indigenous Bishop, Joseph Edra Ukpo. All these pioneer schools became great centres of learning and discipline with high quality academic performance and also excelling in sports, drama and debates. Most of the educated men and women of Ogoja Diocese today especially those holding high offices passed through these Catholic Mission Institutions.

In 1955 Ogoja became the fourth Diocese after Onitsha, Calabar and Owerri in Eastern Region. That same year the Congregation of the Handmaids of the Holy Child Jesus established the first Convent at Kakwagom. The first girl to join the Congregation was Agnes Bisong (Sister Mary Thomas) The Congregation made remarkable achievements in the field of education apostolate as also the establishment of catechetical and home training centres. In addition, the Handmaids Sisters also did routine visitation of homes and the sick in hospitals. In 1973 the Congregation established the Annunciation Juniorate with Rev. Sr. Rita Abang as Principal. They had previously established the Novitiate at Kakwagom in 1969 to accommodate, train and profess future Sisters.

MEDICAL WORK AND ESTABLISHMENT OF RESOURCSE CENTRES

Even before Ogoja Diocese came into being, Bishop Moynagh had opened up medical centres and maternity clinics in the area; the first centre being opened was at Abakaliki in 1945. This was under the Medial Missionaries of Mary (MMM). In 1947 St. Mary's Hospital Afikpo was established and in 1948 the establishment of the Moniaya Maternity Hospital Ogoja. In 1952 the Sacred Heart Hospital Obudu was opened and the Joint Hospital Ikom was also opened in 1956 attaching to them also Schools of Nursing for the training of midwives jointly managed by the Church and the Colonial Government. Another medical landmark was the establishment of the leprosariums at Ogoja and Abakaliki. Bishop McGettrick will ever be remembered not only in this country but also the West African region for these visionary Establishments. In 1973, Bishop Joseph Ukpo added the St. Joseph's Resource Centre for the blind to these establishments at Obudu and this had given the physically handicapped a sense of belonging. To cap it all, the Ogoja Mission as it were reached with the consecration of its first indigenous priest, Most Rev. Dr. Joseph Edra Ukpo Bishop of Ogoja. By1977 the Bishop's residence at Ntezi Mile 50 Enugu Road Abakaliki was completed and Bishop McGettrick moved in to take residence, meanwhile he was staying in the St. Augustine's Seminary Ezamgbo. With the Episcopal Ordination of Fr. Michael Okoro and his Installation as the Bishop of Abakaliki in 1983 McGettrick had reorganized the parishes and presbyteries at Ishieke, Mgbo, Ishiagu, Nwofe Achra, Ndubia, Amagu, Ekebeligwe, Ukawu, St. Patrick's Kprikpri, Ntezi, Edda, Otinyi, and St. John's across the Ebonyi River with the new Rev Sisters' house at Effium. In 1982 the O.C.S.O. Cistercian Monastery took off at Abakaliki with the arrival of Abbess Glencairn, the Chaplain Fr. Anthony de Lisi, Sisters Margaret Mary, Malachy and Anthony together with eight postulants.

A BRIEF PROFILE OF THE LIFE AND TIMES OF ARCHBISHOP CHARLES HEEREY CSSP

Archbishop Charles Heerey who took over from Bishop Shanahan was born on November 9, 1890 in Ireland and was ordained priest on September 24, 1921. In 1924 he sailed to Nigeria having been appointed to assist Bishop Shanahan in the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria. On May 29, 1927 he was consecrated co-adjutor Bishop and successor of Bishop Shanahan. In May 1932 as Shanahan bowed out he took over as the Vicar Apostolic of Southern Nigeria. Bishop Heerey's take-over was timely and signaled another boon to the Calabar mission. He had known the Calabar mission very well and had often visited and lived there first as assistant to Fr. Edward Knaebel, thereafter as short term Administrator and Supervisor of Schools. He understood the Efik language well and was well loved by the "good people of Calabar". In fact, his takeover has given us a clearer insight into the apparent isolation the Calabar Mission at the time whereas there was a real raging progress in the Onitsha missionary field. To him as far as Calabar was concerned the whole administration was from Onitsha and he sought to correct this anomaly by establishing enviable structures in Calabar, most especially in his seeing to the construction of the Sacred Heart Cathedral which took off when he took over in 1932. He later returned to Calabar with Bishop John Cross Anyogu to open the Cathedral after the completion in 1947. He also completed the Holy Trinity Cathedral Onitsha now Basilica which foundation was started by Shanahan. The Cathedral was consecrated in 1935 to mark the Golden Jubilee of the foundation by Fr. Lutz. of the Prefecture in 1885. His particular concern was in the education and he also encouraged indigenous priesthood and sisterhood. That is why he saw to the recognition of and commissioning as it were of the Handmaids of the Holy Child Jesus as the first unit of native Religious Sisters in the Vicariate and perhaps the whole of Africa. He received the Vows of the pioneer 4 and also blessed in 1933 the new St. Luke's Hospital at Anua at the site of the Dispensary establish by Mother Charles Magdalene in the 1920s. He founded the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart Sisters which as it were practically took over from the Holy Rosary sisters after the civil war just as the Handmaids took over from the Holy Child Jesus in Calabar and Ogoja. He ordained the first priests of the Vicariate Frs. John Cross Anyogu 1930, Michael Tansi and William Obelagu 1937, Fr. Dominic Ekandem and Godfrey M. Okoye 1947 who later in 1950 joined the Holy Ghost Fathers while Tansi entered the Cistercian Monastery in England. He also consecrated the former as Bishop of the new created Diocese of Port Harcourt on December 3, 1961and Cardinal Arinze in 1965. In particular, it was Archbishop Heerey who consecrated me to God as it were by ordaining me with the Rites of Tonsure through Deaconate Ordination to wit, the 7 Orders to the Priesthood of Christ.

Archbishop Heerey is most remembered first as the one who championed the cause against immorality and superstition in Calabar. He supported Frs. Knaebel and Ronayne who fought the natives for writing false petitions to the Holy See whereas the intention was to correct the abuses and failings of the natives in order not to corrupt the new converts. He also championed and was resolute in his opposition of the formation of School Boards by the Eastern Nigeria Regional Government which became the precursor of the take-over of Mission schools.

ORIGINS OF TAKE-OVER OF SCHOOLS / FORMATION OF SCHOOL BOARDS

On this unique issue on Mission Education and autonomy, it should be recalled that up to the 1920s the Missionaries Catholic and Protestant, were the main champions in the dynamics of the expansion of education in this country whether primary, secondary especially teachers' training. In fact, as mentioned earlier even the Catholic Church came Calabar and with Calabar being the Headquarters of modern Nigeria then, the British Government encouraged the Missions by offering guidelines and regulations then known as "Education Codes" for the proper organization and administration of schools with "Grants In-Aid" in tow as subsidies. Government was even mindful not to introduce policies which could run counter to or negate the principal motive for which Missionaries founded schools so as to avoid conflict of interests and the grounding of education in the country as a whole. But as soon as politics set in with Amalgamation and Colonization to directly control even the lives and ways of the citizens, the British Government started instituting an Advisory Committee on Education in 1923 ostensibly to emphasize the primary role of Government in direct supervision of education. Then government issued a White Paper titled: "Education Policy in British Tropical Africa" in 1925 though it respected and encouraged the existing co-operation by "Voluntary Agencies" as the Mission Schools were called, but the aim was to direct and administer education nationwide. That White Paper culminated in the change of Government policy by the issuance of the "1926 Education Code" which among other things ordered that all teachers be formerly registered by Government because she had the authority and power to close or refuse "authority to open" new schools – viz. to grant ATO. It even ordered Missions to close all so-called Infant schools which ran from ABC – Infant II and replace them with 8-9 year Courses ie. Standards V and VI. That is why the Catholic Mission had such "Pilot Schools" called Boarding Schools OR Parish schools whereby pupils from Standards IV-VI from distant communities would have to live in dormitories. Such schools flourished at the Main Residential Stations or Parish centres with the Fathers In-Charge (PPs) as Managers and teachers as well (Cf. EDU, London HMSO, 1925, CMD 2374, See also Fafunwa, Ibadan, 1987, 119). All these pointed to State secularization of schools with the obvious consequence of squeezing Christian religion out of the school system (Cf. Eastern Nigeria – UPE-August 20, 1956). The reaction of Catholics the Bishops, Clergy and Laity was prompt and spontaneous because as legal proprietors, such ceiling on Schools expansion was tantamount to a "Decree of Banishment of Christians and by implication Catholic children nationwide. On the issue of a "Common Religious Syllabus" which Government was subtly trying to introduce under Dr. S. E. Imoke as Minister of Education, Archbishop Heerey fired back by an official letter replying to Government on behalf of Missionaries to the effect that "We consider it our duty to state categorically instead of a "Common Syllabus" Government should allow the Christian Council of Churches WCC, to submit a syllabus suitable to the faith of their children"(Cf. C. Heerey, Jan.22, 1964) Everybody should come to accept that Education cannot be the prerogative or monopoly of Government because she cannot pretend to be the sole moderator of Education. What then will be the role of the Church and parents? As if Heaven were to come on the side of the Church, a few years into the confusion, Pope Pius XI issued an Encyclical "Gravissimum educationis" in 1929 emphasizing the fact of man's final destiny such that the entire work of education is to lead man thereto. "There can be no education which is not directed to the last end" (Pp Pius XI, Ency. Vatican, 1929).

But if that Education Ordinance of 1926 had shaken the foundations of Church-State Relations and partnership in Education, its effects had adverse consequences on the opening of schools, the same as the Education Code of 1964 did. It did not only bring the expansion of schools to a standstill, it also led to the closure of hundreds of schools eg. Catholic Schools in the Vicariate dropped from 41,500 in 1926 to 30,390 in 1932. (Cf. McLaughlin M.P. Catholic Herald, 1932). Nevertheless, as they say" man proposes but God disposes" and the civil war did it all. Yes, because I took advantage of it and quietly opened two schools viz. Adiaha Obong Secondary Technical – Ekpene Ukim, and Ikot Nseyen Community Secondary Commercial such that as soon as the war ended the Commissioner for Education, Okuku Emmanuel Essien came calling; but he promptly approved the Schools. However as soon as the war ended, trust the Igbos, it was Community/ Commercial this OR Community Comprehensive that galore all over the place: Education boom, you might say! The point to be made is that Government was using her liberal Grants In-Aid to gain more and more control of schools. Between 1950 – 60, Government made a steady progress in her bid to control schools climaxed in the introduction of the Eastern Region "UNIVERSAL PRIMARY EDUCATION – UPE" in Eastern Nigeria vis-à-vis Awolowo's Western Region "FREE EDUCATION FOR ALL". The latter triumphed and flourished right from 1953 while the former totally collapsed and fell flat with a bang just within a year leading to K.O. Mbadiwe's mantra: "Boycott of the boycottables". Dr. Imoke's reply to Heerey did not help matters because his fear was that Mission Schools were doctrinaire and he owed it "a duty to the Region to ensure that our children are brought up in the right spirit of unity and co-operation" (Cf. Enugu MOE: 3803, Imoke to Heerey, Feb.13, 1964). But Heerey insisted that it was a matter of trampling on the "FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT" which belongs to parents worldwide (Cf. The LEADER, Assumpta Press: Catholic Bishops on UPE, June, 1956). In 1962 even the Professor Dike's Commission Appointed by Government pointed out that the U.P.E. would fail even ab ignitio because already one third of Government revenue went for Education at the time such that if the UPE was introduced, Government would collapse. Everybody saw it coming especially what happened in 1957 when it was introduced. It served as a damper on Government's enthusiasm to control schools. Everything on Education almost collapsed: the so-called "Local Authority Schools" ie. UPE in the County Councils areas were to be thenceforth managed by Voluntary Agencies. I still recollect as the Education Secretary that when this happened, the Barracks Road Calabar and Ballantyne Schools were handed over to the Mission until after the deliberation of Calabar when on account of the upsurge of refugees, the school populations rose to nearly 2000, ditto Atu Street School.

Even though at a time only the Catholics seemed to be concerned about all these events, the Protestant Brethren couldn't care less although the halt on Voluntary schools also seemed to have hurt them, but they knew it was the Catholic Mission which had more schools closed down that suffered the more. It thus seemed like the biblical story of the two mothers and King Solomon simply because the Catholics were affected the more, and the take-over of schools with the military in-charge of proceedings moved with groom inevitability and alacrity such that as even Professor Afigbo remarked, "the Public Education Edict despite popular belief became a bolt from the blue (Cf. Afigbo A.E. Rex Collins, London, 1978, 117). It should be remarked that even as in the 1950's when Dr. Azikiwe was Premier, there was only Catholic in his Cabinet, so how could the Protestants vote or protest against themselves as they were the very schemers of this evil? Again even if there was still any doubt about Government's intentions on U.P.E. such a doubt fizzled out as Dr. Azikiwe declined to meet Archbishop Heerey as the Metropolitan of Eastern Nigeria for a dialogue. This threat of Take-over of schools had hung on the Catholic Mission's neck like the sword of Damocles since the early 1950s; it only remained for the military administration armed with the barrel of guns to make it a fait accompli. The efforts of the "Eastern Nigeria Catholic Council –ENCC" under Raymond A. Njoku with the combined efforts of the post Vatican II "amalgamation" of Cardinal Ekandem's Adiaha Obong Women's Organization under Madam Theresa as President General with Lady Victoria V. I. Okoye's ENNC Wing to wit the "Archdiocesan Council of Women – Onitsha" cum "Owerri Catholic Mothers" to form the Catholic Women's Organization -

CWO in Nigeria in 1974 all came to nuts. Why then the adoption of School Boards and suchlike Institutions by the neaveau Clergy if not that they have regarded the efforts of their predecessors and more poignantly by Archbishop Heerey as wasted, even useless? And what is the new situation of Catholic Schools in the scheme of things.

In the light of all these one begins to wonder why all the hullabaloo, the demonstrations and the 5000 Catholic women march to Enugu including my mother and the other Catholic women of Eastern Nigeria to express the Mission's grievances over the momentum gathering in wake of the establishment of Catholic School Boards. It seems the Catholic Church has and by implication the Bishops have gone to sleep and need to be roused as they seem to abdicate their divinely given responsibilities to the Boards or whatever name called. It means all the agonies, prayers and fastings to abate the problem were in vain. Whereas it was the Lord who had Commanded the Apostles and by implication the Bishops to go and "teach all nations" thus making the Church "MATER ET MAGISTRA" (Cf. Pp John XXIII, Encyclical, Vatican 1960), but it never dawned on our Bishops of the CBCN established immediately after the civil war to say No to any form of school administration in this our country tagged SCHOOL BOARDS, or whatever name called whether Mission or Government Boards. It also implies that Archbishop Heerey was wasting his time: Frs. Mellet, Biechy, Knaebel, Dolan, Lucy, Brady etc. and in our times Archbishop Usanga, Archbishop Ukpo, Cardinal Arinze including even my humble self who all worked as Catholic Schools Managers and Education Secretaries were wasting their time. Now that the Catholic Schools have been taken-over, a novel administrative tango has arisen. Small wonder the rut to the extent that the so-called teachers or "children deceivers" cannot be paid their miserable "Mission" stipends as at and when due simply because a newly fangled system is in vogue. What happened to the School Committees and Boards of Governors which galvanized and exercised the overseeing function of our schools in the past? Were all these not workable? Did anybody complain that the schools were left lapidated or that any teaching or non-teaching staff was owed a penny even for a month? Or that school libraries, workshops and science laboratories were empty white elephants for show? All these questions require answers from no other than the Bishops who have turned School Boards into age-old Proprietors of Catholic schools of yore. They are those who must needs answer before the Lord Jesus instead of those He had anointed and given the mandate" to rule and teach". As for the take-over of schools it should dawn on the Civilian Governors that the age of Military dictatorship has been long overtaken for almost twenty years now unless they want to regard themselves as tin gods as some of them are doing. Then they should not feel guilty for not returning the schools to the Missions as some others have done already. In Cross River and Akwa Ibom States in particular they should feel ashamed that schools like St. Benedict's Ogoja, St. Patrick's Kakwagom, St. Joseph's Bansara, St. Charles' Obudu OR the likes of Sacred Heart Calabar, St. Joseph's Ikot Ene, Christ the King School Uyo are still under bonds and chains. It is time they be liberated. In Cross River in particular, the 1903 children's playing grounds at Sacred Heart have been turned into a "motor park" where all sorts of characters and stouts loiter and litter around but why? Simply to breed stouts and area boys who have helped and continue to "assist" at the elections so that they can equally now help themselves at Government's Authority and Goodwill! The whole world should hear about this sort of "human action" if that adjective human should ever be applied because no human being unless he/she was never a child would ever dream of such an action in a civilized society. The worst is that the primary school has even been closed down in favour of the secondary to create more jobs thereby. Who is fooling who and where then is the foundation of education in such a scenario? Yet these are schools which our fathers and fore-fathers attended including Bishops and priests! Despite all these he did more. In particular, it was Bishop Heerey who brought about the establishment of the Bigard Memorial Enugu in 1950. He bowed out for his eternal reward before the beginning of the civil war and was buried at Holy Trinity Cathedral on February 7, 1967.

RELIGIOUS CONGREGATIONS IN THE ARCHDIOCESE OF CALABAR
1.ORIGINS OF THE RELIGIOUS SISTERS OF CHARITY IN CALABAR

The Congregation of the Religious Sisters of Charity (RSC)was founded by Mother Mary Aikenhead. Born on 19 January 1787 in Cork City, Ireland she had her training at the Bar Convent in York, England and founded the Congregation of the Religious Sisters of Charity opening her first RSC Convent in North William Street, Dublin in 1815. In the 1820's and 1830's the work of the Religious Sisters of Charity grew and expanded from Dublin to Cork, and to Australia where she sent her first Missionaries in 1838. The Apostolate of the RSC includes among others Health Care, Education ie. the establishment of schools, Pastoral and Social Work, Catechesis, Home visitation especially of the sick, Prison Ministry, building Homes for the Handicapped, building Hospitals and Orphanages, Care of the poor and needy and Adult Education. It is on record that in 1821, the Governor of Kilmainham Jail asked for Rev. Sisters to visit two young women who had been convicted of murder and sentenced to death. The Governor was so impressed by those Sister's influence on these women that he asked that he would want them to continue to be involved in prison visitation. To this day, prison visitation is an important Apostolic Ministry of the Congregation. Thereafter, at the request of the Archbishop of Dublin, the Sisters of Charity opened their first Convent School in 1830 in Gardiner Street, Dublin. But unfortunately in 1832 there was an outbreak of Asiatic cholera in Ireland. A temporary hospital was set up in Grange Gorman but it was badly managed and under-staffed. The Archbishop of Dublin asked Mother Mary Aikenhead to send some of her Sisters to Grange Gorman to help. The death rate was high, but the Sisters remained at their posts bringing solace to the dying and gentle nursing to the convalescents. Only one sister contracted the disease, but none of course died. Soon after, Mother Mary Aikenhead herself fell ill which lasted so long and for many years. She could only govern her Congregation through writings as she was unable to move about. On 22nd July 1858, after all her works and physical suffering, she died at Our Lady's Convent, Mount Harold's Cross and was buried in Donnybrook, Dublin.

After Mother Mary Aikenhead's death in 1858, her vision continued to grow and spread to other parts of Europe and the Americas including, England, Scotland, California, Venezuela, Nigeria, Zambia, Malawi & Australia. Here in Nigeria, the RSC Congregation first showed up with the arrival of Mother Mary Magdalene Charles walker lovingly and admirably but popularly nicknamed “Mother MCW”. It was a sort of “one-woman Congregation” and she continued alone until her departure from the shores of this blessed country on January 1, 1934 and never returned except her remains which were exhumed from Zambia where she died and reburied in 1981 in Calabar with pomp and pageantry near the Chapel she built at now Holy Child Convent, Calabar.

However, and very providentially on account of her prayers, her RSC Congregation has returned to Nigeria but carefully avoiding the Calabar Mission which beckoned to them in the first place since 1913. They have opted to go to Western Nigeria. And since Rev. Sr. Mary Liguori, one of her Handmaids who brought the remains of Mother MCW from Zambia is still alive to witness the return of the RSC Congregation to Nigeria, she has promptly and dutifully brought the new comers to visit Calabar and to witness with their own eyes, the providential magnititiude of work undertaken by their forerunner, Rev. Mother MCW. However, I understand that their coming to Nigeria this time around was to move to greener pastures than the Calabar Mission and establishing their first Convent in Festac Town, Lagos. On February 26, 2016, they also berthed as it were, in Port Harcourt, the Garden City, forgetting all about the CANAAN OF AFRICA, CALABAR where because the Colonial Masters of Great Britain knew that Canaan must always remain CANAAN, settled there as their land of first choice and based their Heaquarters there. It was only later in 1906 that they removed their Colonial Headquarters to Lagos. Then in 1991 the new Colonizers of Nigeria transferred the Headquarters from Lagos to Abuja as their Capital City. The prayer of this Author is that the newly returnee RSC Sisters to Nigeria this time around, will see reason and re-establish their Convents in the Calabar Mission to stamp their presence in the Ecclesiastical Province comprising the Dioceses of Port Harcourt, Ogoja, Uyo, Ikot Ekpene and of course the Archdiocese of Calabar once more. To God be the Glory!

THE LIFE & TIMES OF MOTHER CHARLES WALKER – A PROFILE

Mother Mary Charles Magdalene Walker or simply Mother Charles Walker (RSC) our indefatigable and never-to-be-forgotten in our hearts and minds "Mother MCW", the fifth child from the great family and pedigree whose father was Col. Robert Walker, a surgeon and her mother Josephine Woodhead, daughter of Eleanor Mary Thomas Mason, was born on March 16, 1881 and baptized ten days later with the name Margaret Mary Angela. She received her First Holy Communion on July 16, 1893 and Confirmation a year after on May 29 1894. She attended her Parish School at Mayfield and after schooling, she felt she had a Religious vocation and promptly went to her Spiritual Director Rev. Fr. Galway SJ, for advice and he encouraged her to join the Congregation of the Irish Sisters of Charity (RSC). She accepted because she preferred it to the Congregation of the Holy Child Jesus whose College she attended especially because the RSC Congregation was Missionary and she really wanted to serve God in the Missions. She then went to tell her parents of her desire to join a Religious Congregation and with their permission she left England with his father's letter of consent to go on her own to seek for Admission in the RSC Congregation in Ireland. She was barely 18 then, and on her arrival presented her parents 'letter of consent' which among others promised as a sort of Will, to pay her dowry of admission into the Congregation the yearly sum of £40 a year and to leave £500 at his death. But on enquiry after her arrival, she was informed by the Congregation's Matron Mrs. T. Margison, that an ordinary dowry payment (not the formal official fees) required by the Congregation was £800. She returned to England and reported the outcome of her journey to her parents even though she had begged the kind-hearted and gracious Matron that should his parents be unable to pay the standard fees on account of other family commitments, she would be "perfectly happy and satisfied to be received into the Congregation as a Lay-Sister". Her parents' response and letter to the Superior General was that they would never stand between God and their children because what they had actually offered amounted to £500 + £10 quarterly for 12½ years making in all £1000 over and above what was demanded by the RSC Congregation.On August 1st 1901, she left her family to go join the RSC Congregation at Milltown Dublin, with his father's letter of approval which also contained his "sort of Will" stated above and the endowment thereof. She was admitted to the Postulancy of the Religious Sisters of Charity Congregation on receipt of the documents. On May 1902, she received the Habit with the name SISTER MARY CHARLES and then went through a two-year Novitiate based on the Rule and Spirituality of St. Ignatius, SJ. On May 26 1904, she made her 1st Religious Profession of Vows in Chastity, Poverty and Obedience and her Final Vows in 1907. She further went on to take the 4th Special Vow reserved for 1st Class members of the RSC in serving Christ in the poor by diligently adhering to the Apostolic Ministries. From 1904, she had started her Apostolate Ministry in Ireland which lasted for twenty years teaching in various colleges in Ireland during which she attended the prestigious St. Mary's University of Pedagogy run by the Jesuits and graduated with an Honours Degree in Education in 1912. In Ireland her ministration included teaching in the following places viz. Basin Lane Dublin (1904 - 1012); St. Vincent's Cork (1912-1915); Foxford (1915 - 1920) where Foxford cars are manufactured and where she also met and made friends with many RSC Sisters and at Bray –Ravenswell (1920 -21). Some of her classmates and friends she met included Mrs. Mary Dorrand her bosom friend, Mother Mary Arsenius(RSC) who became her lasting friend while both in Calabar and Zambia in East Africa where she lived her final Religious life. Mother Arsenius has left wonderful anecdotes of her as author, teacher, evangelist, mother and friend and also testified to her life of sanctity, missionary activities and Charisms. Among her books include "CARITAS CHRISTY URGET NOS" published in 1922: a treatise on the Charisms of the RSC; "CATECHISM NOTES" which she published here in Nigeria and used it in Zambia to explain that it helped her and really gave her a thorough understanding of the Christian Doctrines. Most of these friends at Foxford became her lasting friends as well as champions of the Nigerian Mission. Mother Mary Aikenhead, the Foundress of RSC stood firm by her and supported her throughout the journey of her Religious life. Another utility friend and foe of Mother MCW was Mother Mary Amadeus nee Atchison, the Australian girl at Mayfield College. She had also desired to become a Religious Sister and promptly joined the Holy Child Sisters after College with the name SR. MARY AMADEUS. She also played a serious role in MCW's Missionary life and that of the Holy Child Congregation in Calabar. At the time Mother MCW was in Calabar Mother Mary Amadeus Atchison (SHCJ) became the Superior General of the SHCJ Congregation with Headquarters in Rome. She it was who acquired the "NIGERIAN MISSION" which simply put, means the entire Missionary Institutions of Mother MCW in the Calabar Mission and renamed them after her Congregation in 1933 after the arrival of Mother Lawrencia Dalton (SHCJ) from America to join the band of Holy Child Missionaries to be sent to their newly acquired Mission in Calabar. Mother MCW equally also wrote and published many articles as a Columnist in various European Journals and Magazines including: MISSIONARY ANNALS OF THE CSSP CONGREGATION and her famous Article on the "EDUCATION OF GIRLS IN SOUTHERN NIGERIA" published in the International Review of Missions (1928).

In 1921 which coincided with the Chapter Year of the Congregation of the Irish Religious Sisters of Charity (RSC), Bishop Shanahan visited Ireland and appealed to the assembled Sisters to consider sending some of their Sisters to work with him in his Territory of the Prefecture of Southern Nigeria. This appeal fell on deaf ears, so it seemed, though the Congregation among other things had requested the assembled Sisters to (a) choose four Honorary Members who would constantly be praying for the Nigerian Mission and (b) prepare a list of twelve Volunteers for the Nigerian Mission. However, none of the young and old Sisters was permitted to leave unless sanctioned by Archbishop Dr. Byrne, the Archbishop Dublin except perhaps then Sister MCW since Sister Joseph Conception who also had earlier volunteered had so many critics to contain with though she had been warned to carefully avoid them. Dr. Byrne's position was that it smacked of Missionary suicide to allow the Sisters venture into the unknown in those post-war years. But this had put the argument on its head because many priests and nuns were already on the Nigerian Mission during and after that First World War including Protestant Women Missionaries. Most tellingly, the RSC Congregation had even sent some of their newly professed young Sisters for Mission in Australia as commented above. In the final analysis it became clear that it was really the Ecclesiastical Superior who had blocked the acceptance of the RSC Congregation going on the Foreign Mission though they were the ones who hinged it on the approval of their Ecclesiastical Superior arguing that the Protestant women on the Mission were not the same as the Catholic Religious who if permitted would be there only in name as their Vows could be put in jeopardy. But all these should be obvious to our readers because in the first place, the RSC Congregation was of Diocesan Right and not of Pontifical Right which is aimed at the whole World for her Missionary Activities. Meanwhile Mother MCW's Application to the Vatican was being processed then. It was Mother Mary Arsenius (RSC) her Superior at Foxford Convent, Ireland, now an Octogenarian who stood firm by her and supported her throughout the journey of her Missionary Service in Nigeria while she also made the Foreign Mission Apostolate especially in Nigeria the object of her prayers. On June 6 1921, Mother Agnes Gertrude Chamberlain, the Superior General of the RSC wrote to Bishop Shanahan giving him the reasons for the General Assembly's rejection of the Nigerian Mission (Generalate HHCJ Ifuho, 1921 General Assembly RSC Debates on Foreign Missions). Meanwhile Mother MCW had to wait for ten years before receiving permission to go on the Nigerian Mission, her letter to PP Pius XI was as follows:

> " Since 1913, I have always hoped that I would be sent to Nigeria as a Missionary, following The demand made by His Lordship, Bishop Joseph Shanahan, Apostolic Vicar, to our Rev. Mother General, to obtain a Community of Sisters for his Vicariate… The project was delayed because of the war and finally abandoned in May, 1921…" (Letter of MCW to Pope Pius XI, 18 Oct.1921)

One good option Mother General took was to arrange for the transfer of Mother MCW to another Jurisdiction which invariably was England, her birthplace to serve there as a Parish Sister. She was subsequently transferred to the RSC Convent at 9 Chiswick Lane, London. In London, she found favour with Mother Mary Ignatius, her Rectress who was benign to her and recommended her so warmly to Cardinal Francis Bourne the Archbishop of Westminster Cathedral, London. Here the Saintly Cardinal Bourne granted her the permission to go on the Nigerian Mission and promptly wrote a Reminder to the Vatican for her Rescript. Even though the reply to Mother MCW Application had been delayed as commented above, Mother Mary Arsenius' prayers were mounting up to Heaven while some of the other Sisters of Charity notably, Sister Agnes Stanislaus Cullen, Sister Mary Thecla, Sister Joseph Conception Vavasour her former companion in distress, not to be excluded, Mother Agnes Gertrude, the Superior General who wrote to her several times and even sent her money for her needs while in the waiting. Outside her Congregation many persons gave her much encouragement and support including her family members. Charles, her brother together with his Nurse wife gave her a good deal of assistance as also Rev. Fr. Finlay, her Spiritual Director in London with Bishop Shanahan of course as her key supporter. All these would be clear to readers of this book of the manifestation and guidance of Divine Providence in Mother MCW. It goes to show that God was really in control and directing her course: "For unto all who love God all things work together unto good, to such as to His purpose are called to be Saints" (Rom 8:28).

By God's unfathomable ways, on 11 June 1923, the Rescript from the Vatican, by the Sacred Congregation for Religious Affairs arrived through Mgr. Surmount, Vicar General of Westminster Cathedral, London on behalf of PP. Pius XI. It was not a dispensation from her Religious Vows, but rather a favour granting her the permission to live out of her Convent for Missionary Works in Nigeria and for grave reasons known to her Superiors. In fact, in 1926 when it became obvious that the Prefecture of Calabar would be excised from Onitsha and created an autonomous Prefecture, Bishop Shanahan produced the Official Document from Rome concerning the status of Mother MCW while in Nigeria to the effect that Mother MCW "is a Religious of the RSC with Perpetual Vows" (Cf. Shanahan J. Published Document on Status of Mother Mary Charles Magdalene Walker, S. Nigeria, 1926). Sister M. Joseph Conception writing to Sr. Alphonsus Harnett RSC, had also corroborated this after the visit to her by Bishop Shanahan: "Mother MCW has received no dispensation to leave the Congregation but her Vow of Obedience has been transferred from the Jurisdiction of Mother General M. Agnes Gertrude Chamberlain to the personal Jurisdiction of Most Rev. Dr. J. Shanahan (CSSP) Vicar Apostolic as her new Religious Superior and now belongs to the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria; she is as much a Religious Sister today as she was with us". Nevertheless, this moot point should not be lost to our readers because later on in the early 1930s, Mother MCW's status was a point of very turbulent dispute. In fact, it led to her sack without qualms by the one who took over from Bishop Shanahan, Archbishop Charles Heerey, CSSP and the transfer of her progressive Institutions to the newly arrived Holy Child Sisters (SHCJ) in Nigeria. This was a great turning point in the life of Mother MCW and she then wrote to inform Mother Gertrude accordingly. On July 12 1924, Mother MCW while writing to Mother M. Arsenius in Ireland said among others: "According to the Rescript from Rome, I am a Sister of Charity. It gives me the permission to live outside my Convent in England in order to devote the remainder of my life to work in a Foreign Mission, ie. Calabar"

After receiving the Blessings of the Cardinal in Westminster, Mother MCW departed on September 12 1923 laden with gifts, letters, parcels of books, tropical clothings including Montessori equipments and money to Liverpool en route Nigeria grace Ü la Sister M. Arsenius of Wexford who had booked and secured a place for her aboard SS Akabo, the ship travelling to Calabar via Sierra Leone - Lagos. The night before she left, six Postulants were sent to her to pray with her. While in the ship she "had plenty of time to pray, and read and think". Mother MCW arrived Calabar on October 3, 1923 on her journey of Faith and had a splendid welcome by the enthusiastic people of Calabar among whom, Fr. Thomas Ronayne, the Administrator of Sacred Heart Cathedral who baptized Chief (Kgt) Sylvester O'Neill among others as also the female students of St. Joseph of Cluny College who had been abandoned by the French Sisters and recalled to France in 1919. These students however, were being attended to by Miss Marie Martin and Miss Veronica Hassan, lay Irish Missionaries of the Red Cross war - time whom Bishop Shanahan had coopted. At hand was the Elder Dempster Lines Agency jeep car to bring her to the Cathedral where she prayed and afterwards had a grand Reception. Other issues on the life and times of Mother MCW are subsumed in the Origins of the Holy Child and Handmaids accounts below.

2. EVOLUTION OF THE HANDMAIDS OF THE CHILD JESUS

LOGO AND BUILDINGS OF THE HANDMAIDS OF THE HOLY CHILD JESUS, CALABAR

HANDMAIDS OF THE HOLY CHILD JESUS-CALABAR

The sudden set-back arising from the out-break of the 1st World War (1914 - 1919) was a great worry to Shanahan and he wrote letters to the Irish Religious Sisters of Charity, RSC inviting them to come to Calabar. It was this situation that led to the coming of Sr. Magdalene Charles Walker of the Religious Sisters of Charity (RSC) in response to Shanahan's appeals during his vacation to take over the work at the St. Joseph of Cluny Convent School, Calabar. Rev. Sister Magdalene Charles Walker who had earlier applied to Rome for permission to join the Missionary team of the Calabar Mission received a favourable reply from Pope Pius XI elected Pope in 1922 to succeed Pope Benedict XV who had died earlier that year. On October 3 1923, Sister Magdalene arrived Calabar by Elder Dempster Lines Company amidst great jubilation of the Calabar Catholic Faithful, having travelled for three weeks from Liverpool, England. Among those who received her were Fr. Thomas Ronayne the erstwhile Administrator of the Sacred Heart Cathedral, Miss Marie Martin who became the Founding and Superior General of the Medical Missionaries of Mary (MMM), and Miss Veronica Hassan who also became the Founding and Superior General of the Holy Rosary Sisters (HRC). Soon after her arrival she started establishing girls' boarding schools at Anua, Ifuho, Asong, Edem Ekpat, Ndon Ebom, Essene and Use Abat – Ikot Ekpenyong, etc. She was the first to establish a Higher Education and Tertiary facility for women in the Vicariate which was attached to the St. Joseph's College at Calabar. The Training College was later transferred to Ifuho by her Holy Child Sisters successors which later metamorphosed into Holy Child Teachers Training College, Ifuho and has degenerated today into Holy Child Secondary School. She also planned Vocational Education centres in Horticulture, Domestic Science and Crafts including needle and raffia work for girls who had passed school age. One of these centres was removed from Ifuho to Abiakpo Ikot Essien Convent under Mother St. John as Principal in the 1950's and 1ater to Ekpene Ukim in 1962 as Crafts and Cloth Weaving Centre. In 1970 the Author applied to the newly created South Eastern State Government under General Gowon for the opening of new schools which hitherto had been embargoed nationwide by the Federal Government in 1964. The ATO was granted under A.G. Umoh as Commissioner for Education and later visited and grated approval by Commisioner (Okuku) Emmanuel Essien who opened up Ikot Osurua Government TTC which later metamorphosed into Akwa Ibom State Polytechnic. The Ekpene Ukim centre later became Adiaha Obong Technical Secondary School while still under the Author, St. Mary's TTC Ikot Nseyen became converted into St. Mary's Commercial Secondary School under Okuku Emmanuel Essien who inspected the Colleges in 1972 as Commissioner.

In 1929 Mother Magdalene had also opened a dispensary in Anua which was manned by Miss Lucy Williams, one of the aspirants she groomed for the Sisterhood. This dispensary metamorphosed into St. Luke's Hospital which was blessed by Bishop Charles Heerey in June 1933. Worthy of note is the peculiar Montessori school method of education she developed in Calabar. Mother Magdalene was an extraordinary Missionary. She was able to put her energies and resources into her everyday routine and work with extraordinary will power, zeal and unshakable Supernatural Faith. She showed absolute commitment and dedication with Christian charity to secure the social, moral and total development of women and girls' education. She was equally a woman of deep spirituality and genuine culture – a talented writer, teacher and educationist of outstanding ability. She handed over voluntarily to the Society of the Holy Child Jesus under Mother M. Amadeus the Superior General of the Congregation with Headquarters in Ireland which afterwards was transferred to Rome. But her greatest missionary enterprise was the founding of the HHCJ Religious Congregation for women. From the girls already completing their studies at the Cluniac School she inherited, four of them at least vowed to join the new Congregation. These she groomed for many years and they were also part of the team in the building up of the schools and other enterprises and fields of endeavour.

Meanwhile following the several letters Mother Magdalene Charles Walker RSC had written to the Superior General of the Holy Child Jesus to come to Nigeria to inspect and carry out visibility study and fact finding work with the view of taking over the Convents and her work in the Calabar Mission, Mother M. Amadeus Superior General of SHCJ, in company of the Vicar General, Mother M. Genevieve France arrived Calabar on board Elder Dempster Lines on September 30, 1930. It was during their stay that these first 4 Postulants and Foundation Members HHCJ, trained by Mother M. Charles Walker for about seven years from 1923 – 1931 were hooded as first Novices for the new Congregation of the Handmaids of the Holy Child Jesus with a Constitution and a complete new Rule of Life. They were Kathleen Bassey from Calabar, Lucy Williams from Cameroun, Agnes Ugoaru from Umuahia and Christiana Nwatuorucha from Ahiara all studying at the St. Joseph's of Cluny College Anua, at the time. After a Preparatory Retreat, they were all hooded as Postulants on January 15,1931 in the presence of Bishop Charles Heerey, Fr. Thomas Ronayne, the newly ordained Fr. John Cross Anyogu together with the newly arrived St. Patrick's Missionaries from Ireland: Father James Moynagh, Fr. Patrick J. Costello, Fr. Thomas McGettrick & Co., Fr. Paul Biechy, the Superior of Anua Mission and a tumultuous crowd of Catholic and non-Catholic admirers including of course the visiting Mother Amadeus, SHCJ, the Superior General of the Holy Child Congregation, the Vicar General Mother Mary Genevieve, Mother Mary Edith, Mother Mary Joachim of the English Province and Mother Mary Lawrencia of the American Province and Cardinal Arthur Hinsley who had come to inspect the Calabar Mission regarding the extent of the missionary work of Mother MCW (RSC) especially against the possibility of seeking more help from Rome for the Mission. It was an epoch making event and the 15th day of January 1931 has since remained the crucial and Foundation Day of the Handmaids Congregation because on that day four African young women for the first time ever in Africa, renounced the world and marriage to offer themselves to God and to become rather spouses of the Holy Spirit – to live a life of consecration in Chastity, Poverty and Obedience for the sake of the Kingdom of Heaven. But in fact, it was on August 29, 1929 that Bishop Shanahan received the most important Rescript Letter from the Holy Father Pope Pius XI, blessed and sent the letter of approval for the foundation of the Handmaids of the Holy Child Congregation HHCJ in the Calabar Mission. The Blessing of the four Candidates on January 15, 1931 should rather be seen as the Epiphany, so to speak.

MOTHER M. CHARLES WALKER, THE HOLY CHILD SISTERS AND MOTHER MCW WITH THE FOUR NOVICES & THREE ASPIRANTS

Mother Magdalene Walker

Visiting Mother M. Amadeus and pioneer her SHCJ sisters

The new HHCJ Novices - M. St. John, M Aloysia, M. Gertrude, M. Ignatia with Mother M. C. Walker RSC

From then on the four young Novices were addressed as Rev. Sisters, the first of its kind in Nigeria and perhaps in black Africa (Cf. Okure M. Liguori, Mustard Printers, PH, 2016, 102-3). With these four, and Mother Magdalene's policy towards the girl child education, many parents easily accepted to offer their girls and this resulted in the rapid growth and unbelievable progress of the new Handmaids Congregation. On January 9, 1937 the Sacred Congregation for the Evangelization of People responsible for all the Religious Congregations worldwide granted permission for the formal opening of the Novitiate and with the Decretum issued in 1949 by Mgr. James Moynagh then Prefect of the Calabar Mission, the four girls became known after their Religious Profession as Mother M. Ignatia, Mother M. St. John, Mother M. Aloysia and Mother M. Gertrude. In December 1959 the Congregation of the Handmaids of the Holy Child Jesus was given autonomous status with Mother M. Gertrude, one of the pioneer and Foundation Sisters as the 1st. Superior General. In 1971, the Congregation received their Pontifical Status from the Vatican. Meanwhile Mother M. Magdalene was retired and returned home to England on January 1, 1934. Even though M. Magdalene had left Nigeria, her heart still remained in prayer and hope and in the hearts of her four Rev. Sisters and her "good people of Calabar". But while "on exile" and "retirement" God's inscrutable designs were at work because it soon dawned on Mother M. Theresa

Anthony Haskin, the new Superior General RSC and the first to visit Mother Magdalene Charles Walker, that the Rescript from Rome regarding her "retirement" neither released MCW from her Vows nor was it a dismissal from her Congregation, but a permission "to serve in the Mission for certain reasons". On this moot point it should be reviewed for the benefit of our readers that when the Holy Child Sisters arrived they were to work under Mother MCW according to the terms of Bishop Shanahan, but Archbishop Charles Heerey's plan on taking over as the new Superior of the Southern Nigeria Mission when Bishop Shanahan had left the scene, had in 1933 ordered otherwise. In fact, he refused to recognize the fact that the Holy Child Sisters were to renew their Missionary hopes in the Vicariate, as it were, only by Mother MCW taking sole responsibility in the formation of the new Congregation of the Handmaids of the Holy Child Jesus (HHCJ) while they ie. Holy Child Sisters would handle the Schools, Establishments and other Institutions of MCW's Evangelical and Apostolic Fields. Mother M. Amadeus, the new Superior General of the SHCJ had accepted this proposal, but Mother Genevieve France her Vicar General refused to accept the plan but instead insisted on either taking over the entire Missionary Work of Mother MCW including her New HHCJ Congregation or their quitting the Calabar Mission for good. Her words were: "EITHER SHE GOES AND WE STAY OR SHE STAYS AND WE GO." Thus they changed the plan of Archbishop Heerey and incited him to expel her from the Vicariate of Southern Nigeria for good on the trumped up excuse that Mother MCW had in the first place rejected their genuine offer of having to go back to Ireland, doing her Postulancy and Novitiate again for "only six months" and then returning to Nigeria as A NEWLY PROFESSED SHCJ in order to continue her new allotted assignment by Archbishop Heerey. Well the rest is left for the readers' conjecture – a Rev. Mother Superior General of RSC in the Calabar Mission who had celebrated her Silver Jubilee of Religious Profession of Sisterhood in the Catholic Church – got approval and permission by His Holiness the Pope to live out of her Convent and to undertake Missionary work in a Foreign land, and now over fifty (50) years of age …! Is that not an intolerable contradiction of the Good News of the Gospel as also standing Nichodemus argumentation with the Lord Jesus on its head (Cf. Jn. 3" 4-8)? But even, this was despite the glaring fact of the inability of the new Congregation to manage all MCW'S fields of Apostolate as this manifested itself quite early.

Sese yak ti nn? mbufo – "Abasi idihe nsek!" = The Lord God is not an infant baby who could permit illogicalities and confusion. The SHCJ Congregation were indeed expert Educationists but the other fields of Apostolate were to them a foreign enterprise. That was why Mother MCW in that 1933 wrote to Mother M. Arsenius to pray especially that someday the RSC Congregation may come out to Nigeria to resume Hospital, Dispensary and Visitation work as Doctors and Nurses, etc. She also asked her to pray for "our Little HHCJ Sisters" as the SHCJ Apostolate was not all-embracing. That prayer seems to have been answered by the Lord Jesus today almost a hundred years after, because the RSC Sisters indeed have arrived Nigeria in this century as recounted above, though they are not taking up any Apostolate in the Calabar Mission yet. It is my prayer that the Calabar Ecclesiastical Authorities would deem it fit to invite them to take up their Apostolate in Calabar again and also to continue where Mother MCW had stopped. But regarding the SHCJ Congregation, it is heartwarming and seems good to the Holy Spirit that they have hearkened to what Archbishop Brian D. Usanga and my humbleself begged them to stay put at least in the main Calabar Mission.

But soon after that, Archbishop then Bishop Charles Heerey schemed his forced resignation and Bishop Joseph Shanahan in obedience acquiesced and left the Southern Nigeria Mission. Early in 1932, Bishop Shanahan left Nigeria for good after thirty years of a successful Missionary career to return to Ireland except for the brief visit he paid to Nigeria in 1935 for the consecration of the Holy Trinity Cathedral which foundation he had started but later completed by Archbishop Charles Heerey. This was also the Golden Jubilee of the Mission 1885 – 1935. While in Ireland he quietly helped and supported the work of the establishment of the new St. Patrick's Society SPS in Ireland. Thereafter in 1938, he retired to Nairobi in Kenya to stay with Bishop Heffernar in the Vicariate of Zanzibar. Here it could be recalled that it was he was ordained priest by Bishop Allegeyer, the Vicar Apostolic of Zanzibar in September 1902 and that might have informed his going to spend his last days on earth there. There in Kenya also, he assisted as Chaplain to the Carmelite Nuns giving a good deal of spiritual help to the priests and Religious. He died there in Nairobi, Kenya on Christmas Day 1943. His Funeral/Memorial Mass was also celebrated at the same time at St. Joseph's Anua with all the Holy Ghost Fathers from the Vicariate present including the three ordained Nigerian priests John Cross Anyogu, Michael Tansi and William Obelagu. I was privileged as a happy 6 years-old to attend that Mass with my parents. In 1956 the remains of Bishop Shanahan were exhumed and reburied in the Holy Trinity Basilica amidst thousands of mourners from Nigeria, Kenny and the Cameroons.

Nevertheless, Mother MCW had discharged her role and duties as Superior General for three years (1930 -1933) when the Holy Child Sisters arrived because that was what was implied in the strongly worded legal statement of Bishop Shanahan as Superior of the Southern Nigeria Mission especially the fact that "she, Mother MCW was to be Mother In-charge and that the SHCJ Sisters would take charge "only when the Vicar Apostolic ie. Archbishop Charles Heerey hands them over to your charge". Thereafter, Mother MCW also left Nigeria for good on January 1, 1934. She went back to England, to her family and spent almost twenty years in obscurity outside the Convent. Her family maintained her and the RSC Congregation also sent little helps from time to time. But in 1955 Mother Teresa Anthony, the new RSC Superior General having studied the contents of the Rescript given her by Pope Pius XI regarding the Missionary Apostolate of Mother MCW, and on discovering that the Rescript did not release Mother MCW from her Vows nor was it a dismissal from her Religious Institute, "but rather a permission by the Pope to serve in the Calabar Mission for certain reasons," promptly applied for her reinstatement and re-admission as a member of the RSC Congregation with all Rights and Privileges appertaining. With the acceptance of the General Council, Magdalene was received back into the RSC Congregation in 1956 and posted to Northern Rhodesia now Zambia to their new RSC Convent at Chikuni where she was made Vocation Directress to the newly established native Congregation, Handmaids of the Blessed Virgin Mary. In Zambia, she remained at their RSC Convent in Chikuni for ten years till her death in 1966. With permission and letters both from the Nigerian Ministry of External Affairs and the Zambian Ministry of Health, Rev. Sister M. Liguori HHCJ and M. Antoinette Mensa HHCJ exhumed and brought back the remains of Mother Charles Magdalene Walker (RSC) to be buried after Solemn Funeral Mass at the HHCJ Mother House Calabar on October 16, 1981(Cf. Liguori M. op cit. 321-28). In Calabar, a Street has also been named to her memory and to the Greater Glory of God.

In 1981, the HHCJ applied to and got promotion to the status of a Religious Congregation with Pontifical Right. In 2003 following the far reaching decisions and recommendations of that years' General Chapter, the Congregation among other things restructured the Order into Zones and Provinces within Nigeria, the Cameroons and Ghana. Today the Congregation in Nigeria is divided into five Provinces of South S. East covering the Dioceses of Ogoja, Uyo, Ikot Ekpe, Port Harcourt and the Archdiocese of Calabar with Headquarters and Mother House at Calabar, the Eastern Province covering the Dioceses of the Ecclesiastical Provinces of Onitsha and Owerri a.k.a Igbo land, the Western Province covering the Dioceses of the Ecclesiastical Provinces of Lagos and Benin and the North covering the Diocese of the former Northern Region of Nigeria, the Ghana Province covering all the Diocese in Ghana, Togo, Cote d' Voire and the Gambia and the Cameroun Provinces for all the Dioceses in the old French and British Cameroun. The General Chapter is held every six years.

3.ORIGINS AND EVOLUTION OF HOLY CHILD SISTERS IN NIGERIA THE LIFE & TIMES OF SR. CORNELIA CONNELLY, SHCJ – A PROFILE

LOGO AND SIX FOUNDATION SHCJ WITH HOLY CHILD SECONDARY SCHOOL SISTERS, CALABAR

The Foundress of the Religious Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus was born Cornelia Peacock in 1909 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania in USA. In 1935 Miss Cornelia married a Protestant Minister, Pierce Connelly with whom they had five adorable children. Cornelia was anything but typical. She was religious to the core such that in 1840 when Pierce her husband made his firm decision to abandon the world and matrimony and to go become a Catholic priest she accepted that decision and moved on together to Rome to actualize their separate future destinies in what Divine Providence had in store for their individual ambition. On arrival in Rome, she discovered the Italian life too unsuitable for her and she moved over to England to sort out herself there. It was while there in England that the thought of founding a Religious Congregation for women aimed at the education of women as the primary charism came to her and she began to plan for the actualization of her pet Congregation.

Thereafter, she subsequently decided to kick start her dream venture by providing education to students already attending Night Sunday classes (PREP) and evening schools in the neighbourhood. Her vision was to commit her life daily for the education of the girl child as a continuous act of love. In 1846 she was able to organize a group of English girls and this became the nucleus of her foundation of the Religious Congregation for women she christened the Society of the Holy Child Jesus. She died in 1979 and by this time her Congregation had more than 100 members and spread to the shores of America and beyond. Here in Nigeria, the SHCJ Congregation can be traced to the arrival of two SHCJ Sisters in Calabar in 1930. The story of the African Province of the Society is recounted below. In Nigeria in particular, the SHCJ Congregation has instituted their Vocation Promotions Centres in Ikoyi, Lagos, and Otukpo, Benue State.

On September 20, 1930 the Sisters of the Congregation of the Holy Child Jesus Missionaries (SHCJ) namely Mother M. Amadeus, the Superior General and her Vicar, Mother Genevieve France through the invitation of Mother Magdalene Charles Walker arrived the shores of Nigeria and as recorded in the dynamics of their arrival in Calabar by Sister, then Rev. Mother Genevieve France (SHCJ) the Vicar General of the Congregation, they had set sail from Liverpool and dropped anchor in the AKWA AKPA URUAN a.k.a Cross River at Calabar. Mother Magdalene Charles Walker, the RSC Rev. Sr. on the Southern
